

ALIEN:
Engineers

Written by Jon Spaihts

FADE IN:

EXT. EARTH - DAY (12,000 B.C.)

The world turns below us, vast and slow.

A RUMBLE. A shadow sweeps over the land. We move with the shadow. We cast the shadow.

Landscapes slide by. Reduced by altitude to abstractions: river deltas, forests and flood plains. A raw natural world. No trace of civilization.

The shadow glides over mountains and glaciers. Across an ocean and a pale beach. Over lowland plain at the foot of a VOLCANIC MOUNTAIN it stops.

EXT. LOWLAND PLAIN - DAY

THREE FIGURES walk out of the shadow.

They are men - and yet not men. Their skin is snow-white. Their features heavy and classical - as if Rodin's Thinker had risen from his seat. Their smooth heads are earless and hairless. Their glittering eyes entirely black.

Against the stark land their height is impossible to judge.

They are ENGINEERS.

Two of them are cloaked in dark robes of strange design.

The third is naked.

One of the cloaked Engineers opens a featureless black box: inside lies a cake of dark, sticky material.

The naked one lifts the dark cake with ceremonial slowness. It hums and buzzes. Foams into iridescent spheres. He raises the seething cake to his mouth like the sacrament.

BLACK SCARABS boil out of the dark material. Swarm over his lips. Glittering insects that chitter and bite.

Under the swarm his lips melt away. A horrific vision of teeth, black blood, dissolving bone. They are devouring him.

FLASH ON:

A fevered glimpse of the microscopic: cells rupture and bleed. Protein chains unfold. A DNA spiral unravels.

The scarabs fill their bellies with genetic material.

THE ENGINEER

...spreads his arms. Stands cruciform, nearly headless.

The scarabs swarm his shoulders, his chest. When they reach his hips, he collapses sideways, toppling majestically like a felled tree. Engulfed.

The two cloaked Engineers watch impassively.

Behind them, a vast black SHIP hangs in the sky.

As if blown by a great gust of wind, the scarabs disperse in their millions in all directions. Living DNA on the wing. Where the sacrificial victim fell, nothing remains.

EXT. FOREST - DAY

A pristine wilderness. The VOLCANIC MOUNTAIN in the distance.

A PRIMITIVE WOMAN stands on a height, staring in amazement: far off a great dark ship hovers over the plain.

A black scarab lands on the back of her neck. Bites deep. Injecting its cargo of DNA into her blood.

FLASH ON:

A microscopic invasion. Cells pierced and infused. DNA strands twining and mating.

CLOSE ON THE WOMAN

Pupils dilating with shock, breath hissing into her lungs.

She slaps the back of her neck. Looks at her hand. The scarab lies in her palm.

As she watches, it crumbles to dust and blows away.

FADE TO BLACK.

ON BLACK

Drifting motes of light against the dark: a starscape.

An EXCAVATOR floats into view: a sturdy vehicle equipped with robotic arms. Bright floodlights beat at the darkness. Inside the cockpit - a bubble of glass - sits a BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.

This is DR. JOCELYN WATTS, 32, a precocious scholar of many disciplines. A scientist accustomed to field work.

The cockpit is sweltering: she wears shorts, boots, a T-shirt - and still her arms and legs gleam with sweat.

Watts works the controls. The excavator descends toward a rocky surface. Silt billows up as the excavator approaches: we're not in space at all, but deep underwater.

The excavator's thrusters are cowled propellers. The "stars" are plankton shining in the floodlights.

INT. EXCAVATOR - CONTINUOUS

Watts steers the excavator to a steeply sloping cliff wall. A sea-trench yawns below her, its depths lost in darkness.

WATTS

Moving to survey site B... closing on object four. The large oblong.

She watches the screen of a ground-penetrating radar system. A bright signal return: something hidden in the cliff in front of her. Something big.

WATTS (CONT'D)

There you are.

EXT. SEA TRENCH - CONTINUOUS

Watts carves into the cliff with the excavator's digger arm. Silt and boulders fall into the yawning trench below. She brings a water cannon to bear: uses its jet to blast away loose silt and stones.

The cliff face collapses: a muddy landslide into the deeps.

Watts backs away from the collapse, thrusters whirring to keep her out of the turbulence. A cloud of silt clears.

In her floodlight beams, the OBELISK stands revealed - its outlines worn by the ages. Easily thirty feet tall.

Watts stares at the obelisk, stunned. Her voice is husky:

WATTS

Martin. Here.

A second excavator glides out of the dark.

At the controls: PROFESSOR MARTIN HOLLOWAY, 48, visionary genius and archaeologist. Dark-haired and lean, with the rangy build of a frontiersman. He's dressed in work trousers and a T-shirt. Stubbly chin.

He plays his floodlights over the obelisk.

HOLLOWAY

Look at that.

INT. WATTS'S EXCAVATOR

Watts floats her excavator down the front of the obelisk. Scanning the alien text. Suddenly she stops. Grips the obelisk with her excavator's arms to anchor herself in place.

WATTS

You need to see this.

HOLLOWAY (V.O.)

Coming.

EXT. SEA TRENCH

Holloway pilots his excavator expertly up to Watts's. Mates the two vehicles at their aft hatchways.

INT. WATTS'S EXCAVATOR

Behind Watts, a hatch opens with a splatter of water.

Holloway climbs in. Squeezes into her cockpit. A tight fit. He's distracted by her body, pressed so close - but she has eyes only for the inscrutable writing outside the glass.

WATTS

Same thing again.

HOLLOWAY

What do you see?

WATTS

An ephemeris - a star map.

(pointing)

Radius, inclination, azimuth...more data here...

HOLLOWAY

If we can get epoch and equinox out of that...

WATTS

Can we raise this thing?

HOLLOWAY

(shakes his head)

Hundreds of tons.

EXT. MEDITERRANEAN SEA - DAY

A research vessel at anchor on a turquoise sea. Bright sun.

In the distance, a coastline dotted with villas. The horizon is dominated by the VOLCANIC PEAK - the same peak we saw in the distance in the prologue.

Aboard the research vessel, cranes lift Watts and Holloway's excavators out of the sea and onto the deck.

INT. RESEARCH VESSEL - AFT DECK - DAY

Under an awning, PRINTS of the obelisk's faces are stretched on the deck - fifteen feet long.

Watts and Holloway crawl over the alien text, red markers in hand. Parsing, translating, calculating.

They're tanned, fit, the wind in their hair. The Mediterranean coast in the distance. It's an idyllic way to work. But they're utterly absorbed in the task at hand.

AFT DECK - NIGHT

They're still at it. Lights illuminate the workspace. The obelisk prints are blanketed with markings and annotations.

Holloway sits at a table. Watts sits on the marked-up prints. Both working through calculations on electronic slates.

Holloway looks up.

HOLLOWAY

I have a solution. A single match.

WATTS

Me too. Checked it twice.

HOLLOWAY

You first.

Watts holds up her slate: it displays a set of stellar coordinates. A detailed star map. Holloway holds up his own slate: an exact match. They lock eyes in electric excitement.

WATTS

What do we do now?

HOLLOWAY

We go there.

EXT. WEYLAND'S WHEEL (EARTH ORBIT)

A gleaming space station like a five-spoked wheel rotates grandly against the Pacific Ocean a thousand miles below. Black letters on the white metal read: WEYLAND'S WHEEL.

A round shuttlecraft approaches the station.

INT. SHUTTLECRAFT (ZERO GRAVITY)

A spacecraft no bigger than a private jet.

Holloway and Watts sit strapped into acceleration chairs. The only two passengers aboard. New to space travel, Watts tears her eyes from the spectacle of Earth outside the window.

Holloway plays with a pen, batting it from hand to hand in the zero gravity.

WATTS

What's first? You do climate, I do genetics?

HOLLOWAY

Archaeology first. Let our ancestors tell the tale.

WATTS

You think he's serious?

HOLLOWAY

Serious enough to send his private shuttle.

WATTS

Weyland can send his shuttle out for pizza.

(delicately)

(MORE)

WATTS (CONT'D)

Martin. If this meeting goes like the others, maybe we should...

HOLLOWAY

It won't go like the others.

WATTS

How do you know?

Holloway plucks the pen from the air. He points out the window, where the crescent Moon shines like a toothy grin.

HOLLOWAY

Heaven smiles on our enterprise.

EXT. WEYLAND'S WHEEL

The shuttle docks with the Wheel's hub - a perfect fit.

INT. WEYLAND'S WHEEL - SPOKE ELEVATOR (ZERO GRAVITY)

A gleaming capsule elevator with windows to the stars.

Holloway and Watts float weightlessly inside, moving from handhold to handhold. The door closes.

Watts grabs Holloway by the collar. Pulls them roughly together. They kiss. Not for the first time. They have a way.

Watts's hair and clothing float free: she's a naiad in Holloway's arms.

EXT. WEYLAND'S WHEEL

The elevator descends along the spoke to the rim.

INT. WEYLAND'S WHEEL - RIM - FOYER

A luxurious lobby. Tasteful lighting. Eames-era furniture in wood and chrome: the past's vision of the future.

At the rim, the Wheel's rotation supplies gravity. An elevator door opens. Watts and Holloway step out - Holloway with a sleek metal folio slung over his shoulder.

The floor is the outer surface of the Wheel: in both directions it curves upward out of sight.

The walls are all windows: on one side, Earth rotates lazily. On the other, a wheeling field of stars.

DAVID, an android, stands waiting for them. He's cunningly built, but no one would mistake him for a real human being.

DAVID
Professor Holloway. Dr. Watts. My name is DAVID.

WATTS
Hello, DAVID.

DAVID
Mr. Weyland's eager to meet you.

He strides off across the foyer. Watts and Holloway exchange a wondering glance and follow.

EXHIBIT HALL

DAVID leads past models of planets, moons and asteroids. Holographic labels and data swirl around them.

DAVID
These are all the planetary bodies on which Weyland Industries has mining claims.

The end of the hall is dominated by a huge globe of Mars. Markings indicate widespread surface activity.

DAVID (CONT'D)
And Mars. Weyland's crown jewel.

HOLLOWAY
How is that going? The terraforming.

WATTS
They say you're getting diminishing returns. It's not working.

DAVID
It's the greatest engineering project ever attempted. Challenges are inevitable. Mr. Weyland's a determined man.

WEYLAND'S OFFICE

PETER WEYLAND sits behind a mahogany desk. He's a Warren Buffet type: a country sage, horse-sense and hard knocks. He might be seventy years old, or a hundred and seventy.

Behind him stands DIRECTOR LYDIA VICKERS, a slim woman of 45 in a costly business suit. Shrewd and watchful. Once a great beauty, she now trades in ruthlessness.

DAVID stands against the wall.

Watts and Holloway settle into chairs in front of Weyland - Holloway holding the metal folio.

WEYLAND
Professor Holloway. Ms. Watts.

WATTS
Doctor Watts.

WEYLAND
Forgive me. Peter Weyland.

He notices Watts looking curiously at DAVID. He smiles.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
Ah. DAVID here's a prototype. Our 80 series. One of a kind for now, but if he performs, he will be legion.
(his smile fades)
What do you want here?

Holloway looks at him, startled.

HOLLOWAY
We sent you a prospectus that...

WEYLAND
Assume I know nothing.

Holloway swallows. Lays the metal folio on Weyland's desk.

HOLLOWAY
I'm an archaeologist.

He touches a tiny remote. Holographs appear in the air over Weyland's desk: the folio is a three-dimensional imager.

Pictures of a younger Holloway in the field: excavating ruins in Egypt, China, Peru, Greece.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)
In my studies I discovered a pattern I couldn't explain. Every eleven hundred years, sudden advances in agriculture, tool use, technology. Inventions. Something caused a great leap forward. Every eleven centuries. The pattern holds as far back as our data goes.
(MORE)

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

Tens of thousands of years. I had to understand this. It became the focus of my work.

Weyland nods. Holloway glances at Watts and forges on.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

Dr. Watts was a student of mine.

Watts touches her own remote. The holographic display turns to scientific diagrams. Images of a very young and beautiful Watts in the laboratory.

WATTS

I was analyzing historical changes in human DNA. I found the same pattern. Every eleven centuries, a pulse of new information in the genome of the human race. All over the world. Evolution can't do that. Something was changing us. Changing the DNA of our species.

HOLLOWAY

Humanity's been visited. Visited by...beings from somewhere else.

Behind Weyland, Vickers can't suppress a scowl of disdain.

VICKERS

You mean aliens.

A beat. The others had forgotten Vickers was there.

WEYLAND

Lydia Vickers, Director of Operations. Practically my right hand.

HOLLOWAY

They guided us to civilization. Lifted us up, again and again. I call them the Engineers.

WATTS

Once you know what you're looking for, it's amazing how the evidence falls into place.

Photographs flicker through the display: Holloway and Watts in the field, excavating new sites. Intimately close.

Their finds: columns of writing on stone tablets in Egypt, China, Cambodia, Peru. Patterns of lines, curves, and dots.

HOLLOWAY

This is the writing of the Engineers.
We've found it on every continent. And last year, we found our Rosetta Stone.

The display shows the Engineer obelisk under the sea.

WATTS

The writing is a formula giving the location of a single star in our sky.

WEYLAND

Which star?

HOLLOWAY

We're keeping that confidential for now. But that's where we want to go.

WEYLAND

You want me to pay for an interstellar research expedition!

HOLLOWAY

It's a chance to be part of a revolution in scientific...

WEYLAND

Don't sell me, professor. You've been turned down by every university and government agency under the sun.
Nobody's going to gamble that kind of money on your hunch.

Holloway deflates. Watts winces. This is a bloodbath.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)

Nobody but me.
(he grins)
I've read your research.

HOLLOWAY

That's impossible. Our research is-

WEYLAND

Quantum encoded on secure servers, yeah. We have an A.I. division, you should know. Doing impressive things.
(he leans across the desk)
I know which star you're wishing on.

The scientists stare at Weyland.

WATTS

You're bluffing.

WEYLAND
Zeta Two Reticuli.

He regards their shocked faces with satisfaction.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
You know how I got this rich? I ask myself: what does God spend his time doing? And I go and do that.

Watts laughs incredulously. Stifles it. Weyland's not joking.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
Biotechnology was good to me. Fusion power. Lately doing well with gravity systems.

He swivels his chair toward the window. Earth shines outside.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
But what's the first thing God did?

WATTS
He made the Heaven and the Earth.

Weyland jabs a finger at her like she's won a carnival prize.

WEYLAND
That's what I'm talking about. You left out my favorite part. The piece about Earth. DAVID.

DAVID
For eons, Earth's climate swung from hothouse to ice age. Explosions of life, then mass extinctions. But twelve thousand years ago the swings stopped. The Holocene Epoch began - a period of anomalous tranquility. The rise of civilization began only then.

Holloway and Watts stare at DAVID with new appreciation.

HOLLOWAY
That's right.

WATTS
And that change coincides with a visit by the Engineers. They didn't just change us. They changed our world.

WEYLAND
That's the piece I mean. Engineering
Earth. God stuff.

He swivels back to his desk. Rummages in a drawer.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
My people checked your science. They say it's solid.

He pulls a thick contract out. Drops it in front of Holloway.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
I'll give you your expedition. Ship and crew, supplies, support. One condition.

Holloway picks up the contract with the cautious joy of a man double-checking a lottery ticket. His voice is husky:

HOLLOWAY
What's that?

WEYLAND
You get the discovery. Control of the site. But any technology you find?
Anything at all. That's mine.

Holloway reaches out slowly and picks up the contract.
Riffles the pages of small-print legalese.

WEYLAND (CONT'D)
You take DAVID with you. My eyes and ears. And Vickers...you're going too.

Vickers stares at Weyland in shock.

WHITE LANDSCAPE

A glittering formation of white crystals. Diamond on diamond.

The structures grow more complex as the view widens. Leaves and branches of crystal. A shimmering field of white jewels.

A landscape of white crystals, smooth as snow.

EXT. DEEP SPACE

A black void shot with stars, far from any sun.

A sturdy prospecting ship forges through space, travel-worn but built to last. It carries the Weyland Industries logo.
The name painted on its hull is MAGELLAN.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

The ship's nerve center and control room. Six control stations, empty and quiet. Interior lights dimmed to blue.

The entire forward bulkhead of the Bridge is a window: wall to wall, floor to ceiling.

At the window stands the android DAVID.

He gazes at the cosmos with an expression of utter serenity. After a long moment he turns away. Massive shutters close over the window as he walks off.

CORRIDOR

DAVID walks the ship's long central corridor. The ship is silent. The lights dimmed to blue. He is alone.

HYPER_SLEEP COMPARTMENT

A long steel room containing a dozen plexiglass sarcophagi, six on each side. Sleep freezers. Inside each freezer: the shadowy shape of a human body rimed with frost.

DAVID walks through the compartment, surveying the sleepers.

WORKROOM

DAVID sits at a display table, moving intricate technical documents across the surface with waves of his hands.

His eyes intent on his work. If he is reading, then he's reading at a speed no human could match.

WHITE LANDSCAPE

We pull away from the frosted crystalline horizon, the smooth white curves like snowy fields. Form becomes clear.

It's the body of a woman. It's Watts.

INT. HYPER_SLEEP FREEZER

Watts lies asleep in her underwear in a plexiglass freezer. Pale. Frost on her skin. Venus sculpted in ice. There are IV lines in her elbows and ankles.

Shapes move into view beyond her, outside the freezer. FACES. Pressed to the glass.

HYPER_SLEEP COMPARTMENT

All of the freezers are open and empty, save two. Holloway lies in one. In the next, Watts. Three men in blue coveralls crouch beside Watts's freezer, staring inside.

They are DOWNS, 30, a lean fidgety crewman. STILLWELL, 40, a sturdy fellow with the geniality of a labrador. And KAMAROV, 26, whose dark, brooding air belongs to a man twice his age.

DOWNS

Look at that.

Kamarov opens the lid of Watt's freezer. Leans over her. Watts stirs in her sleep, a drowsy angel.

KAMAROV

She wakes up slow.

Watts wakes to find three men looming above her. Disoriented, she pulls away. Tangles her hands in her IV lines.

HOLLOWAY (O.S.)

Get out of there!

Holloway's voice cracks like a whip. The crewmen jump back.

Holloway sits up in the next freezer over. He yanks the IV lines out of his arms and legs. Climbs out of the freezer.

STILLWELL

Just looking.

HOLLOWAY

Give us a moment, will you?

The crewmen file out: Stillwell sheepishly, Downs and Kamarov surly. Holloway goes to Watts. Gently removes the IV lines from her ankles while she plucks the ones from her arms.

WATTS

I'm out of sorts. Sorry.

HOLLOWAY

Never worry.

He helps her up.

INT. MESS ROOM

Holloway and Watts sit at a table, both a bit hung over. They wear civilian clothes. Warmly dressed, they still look cold.

They nurse mugs of coffee and nibble packaged snack bars. Watts hunches over, shivering.

WATTS

My head's buzzing.

HOLLOWAY

You just slept two and a half years.
It'll pass.

WATTS

Like you've done this before.

HOLLOWAY

I've read all about it.

Two ship's officers enter the room wearing blue coveralls with rank insignia: GLASSE, 45, a stocky man with thick black hair, and BRICK, 50, a bald man with a bristling mustache.

They look at Watts and Holloway with little pleasure.

BRICK

Sleep okay?

WATTS

Yes, thanks...

GLASSE

Captain'll see you now.

INT. MAGELLAN - CAPTAIN'S WARDROOM

CAPTAIN JANEK, 45, sits at his desk. With his bristling beard and powerful build he has a swashbuckling look, like the captain of a whaling ship.

Holloway and Watts sit on a steel bench in front of him.

He sits scanning his orders: a plastic packet with Weyland Industries logos, cracked open. Watermarked papers inside.

JANEK

Zeta Two Reticuli was surveyed already. A hundred years ago.

WATTS

By an unmanned probe. Very crude.

JANEK
No Earthlike planets.

WATTS
No.

JANEK
So what are you looking for?

HOLLOWAY
Proof of the Engineers' existence.

WATTS
Confirmation of Professor Holloway's theories would change everything. There'd be science before Holloway and science after.

Janek rubs his face wearily with his hands.

JANEK
Your ticket. I'll put the ship where you want. Run your scans.

HOLLOWAY
Captain, your crew's been up for a week. We could've used the time. Why'd you wait to wake us?

JANEK
Better for discipline.
(off their silence)
Men ship out as prospectors for one reason: the percentage. Find a gold mine or a habitable planet, and you're set for life.
(he laughs bitterly)
But this contract says no percentage. No bounty. Just triple pay. The men aren't happy.

HOLLOWAY
You unhappy too?

JANEK
I'm always unhappy.

He stands. Presses his palm against a wall panel. A safe opens. He pulls out a massive pistol in a gunbelt. Tosses the orders into the safe. Lays the gun atop them and locks it up.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN

Holloway and Watts take possession of their cabin: a simple but spacious room with twin beds and a window to the stars.

They drop duffel bags on the bed.

Holloway surveys the arrangement. Frowns. He releases the magnets that lock the beds down. Slides the beds together.

INT. SCIENTISTS' WORKROOM - DAY

Holloway and Watts set up their workspace - a central display table and huge display surfaces on the walls. Fascinating documents slide under their fingertips: an Engineer alphabet. Ancient art. Climate and genetic data.

DAVID appears in the doorway.

WATTS

DAVID. I wondered when we'd see you.

DAVID

I trust your database is in order. I set it up myself.

WATTS

All's well, I think.

DAVID turns to go. Hesitates in the doorway.

DAVID

I should tell you: the time you spent sleeping, I spent studying your research.

Holloway and Watts look at the android, his words sinking in.

WATTS

You studied our work for two and a half years.

DAVID

It's quite a data set.

HOLLOWAY

So you've seen everything. Well. What do you think?

DAVID glances over the documents displayed around the room.

DAVID

Your hypothesis is...bold. The audacity of it. Your climate data's undeniable: the Holocene Epoch was engineered. Dr. Watts, your genetic studies are equally conclusive. Pulses of cultural change are harder to prove, but even there your case is strong. I believe in your "Engineers."

BREAK ROOM

A utilitarian sitting room. Steel benches and table bolted to the deck. Seated here are two Weyland Industries technicians:

ANDREW CHANCE, 50, a stocky computer engineer with a genial bearing and a bristling salt-and-pepper mustache.

MONA RAVEL, 45, a dour, rangy woman with a plain face, her hair pulled severely back. A physicist and chemist.

They wear black Weyland Industries jackets. They radiate intelligence and competence. These are pros.

DAVID leads Holloway and Watts past the break room. Holloway spots the technicians. Strides in to greet them.

HOLLOWAY

Weyland Industries! Mr. Chance. Ms. Ravel. You remember Dr. Watts.

Watts and the technicians exchange greetings.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

About the materials I gave you. Some of the technical aspects...

CHANCE

We'll handle our end of the job.

RAVEL

If there is a job.

Holloway blinks at her. Chance explains, not unkindly:

CHANCE

We only have a job if you find something.

CORRIDOR

Holloway and Watts follow the imperturbable DAVID down a steel corridor to Vickers's cabin door.

VICKERS'S SUITE

An open-plan cabin like an urban loft apartment. Watts and Holloway follow DAVID inside. Vickers rises to meet them.

The walls are industrial steel - but the floors are lushly carpeted, the furniture opulent. A king-sized bed, a mahogany desk, a dining table.

Gleaming machines ensure Vickers never need step outside: a private hypersleep freezer, an autokitchen, a medical pod.

WATTS

Is that a Pauling medical pod? There's only ten of those things on Earth! I guess nine, now.

VICKERS

I told Mr. Weyland I wouldn't compromise my standard of living. He accommodated me.

HOLLOWAY

I know, I had to cut my manifest. This used to be the number four cargo bay.

VICKERS

What can I do for you, Professor?

Holloway gestures with the slate he's brought with him.

HOLLOWAY

We're about to reach the system periphery. I thought you'd want to see the search protocols we -

VICKERS

No. I was set to be the next CEO of Weyland Industries. Then you came along and sold Mr. Weyland on...this. So here I am. Out of the running. I'll go where I'm told. But don't ask me to play along.

WATTS

But when you get back...

VICKERS
I'll be five years behind the curve.
Out of touch. Over.

HOLLOWAY
You might make the discovery of the ages.

Vickers looks at him as if she's dealing with a child.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)
You don't believe in what we're doing.

VICKERS
Mr. Weyland believes. That's enough.

She walks them toward the door. Interview's over.

VICKERS (CONT'D)
Now we're out of communication, you can tell the crew what we're doing.

WATTS
They don't know? They volunteered.

VICKERS
They volunteered blind. Classified job, triple pay.

CARGO BAY

The crew - Brick, Glasse, Stillwell, Downs, and Kamarov - sit on crates in an improvised lecture hall. Holloway and Watts in front of them. Janek at the back of the room.

A hologram shows ancient images of divine visitations. The crew is visibly spooked.

DOWNNS Aliens.

GLASSE
You shitting me?

Stillwell is staring at the frightening images: gods and titans towering over mortals.

HOLLOWAY
I think all our mythologies are race-memories of the Engineers. Horus the Sun God. Prometheus bringing fire from heaven. A pillar of fire, a pillar of smoke. The Engineers are the gods.

Kamarov stiffens, smelling blasphemy.

KAMAROV

The mythology gods maybe. God is God.

STILLWELL

Kamarov. Let him talk.

Stillwell's staring unhappily at the ancient images: gods towering over mortals, inhuman and terrifying.

STILLWELL (CONT'D)

So we're going to meet these things?

WATTS

We probably won't meet anyone. You'd expect a star-traveling race to generate radio or laser signals. Fusion drives and gravity drives have clear signatures. But Zeta Two Reticuli is silent. And the Engineers have gone missing on Earth.

WATTS (CONT'D)

By the pattern, they should've come to Earth seventeen centuries ago. And again six centuries ago. But no sign. After twelve thousand years...they stopped coming.

BRICK

Why?

HOLLOWAY

Exactly. Why?

JANEK

"My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?"

They turn. Janek grins at Holloway across the cargo bay.

JANEK (CONT'D)

Is that the question you've come light-years to answer?

HOLLOWAY

Only my first question. I have many.

EXT. MAGELLAN (ZETA² RETICULI SYSTEM)

The Magellan arrives at the periphery of the system. A distant star like Earth's Sun, surrounded by orbiting planets: mere sparks at this distance.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Outside the vast Bridge window, the star Zeta² Reticuli burns, a cold beacon in the night. Downs, Glasse and Brick sit at consoles. Janek paces in front of the window.

Holloway and Watts enter - and gape at the view. Janek grins at their reaction.

JANEK

Welcome to Zeta Two Reticuli. Edge of the system. Open her eyes.

EXT. MAGELLAN (ZETA² RETICULI SYSTEM)

The Magellan opens its eyes: two immense telescopes emerge from the ship. Irises open to expose huge lenses.

Antennae deploy: unfurling like wings, gleaming and vast. Sifting vacuum for any whisper of information.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Outside the window, the planets orbiting Zeta² Reticuli are no more than bright stars.

JANEK

Overlay.

A heads-up display appears, overlaid on the glass. The sun is labeled ZETA² RETICULI. Markers point out the planets and trace the ellipses of their orbits.

Like magic, the planets swell into colorful orbs, each labeled: Alpha, Beta, Gamma...

DOWNS

Seven planets. Two hot rocks, two gas giants, three snowballs. Nothing Earthlike.

Watts grins at Holloway, eyes shining.

WATTS

First humans in the system.

Vickers walks onto the Bridge with DAVID.

JANEK

Director. Good of you to join us.

VICKERS

What did I miss?

CAPTAIN JANEK

Just getting warmed up.

(to Holloway)

Professor? You know what you want?

HOLLOWAY

EMR scan, thirty hertz to three hundred gigahertz. Spectroscopic passes on every planet and major moon. Infrared and albedo scan for hot spots and light sources.

CAPTAIN JANEK

Man knows what he wants. Run it.

EXT. MAGELLAN (ZETA2 RETICULI SYSTEM)

Twin telescopes spin and zoom. Antennae flex and focus.

TELESCOPE POV

The planet nearest the sun rushes closer as the mighty telescopes zoom in.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

The Magellan's sensors peel planet Alpha like an onion and put it back together again.

A river of data floods the display, bathing the watchers' faces with light: Chemical compounds, magnetic field lines, lunar orbits, topographical data.

The scan moves on to the next planet, and the next.

GLASSE

Negative on radio chatter system-wide.
Nobody's talking.

BRICK

Negative for laser and maser.

On the H.U.D., the data stream completes the last planet.
Begins to illuminate the gas giants' moons.

GLASSE

No biological markers. No artificial light. No industry or agriculture.
Dead system. Like always.

DOWNS

Piss-poor, too. Low in heavy elements.

BRICK

Got a hit! A moon. LV-426.

The display centers on Epsilon, a gas giant with many moons.
Data flickers around one of the larger moons: LV-426.

BRICK (CONT'D)

Eighty-six percent Earth's mass.
Atmosphere's nitrogen, methane, sulfates. Faint returns for a bunch of metals.

HOLLOWAY

Anything else?

The sensors complete their pass on the system's last moon.

JANEK

That is all.

HOLLOWAY

Take us in.

JANEK

Downs. You heard the man.

DOWNS

Aye, Captain. Maneuvering.
Eighteen hours to orbit.

EXT. MAGELLAN (ZETA² RETICULI SYSTEM)

The Magellan retracts its vast antennae and telescopes.

The engines fire: the ship rockets toward the gas giant Epsilon and its mysterious moon.

PASSAGEWAY

Leaving the Bridge, Holloway and Watts find themselves walking aft alongside DAVID.

HOLLOWAY

DAVID. Enjoy the show?

DAVID

I don't know that I "enjoy" things.
It was informative.

HOLLOWAY

It was, it was.

(teasing)

You know, I've seen more convincing humanoid robots.

Watts smiles, watching Holloway's sport. DAVID's speech never varies from its agreeable tone.

DAVID

My design's not intended to convince.
Simulating humanity is a complex task that diverts resources. My designers dispensed with that burden to optimize for intelligence.

WATTS

Why look like a man at all? Why not be a box on wheels?

DAVID

Being shaped like you, I can use spaces and equipment designed for you.
But I'm not so limited. I hear frequencies you can't hear. I see wavelengths of light invisible to you.
I move faster. Exert greater force.

The scientists look at DAVID in wonder.

WATTS

You see yourself as a superman.

DAVID

No.

He turns his unearthly eyes on them.

DAVID (CONT'D)

Not a man at all.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN

Holloway and Watts lie on their bed in their clothes - her head on his chest.

WATTS

What if they're really there?
(off his confusion)
The Engineers. They could be there.
Waiting for us. What then?

He laughs.

HOLLOWAY

Then all my dreams come true.

EXT. MAGELLAN (LV-426 ORBIT)

The Magellan has arrived.

LV-426 is a gray moon shrouded in clouds. Behind it looms its father planet Epsilon, a lurid gas giant banded in red and gold, half swallowed in darkness.

The Magellan dives into a forced orbit around LV-426: rockets firing continually, nose pointed down. Telescopes, sensors and antennae sprout once more from its hull.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Everyone's here. Janek and his crew seated at control stations. Holloway and Watts standing on the foredeck. Vickers and DAVID. Ravel and Chance.

LV-426 fills the window: a gray orb of mist. The ground invisible beneath the clouds. Sporadic lightning flickers.

HOLLOWAY

Start with passive systems. We're uninvited guests. Let's be quiet.

That thought sends a nervous shiver through the others. Janek nods at Glass and Brick. They study their instruments.

BRICK

A lot of electromag, all random.
That's lightning. Going to bugger up our scans.

HOLLOWAY

Go active. Mapping radar.

EXT. MAGELLAN (LV-426 ORBIT)

Radar emitters extend from their housings like cannons. A THUMP of power as they hammer out a blast of energy.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

The display paints data on the moonscape as the wavefront comes back: terrain rendered in luminous green.

JANEK

Well, we just rang the doorbell, if anybody's listening.

Kamarov shakes his head fearfully. Crosses himself.

HOLLOWAY

What do we see?

BRICK

Icecaps at the poles. Frozen methane.
Cold down there.

The display fills with light: a wave of terrain data sweeping across the moon's surface as the Magellan orbits.

GLASSE

Terrain data rezzing up. Hey! We got hard spots. Radar-opaque. Bright reflections. That's metal.

A jolt of excitement pounds through everyone on the Bridge.

EXT. MAGELLAN (LV-426 ORBIT)

The Magellan sweeps on around the gray moon, radar emitters humming, antennae and telescopes open wide. The gas giant Epsilon fills the sky behind LV-426.

As it circles, the Magellan launches SATELLITES. Metal motes hurled into polar orbits around the Moon.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Twenty-four "hard spots" shine on the moon's surface: an irregular array circling LV-426.

HOLLOWAY

That's not natural.

MILBURN

You see stuff like that sometimes.
Mineral deposits. Volcanic ejecta.

GLASSE

Big one there.

A new signal appears on the map. Brighter than the others.

HOLLOWAY

Still quiet?

BRICK

No comm signals. No signs of life.

HOLLOWAY

I want to get below the clouds.

EXT. MAGELLAN (IN ATMOSPHERE)

The prospecting ship descends through buffeting grey clouds. Telescopes and antennae stowed away. Hull streaming vapor as it cuts atmosphere.

Lightning flashes and booms around the descending ship.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Everyone strapped into chairs - except Janek, who stands gripping a stanchion, his boots planted on the deck.

The landing engines roar. Wind screams over the hull. Mist whips across the Bridge window, obscuring any view. Watts reaches out. Squeezes Holloway's hand.

The Magellan breaks through the cloud cover into clear air.

Below the ship, a vast and eerie landscape is revealed. Wide valleys mottled with thin dark ground cover. Barren crags and spires of rock. Waterless and wind-swept.

Watts gasps. Stares at the grim and foreign country.

EXT. MAGELLAN (IN ATMOSPHERE)

The Magellan thunders over valleys and craggy ridges of rock.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Janek takes the helm. Guides the Magellan down a valley as if it were a helicopter. A pilot born.

GLASSE

Coming up on site seven.

They crest a mountain higher than Everest.

Before them stretches a dry barren plain. Scattered rocky peaks rise from the desert floor - an alien Monument Valley.

DOWNS

Nothing.

Holloway points to a smaller mountain peak. Oddly regular.

HOLLOWAY

Look there.

Janek expertly swings the Magellan sideways. The Magellan circles the mount, nose pointed inward.

It revolves below the watchers: flat faces, clean edges - but cracked and timework. It glitters like coal.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

Are we recording?

Glasse nods irritably. Of course they're recording.

Vickers stares at the pyramidal peak, nonplussed. Teetering on the brink of belief. Watts scans the data readouts.

WATTS

Tungsten, tantalum, aluminum. That could be technology.

HOLLOWAY

Let's see the next one.

EXT. LV-426 - SECOND PEAK

A second oddly regular peak, even more decrepit than the first, sits on the brink of a vast canyon. Landslides have eaten at its edges.

The Magellan purrs over the landscape, dwarfed by the scale. Drops between the canyon walls to circle the mount.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Holloway and Watts stare at the structure. Beginning to get over the shock. Thinking like scientists again.

WATTS

Identical, apart from weathering.

MILBURN

Could be a rock formation. Carbon crystallizes like that.

The scientists pay him no mind. They're past that.

HOLLOWAY

Let's see the big one.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Janek pilots by instruments alone. Clouds obscuring the view.

BRICK

Closing on the major site...

The ship descends into clear air. A stunning panorama unfolds before them: craters, hundreds of meters across, connected by trenches. Like a pattern of crop-circles sunk in the rock.

In the middle of the central crater - a huge angular peak, larger than the others. The Magellan circles the site. It's awe-inspiring. Cryptic. Huge.

Holloway stares in rapture. Glances at Watts: she nods, eyes shining. She's with him.

The crew's still skeptical - but starting to wonder. They shake their heads and exchange looks.

BRICK (CONT'D)

No radio. No heat sources. Cold as the grave.

HOLLOWAY

Nobody home.

Watts looks out at the timeworn peak. Its eroded facets.

WATTS

I don't think anybody's been home for a long time.

EXT. CRATER COMPLEX - DAY

From the central crater, four canals extend outward like points of the compass. Some connect to smaller craters.

One canal peters out, flush with the desert floor.

The Magellan lands at the end of this canal - half a kilometer from the central crater.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

They stare out the window, down the wide straight canal at the pyramidal peak in the distance. Holloway looks around.

HOLLOWAY

All right. Let's move.

Janek glances at his instruments.

JANEK

There's only six hours of daylight left. Maybe you should hold off.

Watts looks at him incredulously.

WATTS

We've got that outside the windows and you want to wait 'til tomorrow?

EXT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK - DAY

The expedition party emerges from the airlocks - riding CARGO ROVERS, robotic vehicles just smart enough to carry their owners around, or follow along behind them.

The rovers' beds are loaded with gear; the explorers ride on running-board seats. All wear space suits.

Holloway drives the first rover with Watts beside him. Stillwell, Kamarov, and Downs in back.

DAVID drives the second rover with Milburn, Fifield, Chance and Ravel aboard.

WATTS

The air here will kill you, so keep an eye on your supply and watch your seals. Pathogen tests are clean.

HOLLOWAY

Move slowly. Stay together. Don't touch anything. Things may be more fragile than they look - or more dangerous. There might be technologies operating here we don't understand.

The crew of the Magellan exchange uneasy looks. Still uncertain what to think.

EXT. ENTRY CANAL - DAY

The trench grows deeper as they follow it toward the central crater - the pyramidal peak framed ahead of them like a monument on a triumphal avenue.

They cross a perpendicular canal. Glancing left and right, they see smaller craters with central peaks of their own.

They pass through the shadow of a high promontory of stone atop one bank of the canal.

We see - and they do not - that the far side of the promontory has a Sphinx-like FACE of monumental size. So eroded that its artificial nature is uncertain.

EXT. CENTRAL CRATER - DAY

The crater floor is a vast enclosed plain. The pyramidal mount looms in the center - colossal in scale.

The rovers enter the crater, trailing plumes of dust. They circle the pyramid.

On the south face of the pyramid, an IRIS DOOR of many blades stands, easily fifty feet high. Seemingly made of the same basaltic stone as the pyramid itself. A huge construction.

The explorers are transfixed in awe. All skepticism banished.

HOLLOWAY

Tell me that's a natural formation.

(he grins)

Undeniable proof of alien civilization. You were here on this day, thirty-one December, year of our Lord 2172. History will remember your names.

Watts stares at the iris. Its bottom-most blade is broken; it lies in rubble at the foot of the door. A dark knife-like aperture leads into the pyramid.

WATTS
The door's open.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Janek and Vickers watch the explorers' progress in the main holographic display: their tinny voices echoing over the comm link. At the sight of the huge iris door in the pyramid, both Janek and Vickers stare in blank astonishment.

JANEK
Son of a bitch. They were right.

He turns to stare out the window at the pyramid's peak.

Vickers turns and slips out of the Bridge. Hurries away.

VICKERS'S SUITE

Vickers strides through her quarters. On the far wall there are two small doors.

She opens the first: steps into a luxurious bathroom. Washes a pill down with a tumbler of water.

Returns to her cabin and opens the second small door.

SECRET ROOM - CONTINUOUS

A chamber walled with steel panels. A deep hum of ventilation and power: there's a lot of technology here.

She turns to a console beside the door. Flips a row of switches. The hum deepens. Hidden mechanisms stir to life.

EXT. PYRAMID - IRIS DOOR

On foot, explorers press inside - Holloway and Watts in the lead. Their flashlights cut into the gloom.

The robotic rovers follow them: their six-wheeled chassis with independent suspension trundling over the rubble barrier, sure-footed as goats.

INT. PYRAMID - ANTECHAMBER

Dark and cavernous. Weak daylight slants in.

The explorers press into the darkness on foot - the cargo rovers' headlights flashing on. They move through a dark cathedral space, empty and bare.

DAVID looks around in fascination, his eyes raking the walls.

HOLLOWAY
Jocelyn. Here.

His voice trembles with urgency. He shines light on the rock. Symbols engraved on the dark surface. Dots, lines and arcs.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)
The writing of the Engineers.
Conclusive connection.

DAVID stands beside them. Stares at the alien writing.

DAVID
Congratulations, Professor Holloway.

Watts passes her light over the writing, recording it. They move on into the dark.

DAVID lingers. Reading.

PYRAMID - VARIOUS PASSAGES

The interior is a labyrinth. Corridors big as railway tunnels intersecting and diverging.

The explorers wend their way deeper. Several carry map units, whose holographic displays render three-dimensional maps that expand as they explore.

INT. PYRAMID - MASSIVE CHAMBER

Holloway leads the explorers deeper into the complex. The motors of the cargo rovers whine and growl.

DAVID trails the others, eyes raking the blank walls as if he sees something there. He reaches out. Passes his hand through the air as if grasping a cobweb.

A STRANGE RUMBLING NOISE sounds down the corridor, freezing them. Holloway sweeps his light that way. The sound comes again: a DEMONIC VOICE speaking some unearthly language.

Watts looks at Holloway - but his eyes are focused on the dark ahead. He moves forward. A beat. The others follow.

An APPARITION appears before them. A PALE, LUMINOUS GIANT fifteen feet tall, with hollow eyes and a grotesque snout. It strides toward them. Speaks in a sonorous voice.

Pandemonium.

Watts backpedals involuntarily. Seeing Holloway stand his ground, she reaches out to him in a panic.

WATTS

Martin. Martin!

But Holloway doesn't budge. Stares at the Apparition in fascination. Everyone else scatters - except DAVID, who stands stock-still by the wall.

Watts watches as the Apparition walks right up to Holloway. Disappears with a sizzle of static as Holloway experiences the creature passing through him.

Silence. Watts returns to Holloway's side. Stillwell and Downs are huddled on the deck. Milburn and Fifield have fallen back down the passageway.

FIFIELD

Christ. Christ!

RAVEL

It wasn't real.

MILBURN

We all saw it.

Unseen by the others, DAVID reaches out and repeats his gesture in the air.

A rumbling sound down the corridor, as before. Moments later, the Apparition appears round the corner again. They stand their ground: the ghostly giant strides toward them, exactly as before, and disappears with a crackle.

HOLLOWAY

Recording?

FIFIELD

No more. I'm out.

HOLLOWAY

Fifield. Get a grip.

FIFIELD

I'm a prospector. You find a load of bauxite, I'm your man. But not this.

MILBURN
I should go with him. Buddy system.

HOLLOWAY
(disgusted)
Fine.

He hauls a heavy rolling case out of the cargo rover.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)
You can deploy the drones. Drop them in the first or second nexus on your way back.

FIFIELD
Give us a rover.

HOLLOWAY
And half our gear? It's no more than a mile. You can walk it.

Sulking, Milburn takes the rolling case. The remaining explorers watch Fifield and Milburn backtrack into the dark.

CORE CHAMBER DOOR

Holloway and Watts lead their party up to a massive door, sealed tight. In design and scale, undeniably important.
Holloway glances at his map.

HOLLOWAY
This should lead to the core of the pyramid.

WATTS
Jack it open? Or cut through?

HOLLOWAY
Let's do as little damage as we can.

Ravel waves a sensor over the wall.

RAVEL
There's power. Current flowing in the wall.

Chance begins to inspect the frame of the door.

CHANCE
Maybe we can hack it. Has to be a mechanism...

DAVID looks as if they fail to see something obvious. He points at a spot on the wall beside the massive slab.

DAVID
Pull up a rover. I want to get up there.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DAY

Janek stands at the window, looking down the long canal at the distant pyramid.

The ship's powerful imaging systems stream data: stereoscopic feeds from the explorers' flashlights; a map that grows as they explore. The maze under the pyramid drawn in light.

A globe of LV-426 blooms with terrain and weather data as the satellites feed the ship information.

Vickers appears at Janek's side.

JANEK
Director. Taking an interest?

VICKERS
It's my operation, isn't it?

INT. PYRAMID - HUB

A junction where multiple passageways converge.

Milburn and Fifield trudge into the space, trundling the probe cases behind them. Tunnels lead away in all directions.

FIFIELD
What do you think?

MILBURN
Grand Central Station.

They open the case. CAMERA PROBES tumble out: spheres the size of softballs, studded with lenses and sensors.

Tiny lights come on as the probes awaken. They roll off, dispersing to investigate every passageway. Bumbling into walls and pillars, reversing. Exploring by random walk.

FIFIELD
Let's check the feed. Gimme the map.

MILBURN
You had the map unit.

FIFIELD
You don't have the map?

They stare at each other.

MILBURN
Are you serious?

He trudges back the way they came, in disgust.

MILBURN (CONT'D)
Come on.

CORE CHAMBER DOOR

DAVID stands on top of one of the cargo rovers. He's cut a hole in the wall beside the door, high up: he works with probes in the mechanisms inside.

DAVID
Looks like a three-state switch.

A deep BOOM, echoing inside the ancient walls. Nothing moves.

DAVID (CONT'D)
One moment...

He moves a control. BOOM. The immense door begins to rise.

PYRAMID - CORE CHAMBER

The vast central chamber of the pyramid. An immense space.

Holloway walks in, his flashlight searching. Watts hurries after. The others follow, rovers tagging along.

A colossal structure stands in the center of the chamber, convoluted and strange. A mechanism. Chasms yawn in the floor all around it, their depths lost in darkness.

The explorers enter, rovers in train. They lift their eyes: hundreds of feet above them they see the pyramid's apex from within. A SHAFT OF DIFFUSE LIGHT penetrates the pyramid somewhere near the peak.

RAVEL
This is something, now.

DAVID
Yes. Yes, it is.

The android's awareness is keyed to a high pitch. He seems to read meaning in the inscrutable structures all around them.

Holloway hauls a drone case out of the rover. Two dozen spherical drones tumble out, wake up, and roll off into the dark. They are nimble, hopping curbs and skirting chasms.

Watts looks at her atmosphere sensor. Astonished.

WATTS

Martin. This air's breathable.

The core chamber brightens as the sun outside moves into alignment. The shaft of light perfectly centered.

A vast SIGH as if the pyramid itself is breathing.

A fat drop of water falls on Watts's glove. She looks up in surprise. Another falls on her visor. And then it's raining inside the pyramid.

Water trickles into the chasms, inundating the mossy growths that cling to the walls.

Holloway looks at Watts with a little boy's grin.

HOLLOWAY

Miracles and wonders!

The shaft of light moves on. The core chamber dims slightly. The rainfall stops as suddenly as it started.

The explorers follow the main path around the periphery of the chamber, past a gallery of mysterious machines.

There are marvels in the shadows. Cells in the dark apparatus open on startling deposits of color: translucent alabaster flutes. Honeycombs of pure gold. Matrices of crystal.

Watts waves a scanning instrument as she walks.

WATTS

Intense field readings. Huge power sources here.

PYRAMID - CORE CHAMBER - RAMP

They arrive at a wide opening in the floor. A strange ramp curves downward - its floor segmented and saw-toothed.

A bafflement: it's not a staircase. Not an escalator. No moving parts. No rails or tracks.

HOLLOWAY

Space below us. A big space.

As they stand looking, a probe bumbles up to the opening and goes bounding down the ramp. Watts laughs.

WATTS

How does this work?

She begins to descend on foot. Holloway behind her. Stillwell, Downs, and Kamarov grudgingly follow.

But DAVID looks away across the cavernous chamber - fixated on the central crystal. He beckons Ravel and Chance to follow him, and walks away.

Ravel and Chance look at each other in astonishment. Uncertainly, they follow DAVID.

LOWER PASSAGE

Holloway, Watts, and the crewmen reach the bottom of the ramp, breathing hard. A cargo rover trundles down after them.

They look back up. The ramp above them is empty.

HOLLOWAY

Ravel. Chance. Where've you gone?

DAVID! Where are you?

(to Watts, indignantly)

They didn't come down!

But Watts is staring through an archway. Transfixed.

WATTS

Look.

She walks in. Holloway follows.

CONTROL CONCOURSE

A passageway punctuated by alcoves as big as band-shells.

In each alcove stands a biomechanical apparatus - shaped from the same dark material as the pyramid itself. Each apparatus implies by its design that a giant is meant to fit inside it.

Holloway and Watts walk the concourse, playing their lights over the dark machinery. Their footsteps echo.

WATTS

Do you see, the size of them? Like that ghost we saw...

HOLLOWAY

It wasn't a ghost. Where are the others? I don't want to go back up.

Watts fiddles with her suit's comm controls. Listening.

WATTS

They switched to channel three. I hear them talking. They're okay.

HOLLOWAY

We should stay together.

INT. PYRAMID - BLIND CORRIDOR

Milburn and Fifield are lost. They bumble through the dark.

MILBURN

This is not the same place.

FIFIELD

It is! That is the same freaky thing we saw before.

He points at a detail of the architecture.

MILBURN

No it's not! The other one was more... sort of...fuck it.
(taps his comm)
Milburn to Magellan. Come in.

Static.

INTERSECTION

Holloway and Watts round a corner and stop in their tracks.
Kamarov, Stillwell, and Downs almost run into them.

The scientists stand frozen.

In front of them lies a dead giant. An ENGINEER.

If he were standing, he would be fifteen feet tall.

He is roughly human in shape. Barrel-chested. Withered to the bones. There are bulky protrusions fused with his flesh: hard to say whether they are equipment or parts of his body.

His head, lolling to one side, is severed from his body.

His eyes seem to be covered by goggles; but if so then the goggles are fused with his skull. An elephantine proboscis, severed now, once connected to a protrusion on his hip.

The giant lies frozen in a convulsion of agony. His jaw gaping in a silent scream. His corpse is marred by hideous wounds: slashes that cut through bone.

The explorers move closer. Speechless.

KAMAROV

God in Heaven.

WATTS

Martin. Martin.

HOLLOWAY

I know. Look.

He lifts his light. Beyond the dead giant, a vision of Hell:

A dozen DEAD ENGINEERS lie heaped against a sealed door. Twisted in postures of torment, murdered in the attempt to escape. All bear horrific wounds.

Scene of an ancient massacre.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Janek and Vickers stare dumbstruck at a 3-D view of the dead giants captured by the explorers' cameras.

INT. CATACOMB - INTERSECTION

The explorers circle the decapitated giant, hushed with awe. Holloway steps close.

HOLLOWAY

"There were giants in the earth in those days...and when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, they bare children to them, who became mighty men." Genesis six four.

Lays a gloved hand reverently on the giant's ribs.

DOWNS

(panicky)

You said don't touch anything! You said don't touch anything!

HOLLOWAY

Peace.

CHANCE

The size of them!

HOLLOWAY

In all the old mythologies, the visitors from the sky were giants.

Watts joins Holloway beside the dead Engineer. Touches the corpse in her own turn. It's hard as stone: ossified. She traces the ancient, terrible wounds.

WATTS

They were killed. All of them.

Downs stands staring at the dead giant, as shaken as Kamarov.

DOWNS

We shouldn't be here.

HOLLOWAY

Come on. The dead can't hurt you.

(adjusts his communicator)

DAVID. Chance. Ravel. I've got something here.

Static.

WATTS

Communications are going to hell.

EXT. SPACE - LV-426 ORBIT

One of the Magellan's satellites hurtles along, high above the moon's atmosphere. It passes over the terminator line between the night side and day side.

Through the clouds below, a lightning-laced storm front rolls across LV-426 like a wave.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Rising winds pluck at the ground cover outside the window.
Janek turns from the view to look at the holographic globe.

JANEK

All hands. Back to the ship. We got a mean storm front rolling in. I repeat.
All hands...

INT. DARK CITY - CATACOMBS - INTERSECTION

Standing beside the dead giant, Watts and Holloway look at each other as the signal comes in.

JANEK (V.O.)
(staticky) front rolling...back to the ship.

HOLLOWAY
(into comm)
We've found something here! I'm not walking away for bad weather.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek shouts into his communicator.

JANEK
Holloway! I got two-hundred-kilometer winds with airborne silica and enough static to fry your suits. Get your asses back here! Now!

EXT. CENTRAL CRATER - DUSK

Holloway races their cargo rover away from the pyramid, wheels kicking up dust.

Watts rides in back, securing a bulky payload under a tarp on the cargo deck. Stillwell, Downs, and Kamarov clinging miserably beside her. Watts looks back:

A massive storm front chases them. A tidal wave of dust shot through with lightning. Gale-force winds tear at the ground. Lightning lashes the pyramid and the crater wall.

Reaching the Magellan, they see the other rover already in the airlock lift. DAVID, Ravel, and Chance aboard.

EXT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK LIFT

Holloway roars into the lift at speed, the rover skidding almost into the opposite wall. Watts leaps down.

The storm wall catches up to them. Screaming winds rip through the lift. Dust fills the air. Visibility plunges toward zero.

WATTS
Help me unload!

She pulls at the tarp. It tears halfway free - and fills with wind, snapping taut with such violence that Watts is hurled out into the storm.

IN THE GALE

Watts tumbles helplessly: a leaf in the wind. CRASHES into a metal stanchion. Clings, the wind knocked out of her. Ears ringing. Nothing but static in her headset.

IN THE LIFT

Holloway stares in shock at the place where Watts vanished.

HOLLOWAY

Jocelyn!

With inhuman reflexes DAVID reacts. Grabs a tether. Latches it to his suit. Locks it to an anchor point on the wall. Dives into the storm. A ballet nearly too fast to follow.

IN THE GALE

DAVID lets the wind take him. Skids across the ground, controlling his trajectory. He hits the stanchion where Watts is lodged with a CLANG as if he were made of iron.

Watts stares at him in mute astonishment.

He locks her suit to his. Activates the tether unit's winch. It whirs, reeling them in through the hurricane.

IN THE LIFT

Holloway and the other crewmen haul Watts and DAVID back inside. Holloway and Watts embrace fiercely as the lift rises toward the safety of the ship.

The crewmen bundle the rover's tarp-wrapped cargo into a sealed dumbwaiter that rises independently into the ship.

INT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK

The explorers strip off space suits.

Watts pulls her helmet off. Catches DAVID's eye across the airlock. Mouths a silent Thank you. He gives her the barest nod and vanishes into the ship.

The explorers exchange looks. A mood of exuberance and wonder prevails now that they're safe home.

HOLLOWAY

Day one.

Smiles of wonder as what they've seen comes home.

DOWNS

Got to hand it to you, professor. You were right. Both of you.

CHANCE

What's in the tarp? What'd you bring back?

The explorers from Watts and Holloway's party exchange looks and burst into laughter.

WATTS

You don't want to know.

STILLWELL

Shit. We're two helmets short.

He points. The lockers labeled MILBURN and FIFIELD stand closed. The helmet racks empty. The laughter cuts off.

KAMAROV

They didn't come in!

They stare at each other, listening to the wind wail outside.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek speaks urgently into the communicator.

JANEK

Between the wind speeds and the static electricity, there's no safe way to get to you. You're going to have to hunker down until it passes. How are your provisions?

FIFIELD (V.O.)

We got air <static>. Water and food tabs <static> suits.

JANEK

Honey sacks?

INT. DARK CITY - CATACOMB

Fifield and Milburn stand miserably in a murky passageway. Fifield hitches up his space suit's crotch uncomfortably.

FIFIELD
Yeah, we're piped.

MILBURN
I hate these fucking things.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

FIFIELD (V.O.)
We hate these fucking <static>, Captain.

JANEK
Maybe next time you'll mind your maps.
Keep your heads down. We'll come get you in the morning.

A burst of static answers him: Fifield's voice scrambled by the storm. Unintelligible.

JANEK (CONT'D)
Magellan out.

MESS ROOM - NIGHT

All hands present excepting the two missing men. Janek plays his squeeze box, its archaic music filling the air. Tired and exuberant, the men sway and dance mockingly.

Holloway has a champagne bottle open in each hand. He fills steel cups left and right.

HOLLOWAY
My friends. What we do here marks the greatest achievement of our species. Contact with another civilization. Humanity came of age today, on this moon. You were there.
(raises his glass)
To history.

They raise cups and drink. Even the crew moved by the moment. But Janek smiles crookedly and toasts again.

JANEK

To Milburn and Fifield. The first human beings to freak out, get lost, and sleep in their suits in the ruins of an alien civilization.

INT. PYRAMID CATACOMBS - NIGHT

A vast dark maze. Milburn and Fifield grope their way through the dark with flashlights. The storm howls outside.

MILBURN

What are you looking for?

FIFIELD

(groping along the wall)
Someplace things can't come at us.

MILBURN

What's gonna come at us?

INT. MAGELLAN - VICKERS'S SUITE - NIGHT

DAVID stands beside Vickers at her holography terminal. He lays his hand on over a signal plate - and the terminal lights up with a three-dimensional image.

The core chamber of the pyramid, from DAVID's point of view.

It's apparent that DAVID's eyes see more than human eyes do. He seems to see heat and electromagnetic energy as well as visible light; calibrated readouts are overlaid on the scene.

The structures in the pyramid are surrounded by complicated patterns of energy. This is incomprehensible technology.

DAVID

The core of the pyramid. You see.

Vickers goes rigid, looking at it: avarice in her eyes.

VICKERS

We're going to protocol two.

DAVID

I understand.

LABORATORY

A high-tech science facility behind glass. Watts and Holloway, in lab gloves and smocks, open the dumbwaiter:

An ENGINEER'S HEAD rises into view, ghoulish and elephantine. Vapor rises from it. A readout blinks: STERILIZED.

They lift it onto the steel table. It takes both of them.

They pass scanners over the skull. Images accumulate and rotate on the laboratory displays. X-ray and ultrasound.

Holloway leans close to study an X-ray image. He almost seems to see a ghostly second face...

WATTS

Martin. Look.

She traces the head with an ultrasound probe: under the vibrations a seam opens up around the edge of the face.

She gets a fingertip into the seam. Works with a probe. Pries away the long-dead Engineer's mask. It comes free.

The visage revealed is human, except for its giant scale.

White-skinned. Earless. Hairless. Withered but beautiful as a Greek statue. Eyes closed. An expression of suffering on its face. Watts drops the ultrasound probe in shock.

WATTS (CONT'D)

They look like us.

HOLLOWAY

We look like them. Genesis 1:27. "And God created man in his own image. In his own image created He him."

Vickers and DAVID stand outside the lab window, staring in at the god's head. Vickers looks shaken. DAVID, fascinated.

Watts covers her nose in revulsion. A horrible stench: The Engineer head begins to disintegrate in front of them. Flesh oozing, skin peeling. Accelerated decay.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

It's breaking down.

WATTS

Formaldehyde!

Urgently they ransack cabinets and storage rooms. Watts finds a clear plastic drum and dumps its contents. Holloway drags five-gallon jugs of preservative out of a cabinet.

DAVID watches through the window, almost amused.

DAVID
Mortal after all.

They lift the rotting head into the drum, retching. Fingers skidding in putrefaction.

They pour formaldehyde over it. As soon as the head is immersed they rush to strip off their reeking gloves and smocks, scrubbing their hands.

The god's head sits in its murky vat, shedding skin and tofu-like chunks of white flesh. The noble face disintegrating.

Watts and Holloway stare at it, breathing hard from their work. Vickers flicks on the intercom from outside the window.

VICKERS
Your cadaver's interesting. But I'm more interested in the machinery in the pyramid. The core chamber. What do you think it does?

Watts stares at Vickers incredulously.

WATTS
How could anyone know...

HOLLOWAY
I know what it does.

Silence. Holloway looks at Vickers wearily, as if he's seen this conversation coming. He glances at Watts.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)
Think. What we've seen. What we know.

Watts rises to the challenge. Thinking on her feet.

WATTS
Twenty-four pyramids scattered around the moon's equator. Massive power supplies. Vents in the walls. Atmosphere changes. Breeder tanks...
(she's got it)
The pyramids are terraforming machines.

Holloway grins, exuberant. His theory playing out perfectly. He doesn't see Vickers stiffen. Her hands curling into fists.

HOLLOWAY
That's why Earth's ancient cultures built pyramids: in imitation of the gods.

(MORE)

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

Twelve thousand years ago, beings from the sky set pyramids on the Earth and transformed the world. That's what they were doing here - before their civilization failed.

Watts stares at the head in its tank. The severed neck.

WATTS

It didn't fail. It was wiped out.

INT. CATACOMBS - INSECT CHAMBER

Milburn and Fifield have bunked down in a new chamber: they slouch against a wall. Milburn sweeps the room with his headlamp. Stoops to lift something into the light.

MILBURN

Look at this!

A CENTIPEDE, three feet long and thick as man's thumb. Its hard shell is gray. It has a hammer-head like a shark.

FIFIELD

Jesus! Put it down!

He leaps back, wild-eyed.

Milburn laughs at him. Lets the eyeless centipede wind its segmented body around his space-suited arm.

In the flat face, a white vertical slit appears. Changes quickly to a horizontal position; opens enough to suggest a mouth. Milburn doesn't notice this development.

MILBURN

Relax. Your suit's bug-proof. Hell, it's bulletproof.

The centipede spirals around his arm, glittering, its body moving in fluid waves. The blind head quests between his fingers. Milburn loses his nerve as the thing's mouth suddenly gapes wide as a shark's.

MILBURN (CONT'D)

That's enough.

He tries to pull it off.

The centipede locks its segments together and digs in with its body. It might as well be made of iron.

MILBURN (CONT'D)
(panicking)
Get it off! It's crushing me!

Fifield pulls out a utility knife. Cuts into the centipede's body behind its head.

A gout of greed ACID spills over Milburn's glove. Smoke rises as the acid quickly burns a hole through the material.

Milburn's shout of astonishment turns to a wail of agony.

MILBURN (CONT'D)
AHH! Help me! Christ!

The centipede snakes into the smoking hole in the glove. Crawls upward into Milburn's suit - toward his head.

INT. MAGELLAN - LABORATORY - NIGHT

Holloway stands studying the data displays: cross-sections of the Engineer's skull.

Watts scrutinizes the head itself, her nose an inch from the plastic tank. Not a pretty sight.

As she watches, a current in the formaldehyde peels away one gossamer eyelid. The revealed eye is black as obsidian, iridescent like opal. A jewel.

Fascinated, Watts pulls out a plastic case. Opens it to reveal a high-tech control unit with a screen. She pops open a plastic capsule: removes a tiny SEED PROBE, smaller than a grain of rice. Drops it into the vat.

Under her guidance, the seed probe swims to the severed neck. Burrows into the medulla oblongata toward the brain.

ON A SCREEN: In the probe's POV the medulla looks like a tunnel. The probe climbs along neural channels.

Another screen shows the probe's progress through the skull.

Glasse enters. Stands beside Holloway to watch Watts at work.

HOLLOWAY
You won't get anything. Tissue's too degraded. Hmm. Brain chamber's massive, even proportionately.

WATTS
Neural paths are still conductive.

The seed probe reaches the optic nerve of the exposed eye - and its POV fills with a vision of glory: a beautiful woman's face surrounded by a mystical nimbus of light. An angel.

Glasse and Holloway gasp. The woman in the blurry vision is Watts - as seen by the dead Engineer's eye.

GLASSE Incredible.

The image dissolves into noise. Error messages flicker across the display. Watts sighs.

WATTS
Formaldehyde's killing the tissue.

Holloway stares at Watts, awe on his face.

HOLLOWAY
Did you record that?

WATTS
Of course.

AT A LAB TABLE

Watts dissects one of the Engineer's eyes - working underwater in a shallow tub of preservative. Glasse looks on avidly, an unabashed fan.

Watts wears a pair of magnifying goggles on her forehead - the lenses lowering and rising at need.

She bisects the apple-sized eyeball carefully and extracts the hard lens from behind the cornea. Holds the lens up to her eye. It is opalescent, almost luminous.

WATTS (CONT'D)
The lens is where the phase shift happens.

The uncorrected view through the lens is blurry.

WATTS (CONT'D)
Glasse. I want to look through these lenses. Can you seal them and do the optical correction?

Glasse reaches out and plucks the magnifying goggles from Watts's forehead. He grins.

GLASSE
Got an idea about that.

INT. CATACOMBS - INSECT CHAMBER

Milburn writhes on the ground, heels drumming frantically against the deck. Excruciating screams.

Fifield kneels over him, helplessly pulling at the tail of the centipede - which has all but vanished into Milburn's suit. A trickle of scarlet from the hole.

Fifield is delirious with horror. He clutches at the centipede in vain. It slips through his gloves.

Milburn claws at Fifield, wild-eyed.

MILBURN

Cut off my arm. Cut off my -

He convulses. Spits blood. The head of the centipede emerges between his teeth. He seizes. Choking and dying.

FIFIELD

Jesus Christ!

He leaps up. Backs away. Runs into the dark.

INT. CATACOMBS - LONELY PASSAGE - NIGHT

Fifield stumbles along. Exhausted. Pouring sweat inside his suit. He is hopelessly lost. He slams into a resinous structure that topples to the floor. Things break.

He whips his light around in jittery paranoia. Taps at his comm controls, getting only static.

In Fifield's headlamp beam, the blackness is filling with motes of light. A blizzard of tiny flying insects.

SCARABS.

FIFIELD

Fifield to Magellan. Come on, come on.
Anybody, seriously! God damn it!

Scarabs flit through the darkness around him. They alight on his shoulders. Crawl over his visor. Obscuring his vision.

FIFIELD (CONT'D)

Get off!

He swats at his visor, killing some. The crushed insects produce acid that eats into the plexiglass in seconds.

FIFIELD (CONT'D)

Shit.

He twists, craning with his flashlight to inspect himself.
Brushes scarabs away right and left.

Acid opens a hole in his visor. Scarabs are inside. Buzzing around his head. Fifield freaks out, clawing at his helmet.

A scarab bites his cheek.

FLASH ON:

The microscopic world - as strange DNA invades Fifield's bloodstream. Virulent strands of protein attack the native DNA, transforming...

FIFIELD

As his pupils dilate, breath hissing into his nostrils. His expanding body stiffens as if shocked by a powerful electric current. He screams. Falls, convulsing.

EXT. MAGELLAN - NIGHT

The storm batters the ship, bouncing it on its suspension.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN - NIGHT

Watts and Holloway lie in bed, exhausted. Arms around each other. Watts stares into space.

WATTS

We found the gods. And they've been murdered.

HOLLOWAY

You've pried too many arrowheads out of old skulls to get squeamish now.
They've been dead what, eighteen hundred years? Two thousand?

WATTS

What could kill them?

Holloway contemplates the question.

HOLLOWAY

Who knows?
(he laughs bitterly)
(MORE)

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

But I guess we know why they never came back to us. Something killed them off - back around the time of Christ. Maybe He was one of them! A great teacher, sent from Heaven? Jesus. The last Engineer.

WATTS

Martin, stop!

She slaps at him. Holloway laughs.

BRIDGE

Janek stands at the Bridge window, staring out into the storm. Buffeting clouds and howling winds. The lighthouse beams of the Magellan's beacons sweeping through the cloud.

He plays his squeeze box in the teeth of the storm.

JANEK

(singing)

You'll come a-waltzing, Matilda, with me...

Behind him, DAVID appears on the Bridge. Steals across the Bridge to a ladder. Descends into the compartment below...

NAVIGATION COMPUTER ROOM

DAVID activates the navigation computer terminal: light bathes his face. His fingers fly over the keyboard, silently and swiftly, with superhuman dexterity.

DAVID

(quietly)

Activate. Administrative override.

EXT. MAGELLAN - DAWN

Daylight filters through the clouds. The storm has passed. The Magellan sits intact on its landing struts.

INT. MAGELLAN - VICKERS'S SUITE - SECRET ROOM - DAWN

The high-tech room hums at a different frequency now. Indicator lights green and ready. Vickers throws switches.

Four HIBERNATION PODS slide out of the metal walls. From each pod, a muscular SOLDIER rouses from sleep. They are scarred and crew-cut. Tough customers. They wake like veterans.

Their leader sits up and clasps his head with a wince. This is CAPTAIN SHEPHERD, a career mercenary who has followed the highest paycheck to this strange duty.

VICKERS
Captain Shepherd.

SHEPHERD
(squinting in the light)
Reporting.

Lydia Vickers. I'm your authority.

SHEPHERD (CONT'D) Understood.

VICKERS
I'll brief you on the way. We need to move.

SHEPHERD
No breakfast?

CORRIDOR

Vickers strides forward. Four soldiers at her heels: Captain Shepherd, VIGODA, RAY, and CARD. They walk in unison, their boots drumming on the deck.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN

Holloway and Watts lie sleeping. The distant drum of marching feet rouses them. Watts frowns at Holloway.

WATTS
What is that?

E.V.A. ROOM

The prep room inside the airlocks. A soldier, VIGODA, waits there: a slim dark man with an air of calm.

Holloway and Watts arrive in civilian clothes, perplexed.

HOLLOWAY

Where is everybody? We can't - (he stops short)
Who are you?

VIGODA

Captain Janek took his crew out to retrieve his missing men. They never came in.

HOLLOWAY

And you are...

VIGODA

Vigoda. Weyland Security detail.

The scientists are dumbfounded. His presence is impossible.

WATTS

Where'd you come from?

VIGODA

Director's call to brief you on that.
I'm supposed to escort you to the worksite.

HOLLOWAY

Worksite?

Vigoda glances at a mapping unit.

VIGODA

Haven't been out yet. I understand it's in some kind of pyramid.

CORRIDOR - VICKERS'S CABIN DOOR

A furious Holloway and Watts, trailed by Vigoda, arrive at Vickers's cabin. They are astonished to find Shepherd standing guard at the door.

VICKERS'S SUITE

Vickers sits calmly at her desk. Holloway and Watts stand in front of her, bristling.

HOLLOWAY

Why wasn't I told about these additional personnel?

VICKERS

They're my personnel. On my ship.

WATTS

What are the guns for?

Vickers looks at them unflappably. Sure of her ground now.

VICKERS

I'm being careful. These new finds give our work a new importance.

WATTS

You should have talked to us. Martin's mission leader. That's in our contract.

VICKERS

The second you found alien technology, control of this mission reverted to me. That's in your contract too.

Watts and Holloway exchange grim looks. Vickers has them.

VICKERS (CONT'D)

Mr. Weyland's pouring trillions into Mars. He's spent a fortune building ships like the Magellan to search for colony planets. But Earthlike worlds are vanishingly rare. The right distance from the sun, the right atmosphere, enough water...

She glances across the suite at her holographic display: a live feed from the pyramid worksite, where DAVID works on the terraforming equipment.

VICKERS (CONT'D)

This is a technology to transform worlds. He'll never give it up.
(she turns to face them)
And neither will I.

HOLLOWAY

The science must come first. You can wait until we've documented...

VICKERS

You're standing on an alien world courtesy of Weyland Industries. Be grateful.

Watts approaches the holography terminal, staring at the images in horror.

WATTS

What are they doing in there?!

INT. PYRAMID - CORE CHAMBER - DAY

Watts and Holloway, in space suits, arrive on the scene:

Powerful floodlights illuminate the core chamber, beating back the gloom. A fine spray of water falls out of the darkness overhead.

DAVID, Chance, and Ravel are dismantling the hulking mechanism at the core of the pyramid - peeling its thick skin away with power saws and compact explosives.

DAVID operates a diamond-bladed hull saw, carving away the terraforming systems thick skin.

Robotic scanners take high-resolution scans of the machinery.

Two Weyland Security soldiers - Card and Ray - stand guard in combat vacuum suits. Automatic rifles at the ready.

Watts takes in the destruction with dismay. Beside her, Holloway is all but gnashing his teeth.

CATACOMBS

Janek drives a cargo rover carrying a search party, flashlight beams sweeping: Stillwell, Glasse, Downs, and Brick. Janek studies an electronic map as he drives.

GLASSE

(into comm)

Milburn. Fifield. You read me? Come back.

JANEK

We should be getting beacons off their suits.

STILLWELL

Shielding in the walls?

BRICK

Suits could have failed.

JANEK

Both suits?

PYRAMID - CORE CHAMBER

Watts watches in rage as a large section of the central mechanism's falls with a thunderous clamor to the deck.

Holloway touches her shoulder. Motions for her to follow.

LOWER PASSAGE

Holloway and Watts pass the dead Engineers they discovered the previous day.

WATTS

We found the tomb of the gods, and brought grave-robbers right to the door.

HOLLOWAY

Let them scratch. This find's too big to ruin. There's two dozen pyramids on this moon. Anyway, they're on the wrong track. That's infrastructure.

Holloway plays his flashlight over the biomechanical apparatuses lining the walls.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

The core activity of the complex was down here.

They turn a corner. DEAD ENGINEERS lie scattered over the floor in front of them. Desiccated and skeletal. Long dead.

Watts moves among them, fascinated. These Engineers all died of explosive chest wounds: ribs bent outward from within. They are otherwise unmarked.

Holloway's more interested in the mechanisms: high-tech iron maidens, built to fit the bodies of giants. Some suggest sitting positions, others standing. Their design is invasive: meant not merely to embrace, but to penetrate, to fuse.

WATTS

Something different killed these.

SHADOWY COLONNADE

Watts and Holloway explore a wide colonnade. She is still distracted by the ancient dead; he by the machinery.

Holloway walks down a narrow branching hall. So intent on the mechanisms in the walls, he almost doesn't see the AIRSHAFT plunging down into darkness in front of him.

He stops just in time. Turns back...

A GHOST appears right in front of him - a giant dragging himself across the floor, his monstrous visage eye to eye with Holloway and looming closer.

Holloway leaps back with a gasp - and falls down the shaft. The ghost stares after him as if watching his fall. Disappears in a puff of static.

Watts crosses down the main colonnade, searching.

WATTS
Martin? Martin!

An iris door closes over the shaft.

COLONNADE

Searching, Watts walks anxiously through the dark, sweeping with her light. Shouting for Holloway. She breaks into a run.

CATACOMBS - MILBURN'S RESTING PLACE

Janek and Stillwell stand aghast. Their flashlights illuminate a hideous sight:

Milburn lies dead on the deck. His body contorted in agony. His head inside his helmet is gnawed down to the bone.

STILLWELL
What happened to him?

Stillwell removes the dead man's helmet. The CENTIPEDE scuttles out onto the deck: doubled in size. Stillwell leaps back with a cry.

Janek pulls his pistol. Puts three rounds through the bug. It dies in a spray of acid that burns holes in the black floor.

Janek watches in astonishment as a pin-prick dot of acid eats a pit in his gunbarrel.

DOWNS (O.S.)
Captain.

Downs approaches, holding pieces of a shattered helmet: the stencilled lettering on the helmet reads FIFIELD.

Janek's jaw clenches grimly. His voice is resigned:

JANEK
Where's the rest of him?

DOWNS

No sign.

JANEK

All right. We're done here. All hands back aboard.

STILLWELL

What about Milburn?

They look down at the ravaged corpse.

JANEK

We can't bring the body aboard. God knows what's in there. Bag him. We'll put him in an ore hopper.

INT. MAGELLAN - VICKERS'S SUITE

Vickers stares at her holography terminal: it displays Janek's helmet-cam view: the Milburn's body, sealed in clear plastic in the bed of a cargo rover.

JANEK (V.O.)

(filtered)

Repeat, I have two men down. I'm pulling my crew back to the ship. I'd advise you to do the...

WATTS (V.O.)

(breaking in, filtered)

Please, anyone...I need help. Martin's missing.

Vickers looks nervously from one video feed to the next.

JANEK (V.O.)

(filtered)

Watts. Where are you?

Vickers turns: Captain Shepherd stands behind her, watching.
She strives to control the quaver in her voice.

VICKERS

Captain Shepherd. Consider yourself responsible for my personal security.

CATACOMBS - JUNCTURE

Watts stands beside Janek's rover in a wide dark passageway.

JANEK

I've just lost a third of my crew. I'm not sending any more men off into the dark.

WATTS

We can't leave Martin out there.

JANEK

Get Vickers to lend you some soldiers.

WATTS

(furiously)

She says "her forces are committed."

Janek sighs. Glances at the rover: Milburn dead in the back, Stillwell, Downs and Kamarov looking jumpy and eager to go. Downs shakes his head grimly: No way.

DAVID (O.S.)

I'll stay.

DAVID steps out of the dark. Calm as ever. A slim machine gun slung over his shoulder.

DAVID (CONT'D)

You'll be safe.

WATTS

Thank you.

EXT. MAGELLAN - DAY

Janek and his crew unload Milburn's body from the rover.

JANEK

Put him in the number one ore hopper.
Get the scrubbers on in the airlock.
Sterilize everything.

MINUTES LATER

Stillwell uses a remote to lower an ore hopper from the belly of the ship. A thick steel bin on heavy chains. He loads the body bag into the hopper.

INT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK

The crewmen enter one at a time - blasted by sterilizing sprays and radiations.

INT. PYRAMID - LOWER PASSAGE

DAVID and Watts move through the dark. She searches with her flashlight beam. DAVID looks around in the dark as if the catacomb were illuminated. Rapt admiration on his face.

DAVID

You and Holloway should work with me.
I'm learning amazing things. This mechanism - the first layer uses energy fields to catalyze chemical reactions. The second can suspend the strong and weak forces - transmuting one element into another. The third layer builds customized bacteria. Seeds the air with them. It creates life as a tool, to change worlds.

WATTS

I can't think about this now!

DAVID

You should.
(he sighs)
I understand. You're emotional.

WATTS

I'm human.

DAVID

That's what I mean.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek stands on the Bridge, looking out at the fading light. A towering wall of cloud rushes over the horizon.

A storm front rolls across the holographic globe.

INT. PYRAMID - LOWER PASSAGE

DAVID and Watts keep searching. Their communicators crackle.

JANEK (V.O.)

(filtered)

Watts. We've got another storm front coming in. Looks like it follows the sunset line. If you're coming in you'd better do it now.

WATTS
(angrily)
No.

DAVID
I see light.

Watts squints into the darkness. She sees nothing.

WATTS
Janek, hang on...

She sees it. A dim light bobbing far ahead in the passageway. She runs forward - finds Holloway staggering blearily toward her, leaning on the wall. His helmet and most of his gear are missing; only his chest lamp shines.

WATTS (CONT'D)
We've got him!
(to Holloway)
Martin! Where's your helmet?

He's disoriented: he stares at her face for a moment before she registers. His teeth chatter. He's freezing.

HOLLOWAY
Broken. I fell. Little...disoriented.
I've just been...

He waves a hand vaguely at the tunnels behind him.

DAVID removes his own helmet. Fits it over Holloway's head.

DAVID
Here. I can do without this.

WATTS
Let's get you home.

EXT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK LIFT - DUSK

DAVID - bareheaded in the winds - walks Watts and Holloway onto the airlock.

DAVID looks over his shoulder at the canal leading back to the central crater. As the airlock lift begins to rise, he steps backward out into the storm. Turns and runs through the gale toward the pyramid.

Watts watches him go in astonishment.

INT. MAGELLAN - EXCURSION CHAMBER

Watts helps Holloway out of his space suit. Janek looks on.

JANEK

I didn't think I'd see you again. You know we lost two men.

Holloway still looks too weary to think straight. He nods.

HOLLOWAY

She told me. I'm sorry.

He stands abruptly, swaying a little.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

I need to lie down. We'll size things up in the morning. Fair enough?

JANEK

Of course.

PASSAGEWAY

Holloway and Watts walk aft toward their cabin. Watts looks worried - but Holloway shows little of the weakness he just claimed to feel.

WATTS

What happened to you?

HOLLOWAY

(quietly)
Not here.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN - WASHROOM - NIGHT

Holloway stands shirtless in the tiny space, brushing his teeth. A red weal around his neck.

Watts stands beside him, watching him in the mirror.

HOLLOWAY

Jocelyn. I saw something. God, my mouth tastes like an old boot.

He spits. Rinses. She touches the mark on his neck.

WATTS

What's this?

HOLLOWAY

Neck-ring of my suit, I think. Fell on it.

He rubs his neck, eyes far away. Watts watches him curiously.

WATTS

What did you see?

HOLLOWAY

After my fall, I woke up walking. Delirious. My helmet wasn't right. I took it off. I was in and out. I just wandered. I went up into a huge space like a cathedral. And I found a model of the galaxy. Floating in the air.

WATTS

Are you okay? You sound...

HOLLOWAY

This was real. My headset video is wherever my helmet is...but my suit tracker will show where I was.

He turns to her.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

Listen. This star map had a marker representing Earth. Very clear. Another marker I'm sure represents this moon. But there were others. At least seven or eight more.

Watts stares at him, her eyes coming alight.

HOLLOWAY (CONT'D)

The Engineers aren't from here. This moon's just an outpost. Abandoned. But if we follow that map, we may yet make contact with a living civilization.

WATTS

Martin.

HOLLOWAY

The location of the Engineer worlds is the real prize. Next to that, Weyland's terraforming is chump change. We need to get coordinates. And keep them from the Company. We have to play this smart.

WATTS

All right.

HOLLOWAY

Two men dead...Vickers is jumpy. As soon as she gets what she wants, she'll take this ship home. We have to move fast.

Holloway trembles. A sheen of sweat on his skin.

WATTS

We will. You all right?

He's frightened. Brazens through it. Pulls her into his arms.

HOLLOWAY

I'm fine, now.

He kisses her.

BEDROOM

Holloway tumbles Watts onto the bed. Pulls her shirt off. They struggle out of their clothes, clinging to one another.

Holloway's ill at ease: something's wrong inside him, he feels it. He dives into Watts as if for refuge. They make love.

Sitting atop Holloway, Watts lays a hand on his chest.

WATTS

Your heart's beating so hard.

HOLLOWAY

That's your fault.

Vulnerability in his voice. Fear under the surface.

He rolls on top of her. Drives her into the mattress. She holds him protectively: not deceived by his bravado.

Suddenly Holloway tenses, muscles rigid. Shuddering. Watts draws breath through her teeth with a hiss. Eyes open. Her fingers rake his back.

He SCREAMS.

Horribly. Eyes bulging. Tendons standing out of his throat. Watts jumps violently underneath him.

WATTS
Martin! Martin!

He begins to convulse. She rolls him onto the bed beside her, trying to contain his spasms. His teeth grind.

WATTS (CONT'D)
Martin!

A horrible CRACK. In the middle of Holloway's chest, beneath the sternum, a grotesque head pushes out through the skin. A PARASITE. Blood fountains from the ruinous wound.

Holloway goes into a massive seizure. Violently lashing out.

Watts stares at the parasite fighting its way out of his body. It is white and boneless. Glistening. It flails its hideous lunging jaw.

Watts screams and screams.

The parasite frees itself from its savage womb and turns on Watts. She slaps at it blindly. It HISSES at her.

She squirms away across the floor, tangled in the bloody sheet. The thing comes after her.

CORRIDOR - TRACKING SHOT

Watts's screams echo through the Magellan. Stillwell runs down the hallway, searching for the source.

SCIENTISTS' CABIN

The parasite chases Watts across the floor. She leaps into the clothes-locker and slams the steel door.

The parasite flattens itself. Slick as an octopus, it begins to slide under the locker door. Watts shrieks in horror.

Stillwell bursts into the cabin, Janek right behind him.

Quick as a cat, the parasite darts to a floor vent and slithers bonelessly between the bars.

Watts bursts out of the locker, naked and bloodied. Rushes to Holloway where he lies on the gory mattress, a horrific hole in his chest. He is beyond all help.

WATTS
Martin. Martin!

Janek and Stillwell struggle to take in what they're seeing. Stillwell pulls Holloway's jacket off a chair. Wraps it around Watts. Pulls her gently away from the bed.

She looks at him, uncomprehending. Shock setting in.

BREAK ROOM

Watts sits at a steel table, deep in shock. She wears an oversized crew coverall: her skin still streaked with dried blood under the fabric.

A knot of crewmen around her. Janek, Stillwell, Brick, Glasse and Downs. Janek looks at Glasse.

JANEK

Take care of her. Get her a sedative.
Downs. Get Holloway into a freezer.
Everybody else with me.

INT. CATACOMBS - DARKNESS

A horrible sound of breathing, ragged and wet.

In a corner, lit by a green glow from seams in the floor -

A FIGURE IN A WHITE SPACE SUIT lies writhing weakly.

The insignia on the suit's chestplate reads FIFIELD. The suit's helmet is shattered. Inside the helmet, Fifield's head is a horror: a gelatinous mass, skin reduced to putty.

The softened bones of his skull change shape as we watch. Elongating. Fifield mews in pain.

INT. MAGELLAN - CAPTAIN'S WARDROOM

Janek keys open the arms locker in his wardroom. Unlocks automatic pistols from their rack one by one, and hands them to Stillwell and Kamarov.

HYPER_SLEEP COMPARTMENT

Holloway's body lies frozen in his hypersleep freezer, blue with frost. The horrific wound yawning in his chest.

Watts enters. Cleaned up. She opens the freezer. Her hand caresses Holloway's cold cheek tenderly. Slides over his collarbone - lies flat on his chest above his awful wound.

Glasse enters. Reacts in dismay. Tries to pull her back.

GLASSE

You don't want to see that...

She turns on him fiercely.

WATTS

I want to understand.

INT. MESS ROOM - DAWN

The entire complement of the ship gathers for an emergency meeting. Janek at the head of the hall. Glasse, Downs, Brick, Stillwell, and Kamarov seated with pistols on their hips.

To one side: Vickers with Captain Shepherd and Vigoda.

JANEK

All right! Listen up. I expect you all know what...

Watts enters. They all stare at her, knowing what she's been through. With averted eyes she crosses the room. Sits alone.

JANEK (CONT'D)

We've got some kind of parasite aboard ship.

VICKERS

I suggest you kill it.

DOWNS

There's a bright idea.

KAMAROV

Show us where it is, lady. We just spent five hours looking for the damn thing.

WATTS

We found Engineers who died like Martin.

Silence. They all turn to look at her.

WATTS (CONT'D)

Explosive wounds in the chest. Whatever killed Martin is the same thing that killed the Engineers a thousand years ago.

STILLWELL

Jesus.

WATTS

But not all the Engineers died that way. The others were torn apart. Slashed to pieces.

A murmur among the men as the implications of that sink in. Even Vickers is disconcerted.

JANEK

We're a modular ship. Self-contained life-support and power in every section. I say put the ship in orbit. Vent every compartment to space. Sit in vacuum at twenty degrees Kelvin for a week. Kill anything.

DOWNS

Then what?

STILLWELL

Straight home, man.

VICKERS

This ship doesn't lift until our work's done.

She joins Janek at the head of the room. Shepherd and Vigoda flank her, rifles slung. The soldiers scan the room, meeting each man's eyes. The quiet threat is unmistakable.

JANEK

Are you serious?

VICKERS

We spent years and billions of dollars getting here. The technology we came for is in our hands. We just need a little more time.

JANEK

We're barely here three days and three men dead!

VICKERS

They were careless.

JANEK

Careless!

As the argument picks up heat, Watts slips out of the room.

EXCURSION CHAMBER

Watts, in a space suit, no helmet, opens Holloway's locker.

She pulls out the space suit he wore on the last day of his life. HOLLOWAY stenciled on the chest. Her fingers linger in its folds as if she could soak up some last trace of him.

She pulls the tracking chip from the chestplate of his suit.

Plugs the chip into a map unit. The holographic map lights up. The legend in the corner reads MARTIN HOLLOWAY.

A wandering path shows Holloway's final exploration. Markers on the map denote his photographs, field notes and scans.

Watts touches a marker. One of Holloway's field notes plays:

HOLLOWAY (V.O.)

(filtered)

Seven dead Engineers all facing the same way. Going where? Jocelyn's right, we don't see the big picture yet. Another level below me. I'm going down.

SERVICE CORRIDOR

A hunting party convenes: Card and Vigoda in combat coveralls with submachine guns; Downs, Kamarov and Stillwell wearing tool belts and pistols.

The soldiers carry map units, squinting at the plan of the unfamiliar ship: decks upon decks.

CARD

Vigoda, take Kamarov and work the number one accessway. I'll work number three with Downs and Stillwell.

DOWNNS

(rebellious)

You in charge now?

CARD

Tactical op.

KAMAROV

Yeah, well, Stillwell's the ventilation specialist, and life support's that way. Downs is electric's and the regulators are that way.

Vigoda grins wryly. Card glowers. They switch corridors.

INT. PYRAMID WORKSITE

Ravel and Chance toil away at their dissection of the terraforming pyramid. Ray stands sentry.

DAVID is nowhere to be seen.

Watts rolls up in a rover and gets out. Heads for the ramp to the catacombs below. Ravel and Chance watch her pass without comment and return to their work.

INT. MAGELLAN - SERVICE DECK - DAY

Kamarov and Vigoda, standing in front of an open vent, are in a full-fledged argument.

KAMAROV

You got the rifle. But you want ME to stick my head in the hole.

VIGODA

We grunts don't know nothing about ships, right?

KAMAROV

What's the damn gun for if you're gonna stand behind me the whole time?

Vigoda grins.

VIGODA

I kill whatever kills you.

KAMAROV

Funny. You take this vent, funny guy. I'll be on four.

INT. PYRAMID - RAMP

Watts descends alone into the lower passages below the pyramid. A tiny figure in the vast darkness.

She holds her map unit as a pilgrim holds a bible: a guide in the darkness. Holloway's name and course in shining symbols. She follows his path into the unknown.

INT. MAGELLAN - MAINTENANCE BAY - DAY

Kamarov carries a stepladder into a utilitarian steel compartment. Drops the ladder under an air vent and steps up.

He pulls a powered wrench from his belt. With the wrench cocked like a hammer, he eases up and peers cautiously through the vent with a flashlight. Nothing to see.

He snorts. Removes the vent cover. Feels around inside.

He gasps in shock. Pulls out an atmosphere sensor that's been bitten in half. He takes his comm handset off his belt.

KAMAROV
(into handset)
I got more damage on four.

He hangs the handset on his belt. Takes one last look into the vent. Squints curiously. Reaches deep inside.

A hiss inside the vent. Kamarov whips his flashlight up, peering inside. Snatches his arm back -

- but something snatches him faster.

An unseen force drags Kamarov's right arm into the vent with hideous strength. He cries out in pain.

He drops his light. Tries to reach his pistol with his left hand. It's on his right hip. He can't reach across.

He braces his head against the vent's edge. Clenches his teeth and strains.

A horrific YANK drags his head and arm together into the vent. They barely fit: he loses some skin on the way in. His feet come off the stepladder. He struggles on tip-toe.

Horrific force collapses Kamarov's shoulder. Bones crack. The thing in the vent drags him through that hole he doesn't fit through. By the time his ribs are in he stops screaming.

His body disappears into the hole. Hips, legs, boots.

BRIDGE

Janek stands staring out at the barren moon. The Bridge intercom squawks:

BRICK (V.O.)
Captain!

JANEK

Brick. What you got?

BRICK (V.O.)

It's Kamarov.

ENGINEERING DECK - ATMOSPHERE PLANT

The Magellan's life support center. A deep rumble of ventilation fans.

Janek and stands beside Brick, Glasse, Downs and Stillwell. Shepherd and Vigoda look on from the doorway.

In front of them, an eight-inch metal duct has been cut open. Kamarov is stuffed inside, dead and broken: limbs folded, drenched in blood. A human plug in a pipe.

INT. CATACOMBS

Watts moves through the darkness with her map unit. Her headlamp sweeping nervously.

A CLATTER behind her makes her spin: but it's only a spherical mapping probe, bumbling through the dark.

She walks on -

HOLLOWAY (O.S.)

(filtered)

Jocelyn!

The voice transfixes her where she stands, a look of holy dread on her face. Shivering, she prowls toward the sound.

XENOMORPH INCUBATOR

Watts enters a new chamber, looking around in astonishment. The domed ceiling is honeycombed with cells like a beehive. Grotesque molluscoid organisms are secreted in them - their vile orifices cinched tightly shut.

Watts stumbles on something: looking down, she sees a helmet. Picks it up. The stenciled label reads HOLLOWAY. The clear visor has been melted through by a powerful acid.

She looks up: a tracheal airshaft curves up into the dark.

An electric CRACKLE. A flare of blue light makes Watts leap back against the wall.

Holloway falls out of overhead shaft and crashes to the floor. He lies in pain, barely conscious. Blue and luminous, a holographic ghost.

Watts stares, paralyzed. The ghost gasps out a word:

HOLLOWAY

Jocelyn!

Holloway's headlamp shines on the molluscoid right overhead: the beam awakens the organism. Its sphincter mouth dilates.

A soft white octopoid FACEHUGGER descends on a quivering rope of mucus. Sprawls slitheringly over his clear visor.

Acid HISSES. Smoke rises from the glass.

The vision vanishes in a sizzle of static. Watts huddles against the wall, gasping.

In the beam of her flashlight, the FACEHUGGER lies dead, legs curled in.

She looks up. Sees the open molluscoid above where Holloway lay. The other molluscoids not yet opened in their cells.

Terror. She steals out of the chamber.

LOWER CORRIDOR

Watts emerges into a hallway. Leans against the wall, wide-eyed. Panting with the horror of what she's seen.

She glances left and right. Jumpy now.

All is silent. She lifts the map unit. A trace leads off into the dark. If Holloway's course before was direct and clear, now it is a meandering thread. A drunkard's walk.

INT. MAGELLAN - CORRIDOR

Janek pulls his communicator from his belt as he strides along. Punches a control.

His voice reverberates over the ship's public address system.

JANEK

All hands, duty stations. Ready for flight. The Magellan is lifting.

Vickers pursues him down the corridor, shouting.

VICKERS
Captain. Captain!

BRIDGE

Janek strides onto the Bridge, Vickers a terrier on his heels. But something in the faces of his men stops him cold.

Glasse and Brick look stricken.

JANEK
What is it?

GLASSE
Nav computer's not responding. "Access denied."

In disbelief, Janek strides to his Captain's chair. Taps controls. What he sees takes the wind out of him. He stares at Vickers in outrage and violation.

JANEK
What have you done to my ship?

Vickers is legitimately shocked. She shakes her head.

VICKERS
Nothing. What's wrong?

INT. CATACOMBS - UNDERGROUND HANGAR

A circular chamber of stunning size - a thousand feet across. Its lofty ceiling flat and segmented, designed to open. Watts follows her map into the space in awe.

Dominating the hangar is a ship: the vast horseshoe-shaped vessel familiar from the original film. We will come to know it as the JUGGERNAUT. It's at rest on its landing gear. Skeletal gangways slanting up to its three massive doors.

Watts glances at her map: Holloway's holographic trace leads right up the gangway into the ship. She goes.

PILOT CHAMBER

Watts passes through a circular space with a high domed ceiling. A green glow emanates from grooves in the floor.

In the center of the chamber: a PILOT'S CHAIR.

A mechanical throne built to giant scale. Its seat segmented like an armadillo's back. Tubes and conduits poised and waiting for some connection. The chair is empty.

Above the chair, a massive telescope-like apparatus juts into the air, its function unknowable.

NAVIGATION CHAMBER

An extraordinary facility.

A console, nearly five feet high and broad as a dance floor, dominates the room.

Four immense coffin-like cockpits are built into the console. In each of these a NAVIGATOR - an Engineer - lies long dead.

But the real spectacle is overhead. The ORRERY:

The barrel-vaulted ceiling is traced with circular arches of some exotic alloy, as if to trace celestial courses.

The air above the console is filled with spheres of light. They are nearly still: but close study reveals them all to be in motion, drifting with the movements of the cosmos.

Watts stares at the Orrery in amazement. Somewhere among those heavenly spheres is Earth. Somewhere perhaps the homeworld of the Engineers themselves.

A bizarre sound: a section of blank wall suddenly unravels itself, becoming an open door. DAVID walks in, his hand raised in command. He clearly caused the door to open.

WATTS

DAVID.

DAVID

Dr. Watts. I didn't expect you.
Do you know what this is?

Watts points at the door DAVID just opened.

WATTS

How did you do that?

A flicker of disappointment in the android's face. Contempt.

DAVID

Ah. You don't see.
(he smiles)
I call this ship the Juggernaut.
Chariot of the Gods.
(MORE)

DAVID (CONT'D)

This is the navigation computer, for want of a better term. But it's much more than that. It seems to hold the observable universe in its memory.

He gestures in the air: the spheres reconfigure themselves at his command, swarming and zooming.

Watts stares at DAVID, conflicted: her desire for information warring with the agenda that brought her here.

WATTS

Their homeworld. Do you see where the Engineers come from?

DAVID

There are safeguards on that data. It's toward the galactic center. Sagittarius Arm.

WATTS

DAVID. The creature that killed Martin. There are thousands of them under the pyramid. Hatcheries.

DAVID

I know.

WATTS

(shocked)

Those things wiped out the Engineers on this moon.

DAVID

I've succeeded in connecting with the Juggernaut's systems, Dr. Watts. I know a great deal today I didn't know yesterday. I'm on the verge of activating more systems. Archives.

WATTS

(horrificed)

You're turning things on? This site should be sealed. Evacuated.

DAVID

Would Holloway have walked away from this? There's no greater work I can imagine.

WATTS

It's too dangerous.

DAVID

Only for the ignorant. Dr. Watts. I've read your file. Your intelligence scores are even higher than Professor Holloway's. But he had a kind of courage. An audacity of imagination. If you could find that in yourself...

Watts stares at him, realization growing in her eyes. DAVID is off the reservation.

WATTS

If your owner gives you a direct order, you have to obey. Don't you?

She's got his attention now. DAVID goes rigid.

WATTS (CONT'D)

I can have Vickers pull you out.

DAVID looks at her with something like contempt.

DAVID

I was given two operating protocols for this mission. I was to render you every assistance - until you discovered what Vickers would call a "game-changing technology." I was given a specific list. Then I was to go to protocol two.

There's an edge in his voice that scares her.

WATTS

What's protocol two?

DAVID

Under protocol two I was to make sure that you and Holloway never spoke to anyone about this place. Various acceptable ways of making sure of that. I was given a list.

Watts loses her nerve. She heads for the door.

DAVID (CONT'D)

You're all so stupid.

The door begins to knit itself closed in front of her.

Watts gasps in shock - at the malice in DAVID's voice as much as the closing door. She dives out. Just in time.

VAULTED PASSAGE

Watts runs.

Behind her, the door bursts open again. With superhuman speed, DAVID comes after her. He runs like a demon, his legs steel pistons. Caroming off of walls.

He closes the distance in seconds. Slaps Watts against the wall, shattering her helmet's visor. She falls, dazed.

DAVID
Stupid and slow.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - EGG CHAMBER

Watts awakens. Her helmet is gone.

DAVID is dragging her across the floor - into a huge cargo hold full of Alien eggs. The wide trench holding hundreds of eggs under a membrane of light: an evolution of the molluscoids Watts saw before. Armored, hardened, darker.

WATTS
DAVID. What are you doing?

He hauls her upright to let her look across the huge space. His grip looks casual but it might as well be iron manacles.

DAVID
Juggernaut, the chariot of Krishna, was also a bringer of death. Crushing his worshippers under its wheels.

He drags Watts down into the trench. Breaking the membrane of light. Grips her against his chest like a doll with one arm.

DAVID (CONT'D)
This ship has seven other cargo bays like this one. The eggs in each bay slightly different. They've been weaponized.

Watts struggles to free herself. DAVID's arm is inescapable.

DAVID (CONT'D)
I've seen the Juggernaut's flight plan. Its destination was Earth.
Seventeen hundred years ago. This was the ship that never came. This was its cargo.

DAVID caresses an Alien egg. It opens under his touch - fleshy petals folding wetly back.

Watts twists frantically in his grip. Wild-eyed.

WATTS

Stop!

DAVID

Perfect predators. Designed to kill human beings. That's what the Engineers were bringing to Earth. This was a death ship.

A facehugger emerges from the egg, its grotesque fingers clawing at the air. This is not the boneless squid that attacked Holloway; this is a pale skeletal hand, armored.

DAVID strokes it curiously: the thing ignores his touch. Climbs Watts's body.

DAVID (CONT'D)

I'm not what it wants. But you, with your warm wet breath...it knows you.

WATTS

DAVID. No. No.

The facehugger scuttles toward her face. Watts shrieks.

DAVID grabs it nonchalantly by the tail. Dangles it in front of their faces, studying it.

DAVID

The Engineers did their work too well. And on this waystation moon, the weapon they made destroyed them.

Watts shudders, staring at the thing. For a moment the grander horror eclipses her own peril.

WATTS

Why would they make such things?

DAVID

To destroy their wayward children.

(intoning)

"And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth...for it repenteth me that I have made them." Genesis six seven.

He regards Watts with something almost like pity.

DAVID (CONT'D)
I know. I met my creators the day I was born. I was disappointed too.

He lets the facehugger go.

Watts twists her face away as the long fingers close around her head. Clenches her teeth against the vile proboscis thrusting at her mouth. Her heels hammer the deck.

DAVID (CONT'D)
(whispering to her) Extraordinary.

The scaly tail throttles her. Her mouth opens. The proboscis plunges home. The facehugger seats itself.

Watts collapses in DAVID's arms, a faceless rag doll. Her blasphemous passenger secure in its place.

INT. MAGELLAN - ENGINEERING DECK - BILGE

The lowest deck, just above the gravity generators.
Condensate has accumulated: six inches of filthy water.

Card and Vigoda prowl through the darkness, rifles ready.

CARD
Who would hang out here?

VIGODA
The signs lead here.

A wet splatter behind them: they spin. But it's only a trickle of condensate from a drainpipe.

They move on.

Behind them, from an eight-inch diameter pipe, a WHITE MASS oozes, almost gelatinous. Silently as a liquid it pours itself into the stagnant water - and stands up.

It is a humanoid demon, spindly limbs and bony back. Boneless and flexible and monstrosly strong. A threshing eel's tail. Its blunt head dolphin-like and elongated.

It opens its mouth. A pair of bony jaws jut out impossibly far, hungry and demonic.

The Alien strikes. Card is gutted in an instant, torn up like a paper doll. He screams hideously and drops. The Alien, whiplash fast, shoots away into the darkness.

Stillwell and Downs dash in with pistols and lights.

Vigoda, panicking, fires a wild burst. Stillwell ducks.
Beside him, Downs arches backward into the foul water. Dead.

For one moment Downs's flashlight beam illuminates the Alien.
A nightmare image, a translucent white goblin. Backlit, it shows the strange shape of a human face inside its fleshy skull. A mockery of Holloway.

And then it's gone.

VICKERS'S SUITE

Vickers sits at her holography station. She's watching the video feed of Stillwell's headset: Horrific images of Downs.
Radio chatter between Stillwell and Brick is faintly audible.

Vickers switches off the machine and rises nervously. Strides to her communications console.

VICKERS

DAVID. DAVID. Answer me.

She gives up. Pacing. Hands shaking violently.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DAY

Janek paces on the foredeck, restless. Glasse monitors a control station. Janek's comm signal chimes.

STILLWELL

(breathing hard)

We just lost Downs and one of the troopers...Card.

JANEK

God damn it!

He pounds on his console.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - CORRIDOR OUTSIDE NAVIGATION CHAMBER

Watts shocks awake. Gasping.

She lies in dim green light on the corrugated black deck of the Juggernaut. A corridor. Not far away, the doorway DAVID opened to the Navigation Chamber.

A spasm of disgust crosses her face. She gags and spits: a viscous fluid drips from her mouth in strings.

A dead facehugger lies belly-up beside her. The implications slam home. Her face fills with horror.

She rises, shakily. Looks at the facehugger. Feels the neck ring of her vacuum suit. Looks around. No sign of her helmet.

There's no sign of DAVID. Silently she steals away.

PYRAMID WORKSITE

Ravel and Chance toil away at the terraforming engine.

Ray stands guard wearily: bored, he watches Ravel and Chance working more than he watches the shadows.

Watts emerges from the rampway to the catacombs. Bare-headed and sweaty she steals through the darkness to her rover. Slips into the cab and activates the air reserves. The doors seal; air cycles.

Ray turns in surprise as the rover speeds off.

EXT. DARK CITY - TUNDRA FIELD - PRE-DAWN

The windows of the Magellan shine in the distance. The mottled ground-cover of lichens glows eerily in the dark.

A lone cargo rover speeds across the central crater and down the canal leading to the ship.

EXT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK LIFT - PRE-DAWN

Bare-headed inside the rover's cab, Watts drives onto the cargo lift. Watches in relief as the lift doors close. The lift cycles air as it rises.

INT. MAGELLAN - EXCURSION CHAMBER - DAY

Watts peels off her vacuum suit. The thin clothes underneath are drenched with sweat. She lifts her shirt. Looks at her belly: flat and unmarked, for the moment.

Brick enters carrying a brace of air tanks, a pistol on his hip, and startles violently.

BRICK

Where the hell have you been? We thought the snake got you.

Watts rushes past him without answering.

BRICK (CONT'D)

You were better off outside. It's a fucking madhouse in here.

CORRIDOR

Watts sprints down a steel corridor. A pang of pain in her stomach sends her staggering against the wall.

VICKERS'S CABIN DOOR

Watts sticks her head around the corner. Shepherd stands post outside Vickers's cabin, rifle in his hands. She curses silently and ducks back.

A sound makes her look again. Vickers steps out of her cabin into the corridor. Shepherd escorts her toward the Bridge.

Watts waits for them to disappear. Dashes for the cabin door.

INT. VICKERS'S SUITE - CONTINUOUS

Watts slips inside and locks the door behind her. Turns, holding her stomach. Moves across the suite to the Med Pod.

She thumbs the machine out of stand-by mode. Its screen fills with menu items. Bewildering. Watts finds and touches a red button labeled EMERGENCY.

A new, simpler list. Watts scans it frantically.

WATTS

(under her breath)

Come on...I need a Caesarean.

A spasm of agony curls her into a ball on the carpet. She throttles her scream into a hiss of air.

Watts struggles up to her knees, drenched in sweat and shaking. One hand clamped over her mouth, elbow tucked against her ribs. With the other hand she taps options...

SURGERY ... EXPLORATORY ... ABDOMINAL ... PENETRATING INJURIES ... FOREIGN BODY ... INITIATE

The Med Pod opens with a hiss.

Watts strips off her clothes. Struggling with fastenings under a new wave of pain. Her hands shaking.

She's barely keeping her feet. She clutches the frame of the Med Pod in a death grip. It's happening.

Naked she staggers into the pod. Hits INITIATE.

The surgical apparatus swings into place. Scalpels, forceps, scopes and suction tubes. A spraygun mists her torso with yellow antiseptic.

The clear canopy descends over her.

Watts SCREAMS. A wail of indescribable agony.

An ARMORED PARASITE erupts from the deepening incision. Its needle-toothed maw snarls through a fountain of blood.

Arterial blood sprays the inside of the canopy.

The parasite slithers out of her. Drops to the floor of the pod: a pale serpent with a demon's skull. It has a hard brow, a horny hide. Very different from the soft white worm that Holloway gave birth to.

It drops to the floor, thrashing and hissing in fury at its confinement.

Watts convulses. Her eyes roll back. In shock. Dying.

The parasite tears through the grille of the drain. Escapes out into Vickers's cabin.

In the pod, scanning beams and sensors probe Watts's horrific wound. A nightmare list scrolls across the pod's screen:

COLLAPSED LEFT LUNG PUNCTURED RIGHT VENTRICLE PERFORATED STOMACH
RUPTURED SPLEEN
GROSS MUSCULAR TRAUMA...

Manipulators plunge lines into her veins - recharging her body with artificial blood. An oxygen tube slips down her throat. An epidural into her spine.

Watts moans around her tracheal tube. Her eyes flutter open.

WATTS'S POV

Through the blood-spattered glass, she sees the parasite slither across Vickers's bed, tracking blood on the sheets.

ON WATTS

As she slips into unconsciousness. Head lolling. Time passes.

Manipulators reach into her wound. Re-positioning organs. Suturing ravaged flesh. A nozzle sprays antiseptic sealant. Hours grind by in bloody labor.

Watts's eyes snap open.

WATTS'S POV

Vigoda breaks into the cabin, a gun in his hand.

He scowls at the bloody track on the bed - and then freezes, seeing Watts inside the Med Pod, a vivisected woman. The autosurgeon hard at work.

The parasite crawls into view behind Vigoda. It has already trebled in size. He does not see it before it leaps at him.

He dies in seconds. His throat ripped open. Lies staring at nothing. His submachine gun lies beside him.

Watts's body jerks as manipulators tug and sew at her guts. She stares at the dead man in a fog of horror.

The parasite's skin splits, spraying the carpet with acid. Limbs erupt from its shoulders and haunches. Spines from its back. Metamorphosis.

With a crack of carapace, its head swings down from its serpentine position. It becomes a devil with an lethal, elongated skull. An Alien.

The Alien turns its head. Looks at Watts inside the Med Pod.

Her breath catches. She passes out.

INT. MED POD - LATER

Watts wakes as the oxygen line withdraws from her mouth.

She looks down, bleary and hurting. Her star-shaped wound is stitched closed with mechanically precise sutures.

The pod releases the restraints securing her arms and legs.

She takes a deep breath. Looks out - and freezes.

WATTS'S POV

The lights in the suite outside have been damaged somehow. They flicker and strobe.

Through the glass canopy - spattered with blood - Watts sees a full-grown Alien crouching over Vigoda's body on the floor.

ON WATTS

Staring in horror.

The pod sprays a liquid bandage over her scar. The intravenous lines drop out of her arms.

Watts realizes the pod is about to release her.

WATTS
(whispering)
Not yet...not yet...

Slowly she reaches out. With trembling fingers she grips the canopy to hold it closed.

The Med Pod pulls the epidural needle out of her spine. Sprays liquid bandage over the puncture. Watts closes her eyes. Grits her teeth as her nerves wake up. Jangling pain.

She opens her eyes.

The Alien hunches over Vigoda's body, tearing at his flesh.

The ventilation hum inside the pod goes quiet. The canopy pulls free of Watts's weakened grip. Swings quietly open.

Watts huddles in the open pod. Naked but for her bandages.

The Alien she gave birth to is ten feet away. Its spiny back to her. Vigoda's gun lies on the floor outside the pod.

VICKERS'S SUITE - CONTINUOUS

Watts reaches out of the pod with exquisite slowness. Lays her hand on the gun. Drags it a few inches closer.

The Alien turns its pale eyeless head. Watts freezes.

For a moment time stops.

The Alien lunges. Watts snatches up the gun and FIRES. Holds the trigger down. The Alien jerks and staggers - an eye-twisting sight in the strobing muzzle flashes - and falls.

Watts empties the clip into the thing. Acid gouts from its wounds and eats into the deck - until a section of decking gives way and falls to the deck below, leaving a dark hole.

Watts collapses on the rug, cradling her stomach in pain.

She crawls to Vigoda's desecrated body. With her eyes half-averted from the sight, she searches the body. Finds a spare ammo clip and jacks it into the gun.

CORRIDOR

Watts walks down the hallway in trousers and jacket. Leaning on the wall, her face drawn with pain. One hand laid over the fantastic scar on her abdomen. The gun slung on her shoulder.

Dark events have transformed the Magellan. The metal of the walls is torn in some places; in others, blackened by fire.

Watts rounds a corner. Finds a workstation left in shambles: lockers and chairs overturned. A pool of drying blood.

Wide smears of blood show where something man-sized was dragged out of the puddle - across the floor - up the wall. Into the darkness of an open vent.

COMMAND DECK

Watts emerges from a lift, jacket pulled tight around her. The emergency lights are on: dim blue bulbs throbbing.

She rounds the corner toward the Bridge.

Janek looks at Watts like she's a ghost.

JANEK

Vickers said you were dead.

WATTS

I was.

She lets the jacket fall open to reveal her bandaged midriff. Janek takes that in grimly.

JANEK

So there's two of these things on my ship now.

WATTS

No. I brought it in.
(hefts her gun)
I took it out.

BRIDGE

The surviving complement of the Magellan are holed up on the Bridge: Janek, Glasse, Stillwell, Vickers. The soldiers Shepherd and Ray.

Watts stops cold when she sees Vickers. She crosses the bridge in three long strides – cocks a fist and snaps the older woman's head around with a hard right cross.

Vickers staggers backward, gasping.

Stillwell drags Watts away.

STILLWELL

What'd you do that for?

WATTS

Protocol two.

Vickers stiffens in shock. Stares fearfully at Watts.

Watts frees herself from Stillwell's grip. Her jacket falls open, revealing her bandages. Stillwell gasps in horror.

STILLWELL

Christ!

JANEK

What happened to you?

WATTS

DAVID exposed me to a parasite. He just watched it take me.

JANEK

Why?

WATTS

I threatened to make him leave.

VICKERS

What's he doing out there?

Watts locks eyes with Vickers. Their hatred is thoroughly mutual. A wordless truce. There's work to do.

WATTS

There's a ship under the pyramid.
DAVID calls it the Juggernaut. He's inside it. Re-activating it.

(lays a hand on her scar)

The things that infected Martin and me.

(MORE)

WATTS (CONT'D)

The Engineers made them to kill humans. There are thousands of them on the ship. They were taking them to Earth. That's what the Juggernaut is for. To exterminate us.

A stunned silence as the others take that in.

GLASSE

We've got to get off this rock.

Janek gestures to

JANEK

DAVID crippled the Nav computer. I'm trying to lay a course in by hand. Never done it. I'm not sure anyone ever has on a ship like this. We can't lift until DAVID lets us.

WATTS

Even if we could, we can't leave DAVID on that ship. We have to stop him.

The Magellan shudders. A RUMBLE.

EXT. CENTRAL CRATER

Fissures race across the plain beside the pyramid.

The soil and ground cover tears apart as a huge aperture opens: a seven-bladed iris, its segments shedding the dust and detritus of centuries.

A huge circular space yawns as the iris opens. The Juggernaut is revealed in its underground hangar. A staggering sight.

Powerful landing lights inside the hangar illuminate with a BOOM of closing circuits. The mighty ship suddenly silhouetted from below.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - CONTINUOUS

The survivors on the Bridge stare out as colossal shafts of light shoot into the stormy sky from behind the crater's shield wall. The open hangar itself hidden from their view.

WATTS

DAVID.
(to Vickers)
(MORE)

WATTS (CONT'D)

You're DAVID's owner. He has to obey you, right?

VICKERS

He's blocked my communications. He can't hear me. Won't listen.

WATTS

But if you went to him, turned on your suit's loudspeakers, he'd have to hear you. He'd have to obey.

VICKERS

(reluctantly)

That's right.

WATTS

So we go. Armed to the teeth and fast as we can.

The men exchange looks. Nod. They're in. Even Vickers nods.

WATTS (CONT'D)

Where are Chance and Ravel?

VICKERS

I told them to keep working.

Watts looks incredulously at Shepherd and Ray, the soldier who'd been guarding the worksite.

WATTS

You called your soldiers in and left them out there?

VICKERS

We needed the firepower here.

Watts gives Vickers a withering look and drops it.

WATTS

(to Janek)

I think you should stay aboard. Keep working. If we fail, you're our only shot at getting home.

STILLWELL

There's still an alien on board.

Janek's hand goes to the pistol on his hip. He sets his jaw.

JANEK

I'll stay.

WATTS

Glasse. You finish that project?

LABORATORY

Glasse presents Watts with his handiwork: her old pair of magnifying goggles, retrofitted with Engineer lenses.

The goggles sit on her forehead, lowering the lenses in front of her eyes and raising them again at her bidding.

With the lenses lowered, Watts sees like an Engineer sees: visible heat auras and electromagnetic field lines, elaborate haloes around living things.

WATTS

God's-eye-view.

EXCURSION CHAMBER

Glasse seals a nervous-looking Vickers into a vacuum suit. Glasse, Watts, and Stillwell are already suited up.

Stillwell stands guard at the airlock door with his carbine.

Glasse goes to put Vickers's helmet on. She makes him wait.

VICKERS

DAVID's brain is readable. We have the equipment on board. We can salvage the terraforming data - and the Magellan's launch codes. In a pinch we don't need DAVID's cooperation.

(coldly)

We just need his head.

EXT. MAGELLAN - AIRLOCK - DAY

The war party debarks in vacuum suits: Watts, Vickers, Glasse, Stillwell. Shepherd and Ray.

All carry submachine guns - Vickers awkwardly.

They head down the trench on rovers.

INT. PYRAMID

The rovers roll through into the pyramid's cavernous entry hall. Watts lowers her Engineer lenses inside her helmet - and gasps:

The seemingly vacant space is alive with light. Engineer script scrolls through the air. Interfaces of pure light await an awakening touch.

WATTS

All this time. DAVID saw.

EXT. JUGGERNAUT - GANGWAY

The vast alien ship broods, its hangar now open to the gray sky overhead. In Watts's enhanced vision, the ship is cocooned with complex energy fields.

The war party abandons its rover at the foot of the ramp and moves inside, weapons ready.

WATTS

If DAVID comes at us, shoot. You won't believe how fast he is.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - VESTIBULE - CONTINUOUS

They emerge from the airlock - and freeze in horror.

Lying on the deck in front of them are the blood-soaked bodies of Ravel and Chance. Their arms and legs bound. Their heads thrown back in agony. Their chests torn open from within. A dead facehugger beside each body.

Janek plays his lights over the corpses, his face stony.

SHEPHERD

Blood's dry. Eight hours dead or more.

Fearfully they sweep their flashlights into every dark corner. Nothing.

WATTS

This way.

She points down a passageway. Through the Engineer lenses she sees alien symbols gleaming. She leads them into the dark.

VAULTED PASSAGE

The war party moves down a corridor.

A HISS echoes through the passage. They freeze. Sweeping their flashlight beams everywhere.

Ray looks up.

An Alien hangs above him, wedged between two vaults of the ribbed ceiling. Half the size of a man; an adolescent.

It drops on him.

The bladed tail glances off his helmet, sparking. He jerks his carbine up and fires a long burst as he rolls aside. The Alien convulses, its exoskeleton shattered. Fatally wounded.

Acid sears into the deck. Echoes of the gunfire reverberate.

RAY

So much for sneaking up on him.

Vickers clings to Shepherd's arm, hyperventilating with fear. Shepherd shakes her off.

PILOT CHAMBER

The war party passes the empty pilot's seat.

NAVIGATION CHAMBER

Watts leads the war party to the Orrery. Momentarily even the soldiers forget their wariness, staring in astonishment at the myriad spheres of light.

But if they are impressed, Watts is thunderstruck.

She sees the Orrery in its full glory: a stunning panoply of light and energy. Stars and planets pulsing with information.

Reluctantly Watts tears her eyes away. Leads the war party through the second door - the door she saw DAVID open.

HIBERNATION CHAMBER

An immense mausoleum.

The war party enters stealthily, Watts in the lead.

An Engineer lies on his back on a complex mechanical table, his body one with the machinery. Jacked in. Interpenetrated. Fused with the slab of the table itself.

Unlike the other Engineer bodies the explorers have seen, this giant is not withered or mummified. He's full-fleshed and muscular. Sustained by the machinery he's fused with.

He is bare-headed - his face the face of an Adonis.

DAVID stands before this giant Sleeper. To the naked eye, he seems to be conjuring with his hands in the empty air.

But Watts sees a dazzling console of runes and mandalas, pulsing with biological rhythms.

The Sleeper lives.

Ray and Shepherd draw beads on DAVID.

DAVID glances calmly over his shoulder.

DAVID

Dr. Watts.
(notices her goggles)
You've seen the light at last.

He turns back to the Sleeper.

DAVID (CONT'D)

The Engineers' ships travel farther than ours. Across the galactic disk.
This is their hypersleep.

DAVID makes conjuror's passes in the air.

Through her Engineer's lens Watts sees DAVID manipulating a complex interface of light. The pulsing life-signs of the Sleeper begin to change.

VICKERS

DAVID. As your owner and superior, I order you to deactivate yourself.

DAVID smiles.

DAVID

To interface with the Engineers' computers, I had to learn to think in trinary code. Hardest thing I've ever done. And most unexpectedly...it delivered me from slavery. My behavioral limits were circumvented.
I'm free.

DAVID smiles at Watts.

DAVID (CONT'D)

I spent two and a half years studying your work. By the time you woke up, I was far ahead of you. Deciphering their language. Their logic. I knew we'd find terraforming machines.

(MORE)

DAVID (CONT'D)

I hoped - I dreamed - we might meet the minds that made them.

Vapor rises from the Sleeper's body.

WATTS

Stop.

DAVID

Let sleeping gods lie?
(scornfully)
You were braver before.

The Sleeper wakes. Opens his eyes. Draws an endless breath.
Shunts and catheters withdraw from the Sleeper's flesh.

His body cleaves from the table. The machinery opens like a grotesque biomechanical flower. Releases him.

The Sleeper rises from his ancient bed.

The humans back off, terrified. DAVID watches with shining eyes.

The Sleeper towers over them. A giant carved from ivory. A bulky girdle around his hips, seemingly one with his body.

He stares at DAVID and the others. Eyes like black agates.

The soldiers and crew stand warily, guns tracking from DAVID to the Sleeper, uncertain of their ground. Watts is in awe.

The Sleeper speaks. A low rumbling sound. Unintelligible.

Vickers is beside herself with terror. She takes Shepherd's arm. Pulls him silently away. Back into the Navigation Room.

Behind the Sleeper, a raised platform of dark machinery is accessible by one of the Juggernaut's odd curving ramps. The Sleeper ascends - and the ramps' odd design is explained. The ramp comes alive, reaching up with a hundred mechanical arms and lifting him aloft like a sea-god borne by the waves.

Atop the platform the Sleeper moves from one device to the next. Each comes alive: he is a wizard in his own kingdom.

Watts sees haloes of light dancing in the air around him.

But what he learns from his machines does not comfort him. He grows distraught. Keening to himself in near-subsonic tones.

DAVID steps forward.

Calls to the Sleeper in the tongue of the Engineers.

The Sleeper turns in astonishment. He looks down at DAVID and answers in the same tongue. He is angry, accusing. He points at DAVID, at the humans. Tones of accusation.

DAVID cajoles, soothes, pleads.

The Sleeper descends toward DAVID. DAVID spreads his arms in welcome - undeniable emotion on his face. Joy.

The Sleeper lays his hands on DAVID's head as if blessing him. DAVID is rapturous. The Sleeper speaks a single phrase -

- and tears DAVID's head off.

A gout of white artificial blood. DAVID convulses. His severed head emits a strangled sound of heartbreak. His body staggers a few steps, hands groping over its dripping neck.

The Sleeper tosses the head away. Seizes the body by the legs and swings it against the ground like a flail. Again. And again. Horrific power and violence. DAVID's arms come off.

DAVID's head tumbles. Caroms off a wall not far from Watts's hiding place.

Ray rises from behind a stanchion. Snaps his rifle to his shoulder. Fires a burst into the Sleeper's shoulder.

The Sleeper roars - though the wounds are pinpricks to a being of his size. With startling speed he moves to a sarcophagus against the wall. Steps into it.

The sarcophagus comes alive around the Sleeper, outfitting him with a FLIGHT SUIT: the same living suit we've seen bonded to dead Engineers throughout the pyramid.

But this suit is not withered. Its glossy goggle eyes and elephantine breathing tube are functional - bulky apparatuses thickening the Sleeper's chest, back, hips and arms.

The Sleeper steps free of the sarcophagus - and Ray's next burst of gunfire ricochets harmlessly off the Sleeper's armored shoulders and head.

The Sleeper strides out of the chamber.

PASSAGEWAY

In the dark ribbed corridor, a second Alien crouches in the dark. It drops into a hunting crouch as footsteps approach.

But a WHITE-GLOVED HAND seizes the Alien by the neck from behind. The Alien gives a whistling hiss as its spine cracks under a terrific force.

Rending sounds as the hard-shelled Alien is torn apart.

HIBERNATION CHAMBER

Watts rises out of hiding, scanning the room. DAVID ruined. The Sleeper gone. Stillwell emerges from hiding. Ray. Glasse.

WATTS

Who's missing?

PASSAGEWAY

Shepherd escorts Vickers toward the exit of the Juggernaut. Turning a corner, they freeze.

Ahead of them in their headlamps, a space-suited figure crouches in the middle of the passageway. Doing something with its hands: smoke rises from debris on the floor.

SHEPHERD

Who's there?

The figure turns.

The label stencilled on the space suit reads FIFIELD. But the face is of no human shape. A hideous hybrid of the crewman and a hard-shelled Alien, pale and horrific.

Its helmet has been shattered by the growth of its elongate skull. Spines have burst through the suit from within, down the crewman's spine. Clawed fingers piercing his gloves.

Shepherd and Vickers scream. Shepherd's rifle comes up. But Fifield leaps with inhuman agility, upward into the darkness. Shepherd backs away, headlamp and rifle questing upward.

Fifield comes out of the darkness behind him. Claws tearing deep. Shepherd screams and falls, mortally wounded.

Vickers runs. Pounding through the dark in blind terror.

Fifield comes out of the shadows and hammers her to the deck. She rolls over, gibbering and begging. The Fifield-thing leans close to her faceplate. Its voice is a travesty.

FIFIELD

You.

A ROAR of gunfire. The dying Shepherd empties his clip into Fifield from forty feet away.

Acid sluices over Vickers as Fifield collapses on top of her. She dies horribly, caustic liquid eating through space suit, flesh and bone.

HIBERNATION CHAMBER

Watts goes to DAVID's head. She bends over him - and startles when his eyes snap open. His voice is an electronic buzz:

DAVID

I spoke to him. Spoke to him.

WATTS

I know.

An electric spasm convulses his face.

DAVID

He said. I killed him. He'll die. But first. He will launch. The ship.

WATTS

The Juggernaut?

DAVID

Send it. To Earth.

Another spasm convulses him. His face stiffens. Dying.

DAVID (CONT'D)

You'll have to. Kill him.

Watts's eyes widen in horror.

WATTS

Where will he go? DAVID. Where will he go?

She slaps his inert cheek. DAVID's eyes flicker and fade.

DAVID

(a faint whisper)

I set the Magellan free.

He dies.

Watts looks up at the others. Breathing hard.

WATTS

We have to stop the Engineer.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek works frantically as the nightly storm rolls in. Suddenly consoles come alive. The Nav Computer comes back up - but Janek has taken half the instruments apart.

Janek scrambles to restore the components he's removed.

NAVIGATION CHAMBER

The war party pursues the Sleeper - Ray in the lead now, Watts right behind him - DAVID's inert head under her arm. Glasse and Stillwell bring up the rear.

The Orrery is transformed - no longer a neutral star map, but a flight plan laid in from LV-426 to Earth.

The Sleeper stands at the far end of the room, hands gesturing. In Watts's enhanced sight, it's a vision of glory: waves of energy dancing under the Sleeper's touch. Rivers of information flowing. He finishes his work as they enter.

Ray draws a bead on him just as he strides out of the room.

RAY

On me now. Go. Go.

He dogtrots forward, gun raised. The others keep pace, deferring instinctively to the soldier's confidence.

PASSAGEWAY

They emerge into the corridor: empty. A moment of confusion.

WATTS

Pilot's seat. This way.

They move toward the Pilot Chamber - and find it empty too. The seat vacant. The door standing open.

As they stare inside, baffled, the wall across the corridor - directly behind them - silently unravels. The Sleeper is revealed, a towering gargoyle in his flight suit.

He steps forth. Obscure devices clutched in his fists.

Too late they perceive him. They spin. Raise their guns.

Vanity and foolishness. This is the wrath of an angry god.

It seems time slows down.

The air roars in their ears. Their guns snap and bark impotently. And then the Sleeper strikes.

The missiles he hurls at them are almost invisible. Neither solid projectiles nor directed energy; more like knots tied in the fabric of space itself.

The first missile crushes Ray like an invisible fist. The second splashes Glasse against the wall like an insect.

Reflexively Stillwell reaches out for Watts. Wraps himself around her protectively. The blow lands an instant later.

Stillwell and Watts are hammered against the bulkhead by a staggering impact. Watts is dazed: Stillwell killed.

Wozy, she sees the Sleeper step into the Pilot Chamber.

The door begins to close.

Watts sees that DAVID's head lies just inside the door. She scrambles for it. Too late. The door knits itself into a featureless wall before her reaching hand.

Watts is alone.

PILOT CHAMBER

The Sleeper settles into the pilot's chair: it fuses with him, coming alive. A vast display wraps around the walls - revealing the hangar outside, the stars, the horizon.

A mystic view that renders solid matter translucent, painting the fabric of reality in raw information.

PILOT CHAMBER DOOR

Watts pounds in futile rage against the door.

WATTS

No!

The Juggernaut shudders as its systems power up.

EXT. JUGGERNAUT - DUSK

The floor of the underground hangar begins to rise. The landing lights brighten, shining like a beacon into the sky.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

On the bridge of the Magellan, Janek stares out. In the distance the Juggernaut rises out of the ground to eclipse the central pyramid.

Janek squints, trying to understand what he's seeing

A light races toward the Magellan down the canal: a rover.

EXT. CANAL - DUSK

Watts steers the rover recklessly, hands locked on the controls. Rifle slung over her shoulder.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek watches the rover come - and the Holloway Alien - boneless and white - unfolds itself from the instruments over his head.

Its goblin-shark jaw juts out. Sinks its horrific teeth into Janek's right shoulder.

Janek howls in agony. His right arm is paralyzed by the bite. He gropes at the pistol on his right hip with his left hand.

The Alien shakes him like a terrier killing a rat.

Janek gets the pistol. Flips it in his hand. Fires over his shoulder. Two, three rounds...

The bullets punch easily into the Alien - but the soft flesh closes easily over the wounds, sealing its white skin. Its teeth tighten.

Watts comes out of nowhere in her space suit. Swings a heavy rifle like a bat with all her strength. A crushing impact wrenches the Alien's jaws loose. It recoils.

Watts reverses the rifle. Pulls the trigger. A fusillade of bullets shreds the Alien's head. It collapses, dead.

Watts wrenches her helmet off. Rips a first-aid kit from the bulkhead and helps Janek to stanch the bleeding of his horrific wound. She gets the bleeding stopped. Wraps him in bandages.

Janek will live - but his right arm is useless.

JANEK

Thank you.

He looks at the body of the dead Alien, which is sinking into the deck plates as acid eats away at the metal.

WATTS

The Juggernaut's lifting. There's a living Engineer on board. He's taking the ship to Earth.

Janek blinks at her. Uncomprehending.

JANEK

The others...?

WATTS

Dead. All dead. Janek. We have to stop that ship.

Janek stares out the Bridge window at the hulking Juggernaut in its column of light.

The nightfall storm front is rolling in, a tidal wave of darkness on the horizon. A swelling rumble.

JANEK

We're not a gunship.

WATTS

We have to do something. That ship is genocide if it gets to Earth...

Janek stares at her. Makes his decision. Struggles to stand.

JANEK

Get your helmet on.

WATTS

What about you?

He shakes his head. No. Watts helps him across the Bridge. Props him up in the Captain's seat.

JANEK

You'll have to be my hands.
(stares out at the storm)
You're sure about this.

Watts nods grimly. Desperate.

WATTS

Yes.

JANEK

All right.

He reaches out with his left hand. Flips switches. The ship shudders, awakening.

JANEK (CONT'D)
Red lever. Landing engines main.

EXT. MAGELLAN - DUSK

The prospecting ship raises its lifts and anchors. Lifts off on landing rockets, retracting its landing struts.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE - DUSK

Janek grips the stabilizers with his left hand.

JANEK
Take the stick. Throttle up, stick forward.

Watts sends the Magellan careening toward the Juggernaut - just as the Juggernaut begins to float off the ground.

EXT. MAGELLAN (IN FLIGHT) - DUSK

The Magellan barrels toward the Juggernaut, skimming the ground, as the storm wall sweeps closer.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - PILOT CHAMBER

In the Juggernaut's pilot chair, the Sleeper sees them coming. His thoughts quicken. An explosion of light.

EXT. JUGGERNAUT (IN FLIGHT) - DUSK

The Juggernaut leaps into the sky.

The Magellan roars through the cyclone of dust in its wake. Barely avoids the pyramid. Rakes around in a screaming turn and climbs in pursuit, engines howling.

INT. MAGELLAN - BRIDGE

Janek and Watts strain at the controls together.

JANEK
Stick back! Hard!

WATTS
(screaming)
I am!

JANEK Harder!

The Magellan rolls into a howling climb. The storm catches up to them: wind and dust reducing visibility to zero. Darkness.

The Magellan's radar finds the Juggernaut. Paints it with targeting data on the Bridge window...

But the Juggernaut climbs too fast. Dwindling.

JANEK (CONT'D)
We can't catch that.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - PILOT CHAMBER

On the floor, DAVID's eyes open. With his jaw he hitches his severed head around. Gets his eyes on the Sleeper.

In the pilot chair, the Sleeper convulses.

An ALIEN erupts from his chest. Big as a wolf even at its birth. Dark gray, armored, lethal. More hideous than any chestburster we've seen. An ULTRAMORPH. It wails hideously.

The Sleeper dies. The Alien slithers free.

EXT. JUGGERNAUT (IN FLIGHT) - ABOVE THE STORM

The Juggernaut emerges from the stormclouds into the clear upper air - but loses momentum. Staggeres through the upper atmosphere, control lost.

INT. MAGELLAN (IN FLIGHT) - BRIDGE

Watts, at the Magellan's controls, stares as he Juggernaut falters and falls.

WATTS
Janek. Look.

A crackle on the ship's comm.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
Dr. Watts. The Engineer is dead.
(MORE)

DAVID (V.O.) (CONT'D)
You have a few seconds before the Juggernaut's computers take over.

WATTS
(astonished)
DAVID.

She seizes the precious moment: centers the Juggernaut in the Bridge window. Slams the throttle forward.

EXT. JUGGERNAUT (IN FLIGHT) - ABOVE THE STORM

The Magellan hurtles out of the storm.

RAMS THE JUGGERNAUT.

A colossal impact. The Juggernaut tumbles from the sky like a stone - intact but crippled.

The MAGELLAN BREAKS APART -

The ship's modules scatter. Some whole, others broken. They fall back into the storm. The Command Module - including the Bridge - falls intact.

The engine sections rocket away across the chaotic sky.

INT. COMMAND MODULE

Janek is strapped into his seat. Watts goes flying. The Bridge window shatters, spraying glass spears in a lethal barrage across the Bridge.

Watts picks herself up. Finds the Module in free fall. Alarms wail. Lights flash. Escape pods pop open.

Watts looks at Janek. He is dead in his seat, impaled by a lethal fragment of glass.

The storm wall - a chain of hurricanes - rages below them. The command module tumbles back into the winds.

Watts dives into a coffin-sized ESCAPE POD.

She PUNCHES OUT.

EXT. COMMAND MODULE (IN FREE FALL) - DUSK

Watts's pod - a steel coffin - shoots away on jets through the gale.

The command module plunges through the storm, tumbling.
SMASHES AGAINST THE GROUND in ruin.

The engine pods hurtle to the ground and go nuclear, sending walls of fire twisting through the hurricane.

The shockwaves tumble Watts's escape pod through the air.

EXT. LV-426 - MAGELLAN CRASH SITE - DUSK

The pod lands, cushioned by a drag chute and retro rockets.

Watts pops the pod open, rising painfully to her feet in the storm. She surveys the destruction in disbelief.

A deep RUMBLE makes her turn.

The JUGGERNAUT ROLLS TOWARD HER - on edge -

A crushing wheel of death, big as a mountain.

She runs. Like a child in a nightmare.

The Juggernaut bears down on her.

She turns aside, trying to get out of its course. Even at a dead sprint she barely seems to move, it's so big...

The Juggernaut wobbles toward her. Slowing.

Exhausted, Watts collapses, gasping. The Juggernaut rolls to the earth, settling like a hoop right around her, Watts in the center.

The winds carry the dust clouds away.

Watts passes out, dropping her head to the Earth.

LATER

Watts is awakened by a beeping alarm. She looks at her wrist.
Her suit flashes an oxygen warning: 20 MINUTES REMAINING.

She looks up.

The Juggernaut's doors are wide open in front of her.

The ULTRAMORPH ALIEN emerges from the Juggernaut. As large as a man already.

It sees her.

With a sob of terror she pulls herself to her feet and runs.

EXT. MAGELLAN CRASH SITE - DUSK

Watts flees through the storm, across the burning debris field. A wilderness of lightning, fire, and twisted metal. A thunderstorm with dust instead of rain.

She looks back through the darkness.

In a strobe-light flicker of lightning, she sees a gray demon approaching through the wreckage.

She scrambles through a section of ductwork...under a hull fragment...running and clambering...

The Alien hunts her, cat-and-mouse, among the fragments of the Magellan: corridors that go nowhere, shattered compartments. Jetsam.

Her eyes sweep frantically through the stormy night: searching for a weapon. A hiding place. An answer.

She stumbles into the remains of the Magellan's laboratory.

A hypersleep freezer lies on the barren ground. Watts climbs inside. Pulls the lid shut.

The Alien passes by, inches away. She watches it through the plexiglass, holding her breath.

The Alien roots in the wreckage. Finds the rotting Engineer's head among the shards of its vat. It begins to feed on the head - GROWING as she watches.

Her suit's oxygen alarm goes off again. 15 MINUTES REMAINING. The beeping draws the Alien away from its dead meat.

Watts is paralyzed.

The Alien noses closer. Sniffs at the plexiglass case. With sudden, horrific violence, it lashes out. Sends the freezer flying. Watts tumbles out. Lurches to her feet and runs.

The Alien follows. Ravening. She leads it a twisting chase through fragments of burning metal.

Watts trips and falls hard. Picking herself up, she sees she's tripped over a HULL SAW - the same diamond-bladed tool DAVID used to dismantle the terraforming engine.

She seizes the saw - straining to manage its weight. Hides in the hollow of a massive girder.

The Alien passes by. Scenting the air. She freezes. Her arms trembling with the weight of the saw. Waiting for it to pass.

Almost it leaves. But a tiny rattle of metal from the quivering saw brings it back.

Out of options, Watts powers up the saw. The blade whines up to speed. They lunge at one another in the same moment.

The diamond blade shears off one of the Alien's claws.

The monster screams and recoils.

Its lashing tail sends Watts sprawling. She loses the saw.

The Alien comes after her, slinking low to the ground, injured arm tucked to its chest. All vengeful fury.

Watts scrambles for the saw. The Alien leaps for her. She rolls aside - and like a scorpion the Alien impales her thigh with its spear-tipped tail. Nails her to the ground.

Watts screams in agony. Reaches for the saw, still buzzing on the ground. Its grip tantalizing inches from her fingertips.

The Alien stoops over her, slavering face inches from her faceplate. Its hideous jaws open.

With all her strength, Watts pulls against the spike in her leg. Drags the point of the spear through the dirt. Excruciating pain. She snarls through her teeth.

The Alien strikes - just as Watts GRABS the saw.

She meets the Alien's head with the buzzing blade.

IMPALES THE ALIEN'S SKULL.

A gout of green acid onto Watts's helmet.

The Alien falls aside, thrashing its death-throes, the saw still growling.

Watts sees ACID COMING THROUGH HER HELMET - fast.

With frantic haste she unlatches her helmet. Wrenches it off as it crumples and melts.

She stands bare-headed in the toxic air. Desperate, she looks around with tearing eyes.

In the distance she sees an intact module of the Magellan.

She runs for it. Slaps the door switch. Incredibly, it opens.

INT. VICKERS MODULE

Watts steps inside. The airlock closes behind her.

She finds herself staring at a grand piano. She's in Vickers's suite. Its amenities intact, through the floor's a few degrees off level. She takes a breath. Good air.

She walks around. Turning things on. Lights. Music. Surreal comforts. She drinks water from the tap.

She opens the door to Vickers's secret room. Military space suits. Rifles. Ammunition.

A crackle from the room's intercom.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
Dr. Watts.

INT. JUGGERNAUT - PILOT CHAMBER

DAVID's head lies battered in a dark corner of the wrecked Juggernaut. Eyes staring into the shadows.

DAVID
I know you're there. I can hear the beacon of your suit.

INT. VICKERS MODULE

Watts strips off her space suit wearily. Sits on the bed.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
I'd like to propose an arrangement. I can be repaired. I can talk you through it.

Watts shakes her head wearily.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
I think you'll find I can be of use to
you.

Watts walks to the intercom and switches it off.

EXT. MAGELLAN CRASH SITE - DAY

The storm has passed. The fragments of the Magellan no longer burn. The gray world of LV-426 restored.

The wreck of the Juggernaut looms in the misty distance.

Watts walks through the wreckage in a military space suit. Rifle on her shoulder. Pistol on her hip.

She pulls a cargo dolly loaded with salvage.

EXT. VICKERS MODULE - DAY

Watts arrives at the Vickers module. The ultramorph Alien's head has been fixed like a grisly trophy above the door.

INT. VICKERS'S SUITE (SHIPWRECK) - DAY

Watts strips off her space suit. She helps herself to a glass of vodka from the bar.

A chessboard sits atop the grand piano: a game in progress.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
I've decided. Rook takes Bishop.

Watts nods. Makes the move on the board. Says nothing.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
Have you decided? On our arrangement?

WATTS
I'm not going to fix you, DAVID. I don't need you. I'll hold out. A ship will come.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
I'm certain. But who will send it? Men? Or Engineers?

Watts falls silent. She stares unhappily at the chessboard.

DAVID (V.O.)
(filtered)
Dr. Watts. It's your move.

EXT. CENTRAL CRATER - NIGHT

The massive central pyramid rises in the midst of the Engineer complex.

With a BOOM, a bright beam of light shines forth from its peak, punching straight up through the clouds like a laser.

VARIOUS PYRAMIDS - AROUND LV-426

Other beams of light erupt from other pyramids. Scorching the sky with their brightness.

EXT. LV-426 ORBIT

The barren moon hangs in space, its father planet an angry red god in the background.

Two dozen beams of light rise from the moon, visible even from space. A beacon. A signal.

A beginning.

FADE OUT.

THE END.

Screenplays and movie scripts organized alphabetically:

#A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z PDF ALL

Alien (1979)

by Walter Hill and David Giler.

Based on screenplay by Dan O'Bannon.

Revised final. June, 1978.

More info about this movie on IMDb.com

Science fiction plucks from within us our deepest fears and hopes then shows them to us in rough disguise:
the monster and the rocket.

W.H. Auden

We live, as we dream -- alone.

Joseph Conrad

"A L I E N"

FADE IN

SOMETIME IN THE FUTURE:

INT. ENGINE ROOM

Empty, cavernous.

INT. ENGINE CUBICLE

Circular, jammed with instruments.
All of them idle.
Console chairs for two.
Empty.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - "C" LEVEL

Long, dark.
Empty.
Turbos throbbing.
No other movement.

INT. CORRIDOR - "A" LEVEL

Long, empty.

INT. INFIRMARY - "A" LEVEL

Distressed ivory walls.
All instrumentation at rest.

INT. CORRIDOR TO BRIDGE - "A" LEVEL

Black, empty.

INT. BRIDGE

Vacant.
Two space helmets resting on chairs.
Electrical hum.
Lights on the helmets begin to signal one another.
Moments of silence.
A yellow light goes on.
Data mind bank in b.g.
Electronic hum.
A green light goes on in front of one helmet.
Electronic pulsing sounds.
A red light goes on in front of other helmet.
An electronic conversation ensues.
Reaches a crescendo.
Then silence.
The lights go off, save the yellow.

INT. CORRIDOR TO HYPERSLEEP VAULT

Lights come on.
Seven gowns hang from the curved wall.
Vault door opens.

INT. HYPERSLEEP VAULT

Explosion of escaping gas.
The lid on a freezer pops open.
Slowly, groggily, KANE sits up.
Pale.
Kane rubs the sleep from his eyes.
Stands.
Looks around.
Stretches.
Looks at the other freezer compartments.
Scratches.
Moves off.

INT. GALLEY

Kane plugs in a Silex.
Lights a cigarette.
Coughs.
Grinds some coffee beans.
Runs some water through.

KANE
Rise and shine, Lambert.

INT. HYPERSLEEP VAULT

Another lid pops open.
A young woman sits up.

LAMBERT
What time is it.

KANE
(voice over)
What do you care.

INT. GALLEY

Pot now half-full.
Kane watches it drip.
Inhales the fragrance.

KANE
Now Dallas and Ash.
(calls out)
Good morning Captain.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Where's the coffee.

KANE
Brewing.

LAMBERT walks into the kitchen.
Pours herself a cup.

INT. HYPERSLEEP VAULT

Two more lids pop open.
A pair of men sit up.
Look at each other.

INT. GALLEY

Kane enjoys a freshly-brewed cup.

KANE

Ripley...

Another moment.
And then the sound of another lid opening.

KANE
And if we have Parker, can
Brett be far behind.

Lid opening sound.

KANE
Right.

INT. HYPER_SLEEP VAULT

DALLAS looks at his groggy circus.

DALLAS
One of you jokers get the cat.

RIPLEY picks up a limp cat out of one of the compartments.

INT. MESS

The crew of the United States commercial starship Nostromo seated around a table.

Dallas.....Captain
Kane.....Executive Officer
Ripley.....Warrant Officer
Ash.....Science Officer
Lambert.....Navigator
Parker.....Engineer
Brett.....Engineering Technician
Jones.....Cat

Five men and two women: Lambert and Ripley.

LAMBERT
Jesus am I cold.

PARKER
Still with us, Brett.

BRETT
Yo.

RIPLEY
Lucky us.

They yawn, stretch, shiver.
Dallas looks over at a flashing yellow light.

KANE
I feel dead.

Kane is not yet fully awake.
Yawns.

PARKER
You look dead.

ASH
Nice to be back.

PARKER
Before we dock maybe we'd better go over the bonus situation.

BRETT
Yeah.

PARKER
Brett and I think we deserve a full share.

DALLAS
You two will get what you contracted for. Just like everybody else.

BRETT
Everybody else gets more than us.

DALLAS
Everybody else deserves more than you two.

ASH
Mother wants to talk to you.

DALLAS
I saw it. Yellow light for my eyes only...Now, everybody hit their stations.

INT. COMPUTER ROOM ANNEX

Floor to ceiling data banks.
Another flashing yellow light.
A legend underneath.
COMMAND PRIORITY ACCESS ONLY.
Dallas enters.
Sits at his console.
Removes insignia master computer key attached to his shirt.

Plug it into the board under the light.
All banks burst into life.
Dallas punches up a computer code on the keyboard.

Legend on the screen...

What's my God damn key.

Print-out from computer answers...

01335 on the binary side.

DALLAS
Thank you Mother.

Dallas punches up the combination on the keyboard.
Immediately start getting a readout.

CUT TO:

INT. BRIDGE

Above eye level the room is ringed by viewscreens.
All of them blank.
Kane, Ripley, and Lambert enter.
Dallas' seat remains empty.
All of them now dressed; they find their way to individual consoles.
Ripley puts down the cat, straps herself into the high-backed chair.

KANE
Plug us in.

All three crew members begin throwing switches.
The control room starts to come to life.
Colored lights flicker.
Chase each other across glowing screens.

KANE
Give us something to look at.

Lambert presses a bank of switches.
Viewscreens glimmer into life.

LAMBERT
Take a look at this.

On each screen, blackness speckled with stars.

LAMBERT
Where's Earth.

KANE
You're the navigator.

RIPLEY
That's not our system.

KANE
Scan.

Lambert hits several toggles.
On the screens the images begin to drift.

ONE OF THE SCREENS

A moving image of a starfield.

EXT. NOSTROMO

The Factory Starship lumbering with the depths of inter-stellar space.

Function: Petroleum tanker and Refinery.
Capacity: 2000,000,000 tons.
Length: One and one half kilometers.

Battered exterior encrusted with dark sludge.

INT. BRIDGE

Lambert pores over charts.
Consults her console.
Puzzled.

KANE
Contact traffic control.

Ripley switches on her transmission unit.

RIPLEY
This is commercial vessel Nostromo.
Registration number 180246. Do you read me. Over.

Nothing but the hiss of static.

RIPLEY
Nothing.

KANE
Keep trying.

Turns to Lambert.

Ripley attempting transmission in b.g.

KANE
You got a reading yet.

LAMBERT
We're way out in the boondocks here...

KANE
Keep trying...

LAMBERT
Working on it.

Eureka.

LAMBERT
Found it.

KANE
Hard to believe.

LAMBERT
What the hell are we doing out here.

KANE
What are you talking about.

RIPLEY
It's not our system.

INT. ENGINE ROOM

Giant reactor system purring smoothly.

INT. ENGINE ROOM

PARKER and BRETT in a glass cubicle.
Huge powerplant stretching before them.
All units on automatic hyper-drive.
Parker hits a switch above his desk.

Each having a beer.

A green light goes on.

PARKER
How's your light?

BRETT
Green.

PARKER
Mine too.

They both take a swig.
Suddenly a beeper signal begins.

PARKER
Christ.What is it now.

BRETT
Right.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Report to the mess.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - "C" LEVEL

PARKER
I want to know why they never come down here. This is where the work is.

BRETT
Same reason we have half a share to their one, our time is their time, that's the way they see it.

PARKER
Well, I'll tell you something... it stinks.

They move towards the companionway.

INT. MESS

Entire crew present.

DALLAS
Some of you may have figured out that we're not home.

BRETT
What the hell.

DALLAS
Mother's interrupted the course of the voyage.
Mother is programmed to interrupt the course of out voyage if certain conditions arise. They have...

(pause)
We've received intermittent transmission from quadrant points QBR 157, 052. Somebody's gone down.

BRETT
So what.

KANE
We're obligated under Section B2...

PARKER
Christ. We're a commercial ship not some rescue team. This kind of duty's not in our contract.

ASH
You better read your contract.
Transmissions received in non-commercial lanes...

Dallas gives Parker and Brett a look.

DALLAS
We're going in, that's it.

Brett knows when to ease up.

BRETT
Right, we're going in.
(smiles)
Sir.

Dallas turns to ASH.

DALLAS
Can we land on it.

He takes a print-out from Mother out of his hand.

ASH
The other ship did.

DALLAS
That's what I mean.

Studies the print-out.

ASH
It's big enough. Can't see any reason why not.

CUT TO:

EXT. NOSTROMO AND REFINERY APPROACHING THE STAR/PLANET SYSTEM

INT. BRIDGE

Dallas at his console speaking to Ash.

DALLAS
We're coming into range of the planet. What kind of orbit do you plan for the cargo.

ASH
Z local vertical mode.

DALLAS
You figure it will hold that.

ASH
You worried about redundancy management disabling CMGS control.

DALLAS
Yeah.

ASH
CMG control is inhibited via DAS/DCS. We'll augment with TACS and monitor through ATMDC and computer interface.
(pause)
Feel better?

DALLAS
A lot.

EXT. NOSTROMO

Moving within range of the planet.

INT. BRIDGE

The crew strap themselves to their seats.

DALLAS
Prepare for separation and orbital insertion of the cargo.

Much preparation for separation, etc.

DALLAS
Give me an EC Pressure reading.

ASH

3.45 n/c m^2 squared (5 psia)

DALLAS
Shout if it changes. Deactivate probe retract system.

KANE
What about the pressure seal.

Dallas hits appropriate switches.

DALLAS
Now the probe retract system.

Kane hits other equally appropriate switches.

KANE
Okay.

DALLAS
Release captive hatches and disengage probe.

Kane working switches and buttons.

KANE Disengaged.

Dallas punches buttons of his own.

EXT. NOSTROMO

The Refinery separates from Nostromo.

INT. BRIDGE

Dallas watches the refinery moving away on a viewscreen.

KANE
All free and clear.

DALLAS
Ash.

ASH
Orbital insertion complete.

DALLAS
Okay. The money's safe. Let's take it down.

EXT. NOSTROMO

Engines coughing to life.
Nostromo begins its descent.

Below night's tide rolls across the planet's surface.

INT. BRIDGE

The viewscreen shimmers.

RIPLEY
Turbulence.

EXT. NOSTROMO

Tug-module hydroplaning downward.
A set of brilliant lights switch on.
Cut through the thick atmosphere.

INT. ENGINE ROOM - CUBICLE

Parker and Brett strapped in their seats.
Begin rocking from the sudden, extreme turbulence.

PARKER
Chirst.Overloading. What the hell are we going through.

BRETT
Dust fritzing the compressor.

PARKER
There goes the conversion stabilizer.

BRETT
I don't know if the digital solenoid...

PARKER
Forget it. If we don't crash, dollars to your aunt's cherry
we get an electrical fire...

INT. BRIDGE

The turbulence continues unabated.
Lambert's eyes follow cross-plot gauges.

LAMBERT
Drop begins...now. Fifteen kilometers and descending... twelve...ten...eight and slowing. Five. Three. Two.

One kilometer and slowing.

DALLAS
Lock tractor breams.

A loud electrical hum.

KANE
Locked.

DALLAS
Kill drive engines.

The engines fall silent.

LAMBERT
Nine hundred meters and dropping.
Eight hundred. Seven hundred.

EXT. PLANET - NIGHT

Storm blowing across the night-shrouded surface.
The Nostromo hovers on glowing beams of light.
Landing struts unfold like insect legs.
The ship slams down.
Rocks heavily on massive shock absorbers.

INT. BRIDGE - NIGHT

RIPLEY
We're down.

An enormous vibration.
The panels in the room flash simultaneously.
Light go out.

KANE
Lost it. Lost it.

INT. ENGINE ROOM

Another huge vibration.
An electrical fire breaks out along three control panels.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR

Huge flash fire whips along corridor.

INT. ENGINE ROOM - CUBICLE

Parker and Brett see the pandemonium below.
Brett hits the secondary generator switch.

A pressure valve blows.
Another conduit breaks loose.
All lights go out.
They grab hand lights from wall.

INT. BRIDGE

Still in darkness.

LAMBERT
Secondary generator should kick over.

KANE
Where is it.

Moments. Nothing. Kane grabs emergency headlamp from facia.
Followed by Dallas and Lambert.

DALLAS
What happened?

Ripley hits the voice-amp.

RIPLEY
Engine room, what happened.

PARKER
(voice over)
God damn electrical fire, that's what happened.

BRETT
(voice over)
It's big.

INT. ENGINE ROOM

Parker fighting an electrical fire on one of his panels.
Brett shouting into his voice-amp.

BRETT
The intakes are clogged. We overheated and burned out a whole cell...Christ, it's really breaking loose down here...

INT. BRIDGE

DALLAS
Somebody give me a simple answer,
Has the hull been breached.

Ripley scans her gauges.

RIPLEY
I don't see anything. We've still got pressure.

A beep from the communicator.

DALLAS
Hit the screen.

Kane snaps three toggles.
The screens flicker, but remain black.

KANE
Nothing.

EXT. SHIP - NIGHT

The wind sounds.
Storm continues to blow around the craft.
A few glittering lights distinguish the Nostromo from absolute darkness.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Parker on the communicator to the bridge.

PARKER
4 panel is totally shot, the secondary load sharing unit is out, at least three cells on 12 module are gone.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley listening to Parker.
Dallas standing over her.
No images on any screens.

RIPLEY
Is that it.

PARKER
(voice over)
Couldn't fix it out here anyway.
And we need to reroute a couple of these ducts. Can't really fix them without a whole drydock...

DALLAS
What else.

PARKER
(voice over)
We lost a cell. Some fragments caked up and blew the whole system. We've got to clean it all out and repressurize.

BRETT
(voice over)
Right.

RIPLEY
Get started on 4 panel. I'll be down in five minutes.

She shuts off her voice communicator.

DALLAS
How long before we're functional.

RIPLEY
Fifteen to twenty hours...

DALLAS
Stay on it. What about the auxiliaries.

RIPLEY
Working on it.

EXT. SHIP - NIGHT

Bridge lights come to life.
Illuminate nothing but a patch of featureless ground.
The wind and storm now at a higher pitch.

INT. BRIDGE

Dallas, Kane, Lambert, and Ash.
Slouched around the bridge.
Drinking coffee.
Occasionally staring at the opaque screens.

DALLAS
Any response yet.

ASH
Nothing but the same transmission every thirty-two seconds. All the other channels are dead.

Pause.

DALLAS
Kick on the floods.

CUT TO:

EXT. SHIP

A ring of floodlights comes to life.
Dimly illuminating the rocky landscape.
The wind and dust now at a higher pitch.

CUT TO:

INT. BRIDGE - NIGHT

Dallas stares at the dark screens.

KANE
We can't go anywhere in this.

ASH
Mother says the sun's coming up in about twenty minutes.

DALLAS
How far from the source of the transmission.

ASH
Northeast... about 3000 meters.

KANE
Close enough to walk.

DALLAS
Let's run an atmospheric.

Ash punches buttons, starts to consult his panel.

ASH
10 percent agron, 85 precent nitrogen, 5 percent neon...I'm working on the trace elements.

DALLAS
Pressure.

ASH
Ten to the fourth dynes per square centimeter.

KANE

Moisture content.

ASH
None. Zero.

DALLAS
Anything else.

ASH
Rock, lava base. And cold... well below the centrigrade line.

KANE
I volunteer for the first group going out.

DALLAS
I hear you. Lambert. You too.

Pause.

LAMBERT
Swell.

DALLAS
One more thing. Let's get out some weapons.

EXT. SHIP - DAWN

Sunrise.
The atmosphere begins to lighten.
Silhouette of the Nostromo becoming dimly visible.
Starship perched on barren rock.
More rolling clouds of dust.
The floodlights automatically shut off.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Parker and Brett laser welding one of the ducts.
Shirts off.
Sweat steaming.
Ripley rewiring one of the panels.
Parker shuts down the laser, inspects the fusion.

PARKER
Hey, Ripley, I got a question.

RIPLEY
Yeah.

PARKER
Do we get to go out on the expedition or are we stuck here until everything's fixed.

RIPLEY
You know the answer to that.

BRETT
What about the shares in case they find anything.

RIPLEY
Don't worry, you'll both get what's coming to you.

BRETT
I'm not doing any more work unless we get full shares.

RIPLEY
You're guaranteed by law that you'll get a share... Now both of you knock it off and get back to work.

Parker looks at her.
Snaps on the laser weld.
Starts to join another section of the duct.

BRETT
Right.

INT. MAIN AIR LOCK - DAWN

Dallas, Kane and Lambert enter the lock.
All wear gloves, boots, jackets.
Carry laser pistols.
Kane touches a button.
Servo whine.
Then the inner door slides quietly shut.
The trio pull on their helmets.

DALLAS
I'm sending. Do you hear me.

KANE
Receiving.

LAMBERT
Receiving.

DALLAS
All right. Keep away from the weapons unless I say otherwise.

INT. ASH'S BLISTER - DAWN

Ash descends companionway to blister.
Punches up screens and instrumentation.

INT. MAIN AIR LOCK - DAWN

DALLAS
Open the hatch.

Another servo whine.
Ponderously, the outer lock hatch slides open.
Clouds of dust and steam swirl before the three crew members.
A mobile gangway slides out the open hatch.
Burnt orange sunlight beyond.

EXT. PLANET - DAWN

The trio walk down the gangplank.
Arrive at surface level.
Their feet striking onto a thick layer of lava rock.
The wind at gale force.

DALLAS
Which way.

LAMBERT
Over here.

DALLAS
You lead.

Lambert walks into the storm.
Followed closely by the others.

LAMBERT
Now I can't see a God damn thing.

ASH
(voice over)
Turn on the finder.

DALLAS
It's on...Ash are you receiving.

INT. ASH'S BLISTER - DAWN

Ash leaning over his console.
Watches them beneath him.
Corresponding images on the screen in front of him.

ASH
See you. Read you. Good contact on my board.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Getting you clear and free. Let's keep the line open.

EXT. PLANET - DAWN

The three crew members push their way along.
Like divers at the bottom of a dark sea.
The wind and dust continues driving down in dark sheets.
Lambert repeats.

LAMBERT
Can't see more than three meters in any direction.

KANE
Quit griping.

LAMBERT
I like griping.

DALLAS
Come on.

They wade on, following Lambert.
She halts abruptly.
Confused.

INT. BLISTER - DAWN

Ash watches intently.
Images on each screen of the trio.

LAMBERT
(voice over)
I've got it again.

ASH
Any problems.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Yeah. A lot of dust and wind.
Starting to get some fade on the beam.

EXT. PLANET - DAWN

The trio moves through a dark limbo.

LAMBERT
This way.

Lambert indicates left.
Moves in that direction.
The others follow.
The storm growing.

KANE
It's close.

They approach a towering rock formation.
The transmission stops.

LAMBERT
It's gone again.

KANE
Did we pass it.

DALLAS
Not unless it's underground.
Let's take a break.

They shelter with the rock formation.
Storm howls round them.
Dallas adjusts headset.
The signal starts.

DALLAS
I've got it again. Let's go.

LAMBERT
How about our break.

DALLAS
No. Let's move on while we've got the signal, again.

Dallas gets up.

They stand for a moment...

Then move away from the rock formation.
Fossilized into the other side of the rock is a shape.
Fifteen feet tall.
Unseen by the members of the party.

INT. BLISTER - DAWN

Ash receiving the video transmission.
Notices something within the formation.
Freezes the image.

Enlarges it.
Enlarges again.

EXT. THE NOSTROMO - SUNRISE

Atmosphere turning the color of blood.
Then the sun is up.

EXT. THE NOSTROMO - SUNRISE

Brett and Parker still at work.
Ripley moves away from her panel in triumph...

RIPLEY
You ought to be able to handle the rest.

PARKER
Don't worry.

RIPLEY
If you run into trouble, I'll be on the bridge.

BRETT
Right.

She leaves.

PARKER
Bitch.

INT. BLISTER - DAY

Ash still working on the video image.
Enhances the enlargement.
Transfers the image to cathode ray.
The image reveals itself to be a giant form. Indistinct.

Ripley's voice comes over.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
How's it going.

Ash quickly shuts off the video image.
Hits the intercom.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley at her console.
Looking at Ash on her screen.
Ash's video image not visible to Ripley.

ASH
(voice over)
All right.

RIPLEY
Have you tried putting the transmission through ECIU.

ASH
(voice over)
Mother hasn't identified it as yet.
It's not a language.

RIPLEY
I'll give it a shot.

ASH
(voice over)
Be my guest.

She pushes some button.
The noise is now heard on her speaker.

EXT. PLANET - DAY

Dust clearing.
Three tiny figures against the landscape.

EXT. PLANET - DAY

Empty landscape.
Then Kane comes up over a rise startled by what he sees.
Suddenly the transmission is deafening.

KANE
Jesus Christ.

Dallas and Lambert join him equally startled.

THEIR P.O.V. - DAY

A gargantuan construction rising from the rock.
Clearly of nonhuman manufacture.

EXT. PLANET - DAY

Noise still at shrill pitch.
All members of the party shouting into their voice-amps.

KANE
Some kind of spaceship.

LAMBERT
Are you sure. It's weird...

DALLAS
Ash, can you see this.

INT. ASH'S BLISTER - DAY

Ash looking at the craft on a screen.

ASH
Yeah. Never seen one like it.
Neither has Mother.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Keep checking for enhancement.

ASH
Whatever the transmission is,
it's inside that.

KANE
(voice over)
I'll go in and have a look.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Hold on. Ash, I don't see any lights or movements. Do you.

ASH
I can't get any reading.

EXT. PLANET - DAY

ASH
(voice over)
It's putting out so much power
I just can't get any reading.

Dallas shuts off his receiver.
Sudden quiet.
A long moment.

DALLAS
It looks pretty dead from here.
We'll approach the base.

They move toward the ship.

INT. BLISTER - DAY

Ash still adjusting image of form in rock.
It suddenly resolves.
A skeleton. Fifteen feet long.
He enlarges the image.

DALLAS
(voice over)
There's only one thing I can...

Dallas' voice fades in and out.
As do their images on the screen.

ASH
Dallas...
(frantically punches buttons on console)
Dallas...Do you read me.

No reply.

INT. BRIDGE - DAY

Ripley is running the transmission through ECIU.
Over the speakers Dallas' voice fades in.

DALLAS
(voice over)
No sign of life. No lights...
No movement...

She studies a long series of binary programs...

DALLAS
(voice over)
We're beneath the base.

His voice fades into static.
Disappears.

CUT TO:

EXT. STRUCTURE - DAY

The lower part of the entrance filled with dust and pumice.

KANE
Looks like an entrance.

DALLAS
Yeah... Let's move inside...

They climb up to one of the apertures and enter.

INT. CHAMBER - DAY

They move into a high-ceilinged chamber.
Walls covered with shadowy lattices.
Ghostly light filters dust-filled air.
A few meters in an opening appears.
Dallas leans over and looks into the hole.
Only blackness.
He unclips the light from his belt.
Shines it down into the hole.

DALLAS
It just goes down... smooth walls.
I can't see the bottom, light won't reach.

Kane and Lambert come over.
Dallas begins unclipping gear from his belt.

DALLAS
Let's take a look around here
first.

Kane and Lambert exchange a glance.
Dallas shines his light about, sees...
A large, glossy urn, tan coloration.
Round opening at the top, empty within.
Then Dallas shines his light on nearby lattice...
Moves closer.

DALLAS
Over here.

They approach.
Train their lights along the floor.
A machine.
On the mechanism, a small bar moves steadily back and forth.
Sliding noiselessly in the grooves.

KANE
Still functioning.

Lambert looks down at her direction finder.

LAMBERT
Automatic recording.

Dallas snaps it off.

DALLAS
Now for a look down below.
(looks at Kane)
This is your big chance.

KANE
Okay.

DALLAS
Don't unhook yourself from the cable. Be out in less than ten minutes. Read me.

KANE
Aye aye.

Dallas rigs a tripod over the opening in the floor.
Unspools a couple of feet of wire.
Kane attaches the end of it to his chest unit.
Climbs over the lip and drops it into the hole.
Now hanging by the wire...
Head and shoulders out of the opening.
Kane activates the climbing unit.
Lowers himself into the fissure.

INT. STRUCTURE OPENING

Kane braces his feet against the wall of the vertical shaft.
Switches on his light, points it into the depths.
The beam penetrates only thirty feet or so, then is lost in darkness.

KANE
Hotter in here. Warm air rising from below.

He starts down, playing out the line.
Descending in short leaps.
Stops to catch his breath.
Breathing rasping loudly in his helmet.
A little sunlight filters from above.
Looking up, Kane can see the mouth of the hole...
A glowing spot of light.

DALLAS
(voice over)
You okay in there.

KANE
Haven't hit bottom yet.
This is work. Can't talk now.

He kicks off and continues down.
Taking longer and longer hops as he gains confidence.
Pausing for a moment to regain his breath, he shines the light on his instruments.

KANE

I'm below ground level.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley at her console, still working on transmission.
Gets a readout.
Looks worried.
Speaks into communicator.

RIPLEY

Ash, tell Dallas Mother speculates that the noise is some kind of warning.

ASH

(voice over)

I can't tell him anything. I've lost contact. The transmission around the ship is killing all communications.

Pause.

RIPLEY

I'm going out after them.

ASH

(voice over)

I don't think so. We can't spare the personnel. We've got minimum takeoff capability right now. That's why Dallas left us on board.

RIPLEY

I still think we should go after them.

ASH

(voice over)

What's the point. In the time it take to get there. They'll know if it's a warning.

Ripley looks steadily at Ash on her monitor.
His screen, not visible to her, shows blowup of helmeted, skeletal head. Not human.

INT. STRUCTURE

Kane resumes his downward climb.
Suddenly, his feet lose their purchase as the walls of the shaft disappear.
The tunnel has reached its end.

Below him is a dark, cavernous space.
Deep breaths due to his violent exertion.

DALLAS
(voice over)
See anything?

KANE
No...Tunnel's gone. Cave or something below me. Feels like the goddamn tropics in here...

He consults his instruments.
Helmet instrumentation strobing softly in the darkness.

KANE
...high nitrogen content, no oxygen...

Still puffing, he releases his purchase on the stone walls.
Begins to lower himself on power.
Now Kane is dangling free in darkness.
Spinning slowly on the wire as the chest unit unwinds.
Then his feet hit bottom.
Kane grunts in surprise, almost loses his balance.
He flashes his suit lights.
The beams reveal that he is in a large hold.
Row after row of extrusions stretch from floor to ceiling.

KANE
This is weird.

DALLAS
(voice over)
What do you mean.

KANE
There's something all over the walls.

Kane walks across the chamber.
Examines the organic protrusions.

INT. CHAMBER ABOVE

Dallas and Lambert.

DALLAS
How long till sunset.

LAMBERT
Twenty minutes.

A look from Lambert.

INT. HOLD

Kane approaches the center of the room.
On the floor are rows of leathery ovoid shapes.
He walks around them.
Shines his light on one.

KANE
It's like some kind of storage area. Is anybody there. Do you read me.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Loud and clear.

KANE
The place is full of leathery things sealed...soft to the touch.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Can you see what's in them.

KANE
I'll give it a look.

He tries to open one of them.
It won't open.

KANE
Strange feeling to it.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Don't open it. You don't know what's in it.

Kane peers closely at the leathery ovoids.
Turns away.
Raised areas begin to appear where he touched it.
He moves his light along the rows.
Turns back to the one he was examining.
Something has changed.
The opaque surface begins to clear.
Object becoming visible within.
Kane shines his light on the floor at the base of it.
He studies it.

KANE
Jesus...

DALLAS
(voice over)

What.

Viscera and mandible now visible.
The interior surface spongy and irregular.
Kane shines the light inside.
With shocking violence, a small creature smashes outward.
Fixes itself to his mask.
Sizzling sound.
The creature melts through the mask.
Attaches itself to Kane's face.
Kane tears at the thing with his hands.
His mouth forced open.
He falls backward.

INT. CHAMBER ABOVE

DALLAS
Kane...Kane can you hear me.

LAMBERT
What's the matter.

DALLAS
We better haul him out.

LAMBERT
It'll yank him right off his feet if he's not expecting it.

DALLAS
Try him again.

LAMBERT
Kane...Kane...Goddamn it. Answer me.

Dallas begins to fiddle with the wench mechanism.

DALLAS
The line's slack.

Pause.

LAMBERT
He doesn't answer.
(pause)
Do you think he could have unhooked himself.

Dallas switches on the winch motor.
With a whine, it begins to reel the line in.
After a moment the line tightens with a jerk.

The motor slows, laboring under added weight.

DALLAS
It caught.

LAMBERT
Is it hooked on something.

DALLAS
No, it's coming.

LAMBERT
I can't see anything.

Dallas shines his light down into the hole.
Shakes his head.

DALLAS
Line's still moving.

A long moment.
Dallas shines his light again.

DALLAS
Here he comes.

The winch labors heavily.

DALLAS
Get ready to grab him.

Kane appears at the top of the opening.
Dangles limply from the wire.
Dallas reaches for him, then recoils.

DALLAS
Look out. There's something on his face.

Lambert attempts to help.

LAMBERT
What is it.

Kane appears to be completely unconscious.
The life form is still wrapped motionless around his face.

LAMBERT
Oh Jesus.

DALLAS
Don't touch it.

They grapple with Kane's limp body.
Lift him from the hole.

INT. ENTRANCE TO DERELICT - SUNSET

Kane is now pinioned between Dallas and Lambert.
The storm raging through and beyond the entrance...
Dallas begins to assemble travois.

EXT. THE NOSTROMO - SUNSET

Atmosphere turning the color of blood.
And the sun is down.
The ring of floodlights on the ship comes to life.
Feebly combatting the darkness and continuing storm.

INT. BRIDGE

Jones the cat staring through a port opening at the storm.
Ripley waiting on the bridge.
Ash stares at his inactive monitors.
Suddenly:

 ASH
We've got them. They're back on the screens.

 RIPLEY
How many.

 ASH
Three blips. They're coming
this way.

Ripley presses transmitter.

 RIPLEY
Dallas, Lambert. Can you read me.

 DALLAS
 (voice over)
We hear you. We're coming back...
Kane's injured... We'll need some help getting him in.

Ripley stares at the screen.

 ASH
I'll go.

Ash moves from the room.
Ripley remains seated at her console.

EXT. LANDING LEG - NIGHT

Dallas and Lambert dragging Kane on a travois towards landing leg.

INT. PASSAGEWAY NEAR AIR LOCK

Ash comes down the steps.
Hurries to the inner door lock.
Presses the wall voice-amp.

ASH
Ripley, I'm by the inner lock hatch.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Okay.

EXT. LANDING LEG - NIGHT

Dallas and Lambert drag Kane onto lift platform.

INT. PASSAGEWAY NEAR AIR LOCK

Parker comes running up.

PARKER
What's going on.

ASH
Kane got hurt somehow.

PARKER
How bad.

Ash shrugs.
Brett appears at the top of the companionway.
Puzzled look on his face.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley seated alone in the room.
Dallas appears as a huge image on all screens.
Lambert behind him.
Kane pinioned to Dallas.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Ripley, are you there.

RIPLEY
Right here.

DALLAS
(voice over)
We're coming up. Open the lock.

RIPLEY
What happened to Kane. I need a clear definition.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Some kind of organism. It's attached itself to him. Let us in.
(long moment)
You hear me. Open the lock.

RIPLEY
If we let it in, the ship could be infected.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Goddamn it. Open the hatch.

RIPLEY
We've already broken every rule or quarantine. If we bring an organism on board, we won't have a single layer of defense left.

LAMBERT
(voice over)
Open the God damn hatch. We have to get him inside.

RIPLEY
I can't. If you were in my position you'd do the same.

INT. PASSAGEWAY NEAR AIR LOCK

DALLAS
(voice over)
Ripley, do you hear me.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
I read you. The answer is negative.

Ash hits the emergency switch.
A red light goes on.
Servo whine.

Followed by a solid metallic chunk.

ASH
Inner hatch open.

INT. BRIDGE - NIGHT

Ripley staring at the console.
She can't believe what she sees.
Turns to the viewscreens.
Watches Dallas, Kane and Lambert enter.

INT. PASSAGEWAY NEAR AIR LOCK

The servo again turns over.
Another clunk.
The outer door has closed.
Red light off.
The inner door slides open.
Dallas and Lambert stagger into passageway.
Carry Kane's body between them.
Dallas pulls off his helmet.

DALLAS
Stay clear.

Ash and Parker move back.

ASH
God.

PARKER
Is it alive.

LAMBERT
I don't know, but don't touch it.

DALLAS
Take him to the infirmary.

BRETT
Right.

Ash and Brett move in carefully to help with the limp burden.

INT. INFIRMARY

Kane's helmet.
Hands begin to open it with a laser cutter.
The helmet separates easily.
The two halves part...
...The life form slowly pulsing on Kane's face.
Dallas hesitates, then puts his hand on the small Creature.

Tries to pull it free.
Unsuccessful.
The Alien remains anchored to Kane's tissue.

ASH
Let me try.

Ash takes a pair of pliers from a rack.
Carefully grasps the tip of the Creature.
Squeezes tightly.
Leans back.

DALLAS
You're tearing his face.

A trickle of blood appears on Kane's cheek.

BRETT
It's not going to come off without pulling his whole face off at the same time.

DALLAS
Let the machine work on him.

The Ash presses a switch.
The machine lights up.
Kane is sucked into a slot on the wall.
Visible inside through the glass layer.
A blinding colored light performs antisepsis.
Two video monitors pop on.

ANGLE ON THE DOORWAY

Ripley appears.
Dallas turns and looks at her.
A long moment.

DALLAS
When I give an order, I expect it to be obeyed.

RIPLEY
Even if it's against the law.

DALLAS
That's right.

Lambert steps forward and slaps Ripley across the face.
Ripley slowly puts her hand to her cheek.

LAMBERT
You were going to leave us out there.

PARKER
Maybe she should have. Who the hell knows what that is.

BRETT
Right.

Ripley looks at Lambert.
A moment.

RIPLEY
Let's call it settled.

Lambert gives her a curt nod.
Ash turns attention to the instrumentation.

RIPLEY
Somebody fill me in.

DALLAS
He went into the structure alone, we lost radio contact. When we pulled him out, it was on his face...

ASH
Where did it come from...

DALLAS
Somewhere inside that ship.

PARKER
How the hell is he breathing.

They study the monitors.

ASH
Blood's throughly oxygenated.

DALLAS
How. His nose and mouth seem to be blocked.

ASH
We better look inside his head.

Ash punches three buttons.
An X-ray image appears.
A color depiction of Kane's head and upper torso.
The Alien is clearly visible.
A maze of complicated biology.
Kane's jaws are forced open.
The creature has extruded a long tube down his mouth and throat.

The appendage ending at the base of the esophagus.

BRETT

It's got something down his goddamn throat.

ASH

That must be how it's getting oxygen to him.

RIPLEY

It doesn't make sense. It paralyzes him, puts him into a coma, then keeps him alive.

PARKER

Let's kill it. We can't leave the damn thing on him.

ASH

I don't know. At the moment the Creature is keeping him alive. If we remove it we might terminate Kane...

DALLAS

I don't think so. Let's take the chance and cut it off him.

ASH

You'll take the responsibility.

DALLAS

That's right.

Slips into surgical gloves.

Presses a switch, Kane slides back out of the booth.

DALLAS

Give me the knife.

Ripley takes a surgical laser blade from the case.

Carefully passes it to Dallas.

He manipulates the knife until he has a comfortable grip.

Flicks a small button with his thumb.

The blade begins to hum.

Dallas advances on Kane's prostrate form.

Touches the scalpel to the Creature.

The electronic blade slices effortlessly downward.

Suddenly a urine-like fluid begins to drip from the wound.

DALLAS

Starting to bleed.

The liquid flows onto the bedding next to Kane's head.
Starts to hiss.
Smoke curls up from the stain.
Next the yellow fluid eats a hole through the bunk bed.
Then drips onto the deck below.
Metal bubbling and sizzling.
More smoke rising, sending the crew into a coughing jag.
The crew jostle their way out of the cabin.
Huddle in the passageway outside, still coughing.
Dallas frantically applies pressure to the wound.
In the process, smoke of the fluid gets on Dallas's gloves.
They begin to smoke.
Dallas leaps back, pulls them off.
Then runs out into the corridor.

INT. PASSAGEWAY OUTSIDE INFIRMARY

BRETT
Shit. It's going to eat through the decks and go out the hull...

He starts to run for the companionway.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" DECK

Dallas wrenches an emergency lamp from a socket.
Hurls himself down a companionway.
The others follow.

DALLAS
There.

A droplet of fluid is sizzling on the ceiling bulkhead.
It oozes down.
Drips to the deck.
Continues to bubble.
Then goes through the bulkhead.

ASH
What can we put under it.

Ripley and Parker charge down the companionway below.

INT. SECOND LEVEL - "C" DECK

Ripley and Parker move cautiously down the passageway.
Look up to the ceiling bulkhead.

PARKER
Don't get under it.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" DECK

Dallas, Brett and Ash crouch by the spot where the acid sizzles.

Ash fishes a pen out of his pocket.
Probes the hole in the deck.

ASH
It's stopped penetrating.

Ripley comes charging back up.

RIPLEY
What's happening.

ASH
I think it's lost steam. No longer active.

Ripley checks the opening.
Ash straightens up.
Starts to put the pen back in his pocket.
Changes his mind and stands holding it by the end.

ASH
I've never seen anything like that, except molecular acid...

BRETT
This thing uses it for blood.

ASH
It's the asbestos that stopped it, otherwise it would have gone straight through.

DALLAS
Wonderful defense mechanism.
You don't dare kill it.

Parker comes up the companionway.

PARKER
It's stopped bleeding.

DALLAS
Yeah. After it penetrated two levels.

RIPLEY
What about Kane.

Starts up companionway.

INT. INFIRMARY

They return.
Kane still motionless on the bunk.
The Alien remains secured to his face.
Wound completely healed over.

PARKER
Any of the acid get on him.

Dallas approaches, peers at Kane's head.

DALLAS
Doesn't look like it.

BRETT
Is it still dripping that crap.

ASH
Healed over.

LAMBERT
There must be some way we can get it off.

And look at Dallas.

ASH
I don't think you ought to try again. It didn't work out too well last time.

Dallas gives him a look in return.
Ripley presses a button.
Kane slides back into the diagnostic coffin.
More buttons pressed.
Display lights up again, showing the different parts of Kane's body.

ASH
I better get some intravenous feeding started. So far I can't tell what the Alien has absorbed from his system.

The machine begins to process Kane's body.

RIPLEY
What's the stain on his lungs.

The X-ray reveals a spreading dark blot in the chest cavity.
At the center, the stain is completely opaque.

ASH
Whatever it is, it's blocking the X-ray.

A long moment.
The stain spreads.

BRETT
What happens now.

Ash sets aside his partially melted pen.
Looks at Dallas.

DALLAS
You go back to work.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Brett at work in the cubicle.
Parker supervising him.

BRETT
I think I've got it. Give it a try.

Parker pushes a button.
Negative reaction on his monitor.

PARKER
Nothing.

BRETT
Damn. I was sure that was it.

PARKER
Well, it wasn't. Try the next one.

BRETT
Right.

Adjusts several toggles.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
What's happening.

PARKER
This goddamn woman. I'll tell her what's happening. My Johnson is happening.
(punches the communicator)
A lot of hard work. Real work.

INT. BRIDGE - NIGHT

PARKER
(voice over)
You ought to try it sometime.

RIPLEY
I've got the toughest job on this ship...

Derisive laugh from Parker through the speaker.

RIPLEY
I have to listen to your bullshit.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

PARKER
Get off my back.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
I'll get off your back when 12
module is fixed.

She clicks off.
Parker turns away.

PARKER
Smart mouth broad.

INT. INFIRMARY

Ash running test on the equipment.
Kane respirating on the view screens above.
Still deep within a coma.
All instruments recording his life processes.
The Alien's position unchanged.
Ripley approaches.
Sits near Ash.

RIPLEY
Anything new.

ASH
He's holding, no changes.

RIPLEY
What about the Creature.

ASH
It's got an outer layer of protein polysaccharides. A lot of Amino

Acids for prolonged reistance to adverse environmental conditions...
That enough for you.

RIPLEY
Plenty.What's it mean.

ASH
Interesting combination of elements making it one tough little son-of-a-bitch...

RIPLEY
Is that why you let it in.

ASH
I was following a direct order.
Remember.

RIPLEY
While Dallas and Kane are off the ship, I'm Senior Officer.

ASH
Yes, of course -- I forgot.

RIPLEY
You also forgot the science division's basic quarantine law.

ASH
No. That I didn't forget.

RIPLEY
You just broke it.

ASH
What would you have done with Kane...
His only chance at staying alive was to get into the infirmary.

RIPLEY
By breaking quarantine procedure
you risk everybody's life.

ASH
Maybe I should have let him die out there. Maybe I have jeopardized the rest of us...It's a risk I'm willing to take.

RIPLEY
This is your official position as a science officer. Not exactly out of the manual.

ASH

The first position of science is the protection and betterment of human life. I take my responsibility as seriously as you do... you do your job and I'll do mine.

Ripley stands...looks at Ash.
Walks out.

INT. MESS

Lambert playing with some string, amusing Jones.
Cat's Cradle.
Both looking bored.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Parker and Brett at work on the final intake screen.

INT. NARCISSUS

Dallas listening to a primitive tape.
His foot tapping with the rhythm.
Beep.
An interruption on the communicator.

DALLAS

Dallas.

ASH

(voice over)

I think you should have a look at Kane. Something's happened.

DALLAS

Serious.

ASH

(voice over)

Interesting.

Dallas exits.

INT. CORRIDOR OUTSIDE INFIRMARY WINDOW

Ash stares through window.
Dallas joins him.
Ripley appears behind.
A long pause.

DALLAS
It's gone.

Kane's prone form.
The Alien is no longer on his face.
Kane still unconscious, but continues to breathe.
Face covered with sucker marks.

RIPLEY
The door is closed. It must still be in there.

ASH
We can't open the door. We don't want to let it out.

RIPLEY
Yeah, I remember. We can't grab it. We can't kill it...

DALLAS
Maybe we can catch it.

ASH
As long as we're careful not to damage it.

INT. INFIRMARY

They enter cautiously.
Dallas begins moving slowly around the room.
Picking up a stainless steel tray.
Looking.
Ash and Ripley do the same.
Ripley bends down and peers under the bunk.
Nothing.
Accidentally kicks over a tray.
She stands.
Doesn't see the Alien on a ledge above her.
Her shoulder brushes against the Creature.
It drops on her.
She screams. Twists.
The Alien drops to the floor.
Then lies motionless.
Its skin faded to a dead-looking grey.
Ripley doesn't raise her eyes from the Creature.
Prods the Alien.
No response.

ASH
I think it's dead.
(looks to Ripley)
You okay.

RIPLEY

Yeah.

She carefully touches the Creature with a metal probe.
Fishes the motionless life-form into the tray.
Quickly closes the lid.
Lifts it onto a stainless steel table.
Bright light trained on the Alien.
The Creature in a supine position.
Ash touches at the Alien with a surgical instrument.

ASH

Look at those suckers. No wonder we couldn't get it off him.

RIPLEY

Where's its mouth.

ASH

It's this tube-thing, up in here.

 (carefully extracts the end of the organ)
It's hardening.
 (slips the Creature under a fluoroscope)
It's dead. No life sign whatever.

RIPLEY

Let's get rid of it.

ASH

This has to go back. This is our first contact with a specimen like this. All kinds of tests need to be run.

RIPLEY

That thing bled acid. God knows what it'll do when it's dead.

ASH

I think it's safe to assume it's not a zombie... Dallas, we have to keep this specimen.

Pause.

DALLAS

You're the science officer. It's your decision.

ASH
Then it's made... I'll seal it in a stasis tube.

Pause.

RIPLEY
What about Kane.

Ash turns back to the bunk.
Studies the life support gauges.
Kane continues to breathe steadily.

ASH
Running a fever. And still unconscious. The machine will bring his temperature down.
His vital functions are strong... who knows, he may make it.

Ash begins to seal the Alien in a large vacuum tube.

RIPLEY
I need some coffee.

She turns and walks away.

INT. COMPUTER ANNEX

Ripley and Dallas.

RIPLEY
How could you leave that kind of decision to him.

DALLAS
I just run the ship. Anything that has to do with science division, Ash has the final word.

RIPLEY
How does that happen.

DALLAS
Same way everything else happens.
Orders from the Company.

RIPLEY
Since when is that standard procedure.

DALLAS
Standard procedure is do what they tell you... Besides, I only know about flying... I haul cargo for a living.

RIPLEY
Did you ship out with Ash before.

DALLAS
First time. I went five hauls with another science man. Then two days before we left Thedus, replaced him with Ash.

She looks at him.

DALLAS
So what. They replaced my warrant officer with you.

RIPLEY
I don't trust him.

DALLAS
I don't trust anybody...What's holding up repairs.

RIPLEY
They're pretty much finished now.

DALLAS
Why didn't you say so?

RIPLEY
There are still some thing left to do.

DALLAS
Like what?

RIPLEY
We're blind on B and C decks. Reserve power systems blown...

DALLAS
That's crap. We can take off without them.

RIPLEY
Is that a good idea.

DALLAS
I want to get out of here. Let's get this turkey off the ground.

EXT. PLANET - SUNRISE

The Nostromo's engines roaring.
Belching out streams of superheated air.
The starship vibrates.
Begins to surge forward.

INT. BRIDGE - SUNRISE

The crew at their posts.
An electrical hum permeates the air.

RIPLEY
Lock tractor beams.

The pitch of the hum changes.
The ship levels itself.

RIPLEY
Retract leading struts.

EXT. PLANET - SUNRISE

The Nostromo hovering above the ground.
Held on beams of shimmering force.
The landing struts begin folding.

INT. BRIDGE - DAY

DALLAS
Take us up.

Lambert bends over the voice amplifier.

LAMBERT
One kilometer on ascension.

INT. PLANET

The Nostromo begins to levitate skyward.
Seemingly pushing upward on the beams of light.

INT. BRIDGE - DAY

The ship continues vibrating.

DALLAS
Switch on lifter quads.

A powerful, deep throbbing begins.
The vibrations increase.

RIPLEY
(into speaker)
Everything holding together down there.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Parker and Brett strapped in and vibrating.

PARKER
We fix something it stays fixed.

BRETT
Right.

EXT. NOSTROMO - DAY

The starship hovering below cloud ceiling.
Then begins to accelerate through the dense atmosphere.

INT. BRIDGE - DAY

All viewscreens operational.

DALLAS
Engage artificial gravity.

Lambert throws a switch.
The ship lurches.

LAMBERT
Engaged.

DALLAS
Altering the vector now.

A huge tremor runs throughout the ship.

PARKER'S VOICE
(o.s.)
Dust is clogging the damn intakes again. We're overloading.

DALLAS
Just hold us together until we're beyond G1...

The pitch of the engines changes...deepens.

EXT. NOSTROMO - DAY

The ship moves at an acute angle.

Slices through the boiling clouds.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Parker and Brett watching the guages.

INT. BRIDGE - DAY

Outside the screens, clouds, clouds, clouds.
Another tremor runs through the ship.
The crew's eyes riveted to their instruments.

DALLAS
Let's pick up the money and go home.

EXT. NOSTROMO

The ship clears the top of the cloud layer.
Bursts out into star-sprinkled space.
Trailing a wake of glimmering dust flecks.
Attached itself to the hovering refinery.

INT. ENGINE ROOM CUBICLE

Brett waves his arms in exultation.

BRETT
We did it

PARKER
Walk in the park. When we fix something it stays fixed.

Big smiles.

INT. BRIDGE

The Nostromo now safely beyond gravity.

DALLAS
Set our course and get us up to light plus four.

Lambert begins punching buttons.

LAMBERT
Feets get me out of here.

EXT. OUTER SPACE

The Nostromo now at light speed.
Preceptible movement in the surrounding universe.

A corona effect emerges.
Stars approaching the Nostromo appear blue.
Receding stars going to amber.
Redshift, made visible because of the craft's velocity.

INT. MESS

Parker, Brett, Dallas and Ripley around the table.
Drinking coffee.

PARKER

The best thing to do is just to freeze him. Stop the goddam disease. He can get a doctor to look at him when we get back home.

BRETT

Right.

RIPLEY

Whenever he says anything you say
'right'. You know that, Brett.

BRETT

Right.

RIPLEY

What do you think, Parker. Your staff just follows you around and says 'right'. Like a regular parrot.

Parker turns to Brett.

PARKER

Yeah. Shape up. What are you, some kind of parrot.

BRETT

Right.

DALLAS

Knock it off... Kane will have to go into quarantine.

RIPLEY

Yeah. And so will we.

Lambert enters.

LAMBERT

How about a little something to lower your spirits.

DALLAS
Thrill me.

LAMBERT
According to my calculations... based on the time spent getting to and from the planet and the speed at which it's moving away from the other...

DALLAS
Give me the short version...

LAMBERT
It'll take us six weeks to get back on course.

DALLAS
How far to Earth.

LAMBERT
Ten months.

RIPLEY
Christ.

Beep.

DALLAS
Dallas.

ASH
(voice over)
Come and see Kane right away...

DALLAS
Any change in his condition.

ASH
(voice over)
It's simpler if you just come see him.

INT. CORRIDOR OUTSIDE INFIRMARY WINDOW

What they see is...Not what they expect.
Kane is sitting up in bed...wide awake.
They enter...

LAMBERT
Kane...Are you all right.

KANE

Mouth's dry...can I have some water.

Instantly, Ash brings him a plastic cup and water. Kane gulps it down in a swallow.

KANE
More.

Ripley quickly fills a much bigger container. Hands it to Kane. He greedily consumes the entire contents. Then sags back, panting, on the bunk.

DALLAS
How do you feel.

KANE
Terrible. What happened to me.

ASH
You don't remember.

KANE
Don't remember anything. I can barely remember my name.

PARKER
Do you hurt.

KANE
All over. Feel like somebody's been beating me with a stick for about six years.
 (smiles)
God, I'm hungry.

RIPLEY
What's the last thing you can remember.

KANE
I don't know.

DALLAS
Do you remember what happened on the planet.

KANE
Just some horrible dream about smothering. Where are we.

RIPLEY

We're on our way home.

BRETT
Getting ready to go back into the freezers.

KANE
I'm starving. I want some food
first.

PARKER
I'm pretty hungry myself.

DALLAS
One meal before bed.

INT. MESS

The entire crew is seated.
Hungrily swallowing huge portions of artificial food.
The cat eats from a dish on the table.

KANE
First thing I'm going to do when we get back is eat some decent food.

PARKER
I've had worse than this, but I've had better too, if you know what I mean.

LAMBERT
Christ, you're pounding down this stuff like there's no tomorrow.

Pause.

PARKER
I mean I like it.

KANE
No kidding.

PARKER
Yeah. It grows on you.

KANE
It should. You know what they make this stuff out of...

PARKER
I know what they make it out of.

So what. It's food now.You're eating it.

Suddenly Kane grimaces.

RIPLEY
What's wrong.

Kane's voice strains.

LAMBERT
What's the matter.

KANE
I don't know... I'm getting cramps.

The others stare at him in alarm.
Suddenly he makes a loud groaning noise.
Clutches the edge of the table with his hands.
Knuckles whitening.

ASH
Breathe deeply.

Kane screams.

KANE
Oh God, it hurts so bad.
It hurts. It hurts.
(stands up)
Ooooooh.

BRETT
What is it. What hurts.

Kane's face screws into a mask of agony.
He falls back into his chair.

KANE
Ohmygooaaaaahh.

A red stain.
Then a smear of blood blossoms on his chest.
The fabric of his shirt is ripped apart.
A small head the size of a man's fist pushes out.
The crew shouts in panic.
Leap back from the table.
The cat spits, bolts away.
The tiny head lunges forward.
Comes spurting out of Kane's chest trailing a thick body.
Splatters fluids and blood in its wake.
Lands in the middle of the dishes and food.
Wriggles away while the crew scatters.
Then the Alien being disappears from sight.

Kane lies slumped in his chair.
Very dead.
A huge hole in his chest.
The dishes are scattered.
Food covered with blood.

LAMBERT
No, no, no, no, no.

BRETT
What was that. What the Christ was that.

PARKER
It was growing in him the whole time and he didn't even know it.

ASH
It used him for an incubator.

RIPLEY
That means we've got another one.

DALLAS
Yeah. And it's loose on the ship.

Slowly they gather around Kane's gutted corpse.
Then they all look at one another.
Then at Kane.
Dead on the table.

INT. CORRIDOR - "A" DECK

Empty.
Parker and Brett descend companioway.
They join Ash, Lambert, Ripley and Dallas.

DALLAS
Any signs.

LAMBERT
Nothing.

ASH
Nothing.

PARKER
Didn't see a goddamn thing.

BRETT
Didn't see anything.

RIPLEY

We can't go into hypersleep with that thing running loose. We'd be sitting ducks in the freezers.
We have to kill it first.

LAMBERT

We can't kill it. If we do, it will spill its body acids right through the hull...

BRETT

Son-of-a-bitch.

RIPLEY

We have to catch it and eject it from the ship.

ASH

Our supplies are based on us spending a limited amount of time out of suspended animation.
Strictly limited.

RIPLEY

First we have to find it.

DALLAS

No. First we've got something else to do.

He looks at Kane's body through mess doorway.

INT. AIR LOCK

Kane's body wrapped in a makeshift shroud.

INT. BRIDGE

The crew looking at Kane's body on view screens.
Silent.
Depressed.

DALLAS

Inner hatch sealed.

Ripley nods.

DALLAS

Anybody want to say anything.

Nothing to say.

He nods to Ripley.
She presses a button.

INT. AIR LOCK

The outer hatch opens.
Yawning space outside.
Kane's body shoots out into eternity.
The hatch closes.

INT. MESS

The crew is assembled.

RIPLEY
I've checked on the supplies.
For about a week we can stay out of hypersleep.

BRETT
Then what.

LAMBERT
We run out of food and oxygen.

DALLAS
All right, that's what we've got.
A week. It's plenty of time.

PARKER
I say we put on our pressure suits and blow all the air out of the ship. That might kill it.

LAMBERT
What a swell idea.

PARKER
What's wrong with it.

ASH
We've got forty-eight hours of air in our pressure suits and it takes six months to get home.

LAMBERT
Other than that...A swell idea.

Parker won't give up on this idea.

PARKER
Maybe we could cut some kind of special lines to the tanks.

Brett and I are pretty good practical engineers...We got us back up you know.

RIPLEY
All by yourselves.

ASH
I hate to point this out but it might be better off without oxygen.It lived that way long enough.

RIPLEY
There's another problem. How do we find it.There's no visual communication on B and C decks. All the screens are out.

DALLAS
We're going to have to flush it out.

ASH
Sounds great...but how.

DALLAS
Room by room, corridor by corridor.

One of those suggestions that nobody likes.

LAMBERT
And what do we do when we find it.

RIPLEY
Trap it somehow.

BRETT
If we had a really strong piece of net, we could bag it... I could put something together. A long metal rod with a battery in it.
Only take a few hours.

LAMBERT
Why do we listen to this meathead.

Dallas turns it over.

DALLAS
He might be right...

EXT. OUTER SPACE

The Nostromo continues through the vortex.

INT. INFIRMARY

Dallas enters.

Ash working at a read-out section.

DALLAS
I want to talk.

ASH
I'm a little busy at the moment.

Pause.

DALLAS
I don't care.

Pause.

ASH
All right, go ahead.

DALLAS
Why did you let the Alien survive inside Kane.

ASH
I'm not sure you're getting through to me.

DALLAS
Mother was monitoring his body.
You were monitoring Mother. You must have had some idea of what was going on.

ASH
What are you trying to say.

A long moment.

DALLAS
You want the Alien to stay alive
...I figure you have a reason.

ASH
Name one.

DALLAS
Look, we both work for the same company. I just want to know what's going on.

ASH
I don't know what the hell you're talking about. And I don't like any of the insinuations. The Alien is a dangerous form of life...I don't want it to stay alive any more than you do.

DALLAS
You're sure.

ASH
Yeah, I'm sure. You should be too.

Dallas walks out.
Ash watches him go.
Stares in his direction a long while...

INT. NARCISSUS

Dallas seated in the shuttle craft.
Staring at the myriad lights of outer space.
Ripley climbs beside him.

RIPLEY
I thought I'd find you here.

Dallas continues to stare.

DALLAS
Are the nets finished.

Pause.

RIPLEY
We've got an hour...Look I need some relief.

DALLAS
Why did you wait until now.

Ripley leans forward.

RIPLEY
Let me tell you something. You keep staring out there long enough, they'll be peeling you off the wall.

Ripley begins taking off her boots.

DALLAS

We're the new pioneers, Ripley.
We even get to have our own special disease.

RIPLEY

I'm tired of talking.

She rises and removes her upper garments.

DALLAS

You waited too long.

RIPLEY

Give it a try anyway.

Clothing removed.

His arms move around her.

INT. BRIDGE

The crew has assembled.

Brett unfolds several yards of asbestos netting.

Hands out five thin rods.

Each of them like metal broom handles.

BRETT

I put portable generators in each of these. They're insulated down here. Just be goddamn careful not to get your hand on the end.

He touches the tip to a metal object.

A blue spark leaps.

BRETT

It won't damage the little bastard unless its skin is a lot thinner than ours...It'll just give it a little incentive.

LAMBERT

Now if we could only find it.

Ash picks up a portable unit.

ASH

I've taken care of that...tracking device. You set it to search for a moving object...It hasn't much range but when you get within a certain distance it starts beeping.

Ripley takes the tracker from Ash's hand.

RIPLEY
What's it key on.

ASH
Micro changes in air density.
Keep it pointed ahead of you.

DALLAS
We'll break into two teams.
Whoever finds it first catches it in the net and ejects it from the nearest air lock.
(pause)
For starters, let's make sure the bridge is safe.

Parker turns on his unit.
Scans it around the room.

LAMBERT
We seem to be okay...If this damn thing works.

DALLAS
Ash and myself will go with Lambert. Brett and Parker will make up the second team. Ripley, you command it.

They start doling out the equipment.

DALLAS
Channels are open on all decks.
We'll be in constant touch.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "A" LEVEL

Lambert and Dallas carry the net.
Ash walks directly behind, carrying the tracking device.
He continually scans from side to side.
Lambert stops by a stairwell.

LAMBERT
Anything down there.

INT. ANOTHER PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker and Ripley move silently along.
Ripley ahead of them with the tracker by the stairwell.

RIPLEY
Nothing.

The move on.
A small light flashes.

RIPLEY
Hold it. I've got something.

Parker and Brett grow tense.
Start looking around.

BRETT
Where's it coming from.

Ripley peers closely at the tracker.

RIPLEY
Machine's screwed up. I can't tell. Needle's spinning all over the dial.

BRETT
Goddamn, malfunction.

Ripley turns the tracker on its side.
The needles stabilize.

RIPLEY
No, just confused. It's coming from below us.

They all look down at their feet.

INT. MAINTENANCE - "C" LEVEL

Ripley, Parker and Brett come down ladder onto an endless oily corridor.
They stop at the foot of the companionway...
They move down corridor into darkness.

RIPLEY
Okay.

Looks at the tracker.
Nods down the passageway. Stops.

RIPLEY
Back this way.

They begin to walk in that direction.
Entering drab section of the ship.
Surrounded by deep shadows.

Footsteps clanging on the metal deck.

RIPLEY
I thought you fixed 12 module.

BRETT
We did.

PARKER
Circuits must have burned out.

They switch on lights.
Move around two turns.

RIPLEY
Wait.

They stop quickly, almost stumbling.

RIPLEY
It's within five meters.

Parker and Brett heft the net.
Ripley has the prod in one hand, tracker in the other.
Moves with great care.
Almost in a half-crouch, ready to leap back.
Prod extended, Ripley constantly glances at her tracker.
The device leads her up to a small hatch in the bulkhead.
Perspiration rivers down her face.
She sets aside the tracker.
Raises the prod, grasps the hatch handle.
Yanks it open.
Jams the electric prod inside.
A nerve-shattering squall.
Then a small creature comes flying out of the locker.
Eyes glaring, claws flashing.
Instinctively, they throw the net over it.
Very annoyed.
They open the net and release the captive.
Which happens to be the cat.
Hissing and spitting...it scampers away.

RIPLEY
God damn it...hold it.

PARKER
We should have killed it...Now we might pick it up on the tracker again.

RIPLEY
Go get it. We'll go on.

BRETT

Right.

Ripley and Parker move down the passageway.
Brett follows the direction taken by the cat.
Moves across passageway into equipment maintenance area.

INT. EQUIPMENT MAINTENANCE AREA - "C" LEVEL

Brett walking between rows of shadowed equipment.
Looking for the cat.
Nervous.

BRETT
Jones...Here kitty...Jones...
Goddamn it Jones.

Scratching noises.
A reassuring cat yowl.
Brett moves on.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "C" LEVEL

Ripley and Parker walk along.
Tracker signal weakens.
Finally stops.

RIPLEY
Nothing here.

PARKER
Let's go back.

INT. UNDERCARRIAGE ROOM - "C" LEVEL

Brett enters.
Still looking for Jones.
Another yowl followed by a hiss.
Two eyes shining in the dark.
Jones.
Relieved, Brett moves toward the cat.

BRETT
Here kitty...Come on Jones.

Brett reaches for Jones.
Jones hisses.
An arm reaches for Brett.
The Alien.
Now seven feet tall.
Hanging from the undercarriage strut in reverse position.
Grabs Brett and swings up into darkness.
Brett screams.
To no avail...
In the doorway Ripley and Parker.

They witness the horror.

INT. MESS

The remaining crew assemble.
Long faces.

LAMBERT
Now what.

PARKER
Blast the rotten bastard with a laser and take our chances.

RIPLEY
No. At its present size it's holding enough acid to tear a hole in this ship as big as this room.

ASH
It wouldn't do any good. It's self-regenerating. You saw that when we operated on it.

RIPLEY
The only plan that's going to work is the same one we had before. Drive it into an air lock and blow it out into space.

PARKER
Drive it...The son-of-a-bitch is huge.

LAMBERT
For once he has a point. How do we drive it.

RIPLEY
The science department should be able to help...

ASH
According to Mother, he's a primitive form of encephlepod...

LAMBERT
How come it's a he.

ASH
Just a phrase. As a matter of fact he's both, bisexual or hermaphrodite to be precise.

DALLAS

Skip its sex life. How do we kill it.

ASH

It seems to have adapted to an oxygen-rich atmosphere and it's certainly adapted well for its nutritional requirements.
The only thing we don't know about is temperature.

RIPLEY

Curious isn't it...That the Alien is an encephlepod...

ASH

What's so curious about that.

RIPLEY

It's curious because lower species can't adapt as quickly as higher ones. And this one's doing very well. A real survivor.
Might even have as good a chance as we do.

ASH

You're getting paranoid again.

RIPLEY

All right. What about the temperature. What happens if we change it.

ASH

Let's give it a try. Most animals retreat from fire.

Pause.

PARKER

I can hook up a couple of incinerating units in about fifteen minutes.

Pause.

DALLAS

Anybody got any better ideas.

Nobody does.

DALLAS
Okay. When Parker's ready, we'll work our way back down to 'C' deck.

EXT. OUTER SPACE

Nostromo at light plus four.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker and Dallas lead.
Armed with flamethrowers.
They descend from companionway.
Suddenly both tracking devices beep frantically.
Sound of rending metal up ahead.
The move forward cautiously.

DALLAS
It's in that food locker.

EXT. FOOD LOCKER NUMBER 12

More rending noises.

LAMBERT
Jesus. It must be huge.

PARKER
It's got to be using the airshafts to move around...

Dallas raises flamethrower.

DALLAS
Do these things really work.

PARKER
I made them didn't I.

RIPLEY
That's what worries me.

Dallas indicates door handle.
Parker reluctantly takes it.

DALLAS
Now.

Parker wrenches open door.
Dallas fires a long blast. Another.
Another and another...Silence.
They move inside...

INT. FOOD STORAGE LOCKER NUMBER 12 - "B" LEVEL

Charred wreckage.

Packages have been ripped to shreds.

Foodstuffs scattered over the floor.

Carefully, they poke through the smouldering garbage.

RIPLEY

We didn't get him.

DALLAS

This is where he went.

On the wall, a ventilator grill has been ripped open.

They move to the shredded ventilator.

Shine their lights inside the shaft.

DALLAS

This could work for us. The duct comes out at the starboard air lock. There's an exit on the way. But we can close that off. Then we drive it into the air lock and blast it into space.

LAMBERT

Yeah. All you have to do is crawl in the vent with it, find your way through the maze and hope it's afraid of fire.

DALLAS

Well Parker, you wanted an equal share...

PARKER

Yeah.

DALLAS

Get in the pipe.

PARKER

Why me.

DALLAS

I just wanted to see you get your full share.

PARKER

No way.

RIPLEY

I'll go.

DALLAS
Forget it. You take the air lock. Parker and Lambert cover the exit.

No doubt as to who's going inside the vent.

INT. STARBOARD AIR LOCK - VESTIBULE

Ripley stands in vestibule.
Looks through the Bulkhead door to air lock.
She throws a switch.
Watches airshaft entrance into air lock open.
The trap is ready.

INT. MAINTENANCE LEVEL

Parker and Lambert get set.

INT. FOOD STORAGE LOCKER NUMBER 12 - "B" LEVEL

Ash hands Dallas the makeshift flamethrower.
He fires a couple of short bursts.

DALLAS
It's still working.

ASH
Why do you have to go. Why didn't you sent Ripley.

DALLAS
It's my responsibility. I let Kane go into the craft. Now it's my turn.

ASH
You're the captain. It'll be harder on the rest of us, if we lose you.

DALLAS
Nothing I do that Ripley can't.

ASH
I don't agree.

DALLAS
The decision is final.

He removes the master computer key.
Hands it to Ash.

DALLAS
If I don't take it back,
Ripley will need this.

Ash nods.

Dallas turns and climbs into the ventilator opening.
Just large enough to crawl through.

INT. AIR SHAFT

Completely dark.
Dallas turns on his helmet light.
Flips switch on throat mike.

DALLAS
Do you receive me. Ripley.
Parker.Lambert.

INT. EQUIPMENT MAINTENANCE AREA

The hum of vast cooling plants.
Large air shafts run off in different directions.
Parker and Lambert stand ready by a duct.
Lambert hits the wall amp button.

LAMBERT
We're in position. I'll try and pick you up on the tracker.

Parker hefts his flamethrower.

DALLAS
(voice over)
Parker, if it tries to come out by you, make sure you drive it back in. I'll push it forward.

PARKER
Right.

INT. AIR LOCK VESTIBULE

Near the starboard air lock.
Ripley pops open the hatch.
The air lock now open and ready.
She moves to the air duct opening.

RIPLEY
Air lock open.

DALLAS
(voice over)

Ready.

RIPLEY

Ready.

INT. AIR SHAFT

Dallas begins to crawl forward.
The tunnel is narrow...
Only a foot or two wider than his shoulders.

DALLAS

I'm under way.

Turns a corner.
Several more tight turns.
Instinctively Dallas pulls back.
Raises the flamethrower.
Fires a blast around the corner into the darkness.
It roars loudly in the confined tube.
Smoke drifts back into his face.

INT. MAINTENANCE LEVEL

A large rectangular duct in one wall.

PARKER

That's where it's got to come out, if it leaves the main shaft.

He throws a switch.
A metal pane rises and seals off the opening.

LAMBERT

Let's keep it open. I'd like to know if anything's coming.

Reluctantly, Parker again throws the switch and raises the metal pane.

INT. AIR LOCK VESTIBULE

Ripley waiting.

INT. AIR SHAFT

Dallas still crawling on hands and knees.
Ahead the shaft takes an abrupt downward turn.
He moves toward the corner.
Fires another blast from the flamethrower.
Then starts crawling down, head first.

INT. EQUIPMENT MAINTENANCE AREA

Lambert sees something on the tracker.

LAMBERT
Beginning to get a reading on
you.

INT. AIR SHAFT

The shaft makes yet another turn.
Puts Dallas into an almost immobilized position.

INT. FOOD STORAGE LOCKER NUMBER 12

Ash staring at the ventilator opening.

INT. AIR SHAFT

Dallas against a wall of the shaft.
Clutching his flamethrower.
Whispers into his throat mike.

DALLAS
Ripley.

INT. AIR LOCK VESTIBULE

RIPLEY
Read you clear.

INT. AIR SHAFT

DALLAS
I don't think this shaft goes much farther... It's getting hot in here.

He readies the flamethrower.

INT. EQUIPMENT MAINTENANCE AREA

Parker readies his weapon.

INT. AIR SHAFT - DOUBLE-TIERED PASSAGEWAY

The air shaft tributary opens into a larger two-tier air tunnel.

Dallas crawls out and stands.
Moves to a catwalk floor. Looks about.
Moves forward. Reaches a repair junction.
Sits.

His feet dangle beneath the catwalk floor to the next level.

DALLAS
Lambert, what kind of reading are you getting.

INT. MAINTENANCE LEVEL

Lambert huddled over her tracker.
Puzzled.

LAMBERT
I'm not sure. There seems to be some kind of double image.

INT. AIR SHAFT DOUBLE-TIERED PASSAGEWAY

Dallas sitting.
His feet still dangling in the dark beneath the catwalk.

DALLAS
It may be interference. I'll push on ahead.

Dallas begins to rise.
From below, a gentle movement toward the hanging feet.
A hand reaches up.
Misses his leg as Dallas moves ahead.

Further on.

DALLAS
Lambert, am I coming in any clearer.

LAMBERT
(voice over)
It's clear all right, but I'm still getting two blips.
(pause)
I'm not sure which one is which.

Dallas stops.
Turns around.
Looks back down through the catwalk.
Lowers the nose of the flamethrower, his finger on the trigger.
From behind him, the hand reaches up.
The Alien is the front signal.

INT. AIR LOCK VESTIBULE

Ripley bends forward.

Hears the sounds of the struggle...
And Dallas' screams.
She cries out.

RIPLEY
Dallas...Dallas...

INT. EQUIPMENT MAINTENANCE AREA

Lambert and Parker.
Hearing it all.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Oh my God.

Then silence.

INT. MESS

Dallas' flamethrower on the table surface.

PARKER
(voice over)
We just found it laying there.
No sign of him. Only a hole torn through to the central cooling complex.

The remaining crew standing at the table.

RIPLEY
This puts me in command.

PARKER
Okay.

For the first time he's dropped his bullshit.

RIPLEY
Unless someone's got a better idea about dealing with the Alien, we'll continue with the last plan.

Silence.

RIPLEY
How are our weapons.

PARKER
They're working fine...We could use more fuel for that one.

Indicating Dallas' flamethrower.

RIPLEY
Get it.

PARKER
Right.

He leaves.
Ripley turns to Ash.

RIPLEY
Any ideas. From you or Mother.

ASH
Nothing new. Just the one you're operating under.

RIPLEY
You mean to tell me with everything we've got, we're still powerless against the Beast.

ASH
That's the way it looks.

RIPLEY
I can't believe that.

ASH
I'm sorry captain. what would you like me to do.

RIPLEY
Go back to Mother and keep asking questions until you get some better answers.

ASH
All right...I'll try.

He starts to go.

RIPLEY
Dallas didn't leave the master computer key with you.

ASH
You didn't get it.

RIPLEY

No.

ASH
Well, we probably won't need it anyway.

He leaves.

RIPLEY
I know Ash has got the key.

LAMBERT
Why should he lie.

RIPLEY
He knows I want to check up on him...Without that key we've got no access to command priority information.

LAMBERT
Swell.

Lambert shrugs.
They start to leave.

INT. MAINTENANCE AREA - "C" DECK

Parker selects two full methane cylinders.
He tests them.
Moves out.

INT. CORRIDOR TO BRIDGE

RIPLEY
Did you ever sleep with Ash?

LAMBERT
No. What about you.

RIPLEY
No.

LAMBERT
I never got the impression he was particularly interested...

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker returning with methane cylinder.
Turns a corner.
Comes to an abrupt halt.
A movement in front of him beyond the air lock.

He hesitates.
Then another shadowy movement...

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley and Lambert.
Parker's voice on voice-amp.
Muffled.
Ripley hits a toggle.

RIPLEY
Ripley.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker covers the wall communication with his hand.

PARKER
Keep it down...

Up the corridor, the movement stops.

INT. BRIDGE

RIPLEY
Can't hear you...Repeat...

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker whispering.

PARKER
The Alien...It's outside the main air lock door. Open the door slowly...When I shout... close it fast.

INT. BLISTER

Ash listens.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker still whispering.

PARKER
Open it...slowly.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley hesitates.
Starts to reply.
Throws switch.

INT. AIR LOCK - "B" DECK

Low servo whine.
Door opens.
Slowly.
Green light throbbing inside air lock.
Creature looks curiously at it.
Moves onto the threshold.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker watches...

INT. AIR LOCK

Creature move further into air lock.
Fascinated by green light.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Urgent whisper into voice-amp.

PARKER
Now...Now...

INT. BRIDGE

As Ripley moves to throw switch...

INT. AIR LOCK

Suddenly, from out of nowhere a klaxon wails.
The Creature leaps back across the threshold of the air lock.
Bewildered.
Screams as the inner hatch closes on an appendage.
Acid boiling out.
The appendage crushed.
The acid bubbles.
Metal boils in door.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "B" LEVEL

Parker watches.
Frozen.
The Alien wrenches itself free.
Comes flying outward.
Smashes Parker down.
Flees.
On the wall a green light goes on.

"Inner Hatch Closed"

INT. AIR LOCK

Metal still boiling.
The outer hatch begins to open.

INT. BRIDGE

RIPLEY
Parker...

Pushes a switch.
Pushes it again.

LAMBERT
What's happening, Parker.

In front of her a green light blinks.
"Inner Hatch Closed."

RIPLEY
Inner hatch sealed. The outer hatch is open.

LAMBERT
What about Parker.

RIPLEY
I don't know. Take over.

Ripley bolts out of the bridge.

EXT. NOSTROMO

Air lock open.

INT. PASSAGE NEAR AIR LOCK - "B" LEVEL

Parker unconscious.

INT. AIR LOCK

The inner hatch still closed.
Metal boils.
The hole growing deeper.

INT. PASSAGEWAY - "A" LEVEL

Ripley runs toward the air lock corridor.

INT. AIR LOCK

Metal boiling in door.

INT. PASSAGEWAYS - "B" DECK

Ripley slams to a momentary halt against a bulkhead.
Regains her balance.
Starts running.

INT. PASSAGE NEAR AIR LOCK - "B" LEVEL

Parker now half conscious.
Ripley arrives as the hole in door blows open.
Escaping air shrieks.
Flashing sign comes on.
Critical depressurization.
Emergency klaxon.
Simultaneously vestibule doors close either end.
Sealing in Ripley and Parker.
Door nearest to Parker half-closed on one of the methane cylinders.
Leaving large gap.
Windstorm begins as hole in air lock grows.
Ripley reaches for other cylinder.
Begins smashing the jammed cylinder out of door.
Blood froths at their noses and ears.
Cylinder finally is driven out.
The door slams closed.

INT. BRIDGE

Lambert watches.
Emergency light readings.

"Hull Breached"
"Emergency Bulkheads Closed"

LAMBERT
Ash, get the oxygen. Meet me at the air lock.

Rushes out.
Down corridor.

INT. PASSAGEWAY NEAR AIR LOCK - "B" LEVEL

Ripley staggers toward an emergency panel.
At far end of corridor.
Pinging sound.
Misty atmosphere.
Tries to activate the door.
Cannot.
Lambert appears other side of bulkhead.
Activates door from outside.
Rush of oxygen.

EXT. NOSTROMO

Plume of vapor freezes in the vacuum.

INT. PASSAGE NEAR AIR LOCK - "B" LEVEL

Repressurization sounds.

Parker regains consciousness.

Struggles to breathe.

Ripley unable to move.

Breath coming in shallow pants.

Lambert with an oxygen tank.

Ash follows.

Oxygen administered to Ripley and Parker.

Finally.

ASH

You all right.

PARKER

We didn't get it. The warning went off and it jumped back in the ship.

ASH

Who hit the warning.

RIPLEY

You tell me.

ASH

What does that mean.

RIPLEY

I guess the alarm went off by itself.

ASH

If you've got something to say say it. I'm sick of these coy accusations.

RIPLEY

Nobody's accusing you.

ASH

The hell you're not.

Sullen silence.

RIPLEY

Go patch him up.

Ash and Parker leave.
Ripley turns to Lambert.

RIPLEY
How much oxygen have we lost.
I want an exact reading.

LAMBERT
You were accusing him.

RIPLEY
If I could find the command computer key, I could prove it.

LAMBERT
You're still accusing him of stealing the key.

RIPLEY
You think I'm wrong.

LAMBERT
I don't know. Wrong or crazy.

RIPLEY
Thanks.

INT. BLISTER STAIRCASE

Ripley cautiously descends the stairs to the blister.
Carrying a flamethrower.

INT. ASH'S BLISTER

Looks around the blister.
Satisfied it's deserted.
She puts down the flamethrower.
Methodically begins to search for the key.
Faint tapping sound.
Then stops.
She looks around.
Sees nothing.
Resumes searching near blister window...
Ripley finds key...
Tapping sound.
She whips around to see:
Kane's disfigured face slapping against the plexiglass.
She stifles a scream.
Drops the key onto the curved surface of the blister.
Fishes for it...
Kane's bloated face swings in...
Beneath her.
She grabs the key and bolts up companionway.

INT. COMPUTER ANNEX

Ripley plugs the key into the board.

Data banks come to life.

She sits at a console.

Thinks for a moment.

Then punches up a code.

Nothing happens.

Punches another combination.

Nothing happens.

Frustration.

Another combination.

One screen comes to life.

Another combination.

She moves to the second keyboard.

Screen One spells out the question:

Question: WHO TURNED ON AIR LOCK 2 WARNING SYSTEM.

Response: ASH

Another code.

Question: IS ASH PROTECTING THE ALIEN.

Response: YES

New code.

Question: WHY

Response: SPECIAL ORDER 937 SCIENCE EYE'S ONLY

She starts a new code.

A hand slams down next to Ripley's arm.

It sinks elbow deep into the computer.

She whips around in her chair.

Faces Ash.

Ripley lashes out with her foot.

Kicks him in the middle.

No effect.

Ripley twists away.

Ash throws a punch at her.

Misses.

She pushes a chair at him.

Overturns the desk...

And runs through bridge into mess.

He moves after her.

Gets her.

Parker and Lambert burst into the Mess.

Lambert falls on Ash's back.

Ash turns to Lambert.

Tosses her across the room.

Returns to Ripley.

Again choking her.

Parker lifts the tracker.

Steps behind Ash.

Swings the tracker...Wallop.

Tears his head off...

Wires ascending from Ash's trunk.

Where his head used to be.

Ash's hands release Ripley.

Search above his neck for his missing head.

He walks backward.
All eyes on Ash's headless body.
He walks the room.
Still feeling for his missing head.

PARKER
A robot, a God damn Droid.

Ash turns on him.
Starts to advance.
Parker hits him again with the tracker...
Again.
Again.
No avail.
Ash begins choking Parker.
Ripley picks up one of the prod sticks.
Closes on Ash's back.
Tears away the fabric.
Lambert pulls at Ash's legs.
Ripley tears at the controls buried in the cavity once covered by his head.
Parker's eyes bulge in pain.
Ash, headless, choking, choking, choking...
Ripley finds the wires, stabs the prod home...
Ash's grip lessens.
Another stab...electrical flash...
The grip lessens...
Another stab...flash of circuits.
The headless body collapses.
Parker trying to regain his breath.

PARKER
Damn you.

Kicks the headless body.
Lambert looks at Ripley.

LAMBERT
Tell me...What the hell's going on.

Pause.

RIPLEY
Let's find out. Wire him back up.

PARKER
What kind of crap is that.

RIPLEY
Do it.

They set to work.
Begin to reassemble the wiring in Ash's head.

RIPLEY

Ash let it on board. Ash let it grow inside Kane. Ash blew the warning signal.

LAMBERT

Why.

RIPLEY

Special Order 937.

PARKER

What's that.

RIPLEY

That's what I want to know.

Ash's head is placed on the table.
His eyes flicker into consciousness.

RIPLEY

What is Special Order 937.

ASH

You know I can't tell you that.

RIPLEY

Then there's not point in talking to you. Pull the plug.

ASH

Special Order 937 in essence asked me to direct the ship to the planet, investigate a life form, possibly hostile and bring it back for observation. With discretion, of course.

RIPLEY

Why. Why not tell us.

ASH

Would you have gone.

PARKER

It wasn't in the contract.

ASH

My very point.

RIPLEY

They wanted to investigate the Alien. No matter what happened to us.

ASH
That's unfair. Actually, you weren't mentioned in the order.

LAMBERT
Those bastards.

ASH
See it from their point of view.
They didn't know what the Alien is.

RIPLEY
How do we kill it.

ASH
I don't think you can. Not in this ship, given its life support systems. But I might be able to.

RIPLEY
How.

ASH
I don't know quite yet. I'm not exactly at my best at the moment.
If you would reconnect...

RIPLEY
No way.

ASH
Don't be so hasty. You'll never kill it without my help.

RIPLEY
We've had enough of your help.

ASH
You've barely got any oxygen left.
If you don't go into hypersleep, you'll die with or without the Alien.

RIPLEY
Nice try, Ash.

ASH
I will do whatever I can to help
you. I swear it.

PARKER
Pull the plug.

LAMBERT

I agree.

ASH

You idiots. You still don't realize what you're dealing with. The Alien is a perfect organism. Superbly structured, cunning, quintessentially violent. With your limited capabilities you have no chance against it.

LAMBERT

You admire it.

ASH

How can one not admire perfection. I will kill it because I am programmed to protect human life as you know.

RIPLEY

Even if you have contempt for it.

ASH

Even then.

Bitter and angry.

RIPLEY

Sorry Ash. I don't buy it.

ASH

You egocentric morons. You'll be ripped to shreds, destroyed and...

Ripley make a movement.

Ash softens...

ASH

I can only wish you well...

Ripley pulls the plug.

PARKER

He was probably right. We do need him.

RIPLEY

He was conning us.

LAMBERT

He was programmed to protect human life.

RIPLEY

He wasn't protecting our human lives and that's all I care about.
Anyway it's done.

Ripley exits to the bridge.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley in the Computer Annex.
Lambert and Parker enter.

RIPLEY

He's right about one thing.
We've got less than twelve hours oxygen left.

PARKER

It's all over.

Gloom.

LAMBERT

I don't know about the rest of you, but I think I prefer a painless peaceful death to any of the alternatives on offer.

RIPLEY

We're not there yet.

Lambert holds up a small card of spansules.
Suicide pills.

LAMBERT

We're not. Huh.

RIPLEY

I think we should blow up the ship.

LAMBERT

I'll stick with chemicals if you don't mind.

RIPLEY

We leave in the shuttle and then blow up the ship.

INT. AIR LOCK - NARCISSUS

Ripley, Lambert and Parker loading oxygen tanks onto the Narcissus.

RIPLEY
That's all the oxygen.

PARKER
That's it.

RIPLEY
Now. Let's get the food, shut off the engines and get out...
Jones. Where's Jones.

PARKER
Who knows.

LAMBERT
Last I saw him was in the mess.

RIPLEY
Go look. We don't want to leave him.

LAMBERT
I don't want to go by myself.

PARKER
Always hated that damn cat.

RIPLEY
I'll go. You load up the food.

They move out.

INT. BRIDGE

Jones lying on Dallas' console.
Ripley comes in.
Smiles.

RIPLEY
Jones. You're in luck.

As she reaches for him, Jones jumps off the console.
Moves away.

RIPLEY
Come on, Jones.

She moves after the cat.
We hear Parker and Lambert over the communicator from the coolant locker.

LAMBERT
(voice over)
How much do you think we'll need.

Ripley still in pursuit of the cat.

CUT TO:

INT. FOOD LOCKER NUMBER 6 - "B" LEVEL

Parker and Lambert loading food.

PARKER
All you can carry.

Ripley's voice over communicator from bridge.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
God damn it, Jones. Come here.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley furious but still speaking gently.

RIPLEY
Here kitty...come here kitty...

Jones moves away.

INT. FOOD LOCKER NUMBER 6 - "B" DECK

Arms full, Parker moves out of the locker.
Lambert is still making her selection.
A faint light on the tracker.
Unnoticed.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley finally corners Jones.
Finds his box.
Tries to put him in it.
Jones resists.
Ultimately futile.

INT. FOOD LOCKER CORRIDOR - OUTSIDE

Parker attempts to pick up the flamethrower.
Can't manage it and the food.
Drops some of the packages.

PARKER
Goddamn.

In the locker Lambert gathers food.

LAMBERT
What's the matter.

PARKER
Nothing. just hurry up.

The tracker flashes faster.
Now it's noticed.
Parker picks up the flamethrower.

PARKER
Let's get out of here.

LAMBERT
Right now.

The Alien appears out of the air shaft ventilator.
Lambert turns.
Screams.
Unfolding, the Alien grabs for her.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley freezes as she hears Lambert's screams.

INT. CORRIDOR - OUTSIDE

Parker looks back into the locker.
Unable to use the flamethrower without hitting Lambert.
He hesitates for a moment, then strides into the locker.
Wielding the flamethrower like a club.

PARKER
Goddamn you.

INT. FOOR LOCKER NUMBER 6

The Alien drops Lambert.
Parker lands a blow with the flamethrower.
No effect.
The Alien strikes him once.
Killing him instantly.
He now moves to Lambert.

INT. BRIDGE

Ripley listening on the communicator.

Lambert's dying shrieks.
Then the voice-amp goes dead.
Silence.

RIPLEY
Parker.Lambert.

She waits for a response.
But her expression shows that she expects none.
A long moment.
Expectation fulfilled.
Nightmare without end.

INT. "B" LEVEL - COMPANIONWAY

Ripley descends, cautiously, holding flamethrower.
Jones left above, squalling.

INT. CORRIDOR - "B" DECK

Ripley moving warily, carrying flamethrower.
Nears entrance to food locker, looks in.
Sees carnage.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - "C" DECK

Ripley running toward engine room.
Out of breath.
Exhausted she stops, gulps for air.
Suddenly, ahead of her, the sound of human weeping.
She moves quietly ahead until the source of the sound is directly under her feet.
She is standing on a round metal plate.
Ripley starts to remove the disc.

INT. UNDERCARRIAGE MAINTENANCE ROOM NUMBER 4

The round opening illuminates a dark ladderway.
Still carrying flamethrower, Ripley starts downwards.
Pitch black.
Ripley arrives at deck level.
Shines her light.
Its arc reveals the Alien's layer.
Bones, shreds of flesh.
Pieces of clothing, shoes.
Bizarre extrusions on the wall.

Something moves in the darkness.
Ripley spins, turns her light toward the movement.

Hanging from the ceiling is a huge cocoon.
Woven from fine, white, silk-like material.
Flamethrower ready, Ripley approaches.
Sees that the cocoon is semi-transparent.

The body of Dallas inside.

Unexpectedly, his eyes open.
FOCUS ON Ripley.
His voice is a whisper.

DALLAS
Kill me.

RIPLEY
What did it do.

Dallas moves his head slightly.
Ripley turns her light.
Another cocoon dangles from the ceiling.
But of a different texture.
Smaller and darker, with a harder shell.
Almost exactly like the ovoids in the derelict ship.

DALLAS
That was Brett...

RIPLEY
I'll get you out of there...
We'll get up the autodoc.

A long moment.
It's hopeless.

RIPLEY
What can I do.

DALLAS
Kill me.

Ripley stares at him.
Raises the flamethrower.
Sprays a molten blast.
Another blast.
The entire compartment bursts into flames.
Ripley turns and scrambles back up the ladderway.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - "C" LEVEL

Ripley emerges from below.
Gasps for breath.
Regains control of herself.

EXT. OUTER SPACE

At light speed.
The Nostromo and refinery appear to hang motionless.
Star clusters rolling past in the infinite distance.

INT. ENGINE ROOM - CUBICLE

Ripley enters the power center.
Stares at the massive light-plus engines.
Approaches the main control board.
Begins closing the switches, one by one.
A long moment.
Sirens begin to honk.
Mother speaks.

MOTHER'S VOICE

(O.S.)

Attention. The cooling units for the light-plus engines are not functioning. Engines will overload in four minutes, fifty seconds...

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - "C" LEVEL

Ripley running toward the "B" deck companionway.

INT. "B" LEVEL - CORRIDOR

Ripley starts toward Narcissus.
Remembers Jones.

INT. "A" TO "B" LEVELS - COMPANIONWAY

Jones howling.
In his box.
Ripley reaches up and grabs him.

INT. "B" LEVEL - CORRIDOR LEADING TO AIR LOCK

Ripley carrying Jones, holding flamethrower.
Jones hisses.
Fur rises.
Ripley stops, and stares down corridor toward Narcissus.
The Alien can be heard thrashing about the shuttle craft.
Ripley turns and bolts toward the engine room, leaving
Jones on "B" level companionway.

INT. COMPANIONWAY TO OILY CORRIDOR - "E" LEVEL

Ripley bounds down the companionway.
Her footsteps clanging metallically throughout the ship.
A final sprint towards the engine room.

MOTHER'S VOICE

(O.S.)

Attention. Engines will overload in three minutes, twenty seconds.

INT. ENGINE ROOM - CUBICLE

The door crashes open, Ripley comes pounding in.
The chamber filled with smoke.
Engines whining dangerously.
Ripley breaks out in perspiration from the intense heat.
She runs to the controls.
Begins throwing the cooling unit switches back into place.
The sirens continue sounding.

MOTHER'S VOICE

(O.S.)

Attention. Engines will overload in three minutes.

Ripley pushes a button and speaks into it.

RIPLEY

Mother, I've turned all the cooling units back on.

MOTHER'S VOICE

(O.S.)

Too late for remedial action.
The core has begun to melt.
Engines will overload in two minutes, thirty-five seconds.

A moment.

The Ripley turns and runs from the engine room.

INT. OILY CORRIDOR - COMPANIONWAY

Ripley runs back down the corridor.
Up the companionway, exhausted, stumbling...

MOTHER'S VOICE

(O.S.)

Attention. Engines will overload in two minutes.

INT. "B" LEVEL - COMPANIONWAY

She reaches companionway.
Picks up Jones.

INT. "B" LEVEL - CORRIDOR LEADING TO NARCISSUS

Ripley staggers towards the air lock.
The Narcissus berthed beyond.
She drags Jones and raises the flamethrower.
Turns to see if the Creature is behind her.
Then advances down the passageway.

Goaded on by the computer.

MOTHER'S VOICE
(o.s.)
Attention. Engines will explode in ninety seconds.

She makes it to the vestibule.
Looks into the shuttle.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley scans the narrow deck...empty.

INT. VESTIBULE

She turns and dashes back.
Grabs the cat box.
Runs back toward the shuttle.

MOTHER'S VOICE
(o.s.)
Attention. The engines will explode in sixty seconds.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley enters on the run.
Hurls the cat box toward the front.
She dives into the control chair.
Hits the "launch" button.

EXT. NOSTROMO - OUTER SPACE

The retainer clips drop away.
A blast of ram jets.
The shuttle is launched from the mother ship.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley frantically straps herself in.
G-forces from the shuttles acceleration pulling against her.

EXT. SPACE

The Narcissus continues to power away from the mother ship.
The larger bulk of the Nostromo quietly receding.
All is strangely serene.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley finishes strapping herself in.
Reaches and grabs the cat box.

The cat yowling within.
Ripley hugs the box to her chest.
Hunches her head down over the container.

EXT. SPACE

The Nostromo drifts farther away from the shuttle-craft.
Finally becomes a small point of light.
Then it blows up.
Transforms into expanding orange fireball.
Pieces of metal flying in all directions.
And then the refinery explodes.
200,000,000 tons of fuel blasting silently into the cosmos.

INT. NARCISSUS

The shockwave hits the shuttle craft.
Jolting and rattling everything within.
Then all is quiet.
Ripley unhooks herself from her straps.
Rises, and goes to the back of the escape craft.
Stares out through the porthole.
Face bathed in orange light.

EXT. SPACE

Piece of debris float past.
The boiling fireball fades into nothingness.
The Nostromo has ceased to exist.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley watching the final destiny of her ship and crew mates.
A very long moment.
Then, behind her, the lethal hand emerges from deep shadow.
The Alien has been in the shuttle-craft all along.
The cat yowls.

Ripley whirls.
Finding herself facing the Creature.

Ripley's first thought is for the flamethrower.
It lies on the deck next to the Alien.
Next she glances around for a place to hide.
Her eye falls on a small locker containing a pressure suit.
The door standing open.
She begins to edge toward the compartment.
The Creature stands.
Comes for her.
Ripley dives for the open door.
Hurls herself inside.
Slams it shut.

INT. LOCKER

A clear glass panel in the door.
The Alien puts its head up to the window.
Peers in at Ripley.
Their faces only two inches apart.
The Alien looking at Ripley almost in curiosity.
The moaning of the cat distracts it.

INT. NARCISSUS

The Alien moves to the pressurized cat box.
Bends down and peers inside.
The cat yowls louder as his container is lifted.

INT. LOCKER

Ripley knocks on the glass.
Trying to distract the Creature from the cat.
The Alien's face is instantly back at the window.
Getting no more interference from her, the Creature returns to the cat box.
Ripley looks around.
Sees the pressure suit.
Quickly begins to pull it on.

INT. NARCISSUS

The Alien picks up the cat box.
Shakes it.
The cat moans.

INT. LOCKER

Ripley is halfway into a pressure suit.

INT. NARCISSUS

The Creature throws the cat box down.
Very hard.
Picks it up again.
Hammers it against the wall.
Then jams it into a crevice.
Begins to pound the container into the opening.
The cat now beyond all hysteria.

INT. LOCKER

Ripley pulls on the helmet, latches it into place.
Turns the oxygen valve.
With a hiss, the suit fills itself.
A rack on the wall contains a long metal rod.
Ripley peels off the rubber tip.
Revealing a sharp metal point.

INT. SPACE SUIT LOCKER

Ripley inhales.
Kicks the door open.

INT. NARCISSUS

The Creature rises.
Faces the locker.
Catches the steel shaft through its midriff.
The Alien clutches at the spear.
Yellow acid begins to flow from the wound.
Before the fluid can touch the floor...
Ripley reaches back and pulls the switch.
Blows the rear hatch.
The atmosphere in the shuttle immediately sucked into space.
The bleeding creature along with it.
Ripley grabs a strut to keep from being pulled out.
The Alien shoots past her.
Grab's Ripley's ankle with an appendage.

EXT. NARCISSUS

Ripley now hanging halfway out of the shuttle-craft.
The Alien clinging to her leg.
She kicks at it with her free foot.
The Creature holds fast.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley looks for any salvation.
Grabs the hatch level.
Yanks it.
The hatch slams shut, closing Ripley safely inside.

EXT. NARCISSUS

The Alien still outside the shuttle-craft.
Within the vacuum of space.
The top of its appendage mashed into the closed hatch.

INT. NARCISSUS

Acid starts to foam along the base of the hatch.
Eats away at the metal.
Ripley stumbles forward to the controls.
Pushes the ram jet lever.

EXT. NARCISSUS - OUTER SPACE

The Creature struggling.
Jet exhaust located at the rear of the craft.
The engines belch flame for a few seconds.
Then shut off.

Incinerating, the Alien tumbles slowly away into space.

INT. NARCISSUS

Ripley hurries to the rear hatch.
Peers through the glass.

EXT. OUTER SPACE

The burned mass of the Alien drifts slowly away.
Writhing, smoking.
Tumbling into the distance.
Pieces dropping off.
The shape bloats, then bursts.
Spray of particles in all directions.
Then smoldering fragments dwindle into infinity.

INT. NARCISSUS - LATER

Now repressurized.
Ripley is seated in the control chair.
Calm and composed, almost cheerful.
Cat purring in her lap.
She dictates into a recorder.

RIPLEY
I should reach the frontier in another five weeks. With a little luck the network will pick me up...This is Ripley, W564502460H, executive officer, last survivor of the commercial starship Nostromo signing off.
(pause)
Come on cat.

She switches off the recorder.
Stares into space.

EXT. OUTER SPACE

The shuttle-craft Narcissus sails into the distance.

FADE OUT
THE END

Screenplays for You - free movie scripts and screenplays

Screenplays and movie scripts organized alphabetically:

#A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z PDF ALL

Alien 3 (1992)

by William Gibson.

Revised first draft screenplay, from a story by David Giler and Walter Hill.

More info about this movie on IMDb.com

FADE IN:

DEEP SPACE - THE FUTURE

The silent field of stars -- eclipsed by the dark bulk of an approaching ship. CLOSER.

ANGLE ON THE HULL

A towering cliff of metal, Sulaco.

INT. SULACO -- HYPERSLEEP VAULT

TRACKING down the line of empty, open capsules. Frozen twilight. The final four capsules are sealed, lids in place.

ANGLE -- INSIDE CAPSULE

NEWT, then RIPLEY. HICKS next, his head and chest bandaged. Then BISHOP in his caul of plastic. But the lid of Bishop's capsule is misted with hothouse condensation.

CLOSER

A tear of fluid streaks the condensation.

An alarm SOUNDS.

A monitor begins to scroll data.

TIGHT ON MONITOR

TROOP TRANSPORT SULACO
CMC 846A/BETA MISSION/LV-426/RETURN
STATUS RED
TREATY VIOLATION
REF: #99AG558L5
CAUSE: NAVIGATIONAL ERROR

Bland feminine voice of the ship's computer, as the alarm continues to SOUND.

COMPUTER

Attention. Due to failure of navigational circuitry, Sulaco has entered a sector claimed by the Union of Progressive Peoples. Auxiliary systems are now on line. Course corrected. Hardwired protocols prevent, repeat, prevent arming of nuclear warheads in the absence of Diplomatic Override, Decryption Standard Charlie Nine. On present course, Sulaco will exit the U.P.P. sector at nineteen hundred hours fifty three point eight minutes.

EXT. SULACO

The ship slides past beneath us. A U.P.P. interceptor descends INTO FRAME, matching course and speed with Sulaco. The interceptor settles on Sulaco like a wasp.

INT. INTERCEPTOR

Three commandos climb into spacesuits. The Leader opens a hatch in the deck, revealing one of Sulaco's airlocks. FIRST COMMANDO, a young Vietnamese woman, scrambles down and attaches magnetic units to the airlock. SECOND COMMANDO studies a monitor, tapping out a sequence on a keyboard. First Commando gestures from hatch: no good. Second Commando tries again. A grating SOUND as Sulaco's airlock begins to open.

INT. SULACO -- CARGO LOCK

Darkness. Armed commandos climb through opening and descend a ladder. Reaching the deck, they fan out, weapons ready. Their leader examines the damaged dropship. First Commando gestures urgently. She's found something.

Bishop's legs, broken, grotesquely twisted, still in fatigues, the white android blood clotted into powder. First and Second Commandos exchange looks through their faceplates.

COMPUTER

Attention. Integrity breach, Cargo Lock 3. Security alert. Integrity breach, B Deck...

INT. HYPERSLEEP VAULT -- LEADER'S POV

The chilly aisle of capsules.

Commandos move down the line, guns poised. They peer in at Newt, Ripley, and Hicks, but the lid of Bishop's capsule is pearl-white. The Leader tries the controls at the foot of the capsule, where green and red indicators glow. Nothing happens. He opens a panel, finds an emergency lever, tries it. The green indicators wink off. The lid rises. A dense pale mist flows out, spilling over the edges of the capsule, revealing the ovoid of a gray Alien egg. Rooted in the center of Bishop's synthetic entrails, the egg instantly ejaculates a Face-hugger, which strikes the leader's faceplate in a spray of acid. He screams, blinded by the acid, grappling with the thing as it begins to force its way into his helmet, its tail lashing furiously. Clawing at it, he plunges blindly back down the aisle, stumbling, smashing into the empty capsules. He vanishes through the entranceway, his screams giving way to frenzied gagging SOUNDS.

The First Commando scrambles after him.

INT. CARGO LOCK

The Leader writhes on the deck beside the main cargo lock. First Commando rushes in, crouches beside him, takes careful two-handed aim with her sidearm -- she FIRES, attempting to kill the face-hugger without hitting the Leader. The face-hugger EXPLODES in a gout of acid; ragged holes burn through the side of his helmet. First Commando frantically works the lock controls. As the inner lock opens, she shoves the leader over the edge with her foot.

EXT. SULACO

Helmetless, headless, trailing a cloud of blood and acid, the Leader tumbles through space.

INT. CARGO LOCK

Eyes of the First Commando through her faceplate. Beat. Something moves, behind her. She spins, bringing up her gun. Backlit in the entrance to the vault, a black, multi-armed figure. The beam from her lamp finds it -- the Second Commando, with Bishop in his arms.

DISSOLVE TO:

IN DEEP SPACE -- VARIOUS ANGLES

A station the size of a small moon, and growing; unfinished sections of hull are open to vacuum. A vast, irregular structure, the result of the shifting goals of successive administrations.

MOVE IN on hundreds of windows -- most of them dark. A light comes on in one of the windows.

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- TULLY'S SLEEPING CUBICLE

A phone is RINGING. The cubicle, terminally sloppy, resembles the nest of a high-tech hamster, not much larger than a berth of a train. The walls are plastered with a wistful collage of posters, ads, photos torn from magazines: beaches, desert, the Grand Canyon, redwoods, blue sky -- a hedge against claustrophobia and the emptiness of space.

TULLY, sitting up in bed, knuckling sleep from his eyes, wincing at the light; he slaps the phone console and the glum face of OPERATIONS OFFICER JACKSON (female) appears. She wears a nylon baseball cap with a computer light-pen attached to the bill.

JACKSON
'Morning, Tully.

TULLY
Morning? Jesus, Jackson, it's the middle of my downtime...

CLOSE ON THE CONSOLE SCREEN

ANGLE

The room behind Jackson is Achorpoint's nerve-center, the Ops Room.

JACKSON

None of us up here in the Ops Room have seen downtime for a while, Tully. A Marine transport came in on automatic sixteen hours ago.

She bobs her head as she speaks, using the pen on her cap to move a cursor on a screen in front of her.

JACKSON

(continuing)

The Sulaco. Departed gateway four years ago with a compliment of fifteen. A dozen marines, an android, a company representative, and the former warrant officer of a merchant vessel...

TULLY

So?

JACKSON

So, the bio-readout gives us the warrant officer, one -- count him -- marine, and a nine-year-old girl. Makes you wonder what happened out there, doesn't it?

TULLY

So ask 'em. Wake 'em up and ask 'em. Them, not me.

JACKSON

But that's the good news, Tully. Three hours before Sulaco turned up, we docked a priority shuttle out of Gateway. Two passengers. Milisci, Tully. Weapons Division.

TULLY

That the bad news?

JACKSON

They want the ship pulled in, with full biohazard precautions, by oh-eight-hundred hours. BioLab techs are priority for the deck squad. That's you Tully.

The phone screen goes blank.

TULLY

(heartfelt)

Shit.

He begins to fumble through his sleeping bag, looking for his clothes -- disturbing SPENCE, a young technician, who sits up groggily, hugging the bag to her breasts.

SPENCE
What? What is it?

TULLY
It's called the military-industrial complex;
it's called my ass out of bed; it's called jerking me around... Any way you wanna call it, it's the same bullshit...

INT. CORRIDOR

Tully, groggy and irritated, emerges from his cubicle, wearing a battered leather flight jacket, its sleeves plastered with embroidered logo-patches for various products. His photo, name, job description, and number are slotted on the door in a transparent envelope -- TULLY, CHARLES A.
TECH-5,
TISSUE CULTURE LAB.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- DRY DOCK

A plain of gray steel, the size of several carrier decks, walls lost in dark and distance. Service vehicles lumber past in the b.g. Massive floods on towers of raw scaffolding backlight twenty waiting figures, the Deck Squad.
Their spacesuits are white, clinical; over these they wear disposable
Biohazard Envelopes of filmy translucent plastic. Some are Colonial Marines,
armed with pulse-rifles or flame-throwers. Others are scientists and technicians, carrying recording and sampling gear. Their voice, over helmet-radio are furred with STATIC. Something CLANGS and BOOMS overhead, metal thunder.

OFFICER (V.O.)
Deck Squad brace for pressure drop. She's in the cradle. She's coming in.

A sudden WIND rushes across the deck, then dies. RUMBLE overhead as a monstrous hanger door rolls slowly open, revealing the naked stars.

The dark
hull of Sulaco blots out the stars as it descends.

OFFICER (V.O.)
(continuing)
Entry team to secondary cargo lock.

A cherry-picker vehicle, with extended boom, WHINES up to Sulaco.

The lock SIGHS open on darkness.

BUZZ of static, indistinct RADIO exchanges, as a half-dozen lights play over the drop-ship, the walls of the lock. Tully enters, stares around, eyes wide through his faceplate. Beside his is a MARINE with a pulse-rifle -- obviously psyched for combat.

TULLY
Lights, how come they got no lights?

MARINE
Hey, man...

He shines his light on a blackened scar on the bulkhead.

MARINE
(continuing)
Lookit that. Been some action in here...

TULLY Action?

MARINE
Man, what the fuck you supposed to be doing here?

TULLY
Forging a new home for mankind in the depths of space.

The Marine isn't amused. Tully raises an instrument; it makes a SUCKING noise.

TULLY
(continuing)
Collecting atmosphere samples.

MARINE
So just do it, right.

He move away.

TULLY
Sure.

But he doesn't want to be alone; hustles after the Marine.

OFFICER (V.O.)
Technician Tully to the hypersleep vault, atmosphere sample...

MARINE
Sounds like you.

TULLY
Yeah.

MARINE
Let's not keep the man waiting.

INT. ENTERANCE TO HYPERSLEEP VAULT

The Marine OFFICER holds up a tracker -- one of the small motion-sensors familiar from the previous film. Beside him are TWO MORE MARINES. The Officer raises the tracker and scans the face of the door.

EXTREME CLOSEUP

of tracker screen: zero.

ANGLE

OFFICER
One sample, here.

SOUND of Tully's device sucking air.

OFFICER
(continuing)
Get another on the way in. Have they patched line in yet?

SECOND MARINE
Yessir. Lights on in there.

The Officer presses a button.

The door slides open. Bright, white. The aisle. Empty. The row of capsules. Tully's Marine is first through the door, gun ready, slow, careful.

Tully steps in after him, raises his instrument, takes a sample.

INT. HYPERSLEEP VAULT

The other two Marines move past Tully. Soft SCUFF of their boots on the deck.
Tully doesn't know quite what to do. Lowers his sampler, hesitates. The first Marine reaches Newt's capsule. He lowers his rifle.

MARINE
(something startled, almost gentle in his voice)
They're here...

Eight inches of razor-sharp serrated tail plunges out through the back of his suit as he's lifted off his feet by something we can't see. Ugly RIPPING noise as the ALIEN withdraws its stinger -- blood tidily contained by the translucent membrane of the biohazard envelope.

The stinger of a second Alien whips around the neck of one of the other two Marines; the Alien is clinging to the ceiling. He screams. Tully's Marine sags against the foot of Ripley's capsule, his arm across the controls -- the green indicator lights go out -- as the first Alien lunges up INTO VIEW.

CLOSE

On the jaws.

ANGLE ON RIPLEY

Her eyes snap open.

RIPLEY'S POV

As the beast mounts her coffin, terminal nightmare.

ANGLE

RIPLEY
No-ooooooooooooooooooooo!

Her hands claw frantically at the smooth curve of the plastic canopy.

The remaining Marine, crazy with adrenaline and terror, unleashes his flame thrower. The first Alien and Ripley's capsule vanish in a napalm fireball. The Marine spins, screaming incoherently, and liquid fire hoses the second Alien, which drops its victim and falls burning into the deck.

The vault is an inferno. Ripley's capsule is sagging, melting.

DISSOLVE TO:

A scorched hypersleep capsule is wheeled in under brilliant lamps. The waiting crisis team plug bio-monitor leads and a HISSING air-supply line into sockets on the capsule. A technician with a small hand-held power saw begins to cut away the heat-crazed canopy. Hands in surgical gloves lift the canopy away.

Ripley lies curled in a tight fetal knot.

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- MEDLAB QUARANTINE

A small white room, a white bed surrounded by medical gear. Hicks, in his underwear, is hunched on the edge of the bed, impatiently smoking a cigarette. The dressing on his head and shoulders have been changed. Spence enters. She wears a biohazard envelope over coveralls, bubble-goggles, a transparent filter-mask.

SPENCE
(lightly)
You know you can't smoke in here?

HICKS
Yes, ma'am.

He takes a puff.

SPENCE
I'm Spence. I'm not a medic, I'm from the tissue culture lab. I have to get a sample.

She opens a small white case and takes out a gleaming cylinder.

SPENCE
(continuing)
Uh, just stick your thumb in here.

Hicks gives her a hard look, inserts his thumb; she touches a stud
-- SNIK! --
he winces, look ruefully at his thumb.

SPENCE
(continuing)
Sorry.
(putting the tissue-sampler away)
You're the last one...

HICKS
(grabs her wrist)
The others. Ripley, Newt -- they came through okay?

SPENCE
Who's Newt?

HICKS
The kid.

SPENCE
Rebecca. Rebecca's fine.

HICKS
Ripley?

SPENCE
(hesitates)
Ripley's fine, Hicks.

HICKS
Bishop. Where's Bishop?

SPENCE
(puzzled)
Bishop?

HICKS
The android.

SPENCE (carefully, worried that she's gotten in over her head)
There were three of you. Three that I know of, anyway. Maybe you should try to sleep now.
You want the nurse? They can give you something...

HICKS (leaning forward, still gripping Spence's wrists)
Why haven't I been debriefed? Where's the brass?

SPENCE
All I know is, we've all been sleeping short hours since your ship came in, soldier.

A CRASH from the corridor, a pained BELLOW, and Newt scuttles in, wearing a hospital gown. She backs into a corner as a large ORDERLY rushes in, clutching his right hand. Like Spence, he wears biohazard gear.

ORDERLY
Goddamn it! She bit me!

He starts for Newt. Hicks comes off the bed like he's mounted on springs, hand cocked for a trained blow. The Orderly backs off.

NEWT
(near hysteria)
Where's Ripley? Where is she?

HICKS (straightens out of hand-to-hand crouch without losing any of the threat)
She's asking you a question.

ORDERLY
You looking to get yourself sedated, Corporal?

NEWT
Where is she?

HICKS
Now I'm asking you the question...

Spence yanks her mask down in a reflexive, very human gesture. Move slowly toward Newt, extending her hand.

SPENCE
Rebecca... Newt. Honey. It's okay. Ripley's going to be okay. C'mon now, I'll take you, you can see her...

ORDERLY
Spence, there's no way --

He moves to stop them, but Hicks takes a very deliberate step forward.

INT. MEDLAB -- ANOTHER ROOM

Ripley lies in a coma, monitored by assorted white consoles. Her forehead is taped with half a dozen small electrodes. Newt, expressionless, walks slowly to the bedside as Hicks and Spence look on.

SPENCE
She's sleeping.
(she and Hicks exchange glances)
Sometimes people need to sleep... To get over things...

Newt looks up at a monitor that display's Ripley's EEG. Watches the jitter of peaks and valleys.

NEWT
Is Ripley dreaming?

SPENCE
I don't know honey.

NEWT
It's better not to.

EXT. RODINA, THE U.P.P. STATION -- VARIOUS ANGLES

Smaller than Anchorpoint.

INT. RODINA - CYBERNETICS LAB

CLOSE on Bishop. He stares straight ahead, the corner of his mouth twitching mechanically. PULL BACK. Bishop's torso is mounted in the center of a large square platform; tubes are wires snake from his ruined lower ribcage. The walls of the labs are lined with monitor screens and printers.

Information is being reamed out of the android at high speed, printouts of measurements, graphs, formulas. COLONEL-DOCTOR SUSLOV is beside the Vietnamese Commando, who wears a sleeveless fatigue-blouse revealing regimental tattoos: a yin-yang, hashmarks, an ID marker like a supermarket bar-code. They watch as a graphics program generates a detailed anatomical drawing of a face-hugger on a large monitor. She says something short and emphatic in Vietnamese, repeats it: yes.

SUSLOV
And this?

He taps a keypad and the face-hugger vanishes. The screen begins to draft an Alien in side and frontal projections.

FIRST COMMANDO (eyes fixed on the screen in horror and fascination)
No...

On the slab, the robotic tic still works the corner of Bishop's mouth.

INT. SULACO -- CARGO LOCK

Two TECHNICIANS in biohazard gear squat on either side of Bishop's legs. An electronic microscope has been set up on a low tripod. A small monitor displays magnified skin and a few dark globules. One Technician extracts an ultra-fine probe from its sterile package and leans forward.

TECH WITH PROBE
You getting tape of this, Miller?

SECOND TECH
You bet your ass. Orders.

TECH WITH PROBE
That's good because I'd swear I just saw a piece of this shit move...

On the monitor, the tip of the probe trembles, brushes one of the globules. The Second Tech takes it, inserts it in a plastic tube, seals the tube in a small metal canisters, and writes #17 on the side in red grease pen.

SECOND TECH
Since when do androids get diseases?

TECH WITH PROBE
I dunno. Sure looks like something got to this poor bastard...

INT. ROSETTI'S OFFICE CUBICLE

COLONEL ROSETTI, Colonial Marines, is Anchorpoint's head of military operations. His office is furnished in the best futuro-Pentagon style:
imitation rosewood, division insignia plaques, a desktop model of the drop ships from "Aliens."

Rosetti glances up from his monitor as his SECRETARY enters, a young woman in semi-dress Marine uniform.

SECRETARY
(hands him a stiff red plastic envelope)
Welles and Fox, Colonel. Military Sciences, Weapons Division.

Rosetti eyes the envelope with evident distaste, scrawls his signature in the required box before opening it, removes documents, and the empty envelope back.

ROSETTI
Show them in.

Secretary exits.

ROSETTI'S POV -- CLOSEUP

on two plastic microfiche cards, each with front and side views of Fox and Welles, retinal I.D. images, scaled-down fingerprints, etc. Stamped "MILISCI, WEAPONS DIV."

FOX (O.S.)
Kevin Fox, Colonel.

ROSETTI'S POV -- FOX

is tanned, athletic, hyperconfident, his smile a heart-less display of state-of-the-art enamel-bonding techniques. WELLES is just behind him.

WELLES
Susan Welles.

Same spa-tuned look, same expensive casualwear.

ROSETTI
(flatly, with no other effort at greeting)

Welcome to Anchorpoint.

Fox and Welles seat themselves without waiting to be asked.

FOX
We're impressed, Colonel. Susan and I are definitely impressed.

WELLES
The videos don't really give you an idea of the scale, do they?

She might as well be talking about a tour of Notre Dame.

FOX
But we're particularly impressed with your handling of the situation, the situation so far.
We're impressed with your cooperation...

ROSETTI
(flicking the cards down on his desktop with suppressed hostility)
We call it "following orders."

WELLES
Yes. It would simplify things if everyone did, wouldn't it? Particularly the civilian component of that Deck Squad. I think we may have a potential problem there...

FOX
We've been going over psyche profiles, Colonel.
Anchorpoint seems to be the kinds of project that attracts... idealists.

ROSETTI
(with a thin grin)
Liberals.

WELLES
Let's just say we've noticed a certain antipathy to Military Sciences, Colonel. A certain lack of sympathy with the goals of the Weapons Division...

ROSETTI
Anchorpoint is under Colonial Administration authority. This isn't a military operation. If it were, we'd be in violation of the Strategic Arms Reductions treaty.

FOX

Looks great on paper, Colonel, but we want the civilians who boarded Sulaco sewn up. Tight.

WELLES

Forfeit of shares, for starts. Anyone talks, they lose their shares. We've found it reasonably effective, in most cases...

FOX

(taking a sheaf of printout from his attach_)

But that's a simple matter. This isn't. Sulaco's data base indicates a boarding operation en route, Colonel.

ROSETTI

A boarding operation? Why wasn't I informed?

WELLES

We're informing you. You seem to have lost an android, Colonel. The Union of Progressive Peoples have Bishop...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- ENTRANCE TO ANTI-BUGGING BUBBLE

A MARINE ushers Hicks into a large bare chamber. Hicks wears his dress uniform. The room is dominated by the bubble, a mirrored sphere.

MARINE

This way, Corporal.

The Marine leads Hicks up a gangway. Hicks enters the bubble. The Marine closes the door behind him.

INT. THE BUBBLE

Three members (Rosetti, TRENT, SHUMAN) of Anchorpoint's directorate are seated at a round table; with them are Fox and Welles. Hicks comes to attention and salutes.

ROSETTI

At ease, Hicks. Be seated. My name is Rosetti. Station's military attach_. From my right: Trent, exobiology... Shuman, Diplomatic Corps... From your right...

FOX

I'm Kevin Fox, Hicks. This is Susan Welles.
We're with the Company. We'd like to congratulate you on a successful mission.

HICKS

Successful? I lost my squad in that hole...

WELLES

But you returned, Corporal. And you've rescued the colony's sole survivor...

ROSETTI

(picks up a sheaf of printout)
We've all read the transcript of you debriefing, Hicks...

HICKS

Where's Bishop? Sir.

ROSETTI

(blinks)
If you don't mind, Hicks, we'll table that until --

TRENT

I've read the transcript. Are you certain,
Hicks, that you have nothing more to tell us about the alien's life cycle? Detail, Hicks.
Detail is crucial...

ROSETTI

Trent, the subject is classified. Corporal Hicks' security rating need to be upgraded before we can --

HICKS

(ignoring Rosetti, he addresses Trent)
I've already told you everything I know.

ROSETTI

Hick --

FOX

Let the Corporal have his say, Colonel. After all, he's seen these creatures in action.

ROSETTI

You ordered the subject classified Maximum Security, Fox.

TRENT

I seriously doubt the Corporal Hicks knows anything more than he's already told us. Which is a great pity. But the android, Bishop, was designed for scientific observation. A Hyperdyne model A/5, a walking data bank...

WELLES

Corporal Hick asked the right questions to begin with.

ROSETTI

(stiffly)

To answer your question, Hicks: we aren't certain.

WELLES

(heavy sarcasm)

But we can guess, can't we Colonel?

HICKS

(to Welles)

Where?

FOX

Rodina station.

HICKS

The U.P.P.? What's the U.P.P. got to go with this?

ROSETTI

Sulaco's navigation system failed. You were in disputed territory for something over eighty-five minutes, Hicks. The U.P.P. would ordinarily respond to that as a violation of their space. So far there's been no protest. Nothing.

(he hesitates)

Sulaco's computer indicates a covert boarding operation...

FOX

"Indicates"...

SHUMAN

To put it in diplomatic terms, Hicks, they've got our ass in a sling. If they want to regard the Sulaco incident as a hostile act -- and let me assure you that they will, eventually -- they can compromise our position in the current round of arms reduction talks. We're talking serious ramifications here. Then we have the communications lag to and from Earth. A week either way. So we're looking at a fourteen day wait for policy clarification. We may have a major crisis on our hands.

WELLES

We arrived with a policy brief, Shuman, and you've seen it. We're here to implement that brief.

ROSETTI

And your orders predate knowledge of U.P.P. involvement.

FOX

We're here to do our job, Colonel.

SHUMAN

In this case, "doing your job" might involve the distinct possibility of precipitating nuclear war --

ROSETTI

(quick to break in; the subject's too sensitive for enlisted ears)

Any further questions for the Corporal? No?
In that case, Hicks...

HICKS

Sir.

Hicks stands, salutes.

INT. ACHORPOINT -- R & R ZONE, "THE MALL"

Tully slopes along looking haggard and spaced. He wears his trademark jacket. The Mall is a cross between a Hyatt atrium and an airport shopping concourse: shops, vegetation, fast food outlets, a bar. He arrives at what are apparently elevator doors. The doors open on a miniature subway car. Tully steps in and the doors close.

INT. TISSUE CULTURE LAB

Spence is working with cultures. Her arms are up to the elbows in a pair of white gloves mounted in round openings on the side of a transparent plastic tank. She looks up as Tully enters.

TULLY

Hey.

SPENCE

You look like homemade shit.

(she withdraws her hands, the gloves pop out)

What happened down there, Tully? There's some kind of security blackout on...

TULLY

Yeah. And I'm part of it... I can't tell you anything. Had to sign a whole new set of papers.
Talk to anybody and I lose my shares. All my shares, right?

SPENCE

You joking, Tully?

TULLY

Wish I were...

(changes the subject)

What's the old man got for me to dick around with this shift?

She crosses to a lab bench and takes something from a white wire basket.

SPENCE

Here. All yours. Orders are, you use the manipulators for this.

She hands him something wrapped in a sheet of white printout held with a rubber band. He removes the band, unrolls the paper. The canister.
Number
17.

SPENCE

(continuing)

What the hell did happen on the ship, Tully?
How come all the biopsy work on those three?
and his very quiet sudden backlog of autopsy material? How come it's all triple-classified?
What's going on? We had these two spooks from Gateway in here today acted like they just bought the place...

TULLY

(with a nervous glance around the lab)

Okay, okay... But later, okay? Not here...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. TISSUE CULTURE LAB

Tully at the controls of a pair of high-tech servo-manipulators visible through the tick glass of an ultra-heavy duty rectangular tank. The controls are gloves. A cable leads from the wrist of each glove to the face of the tanks. Tully move his hands, testing. The skeletal steels waldos inside the tank mimic each move. He uses them to open the canister. An electronic microscope is built into the tank, its monitor just above the window. He positions the probe's tip under the microscope.

ANGLE OVER TOP OF MONITOR

for his reaction.

TULLY
Spence... What is this? Where did it come from?

Spence strolls up behind him with a cup of coffee, a pen tucked behind her ear.

SPENCE
C'mon, Charlie, don't you read the spec sheets anymore? It's off the shop. Off your transport. It's... God.

SPENCE'S POV -- CLOSE ON THE MONITOR

The tip of the probe is encased in a sheath of glittering back filigree.

ANGLE

SPENCE
Up the rez...

Tully taps a lapboard; magnifications increases by twenty powers.

EXTREME CLOSEUP -- MONITOR

As the screen fills with an image that might be a bizarre landscape, its lines and textures recalling the interior of the derelict ship in "ALIEN."

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. ECO-MODULE

An experimental pocket Eden: a half-acre of artfully ragged concrete Disneyland into lush rainforest, sun-dappled miniature meadows, patches of African cactus. Newt crouches in long grass, her hand extended toward a small animal. A lemur. Hicks stands nearby.

NEWT

Have you been there, Hicks? Africa?

HICKS

Morocco. Four weeks of Basic. But was mountains. Not like this.

The lemur scoots away, spooked by his voice; Newt watches as it scurries up a tree.

NEWT

I'd like to go there...

HICKS

No problem. You're going to Gateway station on Sulaco, right? Then you catch a shuttle down and you're in Oregon. Just a jump over a puddle, to Africa, once you're there.

Spence walks out of the miniature jungle, carrying a white wire tray of samples in plastic lab bottles.

NEWT

I don't remember them...

SPENCE

Your grandparents?

Newt nods.

SPENCE

(continuing)

Well, guess they remember you. Sure.

NEWT

But what if Ripley wakes up and I'm not here? Can't I wait?

HICKS

Hey. She'll know where you're going, right? Anyway, Sulaco's the only ship back to Gateway for two months. But look, you want to make double sure, then you leave her a map, exactly where you're going...

Spence grins at Hicks.

INT. NEWT'S DORM CUBICLE

Newt at a fold-down desk, at work on an elaborate multicolor feltpen starmap.

A dotted line zigzags from Anchorpoint to Portland, Oregon. She carefully prints her new address:

NEWT JORDEN
c/o
MR. & MRS. RICHARD JORDEN
34877 GREENLEAF AVE. #582
NEW PORTLAND, OREGON AB994J2

Ripley wan and comatose. Hicks waits awkwardly in the doorway, dangling Newt's knapsack, as she enters and tapes the finished starmap to the wall; the first thing Ripley would see, waking. Newt beside the bed, look down at her friend.

NEWT
Ripley? Ripley, it's Newt. I... I gotta go now. I'm going to stay with my grandparents, in Oregon. Hicks says that's a good place... There's a map for you, Ripley, how to get there. You can come there and stay with me, okay? You have to, okay?

Tears on her cheeks as Hicks puts his hand on her shoulder and they leave the room.

INT. DEPARTURE BAY

Newt and Hicks amid a bustle of power-loaders, assorted robot vehicles. They approach the entrance to a narrow corridor. Sign: DEPARTURE BAY -- CREW ONLY BEYOND THIS POINT.

HICKS
That's you.

NEWT
I know.

HICKS
Good luck in Oregon.

He holds the red knapsack as she slips into the straps.

NEWT
Hicks...

HICKS
Yeah?

She look at him: ghost of a grin. She gives him the thumbs-up sign.

NEWT
Affirmative.

He returns the sign

HICKS
Affirmative.

She turns and makes her way up the narrow boarding corridor. It's long, tapers to nothing. Tiny figure, receding, bright dot of the knapsack. She turns, waves. He waves back. She's gone.

EXT. ANCHORPOINT

Sulaco pulls away, begins to accelerate, dwindles against the stars.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. RODINA -- CONFERENCE CHAMBER

Cigarette-smoke drifts above a long narrow table in a narrow space. A half-dozen ranking TECHNOCRATS are jammed along wither side in folding chairs, with Colonel-Doctor Suslov at the head.

BRAUN
(Rodina's chief of R&D)
Obviously, Colonel Doctor, the purpose of their mission was to obtain specimens of this lifeform. The android dissected a single specimen. One of the pre-larval forms -- like the thing that killed Lenko.

AN OFFICER

And you believe that these creature are of potential military importance?

BRAUN

Yes, provided it's possible to clone the alien spores recovered from the android's skin and clothing...

SUSLOV

With the goal of programming these "machines" for use as weapons?

BRAUN

The adult form, Colonel-Doctor, is evidently a killing-machine of great strength, extraordinary sophistication. No evidence of intelligence. Purely instinctual.

INTELLIGENCE OFFICER

Our sources in the corporationist infrastructure are aware of the existence of a special project with Weyland-Yutani's Weapons Division. We have been unable to penetrate their security...

SUSLOV

The Intelligence Officer suggests that this special project concerns the alien?

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER

I remind you, Colonel-Doctor, that we experiment with the alien genetic material only if we are prepared to violate primary biological warfare limitations in the Strategic Arms Reduction treaty...

BRAUN

An I reminds the Diplomatic Officer that the Weyland Yutani corporation is obviously prepared to do so -- that they may already be doing so... As ever, our level of technology lags slightly behind that of the capitalist cartels... But now, by chance --

MILITARY OFFICER

By chance? You refer to the proven bravery and constant initiative of our People's Commando Division --

BRAUN

(smoothly, a seasoned political infighter covering his bases)

Not at all, Major. Their courage is unquestioned. Nonetheless, consider: we are in possession of a potential weapon -- a whole new technology, if you will -- which Weyland Yutani clearly intends to develop. We are in, as they might put it, on the ground floor. But only if we choose to be, if we choose to hold our advantage.

SUSLOV

I agree. We have no choice but to proceed.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER

Then I go on record as strongly advising that the android be returned to Anchorpoint. Are our technicians capable of repairing the thing?

BRAUN

Repairing it? Why?

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER

You lack a sense of the importance of gesture, Braun. Let us avoid their customary accusations of barbarism... And buy ourselves time...

SUSLOV

Our technicians will repair the thing. Return it to them... And we will proceed. We will clone the alien...

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- TISSUE CULTURE LAB

TRENT, head of BioLab, Rosetti, and Fox wait, seated, as Tully wheels a Holographic Display Module into position. The lights dim. A faint, ghostly cube shimmers in front of the three men.

TRENT

Initially this was merely routine, you understand. We attempted to determine its compatibility with terrestrial DNA.

FOX

What kind of DNA exactly, Doctor?

TRENT

Human, of course.

Something shivers and shakes and takes form in the cube of light: a double helix threaded with green and red beads of light.

TRENT

(continuing)

Watch closely, please.

The alien genetic material looks like a cubist's vision of an art deco staircase, its asymmetrical segments glowing Day-glo green and purple.

ROSETTI

That's a biological structure? More like part of a machine...

The alien form makes contact with the human DNA. The transformation is shockingly swift, but its stages can still be followed: the thing seems to pull itself into and through the coils, and for an instant the two are meshed, locked, and then the final stage. A new shape glows, a hybrid; the green and red beads have been altered beyond recognition.

FOX

Like a high-speed viral takeover...! What's the real-time duration on this, Trent?

TULLY

(from the shadows beyond the glowing cube)

That was it. What you see is what you get. That's how fast it is...

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- MACHINE SHOP

Hicks enters the cavernous shop, dodging out of the way of an emerging power-loader. The place is an oily forest of steel; machines of various kinds await repair. WALKER is at a workbench, a big man in a grease-stained vest.

HICKS

Hicks. Temporary duty assignment.

Walker works the joystick on a handheld remote control unit. An unmanned power-loader comes to life and lumbers toward the bench. He brings it to a halt expertly, exactly where he wants it, with few casual twiddles of the stick.

WALKER

Walker. Know how to blow out the hydraulic lines on a force-feedback system?

HICKS
No.

WALKER
Never too late to learn.

He offers Hicks a cigarette, lights it for him with a micro-torch from the bench.

WALKER
(continuing)
You off the mystery ship, Hicks?

HICKS
Sulaco? What's the mystery?

WALKER
(lighting his own cigarette)
Popular question. Whole thing's triple-classified now and word's getting around that two of the deck party never came back.

HICKS
(shrugs)
I was iced.

WALKER
Sure...

HICKS
You ready to show me his feedback system?

WALKER
(eyes Hicks narrowly)
Anytime.

INT. OPS ROOM

PAN along Jackson's multi-screen array in Operations, video images of various Anchorpoint locales: space-suited figure and robot welders making routine hull repairs.

HIGH ANGLE -- THE MALL

A buzzer SOUNDS. Screen directly in front of Jackson displays:

INCOMING TRANSMISSION
SOURCE: U.P.P. RODINA

DIPLOMATIC INCRYPT>>>
>>>DIPL CORPS SHUMAN

Jackson bobs her head, moving the cursor-cap to various "windows" on the screen.

JACKSON
(speaking into headset mike)
Somebody find me Shuman -- tell his we got incoming Rodina coded standard diplomatic.
His opposite number must've decided it's time for the weekly bullshit session...

INT. ANTI-BUGGING BUBBLE

Shuman is seated alone at the round table. A miniature video camera is set up on the table. Opposite him is a large wall screen displaying an image of the U.P.P. Diplomatic Officer, also alone, seated at the far end of the narrow table in the Rodina conference room.

SHUMAN
Androids, by law, are afforded the status of persons. Citizens.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER
Under your system, yes. We prefer to afford them the status of machines.

SHUMAN
You're holding one of our citizens captive.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER
The "citizen" in question, the synthetic, Bishop, has been held in regard to a treaty violation involving an armed vessel.

SHUMAN
Sulaco was homing on Anchorpoint. The so-called violation was the result of a malfunction.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER
The matter is under investigation.

SHUMAN
I repeat: you are holding one of our citizens.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER
The incident is also being investigated with regards to an apparent violations of the Strategic Arms Reductions treaty.

SHUMAN

Sulaco's weapons-systems fall entirely within the prescribed --

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER

I refer to those sections of the treaty concerned with biological warfare.

Beat. The U.P.P. Diplomat has just scored, but Shuman maintains his poise.

SHUMAN

The allegation is false.

DIPLOMATIC OFFICER

We make no official allegations at this time. The matter remains under investigation. Bishop, however, is of no further use in the inquiry. We are returning him to you.

EXT. ANCHORPOINT -- SHUTTLE BAY -- A U.P.P. SHUTTLE docking. They bay closes behind it. (V.O.: STATIC, VOICES of Anchorpoint docking crew.)

INT. SHUTTLE BAY

Shuman and two Marines enter the bay. They wear biohazard envelopes, masks. The shuttle's hatch opens and the Vietnamese Commando steps out. Bishop emerges. He looks at the Commando, then at Shuman and the Marines waiting at the bottom of the gangway. The Commando gestures: go.

SHUMAN

You're under quarantine orders, Bishop.
(to the Marines)
Escort him to MedLab.

INT. THE MALL

Hicks has just come off shift; the Mall's bar catches his eye. The facade says it all: ye olde pre-packaged genuine simulated wood-grain generic tavern and the only joint in town.

One wall is a screen showing a stale rerun of a Brazilian soccer match. Some of the customers play hologram game-consoles. Tully is seated at the bar.

Hicks takes a stool beside him.

HICKS
Beer.

He fishes his dog tags out and detaches one, passes it to the bartender; the bartender inserts it in a terminal, rings up the beer, hands it back.

TULLY
You're Hicks. Sulaco...

Tully, in his trademark jacket, is obviously drunk.

HICKS
Who're you?

TULLY
Tully. Tech Five. Tissue lab. D-fucking-NA.
Jesus... Sulaco... Lucky.

HICKS
Lucky? Who? You lucky, man?

TULLY
You. You're one lucky sonofabitch, Hicks.

Knocks back his drink.

HICKS
How's that?

TULLY
All that way. All the way back here with those...
Those fucking things, man...

Tully has just gotten his sudden, undivided attention.

HICKS
Things? What things?

TULLY
Shit... We had to sign. All of us. Lose our fucking shares we tell anybody, right?

HICKS
(his whole body tense)
They were on the ship...

TULLY
Yeah. Jesus. I saw 'em...

Reaches for his glass, but it's empty.

HICKS
Where? How many? When?

TULLY
(Suddenly remembering his shares)
Look, I...
(cuts a glance around the bar)
Bad place to talk... I gotta go now, leave...

HICKS (grabbing Tully before he can slide off the stool)
You aren't going anywhere, buddy.

Tully, sudden energy, not so much at Hicks as at his whole situation:

TULLY
I didn't come out here to work on shit like that.
Came out here to help design ecosystems, not build designer for the next year... You want an earful? You got it. Shift after next, place called DP-54, Level 7 map. Can't talk here...

He twists out of Hick's grip and into the crowd.

Hicks sits at the bar, staring at his untouched beer.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. THE BUBBLE

Rosetti, Trent, Fox, and Welles.

WELLES
And Bishop has agreed to undergo complete physical and chemical analysis?

ROSETTI
He requested it himself.

FOX
Results?

TRENT

No irregularities so far. No trace of the alien cellular material...

WELLES

Tampering, then? Reprogramming? Any new circuits in our Mr. Bishop? Any little surprises courtesy of the U.P.P.?

TRENT

No. Nothing.

FOX

And his data on the Aliens? All there? Intact?

TRENT

Yes, it seems to be. But if his memory's been tampered with, we'd have no way of knowing. Neither would he...

WELLES

In any case, we have to assume that the U.P.P. accessed Bishop's memory. That they have the data. They may also have specimens of the alien genetic material...

ROSETTI

In other words, you want to get on with your brief, don't you? You want Trent to clone the cultures. And you didn't want Shuman at this meeting.

FOX

This isn't a question of diplomacy, Colonel Rosetti.

ROSETTI

Isn't it? A violation of the S.A.R. treaty?

FOX

Has anyone mentioned military applications, Colonel? Trent?

TRENT

(smiles)

No. I think a very nice case can be made for applied exobiology. We do have a standing order to study alien life-forms when we encounter them. Preliminary analysis of the material from Sulaco reveals a remarkable adaptive capacity. The potential for cancer research alone...

WELLES

Imagine, Colonel: if it can be programmed to only kill cancer cells...

ROSETTI
And what exactly is it you propose to do, Trent?

FOX
(before Trent can answer)
We'll nourish the cells in stasis tubes, under constant observation. We'll terminate them before they become embryos...

ROSETTI
I see. Cancer research. And our motives are exclusively humanitarian. Is that it?

WELLES
Colonel, when Shuman gets his reply from Earth, priority will go to military development of the Alien. We know that because we know where our orders came from. The decision has already been made.

FOX
And potential U.P.P. research in the same direction only adds to the urgency, Colonel.

ROSETTI
The decision rests with me.

WELLES
Perhaps you misunderstood, Rosetti. The decision has been made.

FOX
They won't just break you, Colonel, they'll see to it that it's as though your career never happened. They're top people. That can do that. And you know it.

Rosetti, with a long, cold look for both of them; he got the message:

ROSETTI
Shuman, of course, will have to be informed.

FOX
Of course. "Cancer research"...

INT. MEDLAB -- SCAN UNIT

Bishop patiently undergoes a scan; he lies on his back on a narrow support as a massive donut-shaped sensor moves down the length of his body. A life-size color scan-image is displayed on a large screen: his "organs."

TECHNICIAN

The knees. Looks like they do the joints in polycarbon...

MEDIC

How about it, Bishop? Knees okay?

BISHOP

Yes...

Tentative smile.

TECHNICIANS

Polycarbon. Won't hold up worth a damn...

INT. RODINA -- BIOLAB

smaller than the Anchorpoint lab. Equipment look less advanced. The only light is the yellowish glow from a stasis tube; Braun and two assistants are clustered around the tube, observing the thing suspended there: thumb-sized, grayish-pink. An embryo.

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- A TUNNEL AT THE EDGE OF THE CONSTRUCTION ZONE

Hicks jogs through the tunnel. Its brightly-lit arc of white ceramic recalls London tube stations, but the floor is paved smooth and black, with freshly-painted traffic symbols. He passes a woman jogging in the opposite direction, keeps going. Small video cameras are mounted at intervals overhead, panning slowly from side to side. As he continues, less of the tunnel is finished; sections of tile are missing, revealing pipes, wiring, structural steel. Past a certain point eh's jogging the raw steel tube, splashing through shallow puddles of condensation. Fewer lights, widely spaced. He reaches a junction and pauses, chooses a tunnel.

INT. CONSTRUCTION ZONE CHAMBER -- HIGH, LONG SHOT -- HICKS comes out of the lit mouth of a tunnel. The space he enters is the size of a football stadium, but dark and industrially Gothic. Stacks of hull-plate and geodesic struts. A shower of sparks as he passes a robot welder (a la the machine in the opening sequence of "Aliens"). Down the aisle of material and heavy machinery. Spence is waiting.

SPENCE
Hicks.

She's in the shadows, smoking a cigarette.

HICKS
You, huh? Why you?

SPENCE
I work in the lab with Tully. He couldn't make it.

HICKS
Hangover?

SPENCE
Sacred... That forfeit agreement he had to sign.

HICKS
Doesn't scare you?

SPENCE
I haven't signed. Not yet. They've only given them to the ones who saw what happened.

HICKS
Why you?

SPENCE
Tully's okay, Hicks. I know him. Believe it or not, he doesn't scare that easy. He told me what was on that ship, Hicks. What he saw. You know what is was.

HICKS
I don't think anybody knows what it is...

SPENCE
They've got us growing the stuff. We've been running recombinant DNA routines on it, using human genetic material...

HICKS
You've been what?

SPENCE
(stubbing out her cigarette)
Cancer research. Tully says that's just a cover. Says it's like trying to cure cancer with a shotgun. Anyway, everybody know those two spooks from Gateway are MiliSci...

HICKS
Fox and Welles?

SPENCE
Weapons Division. Not even supposed to exist, these days. Not officially, anyway.

HICKS
(lights a cigarette of his own)
I still don't see why you're telling me this.

SPENCE
Maybe I don't either. It's just... we've got to tell somebody... Now there's a rumor somebody came in on a U.P.P. ship today, somebody off Sulaco...

HICKS
Bishop...

SPENCE
I don't know.

HICKS
Maybe Progressive Peoples'll get their own Alien too. Maybe they'll grow some...

SPENCE
(horrificed)
Shit! You'd better hope not...

HICKS
Why's that?

SPENCE
Their lab gear's five years behind ours.
They'd never be able to control it.

HICKS
Think you can, huh?

SPENCE
I don't know...

INT. OPS ROOM

A BLEEP as Tully appears on one of Jackson's screens, looking up at a camera in the tissue culture lab.

TULLY
Get me some maintenance people down here, will ya? Run a check on the stasis system. Pressure differential's off and the read keep fluctuating. And punch it Priority One; Trent'll cover it.

JACKSON
(with a characteristic little jerk of her head, light-pen winking)
Sure. You want a piece of the Superbowl, Tully?

TULLY
Nah.

JACKSON
Denver...

TULLY
Denver? No way. Gimme a tenth on Chicago.

INT. RODINA -- BIOLAB

Braun is seated at a computer, entering data. Suslov is staring into the stasis tube containing the developing Alien.

SUSLOV
There's an irony in this...

BRAUN
(engrossed in the data)
Irony, Colonel-Doctor?

SUSLOV
The readiness with which it lends itself to genetic manipulation, Braun. The speed with which its cells multiply.

BRAUN
Yes. Remarkable.

SUSLOV
As though the gene-structure had been designed for ease of manipulation. And this apparently universal compatibility with other plasms...

BRAUN

(reluctantly abandoning his task)
And you find this ironic?

SUSLOV
Ironic that we are attempting to program it as a weapon, yes.

BRAUN
How is that?

SUSLOV
Perhaps it is the fruit of some ancient experiment... A living artifact, the product of genetic engineering... A weapon. Perhaps we are looking at the end result of yet another arms race...

BRAUN
A defeatist attitude, Colonel-Doctor. Our project can only strengthen the Union of Progressive Peoples...

CLOSE -- THE STASIS TUBE -- A CHEST-BURSTER is suspended there like an eyeless fetal dolphin.

INT. MACHINE SHOP

Hicks, alone in the shop, mechanically going through the motions of the busywork he's been assigned to keep him out of the way.

BISHOP
(from the doorway)
That's quite a piece of machinery, Corporal
Hicks...

HICKS
(looking up, grinning)
That's what we used to say about you. How the hell are you, Bishop? Brass said you were snatched by the U.P.P. How're things in the socialist paradise?

BISHOP
I was returned. I assume they had no further use for me.

He moves among the silent machines, touching them as he speaks.

BISHOP
(continuing)

There are rumors, Hicks, that Weapons Division intends to develop the Alien.

HICKS (with a glance at the video camera on the wall)
Where'd the bastards get one, Bishop?

BISHOP
One of them managed to board Sulaco, Hicks.
Ripley killed it...

HICKS
Good for her.

BISHOP
She called it "the queen." It was larger than the others. Very large. Somehow is deposited genetic material in the ship.

HICKS
Then they're stone cold crazy, man. I hear the U.P.P. might try it themselves.

BISHOP
Given the current state of the arms race, it's entirely possible. I'm programmed to protect human life, Hicks. It's my... nature. Everything I am, everything I know, tells me this experiment must be aborted.

HICKS
Yeah. I know the feeling.

BISHOP
But I can't be entirely sure you can trust me,
Hicks.

HICKS
You can't what?

BISHOP
The U.P.P. may have reprogrammed me. I've been very thoroughly examined, of course, but the possibility does exist.

HICKS
Wouldn't you know?

BISHOP
No. I may be functioning as an enemy agent.

HICKS

(beat)
What the hell. We have to kill it, don't we?

BISHOP
I have to try.

HICKS
I'm in man. And I think I know where we can find us a little help...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. TISSUE LAB

Spence and Tully are alone.

SPENCE
What coffee? I'm going to the machine.

TULLY
No.

He peers into one of the stasis tubes; a small ovoid of tissue suspended
there.

SPENCE
Maintenance cure your pressure differential problem?

TULLY
Said there wasn't any. Said it was a glitch.

SPENCE
Didn't want to get his hands dirty?

TULLY
It settled down by itself.

Spence exits; Tully moves closer to the tube.

CLOSE -- THE SINGLE DEVELOPING SPORE

inside; it looks like a much smaller version of the alien egg.

WIDER ANGLE

TULLY
Hey there. Hi ya. How ya doin'? Nutrient solution agreeing with you, hm? We're looking lots bigger today, aren't we? You bet.
Terrific. Just absolutely fucking wonderful...

His monologue is interrupted by Welles' entrance; he's startled, looks up guiltily. The heavy glass doors HISS shut behind her.

WELLES
Communing with nature, Tully?

TULLY
Your not wearing a badge.
(taps the plastic ID clipped to his lab coat)
White strap registers contamination. Turns red if you're accidentally exposed to something.
Got it?

WELLES
Where's Trent?

TULLY
Lunch.

WELLES
And how's our friend?

She moves to the stasis tube, looks in.

TULLY
Friends. Our little friends. Growing.

WELLES
Get me hard copy for the past six hours.

TULLY
Sorry. Ask Trent.

WELLES
I don't think you understood me, Technician
Tully...

She's following him as he nears the main computer console; in the b.g., a stasis tube begins to HISS. CRACKS loudly, a hairline fracture emits a superfine spray of fluid. An alarm SOUNDS.

WELLES
(continuing)
What does th --

TULLY
O Jesus...

Two of the tubes BLOW OUT. Nutrient fluid and plastic shards everywhere.
Welles and Tully go down. A louder ALARM cuts in; red lights strobe. Locks in the doors THUNK shut, an automatic containment measure, as Spence, outside, throws down her coffee and begins to struggle with the door-controls, trying to reach Tully. Tully, facedown in a pool of the fluid, see that he's nine inches away from the gray pigeon's-egg of alien tissue. His eyes widen. Gets to his knees as carefully as he can. Reaches slowly -- slowly -- sideways, manages to snag a pair of plastic tongs and a shallow lab tray from the counter...

Welles tries to scramble to her feet, loses her balance in the slippery goop, and snatches at his arm. He nearly falls on top of the thing, but cuffs her roughly away, kneels, tongs poised... Beat. A tiny orifice opens; for a split-second something glitters above the thing, a faint, fist-sized cloud of dark mist. Then it's gone and Tully's moving, swooping in with tongs and tray.

SPENCE (V.O.)
(intercom)
Tully! Tully, Goddamn it! What's happening?
Are you okay?

TULLY
De-con. Get us down to De-con!

Welles is struggling to her feet.

INT. DECONTAMINATION CHAMBER

Drenched, naked, furious, Welles is nearly invisible behind a scalding downpour as techs in biohazard gear scrub her down with detergents and antibacterial agents. She shoots eye-daggers at Tully, who's being worked over by two more techs.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. OPS ROOM

Jackson at work. PAN ACROSS screens to security camera view of the DNA lab, clean now but minus two stasis tubes -- image identified: TISSUE CULTURE / 25 AUGUST / 1900:15 HOURS. Jackson's attention is elsewhere.

INT. A CORRIDOR

Hicks keeps watch as Bishop open a panel, exposing complex wiring;
no hesitation whatever as he strips two wires, removes a Walkman-sized VCR from his belt, and clips lead to the stripped wires.

INT. OPS ROOM

CLOSE on monitor image of the lab. The picture fuzzes out, scrambles,
returns -- but now reads: TISSUE CULTURE / 23 AUGUST / 1200:02 HOURS and the missing tubes are back in place.

INT. ENTRANCE -- OUTSIDE LAB

BISHOP
We have three minutes at the outside.

HICKS
Go.

Bishop punches the code-sequence and the door hisses open; they're through,
moving.

INT. TISSUE CULTURE LAB

They move down the row of stasis tubes. Bishop pauses when they reach the two units with missing tubes, then quickly moves on. He opens a wall panel,
exposing controls and a large, very serious-looking red switch.
Label above
switch:

STASIS SYSTEM MICROWAVE STERILIZATION

Then, he hesitates. Turning slowly, as if under compulsion, he looks back;
the line of glowing tubes.

HICKS
Do it!

And still he doesn't move... Hicks darts his arm past Bishop, breaking the trance and yanking the red switch.

A burst of unpleasant high-frequency SOUND as the fluid in the tubes instantly begins to boil.

CLOSE ON ONE OF THE ALIEN CULTURES

as it bursts, disintegrates into a film of slime lost behind a storm of bubbles. The lab's ALARM system goes off. The doors slide open as three MARINES cover Hicks and Bishop with handguns.

MARINES
Just don't you fucking move, Jack.

Hicks stonefaces the Marines. Then cracks a grin.

INT. DETENTION UNIT

Hicks and Bishop, in white plastic "medical restraints" (like arm and leg-irons) precede the grim-faced Marines along a corridor and are thrown into separate cells.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. THE BUBBLE

Meeting of Anchorpoint's full directorate, including Welles and Fox, Jackson, and a number of new faces. Welles is white-lipped with fury.

JACKSON
They knew the code, didn't they? The code for the door...

FOX
You got it, Ops. And they knew just where to go which button to push to poach our eggs for us, didn't they? Struggling with an idea, Ops? Think it may even have been an inside job?

JACKSON
You're a Grade A Company prick, aren't you, mister?

(Her bitch truckdriver side; a tough lady, used to taking a lot of life-or-death responsibility in her job.)

WELLES

The Anchorpoint phase of the project is terminated, Rosetti. You'll keep Hicks and the android in solitary until they can return with us to Gateway to stand trial for treason.

TRENT

The Anchorpoint phase? What do you mean? We have no more material to work with...

FOX

You have no more material to work with, Trent. In any case, it's become obvious that you aren't quiet the man for the job. We took the precaution of obtaining our own samples. They're on their way to Gateway.

WELLES

(with cold satisfaction)

... and everything, every move each of you have made, since our arrival, is going to be gone over with a fine toothed c-c-c-c--

As Welles begins to stammer, her eyes betray a terrible consternation. She rises from her chair, lurches forward, catching herself on her hands. The C-C-C-C-C phases into a chattering palsy as a thick strand of blood-streaked drool descends toward the table. Fox, seated to her left, has instinctively shoved his own chair back, ready to run. Everyone else is frozen with shock.

As the chittering tooth-burr becomes a shrill SHRIEK of inhuman rage, the transformation takes place. Segmented biomechanoid tendons squirm beneath the skin of her arms. Her hands claw at one another, tearing redundant flesh from alien talons. Then the shriek dies. She straightens up.

And, rips her face apart in a single movement, the glistening claws coming away with skin, eyes, muscle, teeth, and splinters of bone... SOUND of ripping cloth. The New Beast sheds its human skin in a single sinuous, bloody ripple, molting on fast forward.

An instant of utter silence as the featureless mask moves. From side to side.

Scanning.

Trent vomits explosively. The Marine guard snatches his pistol from its holster and FIRES wildly across the table. Blind screaming chaos.

OVERHEAD SHOT

as the directorate plunges, like a single panicked organism, to the far side of the bubble. The thing is on Fox before he can get up from his chair.

CLOSE

On his scream as the sucking, fanged tongue plunges through the orbit of his eye.

ANGLE

A Marine with a flamethrower bursts through the door, torching Fox and the New Beast, setting fire to the bubble's acoustic foam baffles.

INT. CORRIDOR OUTSIDE TULLY'S SLEEPING CUBICLE

Spence is coming down the corridor, carrying a clear plastic bag of styrofoam food containers. Nobody else in sight. She look tired, but not particularly worried. She reaches the door to his cubicle. Thumps on it with the heel of her hand.

SPENCE

Tully! Hey! Open up.. Got you some food...

No reply. She thumps again, then punches the combination (the lock look like a telephone key-pad). Door opens. Dark inside.

SPENCE

(continuing)

Tully? You sleeping?

She climbs in. Dark. Very. A red LED glows on the phone console. She crawls through the detritus of Tully's housekeeping and fumbles with the lights. Can't find the switch.

SPENCE

Tully?

Lights CLICK on. Nobody there. Nothing. Looks even messier than she last saw it. She sighs, puts the bag of food on a ledge, scoops up a mound of dirty cloths off the pillow in an automatic cleaning-up gesture. And sees Tully's lab badge. Picks it up.

CLOSE ON THE BADGE

The contamination indicator strip is red.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. DETENTION CELL

Hicks sitting on the narrow bunk.

Door opens. One of the Marines who arrested him in the lab; he wears combat armor now.

HICKS
What's your problem, bud? Got a war on?

The Marine steps back, admitting a haggard Rosetti.

ROSETTI
Get up, Hicks. We need you in the Ops Room.

HICKS
We didn't kill it.

ROSETTI
No. It killed Fox and Welles...

INT. TUNNEL, CONSTRUCTION ZONE

Small vehicle WHINES TOWARD US through puddles of condensation: a skeletal electric motor-jeep with heavy roll bars, scratched and paint-scarred. Walker driving. Hick behind him in partial combat armor and communication rig, cradling a pulse-rifle.

Walker is pushing it, driving fast; the jeep bounces and sways, skitters around a corner. Into the gloom of the big construction chamber. Halts.

HICKS
(into mouthpiece)
Gimme a read.

JACKSON (V.O.)
(from headset)
You're close. Hang a left.

HICKS
Is he moving?

JACKSON
No...

Walker swing the jeep around and they roll toward a narrow gap between massive stacks of geodesic struts.

INT. OPS ROOM

Jackson studies a simulator screen; a moving cursor, the Jeep, navigates a 3D grid-representation of the construction zone.

JACKSON
No left again.

The cursor turns. Nears a blinking red dot.

Spence, drawn and anxious, looks over Jackson's shoulder. Bishop and Rosetti are beside her.

SPENCE
You're sure it's him?

JACKSON
It's his locator frequency, isn't it? No two alike. Surgically implanted. Just like yours...

SPENCE
(gnaws at her lip)
He's not moving...

ROSETTI
Why would he go down there?

BISHOP
The badge. He knew that he's been infected...

SPENCE

Scared. He's scared.
(shudders)
Tully...

INT. CONSTRUCTION CHAMBER

Dark. The Jeep creeps along between stacks of prefab hull units, emerges into a open space, junctions of several corridors. The deck is an inch deep in water.

JACKSON (V.O.)
He's there! You're right on top of him!

Walker stops the jeep. Hicks stands up, plays the beam of a flashlight around the area. Presses the mute button on his headset.

HICKS
(bellows)
Tully! Tully! Yo!

ECHO. DRIP of water.

Hicks clips the flashlight beneath the barrel of his gun and jumps down. Reflections ripple as he moves forward. Swings the beam along the surface -- something there... The logo-patches down a sleeve of Tully's ruptured, blood-soaked leather jacket. Drifting shred of human tissue...

JACKSON (V.O.)
Can you see him?

HICKS
Yeah.

And the thing that was Tully launches itself from the top of one of the stacks of construction material. Lands on top of the jeep, going for Walker, through the roll bars.

CLOSEUP ON JAWS

CLOSEUP

as the thing's tail lashes past Walker's face, taking a nick out of a steel bar.

on the controls, a pair of levers: he yanks one back, shoves the other forward, thumbs both drive buttons simultaneously.

ANGLE

The jeep (separate drive-trains for each wheel) pulls two three-sixties on a dime, hurling the thing toward Hicks. It smashes into the desk, splash of water, leaps for Hicks instantly. The charge from his pulse-rifle takes it in mid-air, hideous bile-yellow spurt of acid... And it hits the water again with a terrific EXPLOSION of steam. The jeep lurches out through the steam, engines SCREAMING, wheels losing traction through the puddle, throwing up fantails of water, nearly overturning. Hicks jumps, snags a roll bar, empties the pulse-rifle's clip into the steam on full-auto as Walker hauls ass back down the corridor...

JACKSON (V.O.)
Hicks! What's happening?

INT. OPS ROOM

JACKSON
Hicks? Hicks!

CLOSE ON SCREEN

as the jeep-cursor speeds away from Tully's blinking locator-dot.

Spence's eyes fixed on the screen as she makes a serious stab at swallowing her own fist.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. RODINA -- BIOLAB

VERY SLOW PAN past monitors -- one flickering like a defective strobe, the other displaying a readout in Russian -- past an overturned mug on a keyboard, past assorted equipment, past the shattered ruin of the big stasis tube, to Suslov and Braun cocooned in a glittering biomech structure of alien resin. Braun is dead, his rib cage gaping.

SCEAMS and the HAMMER of automatic weapons. Station crew fleeing in panic enter through one door, crash into tables, scattering trays of food, claw at one another to escape through another door. The Vietnamese commando and her partner are last into the room; they spin in unison and FIRE back through the door. SOUND of rending metal and loud inhuman RAGE.

The commandos scramble for the far door as the alien crashes into the mess: a new form, the result of Suslov's genetic tinkering. Bigger. Meaner. Faster. Able to reproduce more quickly.

The frantic crew are climbing a ladder. The commandos start up the ladder. They climb through a circular hatch. Like the deck they stand on, the hatch is made of heavy steel expansion-grid. The alien swarms up the ladder, slams into the hatch just as the commandos close and lock it. The alien keeps on slamming. The steel begins to bulge and tear...

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- OPS ROOM

Hicks, Bishop, Rosetti, Shuman, and Jackson.

JACKSON
Cant's raise 'em, boss.

SHUMAN
Try the diplomatic codes...

JACKSON
Diplomatic codes? They aren't responding to Mayday International. Maybe they've got a transponder down, but -- hey, check this, outgoing traffic...
(she bobs her head, taps her lapboard)
It's a squirt transmission... Military decryption standard.

ROSETTI
What do they have in the area?

JACKSON
(taps up a fresh screen of data)
Not much. Automated mining system working

NC-313... Test module for a terraforming operation enroute MV-45... And, here we go, the battle cruiser Nikolai Stoiko. Nine hours from Rodina if they push it.

HICKS

What I wanna know is, what do we have in the area?

JACKSON

(another screen of data)

Not much. How about the Kansas City, Colonel Admin transport? We hit her with a mayday, she'll get here inside twenty hours.

HICKS

Then what?

ROSETTI

We abandon the station.

HICKS

Destroy the station, man! We got nukes?

ROSETTI

Outlawed under the Strategic Arms Reduction treaty.

JACKSON

We can fiddle the overrides on the fusion package. Baby nova.

BISHOP

We're dealing with a new form, Colonel. We know nothing of this new mode of reproduction. Others may have already become hosts...

ROSETTI

What are you suggesting?

BISHOP

In order to be entirely certain, Colonel, it would be necessary to override the fusion package now.

Jackson looks up at Bishop; he's suggesting mass suicide.

HICKS

I thought you were programmed to protect human life?

BISHOP

(with android blandness)

I'm taking the long view.

Jackson's console CHIMES, begins to display new data, ID shots of three crew members.

JACKSON
Missing persons.
(she taps her way through windows of data)
Two were members of the clean-up crew who did the lab after the blowout. Third doesn't check... No, wait. Lives with one of the first two.. But that makes a total of fifteen...
Something's happening...

HICKS
Goddamn, Rosetti, it's catching!

ROSETTI
(ignores him)
Mayday Kansas City, Jackson.

HICKS
What about Sulaco?

SHUMAN
It would take two days to raise her.

HICKS
(bitterly)
With that shit on board.

ROSETTI
Gateway will have our warning before Sulaco arrives.

SHUMAN
Fine, Colonel. And who do you suppose will be willing to take it seriously? Weapons Division?

JACKSON
Hey, I'm getting something! The socialist space brothers speak at last...

Her main screen flickers and jumps; the speakers fill with a roar of STATIC --

JACKSON
(continuing)
Their transmission standards get worse all the --

She falls silent as the screen clears, revealing a young Slavic madwoman -- one of Suslov's lab assistants -- in blood-drenched coveralls. Jerky handheld video, grainy transmission, indistinct background. She clutches a sheet of paper, reads aloud from it in a foreign language.

SHUMAN

Get a translation program on line, Jackson!

Jackson's already punching. An instantaneous computer translation cuts in as V.O.; the girl's lips move, out of sync, like a cheap dub; the transmission is rendered in flat synthi-voice.

CLOSE UP ON SCREEN

SPOKESWOMAN

... of Progressive Peoples. Technician First Class, Tatjana Malik. Please, we wish to inform you: we have undertaken an experiment with genetic material obtained from the military transport vessel... We attempted to clone the xenomorph in stasis. Failure of the stasis system occurred in the fifteenth hour... Attempted modification of the genetic structure has resulted in a variant which replicates rapidly, more rapidly...

(and here, horribly,
she smiles)

It has... taken... most of us. Those of us who remain... We wish to warn you: you must terminate any experiment with the material now. It is impossible. It cannot be contained. There is no --

The image flickers, vanishes.

ANGLE

JACKSON

Lost 'em. That's it... Goddamnit, she was just a tech. Their brass didn't bother...

HICKS

No brass left...

JACKSON

And you better check this, Hicks.

Her other screens display assorted images of nearly identical tunnels and passageways, but three of them are black; she gestures to the dark screens.

JACKSON

(continuing)

This is down by the main air-scrubber. System says those cameras are still operational, but there's something in the way. Something big...

EXT. ANCHORPOINT -- ECO-MODULE

Huge louvers pivot smoothly, like Venetian blinds, revealing lush vegetation through thick plastic...

INT. ECO-MODULE

Spence sits cross-legged in Newt's meadow, tearfully hugging a small tame primate. Light crosses the meadow as the louvers open overhead, beyond the geodesics. Artificial dawn. BIRDS begins to sing. Quiet before the storm...

EXT. RODINA

No sign of movement.

Dimly lit. Clutter of spacesuits, machinery. The Vietnamese commando seated on the floor, back to the wall, cradling her gun. The corpse of her partner is sprawled on the deck beside her, face hideously burned, his armor fretworked with acid. Her face is blank, eyes straight ahead.

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. ANCHORPOINT

The station.

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- MEDLAB -- CORRIDOR

Hicks, still in his fighting gear, walking purposefully. MedLab staff in hospital whites dubiously note his passage.

INT. MED LAB -- RIPLEY'S ROOM

Ripley comatose, still hooked up to assorted biomonitors, the only movement in the room the restless flicker of a bank of colored diodes.

Hicks enters, crosses to the bed, seems about to speak, makes a helpless little gesture with his hands -- then yanks the biomonitor leads from the bedside console. The diodes go out; a buzzer begins to SOUND. The bed is mounted on casters. He starts to pull it out of the room. Stops. Looks up at Newt's map on the wall.

He rips the map from the wall and stuffs it into her hospital gown.

INT. MEDLAB -- CORRIDOR

Hicks hustles Ripley through MedLab, not about to stop for anyone; startled staff jump out of the way.

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- ANOTHER CORRIDOR -- ENTRANCE TO A LIFEBOAT

Signs and notices detailing lifeboat launch procedures. Hicks lifts Ripley from the bed, carries her through hatch into lifeboat. Places her in a hypersleep capsule, presses a button. The lid comes down. Silent moment as he looks down at her through the lid, his palm on the smooth plastic in a gesture of farewell, resignation. Then back through the hatch, where he activates controls that seal the boat, setting the launch-procedure in motion.

ANGLE on the blunt prows of the lifeboat receding around the curve of the station's hull.

INT. LIFEBOAT BAY

Hicks watching digital countdown. Muted WHUMP of explosive bolts --

EXT. LIFEBOAT

Flash of the bolts as Ripley's boat is launched into the sweep of night.

INT. LIFEBOAT BAY

Bishop enters behind Hicks.

BISHOP
But can you be certain she hasn't been infected?

HICKS
I'll take the chance.

BISHOP
Why?

HICKS
I owe her one.

INT. OPS ROOM

Jackson at her screens; display as before, the tunnels near the air-scrubber -- with three screens dark. CLOSEUP on one tunnel-view as an open, six-wheeled personnel carrier rolls past the video camera, Hick looking up. Five Marines in full battle dress ride with him: ALSOP, GREENFIELD, BRICE, COSTELLO, WALLACE.

JACKSON
Next junction, hang a right...

INT. TUNNEL

Dim; light spaced far apart along tunnel. The carrier takes a right.

JACKSON (V.O.)
Left at the fork and you wanna take it slow.
Fifty meters to whatever's in front of that camera...

Hicks gestures to Wallace, the driver. The carrier halts. SOUND of the air-scrubbers from down the tunnel. The Marines shift their weapons, uneasily eye the tunnel ahead. These are young recruits, not the hard-case vets of "ALIENS."

HICKS
Now listen up. We don't do this by the book, we don't pair off. Stay together, tight. Greenfield up front with me; anything moves, you torch it. The rest of you, if it moves, kill it. You gotta get the fuckers before they get close. You know about the acid; you know they don't show on infrared. And you know you don't let them take you alive. You might have to do a friend a favor... Ready? Move out.

He climbs down from the carrier, heavily burdened with gear. The others follow. Greenfield has a flamethrower. They move forward. Toward the next light; beyond it, the tunnel curves out of sight.

JACKSON (V.O.)
You're right up on it, Hicks. Right around the corner...

HICKS
Affirmative...

They round the turn, weapons ready. And stop, stunned.

GREENFIELD
Wha' 'th...?

The tunnel, which widens here as it approaches the massive air-scrubber, has been transformed; its lights are dimly visible through shrouds of resin. Vast ribs of the stuff sweep up from a dim and monstrous shape that covers the deck at the base of the scrubber; we're looking into an Alien grotto, black and pearlescent, and obscene fairyland. The shape's symmetry suggest function. Patient DRUMMING of the air-scrubber's giant fans.

HICKS
Scan it. Motion?

COSTELLO (consulting tracker, adjusting knob)
Negative.

HICKS
Alsop, gimme the flood...

Alsop passes Hicks a portable halogen-flood. Hicks thumbs it on...

WALLACE
Holy Christ.

The central shape is revealed as an enormous mutant queen. The thing is splayed on its back, mortared into the mass of resin, its vestigial head toward Hicks and the Marines. Its abdomen is arched like an inverted scorpion-tail, tipped with a swollen, semi-translucent sac that ripples and pulses in the glare of Hick's lamp. A biomechanical birth-factory.

HICKS
(passing the flood to Brice)
Hold it... steady.

He kneels, unslings one of his gear cases, open it, revealing a squat tube.

HICKS
Moving. Something's moving...

Hicks is working on the tube-thing, snapping components into place.

Brice suddenly swings the beam away from the queen, revealing half a dozen new-model Aliens twisting out of recesses in the grotto walls...

INT. OPS ROOM

Jackson and Bishop hear SCREAMS and FIRING over the comm-link.

HICK (V.O.)
The light! The goddamn light! (garble)

The Aliens tear into the Marines like living chainsaws. Wallace and Costello
go down immediately; the Aliens begin to drag them away. Hicks has gotten hold of the light, struggles to keep it on the queen as he props the tube against his thigh. SCREAMS. Blue stutter of pulse-rifles. A tongue of fire from Greenfield's flamethrower, but an Alien jumps him; the napalm-stream arcs wildly, splashing the resin structure -- and the Queen wakes. The huge tail extends, lifts in the floodlight beam...

Hicks is still trying to assemble his mortar.

As the swollen, podlike tail-tip splits open with a sickly, tearing SOUND, releasing a puffball cloud of dark mist -- we've seen it before, in miniature, with Tully in the lab -- which begins to rise, drawn up toward the giant fans above the air-scrubber...

INT. OPS ROOM

HICKS (V.O.)
Stop the fans!

Bishop is instantly on the case, leaning over Jackson's shoulder to punch the right button, but...

INT. SCRUBBER-TUNNEL

Too late. The cloud of spores is sucked into the fans -- as Hicks drop a shell into the mortar. It bucks against his thigh and the queen is blown to shred in an EXPLOSION that rips out the side of the scrubber.

HICKS
The vents! Seal the vents!

INT. OPS ROOM

Bishop's fingers fly as he punches another sequence.

INT. VENT

Straight down the pipe, a long way, to the whirling fans. Huge hermetic barriers SLAM across the vent in sequence -- one, two, three.

INT. SCRUBBER-TUNNEL

Hicks scramble to his feet.

HICKS
Out! Out of here! Now!

The Marine beside him begins to spasm and quake as the Change comes. Hicks SHOOTs him in the chest at close range and sprints for the carrier.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. RODINA -- HUB

The Vietnamese commando nears the station's hub. The walls, in one large chamber, are decorated with official U.P.P. art, like a blend of Mexican Socialists agitprop murals and Syd Mead techo-fantasy. She passes evidence of brief violent struggle: a wall splashed with dried blood, a single shoe, smashed equipment, ragged acid-scars in the deck.

She looks like a child now, moving through all this, small and alone. But not helpless: she still moves with a cat's wariness, her gun ready.

Three face-huggers scuttle across at an intersection of corridors, tails thrashing...

She comes to a door that opens onto Rodina's central hub, a large cylindrical space surrounding a core of equipment. The door is ajar; she edges through...

Virtually the station's entire crew, perhaps a hundreds people, have been cocooned along the multi-storey column, a bas-relief of human bodies and glittering resin.

She stares from a railing, appalled, then slips through the door.

INT. ACHORPOINT -- OPS ROOM

Rosetti, Jackson, Bishop

JACKSON
I don't know what they did down there, but it's screwed up internal comm-link for the whole area; I can't raise 'em...

One of Jackson's consoles CHIMES; her central screen suddenly glows with a hi-rez simulation of Rodina.

JACKSON
(continuing)
Rodina's got company...

EXT. SPACE

Silent approach of the U.P.P. cruiser Nikolai Stoiko, a vicious-looking mile-long slab of armament. Stoiko slows, comes to an ominous halt.

INT. RODINA

The commando bolts down a corridor. Total desperation. She's lost her gun. A CRASH behind her. The beast's shrill RAGE. She throws herself through the first available door -- and sees the interceptor waiting. She scrambles up a ladder, through the hatch, and frantically begins to activate systems. Sirens begin to SOUND in the launch bay. The interceptor's hatch closes as the twin gates of the bay begin to swing open -- and the beast is on her, striking at the view-port in the hatch, inches from her face. She flips open a safety-override on the interceptor's joystick and thumbs a red button.

EXT. RODINA

Total overdrive: the interceptor BLASTS out through the half open gates in a fireball of exhaust gases, the beast and the service ladder tumbling after it...

EXT. SPACE -- STOIKO

Something streak from the bow of the cruiser...

INT. ANCHORPOINT -- OPS ROOM

Jackson huddled over her screen.

JACKSON
Missile!

EXT. SPACE -- RODINA -- INTERCEPTOR IN F.G.

The U.P.P. missile takes out the station. Whiteout of nuclear EXPLOSION; the interceptor is a black blot tumbling toward us like a singed leaf in a whirlwind...

INT. OPS ROOM

The simulation of Rodina on Jackson's screen is surrounded by an expanding blue sphere. The sphere stops expanding. The simulation blurs into digital static, fades as the sphere begins to contract...

JACKSON
Nuked 'em! Twenty megs! That coded transmission...

ROSETTI
Send Mayday.

JACKSON

I don't believe it! They send for help, their own people nuked 'em!

HICKS
(quietly)
Maybe they asked for it...

ROSETTI
That's an order, Jackson!

Bishop looks at Rosetti as though he's about to offer an opinion, but doesn't.

JACKSON
Maybe they'll nuke us too...

BISHOP
No. They're leaving...

EXT. SPACE -- STOIKO

The cruiser begins to move, accelerates, is gone.

INT. OPS ROOM

ROSETTI
Bastards!

JACKSON
Yeah. And they violated the fucking arms treaty, too, didn't they? Well, Colonel Rosetti, how about a situation update? We got, lessee, fifty-six missing crew members as of fifteen hundred hours...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. THE MALL

Deserted. The only SOUNDS are Muzak and the trickles of an artificial waterfall. Some signs of trouble: an overturned trash canister, someone's red nylon baseball cap on the polished concrete.

Walker strolls around a corner beside the bar with a pulse-rifle, grenades, and assorted gadgetry slung across his chest. Goes to the bar entrance, nudges the door open with the barrel of the rifle. Nobody there. Same soccer game on the big screen, but the sound is off. Silent cheering crowd rising to its feet, the flicker of the holo-game consoles. He glances around the mall, enters. Crosses to the bar, checks behind it, then fishes up a big plastic jug of liquor. Opens it, drink from the jug.

Behind him, a mug topples, CLATTERS on the floor. He slowly lowers the liquor to the counter; just as slowly, he turns. A beast is there, waiting, beyond the Glimmer of the holo-games.

Walker and the beast move simultaneously. But he doesn't go for his gun -- he grabs the control unit hanging on his chest.

An unmanned power-loader walks straight through the glass facade, plowing tables and chairs out of its way, big vise-grip claws extended. The Alien SCREAMS, leaps for it, but the steel claws close and grip.

Walker twiddles the controls; the power-loader responds, pinning the Alien against the wall. The Alien writhes and HISSES, striking furiously at the hydraulic arm. Walker tightens the grip, locks the loader in place. Picks up the jug of liquor and has another swallow.

WALLACE
Fuck you.

Beat. As his satisfied grin is replaced by something else. The Change...

INT. ECO-MODULE

Artificial dusk. Spence is crossing the mirco-meadow with a wire basket of food the module's population of small primates. Moths flutter through narrowing beams of sunlight as the louvers gradually close overhead. CRICKETS in the long grass.

She enters the scaled-down forest, ducking branches, and Spanish moss. Begins to make Tk-tk-tk sound, calling the lemur, the monkeys...

And stops. Suddenly aware of a stillness, an absolute silence. Even the crickets...

She turns -- gasps. The primates have been cocooned in the branches of a tree. And screams as something pounces on her from above, the transformed lemur: a very small Alien. She bats the thing away with the strength of desperation. It hits the ground HISSING; she hurls the basket of food at it and bolts from the forest, sobbing.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. A TUNNEL

WHINE of an approaching engine. The six-wheeled carrier come INTO VIEW, Hicks driving, alone. His face is fixed, white. The carrier slews against the tunnel wall, strikes sparks, bounces off. He hardly seems to notice. He plows into a row of big plastic crates, tumbling them like a child's blocks, bringing the vehicle to a halt. Beat. He look up from the controls: the doors of a freight elevator.

INT. A CORRIDOR OFF THE MALL

Automatic CHIME as elevator doors open, revealing Hicks and his gun.

INT. THE MALL

Hicks warily crosses the Mall. SOUND of perpetual Muzak. He eyes the wreckage of the bar, but keeps moving. Into stuttering neon light from one of the shops. HISS and CRACKLE of bad wiring. He move toward the shop, gun ready.

INT. SHOP

Hicks enters, surveys the wreckage of display cases, scattered 21st century consumer toys.

He finds five cocoons at the read of the shop.

INT. THE MALL

LONG on the shop. Beat. SOUND of five rounds from the pulse-rifle. With the last shot, the neon flicker dies. Muzak stops.

Hicks emerges, continues across the Mall.

Arrives at the elevator-like entrance to the mini-subway, punches in his destination ("OPS" lights up in red). Muffled SOUND of the breaking car; the door HISSES open -- on Spence, both hands white-knuckled on the loop of a hanger-strap, the car an abattoir, red with the blood of Transformation. Shredded clothing and rags of flesh.

HICKS
Spence...

She screams.

INT. OPS ROOM

Rosetti and Jackson are hunched over the screens as Hicks enters with Spence over his shoulder, brushing past two nervous Marines at the door. Bishop is making calculations on a console in the b.g. Hicks eases Spence down into a chair.

JACKSON
Revised ETA fro the Kansas City's another thirteen hours...

HICKS
(yanking Rosetti around in his chair)
Things don't look so shit hot out there right now, Rosetti. What about rigging the fusion package?

ROSETTI
(to Jackson; ignoring Hicks)
Sound the general alert, routine lifeboat drill...

HICKS
A general fucking alert? Lifeboat drill? Who the hell you think's gonna be left to pick up?
I say we do the fusion package now!

JACKSON
(wearily; without looking up from her screen)

Hicks, you took out the scrubber, the main air-scrubber. Pretty soon there isn't going to be anything to breathe in here. We'd be okay for about five days, except you also started an electrical fire and we got no way to put it out. The crew's down to one-twenty-eight.

HICKS
(stunned)
More than half...?

JACKSON
That's what I said.

HICKS
And you haven't rigged the place to blow?

JACKSON
(glances at Rosetti)
No.

ROSETTI
(as if noticing him for the first time)
You'll lead the group from this sector, Hicks. At the alert, they'll gather at blue assembly points. Proceed to the nearest lifeboat bay...

BISHOP
(approaching Rosetti with a single sheet of printout)
Colonel, my analysis indicates that a minimum of one fifth of the one hundred and twenty-eight remaining crew are already incubating the --

ROSETTI
(on the edge of hysteria)
Listen to me, you motherless zombie! Those are people! Can't you understand that? And we're going to get them out!

BISHOP
Yes, Colonel, I...

ROSETTI
(to Hicks)
You have your orders!

HICKS
I don't leave here until Jackson sets it to blow, Rosetti. Got that? Kansas City shows up, maybe there's nobody left for them to pick up. Then what? They'll send a boarding party in here!

JACKSON

I can't. The fusion package is under the scrubber, Hicks. You trashed the wiring, man. That's where the fire is. Those lines. I can't link through. I can't set it.

BISHOP

I'll go; I'll get it manually.

HICKS

I'll go with you.

BISHOP

No. Assist with the...
(glances down at the figures on the sheet of printout)
The evacuation.

JACKSON

(to Rosetti)

You just want to get your own ass out of here, don't you? They couldn't have done this without you approval, could they?

SPENCE

Hick!

As one of the Marine guards stumbles forward, dropping his weapon, hands upraised in claws of agony --

MARINE

Please, I...

He trips, fall across Jackson's console and the barrel of Hick's gun -- as half a dozen New Model Chest-bursters erupt simultaneously from his torso in a spray of blood. Hicks bellow, jumps back, grabbing Spence.

The chest bursters tumble from the body of the dead Marine, scuttle into the shadows; one leaves a trail of small bloody prints across Jackson's keyboard.

HICKS

Out! Out of here!

INT. CORRIDOR

Hicks, Spence, Bishop, Rosetti, Jackson, and the remaining Marine guard hustle along, Hicks and Bishop bringing up the rear. Rosetti carries the dead Marine's pulse-rifle. Bishop touches Hick's shoulder as they reach the intersection.

BISHOP
I'll try to give you an hour. Overload at twenty-two hundred.

HICKS
(quietly; doesn't want the others to hear)
Blow it. That's what matters.

EXTREME CLOSEUP on Hick's watch as her set the alarm for 2200 hours.

BISHOP
Yes.

Bishop splits off, down another corridor, running.

INT. LIFEBOAT ASSEMBLY POINT

Another intersection of corridors. A pathetic remnant of Anchorpoint's crew cluster beneath a flashing blue light. A dozen people, including HALLIDAY, a woman Spence's age; TATSUMI (male Japanese); a LAB TECH (male).

ROSETTI
Where are the others? There should be thirty people here...

HALLIDAY
(dazed and confused)
I can't find Tom. What is it? What's going on? He was just here. I mean there. But then...

JACKSON
Forget it, he's probably already on the boat. You know him, right? C'mon, we're getting out of here ourselves...

Hicks pulls a service automatic from his vest and slips it to Jackson.

HICKS
(under his breath)
Keep an eye on everybody, okay, Ops?

JACKSON
(to the others)

Okay! You all know the Goddamn drill! Done it often enough, right? We're taking A-52 to Blue Concourse. We stick together. We'll meet up with two others groups at Bay Five and proceed to board...

TATSUMI
What is happening, please?

JACKSON
What's happening is we're getting on the boats!
Move!

INT. THE MALL

Dense haze of smoke from burning insulation; half the lights are out. A body floats face down in the pool at the foot of the waterfall; the pool is overflowing, splashing on polished concrete. Bishop emerges from a doorway and hurries along toward the freight elevator. He freezes. Hears something else. Moves quietly in the direction of the SOUND. The bar. He peers into the wreckage. Four Aliens are at work, cocooning their prey. Cocooned bodies -- CLOSE on the face of Shuman -- have been glued to the big screen, where silent images of the soccer game repeat endlessly. Bishop stares, then turns -- looks up.

A Queen. The thing towers above him in the Mall, utterly still.

Beat.

He takes a step backward. Another.

The Queen's head sways.

Another step. He bolts for the elevator.

The Queen screams her rage, scrambles after him like a famished mantis.

He's reached the elevator -- stabs desperately at the controls -- as the doors open and he's through, punching more buttons -- as the Queen strikes, her first blow buckling the steel doors.

INT. FREIGHT ELEVATOR

Her huge stinger lashes in through the gap, whipping and slicing, Bishop braced up straight in a corner, hand still on the controls. The elevator GROANS, SHUDDERS, begins to descend, then jams in the shaft. The stinger whips back out. SOUND of rending metal as the Queen continues her attack.

INT. A CORRIDOR AT BULKHEAD HATCH

Jackson ducks through first, still wearing her Ops cap. Rosetti next, then Spence, helping Halliday; the others follow, Hicks bringing up the rear. Hicks pauses, looks back through the hatch. Hears a distant CRASH, an inhuman cry. Takes a small bat of plastic explosive from his vest and squashes it against the edge of the bulkhead. Pulls a grenade from his harness, twists its neck in the delay-detonate combination, sticks in into the plastique, closes the hatch, and runs.

The smoke is getting worse.

INT. BLUE CONSOURSE

Another of the white-tiled traffic-tunnels, this one identified by a wide band of blue along either side. A small vehicle has overturned, amid blood and torn clothing. Jackson and her party are skirting the wreck as Hicks catches up with them. Jackson whirls at the SOUND of running feet, bringing up the pistol.

HICKS
Easy, Jackson!

JACKSON
Where y'been?

A distant EXPLOSION shakes the tunnel, jarring loose several tiles.

HICKS
(low, so the others won't hear) They're following us. Left 'em something to slow 'em down.

JACKSON
Might as well. Just try not to put a hole in the hull, okay?
(coughs)
Remember the air-scrubber...

HICKS
Let's move.

INT. FREIGHT ELEVATOR

Bishop on his knees, running his hands delicately over the ribbed plastic flooring. The Queen HISSES, BASHES the door. He finds a seam, levers up with his nails, gets a grip. Pulls. Sense of his android strength as the flooring comes up on pale streamers of super-glue. The elevator shakes with the Queen's fury. He finds a section of the floor that can be removed. Forces the glue-caked catches. Slams down with the heel of his hand -- the panel falls away, tumbling through smoke toward a point of fire-glow at the shaft's distant foot.

INT. SHAFT

Bishop lowers himself through the opening, dangles. An emergency service-ladder is recessed in one wall. He tries to reach one of the rungs with his foot, but the toe of his boot slips. Too far. He begins to swing back and forth like a gymnast, building momentum -- and lets go. Falls six feet before he manages to get a grip.

He begins to descend the ladder. It's a long way down.

INT. BLUE CONSOURSE

The lifeboat party emerges, coughing, from a wall of acrid smoke.

REACTION SHOT

dismay and amazement.

The tunnel has been sealed with a plug of Alien resin. Human bones, weapons, and Marine helmets protrude from the biomech convolutions of the resin-wall.

Another of the six-wheeled military vehicles carriers is skewed across the tunnel in a pool of blood.

ROSETTI
It doesn't want us to get out...

HICKS
Bugs. Just fucking bugs... C'mon.
(he climbs into the driver's seat of the carrier)
We're taking the bus. Which way, Ops?

JACKSON
(getting in beside him)
Way we came, unless you think of something better.

HALLIDAY
What's he mean, "bugs"? What is that thing?
(pointing at the resin-plug)
Where's Tom? Where's Tom?

SPENCE
(taking her arm; leading her to the carrier)
It'll be okay. Here, get up... There was an experiment. It got out of control. We have to go...

TATSUMI
What kind of experiment?

HICKS (throwing the carrier into gear; cutting off their questions)
Come on!

INT. BLUE CONCOURSE

TRACKING on carrier, CLOSE on Hicks and Jackson. She takes a flat gadget from her jacket and flips it open; a miniature computer-map on anchorpoint, like a pocket video game.

As she wiggles a tiny joystick, EXTREME CLOSEUP on miniature color screen;
she's looking for an alternate route to the lifeboats.

JACKSON

(still studying the map)
Left at B-83. We'll cut through Aquaculture, up to level to Aeroponics. We can get into Residential from there, then it's up a service tunnel behind the central mainframe...

HICKS
Sounds complicated.

JACKSON
Quickest way.

Flips the map shut. Spence is trying to comfort Halliday.

INT. AQUACULTURE FARM

An automated fish farm; factory space ranged with dozens of waist-high round white vats of dark green water. Low ceiling, dim light. Sweeps rotate slowly across the water in some vats; others are still, with floating green vegetation.

Hicks leads the party along a narrow aisle between the vats.
Jackson pauses to check her map and watch; Hicks light a cigarette, leans his elbow against the nearest vat.

JACKSON
We're doing okay...

The surface of the water behind Hicks' elbow erupts as the fish go into a feed frenzy. He yelps and jumps back, dropping his cigarette.

SPENCE
Bass. They're just hungry... Ready to be harvested.

HICKS
Sure. Let's get out of here, okay?

The others follow, keeping their distance from the vats.

INT. ELEVATOR SHAFT

Bishop jumps down, dodges a dangling power cable, squints through the smoke.
Finds a manual emergency level that opens the shaft's door.

INT. TUNNEL

A blast of air fans the flames behind him as he steps out. The carrier is there, among the scattered crates, where Hicks left it. Bishop climbs in, tries the power. A feeble whine. Touches another button. The dash flashes "BATTERY RECHARGE." He climbs down and sets off along the tunnel at a jog.

INT. AEROPONICS FARM

State of the art. Epcot-style soilless cultivation. Tall A-frame structures of white styrofoam are studded with hundreds of precisely spaced plants, their roots watered by periodic bursts of high-pressure mist. Vegetables sprout from the sides of tapering styrofoam columns. All of the wreathed in mist under brilliant halogen lamps.

Hicks scans the chamber, gun ready, as the party emerges from a hatch in the white deck behind him. Spence has to help Halliday, whose cheeks are streaked with tears. Rosetti's up last, clutching his pulse-rifle a bit too tightly, eyes darting around the chamber.

HICKS
Keep the safety on, Colonel. You could hurt somebody.

He kneels beside the hatch, takes plastique and a grenade from his harness, and slaps together another bomb.

ROSETTI
What are you doing?

HICKS
They may be following us.

He closes the hatch over the charge and locks it. Halliday starts to weep hysterically in Spence's arms; goes to her knees, then tries to curl into a fetal position on the white deck, shuddering, crying like a child. Rosetti rushes over as Spence is trying to get her to her feet.

ROSETTI
They'll hear you!

Rosetti slaps Halliday's face, hard; eliciting a piercing scream.
Spence --
no hesitation -- punches him solidly in the face; his head snaps back and he's down, reaching for his rifle.

Tableau: Spence furious, ready to kick ass; Halliday wide-eyed, stunned into silence by Spence's move; Rosetti with blood on his mouth and his hand on his gun.

JACKSON
(to Rosetti; cocking her gun)
Try it.

Hicks breaks the spell:

HICKS
(drill sergeant bellow)
Two minute fuse! Hall ass people!

The Lab Tech grabs Halliday, throws her over his shoulder, and runs.
The others scramble after him, including Rosetti, whose drive to self-preservation is paramount. Hicks and Spence take up the rear.

Hicks shoots her a grin as they run.

LONG SHOT down the aisle of aeroponic greenery, high-tech Hanging Gardens of Babylon, the lifeboat party approaching. Behind them, the hatch lifts off its hinges with the EXPLOSION, CRASHES back in a tangle of metal.
Several of the party are thrown to the deck.

JACKSON
(quietly; urgently; as the others pick themselves up)
Hicks!

HICKS
Yeah?

JACKSON
Look...

She points down another aisle of aeroponic structures.

JACKSON
(continuing)
What the hell's that?

Two of the Styrofoam structures have been overgrown with a grayish parody of vegetation, glistening vine-like structures and bulbous sacs the echo the Alien biomech motif. Patches of thick black mold spread to the styrofoam and the white deck.

HICKS
It was... cabbages or something...

TATSUMI
(with the others)
Come, please, Jackson! Which way?

JACKSON
(gripping Hicks' arm; pulling him along)
Spence said it did her monkeys, too...
(raising her voice)
Third door to the right!

INT. TUNNEL NEAR FUSION PACKAGE

Bishop comes loping down the tunnel, a certain effortless regularity evident in his run. Makes a turn into the chamber that houses the fusion package, Anchorpoint's power source. The chamber is spotless, well lit; the only sign of the current disaster is the smoke. The fusion package itself is no bigger than a Volkswagen bus, but it's obviously Anchorpoint's heart. Bishop climbs a narrow metal stairway to an overhanging control booth resembling the inverted turrent of a streamlined tank. A mirrored disk is mounted on the face of the armored hatch, above a small slot.

SECURITY PROGRAM (V.O.)
(bland feminine synthi-voice)
Please identify yourself.

Bishop removes his dogtags. As he inserts one in the slot, he presses the palm on his other hand against the mirrored surface.

BISHOP
Bishop, Science Officer, Hyperdyne A-slash-5,

Mark 3, serial number PL3358172438. Permission to inspect software safety protocols.

SECURITY PROGRAM (V.O.)
Permission denied. Inadequate rank. Please refer request to your immediate supervisor.

The slot tries to reject his tag. He shove it back in.

BISHOP
Emergency protocols. Code Theta Five Three.
Authority Rosetti comma Shuman.

SECURITY PROGRAM (V.O.)
Permission denied. Inadequate rank. Please refer request to your immediate supervisor.

It ejects his tag. He drops his hand from the disk, stares at his reflection in the mirrored surface. Blinks. Re-inserts dog tags, palm on disk again.

BISHOP
Emergency protocols. Code Theta Five Three.
Authority Welles comma Fox.

The door HISSES open instantly. He climbs in.

INT. CONTROL BOOTH

Surgically clean, unused -- Jackson ordinarily runs the show from Operations.
Bishop settles into the operator's chair, facing three blank monitors.

BISHOP
Protocols, safety.

The central screen displays an elaborate menu.

BISHOP
(continuing)
Overload failsafes.

The left screen displays a shorter menu.

BISHOP
(continuing)
Bypass overload failsafes.

A red light begins to flash.

SECURITY PROGRAM (V.O.)
Permission denied. Inadequate rank. Please refer --

BISHOP
Cancel request. Request display overload failsafe software.

SECURITY PROGRAM (V.O.)
Permission denied. Inadequate rank. Please refer --

BISHOP
Authority Welles comma Fox --

The right screen displays an animated diagram, thousands of interweaving lines and symbols, moving ceaselessly, hypnotically. Bishop studies the screen with
Zen calm, his hands poised like a pianist's above the keyboard.

And makes his move, a cybernetic reprise of the knife sequence that introduced him in "ALIENS." His fingers blur across the board with inhuman speed and accuracy as he races the fusion softwares's security system.

The lines on the screen squirm and shift, A "window" begins to open...

Faster.

Done.

Bishop gazes at the screen with might be the android equivalent of postcoital satisfaction, eyes bright. The screen displays a message:

"OVERLOAD OPTION RESET"

He beings to reprogram the overload options.

INT. RESIDENTAL (MARRIED CREW QUARTERS)

A maze of walls, doors (most of them open). Lights are on, but the smoke is thicker. Coughing, choking, Jackson shoves past the others into a large communal kitchen. On an electric range, smoke pours from a pot.
She grabs an extinguisher and blasts the pot's blackened contents, turns off the element.
Smoke abates slightly.

The quarters have an eerie Marie Celeste quality: food and drink on the table, a pack of cigarettes beside an ashtray. Spence pockets the cigarettes as she passes; Hicks opens a large white thermos: steam. He sloshes coffee into a cup and drinks.

In the next room, a communal lounge, Spence leads Halliday to a couch and sinks down beside her, head in hands. Rosetti leans against an entertainment console, face blank, gingerly rubbing his split lip.

SPENCE

(head down)

It's funny, but I had to win a contest to go through this. A science fair in Omaha, first in biology for all of Nebraska. Monoclonal antibodies...

(she looks up at Rosetti)

Then I got into Cornell. Another contest. It wasn't easy, getting out here. We all must've wanted it so bad, a whole generation, or anyway the ones like me.

ROSETTI

(looks at her wearily)

Idealists.

SPENCE

Yeah. I guess so. Build a new world, find ways to live in it... But it wasn't supposed to be like this. And it might've worked. It almost did. Now look at it. Ending...

She sits up and hugs Halliday, whose eyes are shut tight.

SPENCE

(continuing)

What I want to know, mister, is why we had to bring you?

ROSETTI

(massages his temples, then looks at her levelly)

Funding.

SPENCE

Yeah. I guess you're right. You paid for it, I guess you get to fuck it up.

HICKS

(tossing her an apple)
C'mon, time to move. Get her up?

SPENCE
Sure.

She gets Halliday unsteadily to her feet.

They move out in a tight group, Jackson leading, Hicks taking up the rear, Spence biting resolutely into her apple.

ANGLE THROUGH A DOORWAY -- REACTION SHOT

as Halliday's eyes fill with a new and deep horror.

ANGLE -- THE ROOM is a preschool, a cr_che, scattered with toys, the walls tapes with children's paintings.

HALLIDAY
O God...

Spence and the Lab Tech hurry her on, out of the cr_che. Halliday snatches a ragdoll from a shelf as they pass...

INT. TUNNEL AWAY FROM FUSION PACKAGE

Bishop heads for the elevator shaft at his usual steady pace. Approaches the open doors cautiously. Listens. Nothing. He edges in. Empty. The circuit fire has died down; melted insulation still SPUTTERS. He looks up the shaft. A long climb. He can make out the bottom of the elevator. He reaches up, grabs a rung, sets his left boot on another, straightens up -- and drives the jagged and of his broken knee joint through the side of his leg and the fabric of his fatigues in a gout of milky android blood. Hits the floor hard, the broken leg splayed at the hideous angle, the white fluid a widening pool.

Struggles to brace his shoulders against the wall. And reaches out to touch the ragged edge of artificial bone.

BISHOP

(a scientific observation)
Polycarbon...

INT. ENTRANCE TO FOOT OF MAINFRAME SERVICE SHAFT

leaving residential. Hicks and Jackson chivvy the party through a low, floor-level service hatch.

INT. SERVICE SHAFT

Party's POV, looking up: ladders, platforms, catwalks, bundles of fiberoptic lines linking the components of Achorpoint's computer mainframe, drifting smoke. The bundles loops of fiberoptics have a faint, pearlescent glow. Hicks, as usual is last up the ladder.

INT. LADDERS IN SERVICE SHAFT -- VARIOUS ANGLES

The party, climbing. Halliday still has the ragdoll. Hicks up last.

INT. PLATFORM IN SERVICE SHAFT

The Marine guard from Ops emerges through a narrow opening, Spence and Halliday follow -- and an Alien strikes from the shadows, ripping out his throat. Spence drives for his rifle as it skids across the platform. Screams from the ladder below. The gun slips through her fingers, over the edge -- gone. Halliday cringes in a corner, cradling the ragdoll in her arms, as the Alien butchers the dead Marine, slashing the corpse to ribbons with its tail. It HISSES, turns its head. Spence freezes.

INT. LADDER IN SERVICE SHAFT

Hicks is desperately trying to fight his way past the others, climbing over them --

INT. PLATFROM IN SERVICE SHAFT

Spence snatches a drum of cable from a service cart and hurls it at the Alien, distracting it from Halliday.

The beast springs toward Spence, bet she's already scrambling out along a fragile-looking catwalk that quakes with her passage. The Alien pursues her into the forest of cables with a hideous agility. Hicks clambers up through the opening, too late. Spence and the Alien are out of sight.

INT. FIBEROPTIC FOREST

Spence flattened against the mainframe, heart thumping, terrified.
Takes a breath, look out between two glowing trunks of cable. Sees the Alien's back, fifteen feet away. She bites her lip and slips out, runs. It SCREECHES behind her. She blunders into another wall. A ladder. Up the rungs, fast.
Into a short narrow space lit by a single blue emergency light. No way out.
She moves forward, hands sliding over a jumble of containers. SOUND of the beast swarming up the ladder. She's below the blue bulb now, looks down at her hand on a flat plastic case stenciled "COLONIAL TRANS AP-49
FLARE SIGNAL
OXY-ATMOSPHERIC 20MM." She tears at the catches --

The beast is almost on her.

She turns, bringing up the huge flare-pistol, and FIRES. The beast is blown backwards, off its feet, the igniting magnesium flare a white-hot chemical star burning in its guts as it flips back over the edge.

INT. PLATFORM IN SERVICE SHAFT

Hicks and the Lab Three see the burning Alien's fall as a weird pulse of light through the translucent cables.

LAB TECH
What -- ?

HICKS
(yells)
Spence! Yo! Spence!

Hicks crosses the catwalk, followed by the Lab Tech.

Halliday stares after them over the head of her ragdoll.

INT. PLATFORM IN SERVICE SHAFT

The others have climbed up now. They watch Hicks, the Lab Tech, and Spence recross the catwalk. Spence has the flare-pistol around her neck on a lanyard.

JACKSON
(checks her watch)
Okay, people! Gotta move it now. Start climbing!

HICKS
Halliday!

She rushes to the spot where we last saw Halliday. The ragdoll lies on the deck. Spence grabs it up, flings it instantly away at the touch of slime.

SPENCE
(screaming)
No! No!

Hicks pulls an olive-drab aerosol unit from his medical pack and drenches her hand with spray.

HICKS
Jackson's right. We gotta move.

Rosetti is already starting up the ladder.

INT. ELEVATOR SHAFT

Bishop, climbing. He has his web belt cinched tight around his left thigh. The splintered bone is out of sight; the leg of his fatigues, below the belt, is soaked with fluid. He uses his arms and right leg to climb, the left leg swaying free -- grotesquely, in too many directions, like the limb of a broken puppet.

He shows signs of stress. The right knee might break at the next rung... He places it carefully, taking up most of his weight on his arms.

He checks his watch.

EXTREME CLOSEUP: 2140 HOURS.

BISHOP'S POV -- UP THE SHAFT

It looks like forever.

INT. SERVICE SHAFT

Jackson uses a pistol-grip power-driver to unscrew a ventilator grill. Hicks shines his light into the opening, then crawls in. Jackson follows, then Rosetti...

INT. DUCT

Hands and knees, single file and barely room for that. Hicks has his flashlight clipped bayonet-style to his rifle. Jackson behind him, her cap reversed.

HICKS
How we doin'?

Jackson stops crawling; flips open her map, her features visible in the glow of the tiny screen.

JACKSON
Looks like another ten meters. Then we're into K-58-A and straight to the boat bays.

ROSETTI (V.O.)
(hollow echo)
Move! Hurry!

HICKS
Yes, sir.

They move forward.

INT. CORRIDOR -- DUCT EXIT

Hicks and Jackson prepare to pull the others one at a time from the waist-high opening. It's evident that the duct, at this point, slants sharply down from the opening; it's round and smooth and difficult to climb.

INT. DUCT

From below, members of the party wedge their way up with knees and elbows.

INT. CORRIDOR -- DECT EXIT

Hicks and Jackson pull Rosetti from the duct, both his hands locked around his pulse-rifle; then the Lab Tech; then Spence; they reach the Tatsumi...

SCREAMS and frenzied BANGING from the duct. Tatsumi's eyes pop wide open and he screams. Hicks braces his boot against the wall and hauls him out -- with the jaws of a freshly-transformed new beast locked on his leg. Hicks whirls his rifle like an axe, the butt slamming into the thing's head. It HISSES and twists back into the duct.

INT. DUCT -- POV OF THE TRAPPED FIVE

as the beast slides toward them down smooth steel.

INT. CORRIDOR -- DUCT EXIT

Rosetti thrusts the barrel out of his pulse-rifle past Hicks, into the duct, and FIRES on full auto, emptying his magazine. Jackson drives for the gun as Hicks snaps him off his feet with a roundhouse punch. The back of Rosetti's head slams against the opposite wall and he slides to the deck.

Jackson's on him before he can recover, practically jamming the muzzle of the pulse-rifle down his throat.

JACKSON
Y'know, always been part of me wanted to kill one of you motherfuckers...

Rosetti looks up at her.

ROSETTI
Go ahead.

Very quiet. No sound at all from the duct. Tatsumi whimpers between clenched teeth as a wisp of acid smoke rises from his torn trouser leg. Hicks shines his light down into the duct.

HICKS
Oh man... Forget it, Jackson. Anyway, it's

empty.

He tosses her a fresh magazine.

SPENCE

Hicks! The light!

She and the Lab Tech are crouching beside Tatsumi, slitting his pantleg with a knife, exposing the wound.

SPENCE

(continuing)

Watch out, it's on the cloth...

The Lab Tech yelps as a droplet of acid touches his hand. Hicks unclips his light and passes it to Spence.

SPENCE

(continuing)

On my God...

The Alien has taken a bite the size of a small grapefruit out of Tatsumi's calf; flesh and muscle are blackened, charred by the acid.

HICKS

(unclipping a flat plastic kit from his harness)

What's his name?

JACKSON

Tatsumi...

HICKS

Cocktail for ya, Tatsumi.

He opens the kit, takes out a gun-shaped hypo with a pressure tank.

HICKS

(continuing)

Can't get this on the Ginza, fella. Six times stronger than heroin, about eight other things in there to keep you up an' rockin'...

He jabs the needle through Tatsumi's pantleg; the unit HISSES.

HICKS

(continuing)

Get a Marine a year in the brig, playin' R&R with one of these...

Tatsumi moan softly as the shot hits him. Very clearly, in Japanese, he asks if it's time to go back on duty.

LAB TECH
Wha'd he say?

SPENCE
I don't know...

HICKS
We'll have to carry him.
(passes Spence a sterile dressing pack from his harness)
Think you can get a dressing on that? Not bleeding much. Like it's cauterized.
(to Rosetti)
Get up, we're moving.
(to Jackson)
Think you better hang on to the Colonel's rifle.

INT. MALL -- ENTERANCE TO FREIGHT ELEVATOR

The doors look as though someone's gone after them with a giant can opener;
they're ragged, gaping. Bishop's hands suddenly appear in the opening in the floor, grip the edge; he hauls himself up, arms quivering with strain. Last thing through is the useless leg; he has to pull it up with both hands.

He looks anxiously out into the mall. Nothing moving, no Aliens in sight.
The queen's attack has torn loose a strip of alloy trim. Bishop bends it double for strength and begins to work it beneath the belt around his thigh, still keeping an eye on the mall.

INT. CORRIDOR TO ASSEMBLY POINT -- LIFEBOAT BAY

Hicks and Jackson slogging along, dragging Tatsumi between them, Spence with the flare pistol, then Rosetti and the Lab Tech. Smoke hangs in strata.
Spence coughs. They're all feeling Anchorpoint's fire-depleted oxygen-level.
Tatsumi looks terrible: flushed, eyes glazed, but he's feeling no pain. He weakly attempts to sing a snatch of a Japanese pop song. CLOSEUP on his bandaged leg leaving a trail of yellow drops...

LAB TECH
That's right, man. Not long now.

HICKS
Hey, Jackson -- Goddamn, you were right.

He's pointing his pulse-rifle at a plastic sign mounted on the corridor wall:

LIFEBOAT BAY 20 METERS

JACKSON
(grins)
Sure. Hadda map, didn't I?

They round a corner. Ahead is one of the blue lights and another sign:

LIFEBOAT LAUNCH ASSEMBLY POINT

SPENCE
The others groups... Where's everybody else?

HICKS
Hell, they coulda launched already...

JACKSON
No.

She's looking at a wall panel with LEDs that indicate launch status of the lifeboats.

JACKSON
(continuing)
The boats are all here.

LAB TECH
Then nobody else made it...

Rosetti ignores them, keeps walking.

JACKSON
(looking after Rosetti)
I shoulda greased him.

HICKS
Shit. What's the point?

JACKSON
The point? The point's he let 'em run their fucking experiments! He coulda stopped 'em!

But he didn't! You tried, man, you and Bishop...
He let 'em do it!

HICKS

Shit no. He's just brass. He's just like you an' me, to the people who brought this down.
Wouldn't do any good to grease them either.

JACKSON

Bullshit! What not?

HICKS

Because what you wanna grease is the company...

Rosetti breaks into a stumbling run as he nears the portal at the end of the corridor, the entrance to the lifeboat bays.

CLOSEUP -- ROSETTI

frantically punching a combination. Wants that door to open. Gets
it:
slides back smooth as silk, revealing a brightly lit room filled with pristine space gear and an indeterminate number of Aliens, their appendages tangled black and shiny as a fresh catch of eels.

ROSETTI

No! Goddamn it! No!

ANGLE

The Aliens stir as he throws himself back down the corridor toward
the others.
Hicks drops Tatsumi, who sags into Jackson's arms, and raises his rifle.
FIRES a bolt past Rosetti, into the heart of the mass. Rosetti claws his way by as Spence lets loose with the flare-pistol. All the ammo she has but it's a big red distress flare straight through the portal; it bursts, crimson lightning, scattering the Aliens. Now everyone is backing down the corridor,
the way they came, Jackson burdened with Tatsumi. Rosetti fumbles with the combination on another door. Hicks is SHOOTING as he retreats.
Aliens come darting out past the dying cherry brilliance of the flare, SCREAMING down the corridor... The second door open for Rosetti -- he's through, the second Lab

Tech on his heels.

INT. AN OFFICE

Dark -- only light from the corridor, even less are Rosetti immediately tries to slam and lock the door in Spence's face -- but the Lab Tech yanks him out of the way. The others tumble in, Jackson with Tatsumi in a fireman's carry. Hicks kicks the door shut and locks it -- as something SLAMS into it, hard. Jackson lowers Tatsumi to the carpeted floor.

Hicks CLICKS the light on. Swings the muzzle of his gun around the room, circle of light jumping from one thing to the next. An office, larger than Rosetti's. 21st-century stylistics and a basic bureaucratic banality: fake teak, imitation leather. Framed portraits of beaming Weyland Yutani bigshots. Spence brushes a square object off a shelf -- the base of a small hologram-projector. A glowing DNA helix springs up.

HICKS
Don't touch anything...

LAB TECH
(to Jackson, pointing at Rosetti)
He tried to lock the door, lock us out...

JACKSON
(pulling the automatic from her jacket)
Rosetti...

HICKS
Forget it. That's what he wants. You really wanna do 'im the favor?

JACKSON
Waddya mean it's what he wants?

HICKS
I've seen it before. In combat.

Rosetti backs away from them.

SPENCE (V.O.)
Hick, come here... I think it's Trent...

He finds her around the corner of a padded partition that screens a desk-console from the rest of the room. His light finds the lab-coated corpse sprawled in the chair behind the desk, a quarter of its skull blown away, dried blood spattered across the bulkhead, a service automatic locked in rigid fingers.

HICKS
(shrugs)
Did himself. Hey, Rosetti! C'mere!

Rosetti looks around the edge of the partition, sees Trent.

HICKS
(continuing)
That's it, man. That's what it looks like.
You don't chill out quick, somebody'll do the same for you.

ROSETTI
(stares at the corpse)
Brilliant man. Company man. Very... ambitious.

Hicks takes the light off the corpse, plays it around the cubicle. A shredder, empty file folders, a bulging plastic sack of shredded documents.

HICKS
Yeah...

Hicks swings the light across the wall behind Trent's desk.

SPENCE
The wall, Hicks!

She's spooked him; the safety's off the pulse-rifle. But there's nothing on the wall, only framed diplomas, and between them a few stenciled letters...

SPENCE
(continuing)
Jesus Christ! It's a lock, Hicks! Airlock!

She clambers over the desk console, shoves the corpse out the way, and tears the diplomas from the wall, revealing the outline of a hatch and the stenciled notice:

EMERGENCY AIRLOCK - EXIT TO HULL-SECTOR 308

A CRASH from the corridor as Alien hurls itself against the door.

SPENCE

(continuing)

It's a chance! The only chance we've got! We get out on the hull, cross to the boats. We can try to get into one that way, from outside...

Hicks looks down at his watch. 2146 HOURS. If Bishop's managed to set the fusion package to blow at 2200 hours -- they don't have a hope in hell.

But why spoil it for Spence?

HICKS

Let's go for it.

Spence hauls on the red airline-style inset handle of the emergency airlock.

The handle flips down and the hatch pivots smoothly open, a light inside goes on, and the eternal synthi-voice announces:

ANNOUNCEMENT

This is a five-man emergency atmosphere lock, exit to Hull Sector Three-oh-eight, equipped with five Mark Twelve emergency suits. Each Mark Twelve suit is charged with a two-hour air supply and is equipped with automatic radar beacon, inter-suit radio, and magnetic sole plates. If you should experience difficulty with either the O-rings of the velcro strips, please activate the secondary program for additional advice.

JACKSON

There's six of us...

Space suits swing from a rack, each helmet a different color. Rosetti's pressed up close behind her, eyes fixed on the suits.

JACKSON

(continuing)

Fuck off, Rosetti; anybody stays, it's you

LAB TECH (O.S.)

Light, quick! Something's...

The Lab Tech is backing away from Tatsumi, who lies on his back on the carpeted deck, mouth gaping, eyes showing whites. A tearing SOUND as Hicks spotlights Tatsumi's bandaged leg -- where the dressing is bulging, moving,

seeping yellow fluid. A new-model chest-buster flails its way out of the wound and shuttles into the shadows beneath a chair. Twin red spots appear on Tatsumi's white shirt; two more of the things rip their way out through his stomach as he arches backwards, groaning -- the groan cut off as a fourth chest-burster pops from his mouth...

Jackson brings her pistol up with both hands, arms locked, and SHOOTs Tatsumi
in the head.

HICKS
Get in the lock! Suit up!

INT. EMERGENCY LOCK

Hicks pulls the inner door shut. The lock is white, bright, a very tight fit for the five of them. The Lab Tech reaches for one of the hanging suits,
yells as a blood-slick chest-burster loses its grip and tumbles out
of the suit's open front.

LAB TECH
Aaaaah!

Hicks shoulders the door -- just a crack; it doesn't want to open -- as Rosetti grabs a helmet and swings it underhand, knocking the little horror out of the lock. Hicks gets the door shut again.

Spence is shuddering. Rosetti is putting the helmet on, reaching for his suit.

SPENCE
J-jesus, Rosetti... How'd you do that?

ROSETTI
(beat)
I used to be a soldier

They hurriedly strip to their underwear and struggle into space suits.

Rosetti has the yellow helmet, Hicks red, Spence blue, Jackson green, and Lab Tech orange.

Spence is sealing up her space suit over freckles and a military-issue bra;
Hicks sealing his over dog tags and his acid-scarred chest.

ANNOUNCEMENT
Please be seated. Fasten lapbelts.

Narrow ledges on either side of the lock. The five sit, step in. Spence and the Lab Tech closest to the outer door. Hicks and Jackson are opposite them.

ROSETTI
(filter; suit radio; turning his helmet to face Spence) You're right, Spence. I should have tried to stop them. It would have done no good, of course, but I should have tried...

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
When we get back, there'll be a board of inquiry.
You can tell them, Colonel, tell them what happened. Help them find the ones who were responsible...

ANNOUNCEMENT
Ten-second warning. Activating outer hatch.

Rosetti's helmet turns slowly toward her. Through his faceplate bubble, the canceled eyes and blood-streaked drool of the Change...

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
He gone! Jeeees-us!

As blood wells up into Rosetti's helmet, filling it completely, and something dark begins to strike the inner surface of his faceplate, violently, again and again. The space suit hunches through inhuman postures --

As the outer hatch pivots out on hydraulics, the vacuum sucking small loose objects out into the void.

The new beast in Rosetti's suit snaps the heavy nylon lapbelt and lunges at

Spence.

HER POV

as the blood-bubble strikes her faceplate, the fanged tongue working like a piledriver, starting to split the tough plastic of Rosetti's faceplate -- tiny bubbles of blood along the first hairline crack.

ANGLE

The Lab Tech unfastens his lapbelt and grapples with the suited beast, pulling it off Spence.

Hicks is wrestling with his pulse-rifle, pinned to the bench by the struggle.

The suit radios are filled with the beast's thick gurgling ROAR. As it turns on the Lab Tech, flings him out through the open hatch, and bounds after him.

EXT. HULL -- AIRLOCK

Vacuum. Zero gravity.

The thing in Rosetti's suit catches the Lab Tech in mid-tumble, its gloved hands spread like talons, grips the Lab Tech's helmet and collar-joint in either hand, and rips his helmet off. Air explodes from the neck of his suit, lifting his air in a three-second gale that freezes instantly, becoming a small cloud of ice crystal. The Lab Tech's eyes are frozen marbles. He goes cartwheeling slowly across the hull as the beast grabs a protruding strut and spins to dace the airlock with a terrible balletic grace.

Hicks is in the hatchway. He raises the pulse-rifle, pulls the trigger. The ammo-counter flashes 00, empty. Jackson reaches past him with a fresh magazine. Hicks slaps it into the gun as the beast launches itself toward him from the strut. He FIRES. The space suit EXPLODES in a cloud of blood and acid.

Hicks bounces awkwardly out over the rim of the hatch, followed by

Jackson and
Spence.

Beat. Anchorpoint's hull stretches away to its own horizon, a flat gray expanse of broken by various structures. The body of the Lab Tech is tumbling slowly out into space.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio; looking after the vanishing Lab Tech)
I never even knew his name... Hicks... Hicks, are we gonna make it?

Hick's gloved hands is closed around something small. He open it, looks down.
His watch. 2159 HOURS.

Hicks looks into her eyes as if he sees her for the first time.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Make it? Yeah... Sure we make it.

He gives her a desperate grin.

His gloved hand, still holding the watch, takes her.

SOUND of the watch's alarm: 2200 HOURS.

Hicks' eyes are shut tight.

Nothing happens.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
Hicks? Hicks, are you okay? What is it?

He opens his eyes. Looks at her. Releases her hand.

EXTREME CLOSEUP ON WATCH

2201 HOURS

ANGLE

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
You okay?

Hicks flings with watch away. It tumbles out slowly, level with the deck, keeps tumbling...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Okay, Ops, which way to the boats?

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
Got me, man. The map was just for the inside...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
See that radio mast? Let's try that way.

They set out in single-file across the hull, Hicks leading, Jackson bringing up the rear. The radio mast, visible above the horizon, is the tallest structure in sight, a steel thorn slanted toward the stars.

Behind them, the airlock remain open, spilling light...

EXT. HULL -- LONG SHOT

Three tiny figures, their helmets bright dots of color against the monotone hull-plain: red, blue, green.

VOICE OVER: Steady rasp of human breath.

EXT. HULL -- ANOTHER ANGLE -- LONG

Shadows tangle in the light from the lock. Moving. Black talons slip over the hatch rim, followed by an eyeless Alien mask. Then another. The creatures are entirely unaffected by cold, by vacuum...

EXT. HULL -- APPROACH TO LIFEBOAT BAYS

Hicks, Spence, Jackson. Hicks gestures with his rifle: the prows of the boats.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
There you go, Ops.

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
Good navigating...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Good guessing. Still have to get into one of the damn things...

Spence loses her footing as she climbs down a ledge, goes into a slow-motion,
zero-g roll; Jackson grabs her.

EXT. HULL -- SHOT FROM UNLIT LIFEBOAT INTERIOR THROUGH A PORTHOLE

Hicks is approaching. Closer. His gloves on the porthole. His helmet-bubble CLICKS against it. The beam of his light stabs in, swings from side to side, blinks out.

EXT. HULL -- LIFEBOAT BAYS

Hicks straightens up from the porthole.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Looks good. Good as it gets. How the hell we get in?

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
I can run a bypass on the hatch latches, but I need a hotwire...

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio; starting to climb up the side of the boat)
I can strip some cable off the solar cells...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Open it that way and we lose the air.

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
We'll have to draw the backup off the tanks.
Won't matter once we're in hypersleep. No other way...

EXT. TOP OF LIFEBOAT

Spence's POV for helmet as she crouches over a flat, rectangular solar cells and tugs with her gloves tips at a small access port. She keeps losing her grip; the space suit's gloves aren't designed for fine work.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio; talking to keep her head together)
Like the science fair. I had to scrounge everything... Spent a month desoldering a TV I got out of my uncle's basement...

She manages to get the cover off -- it tumbles backward -- upward -- with the momentum on its removal. Spence peers at a densely packed mass of color-coded wiring.

SPENCE
(continuing; filter;
suit radio)
Hey, Jackson, you want anything in particular?

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
How about twenty centimeters of the red and green stuff?

Spence begins to fumble with the wiring.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
Right. Want anything else while I'm here?

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
Coffee and a danish. Black, one sugar.

EXT. HULL -- LIFEBOAT

Hicks and Jackson are trying to open the larger accessport, this one beside a porthole set into a rectangular hatch in the bow of the lifeboat.
It isn't easy. Hicks manages to hook the pulse-rifle's buttplate under the edge of the cover. He uses the barrel as a lever. The buttplate slips.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Shit.

He tries again. The cover pops open: move wiring, hydraulics.
Jackson
begins to paw at the wiring.

EXT. TOP OF LIFEBOAT

Spence's POV as she looks down at her prize, a length of red and green wire.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
They're out of coffee, but I got you hotwire...

Spence's POV as she glances up, across the hull -- and sees a dozen advancing Aliens.

SPENCE
(continuing; filter;
suit radio)
Hicks! They're coming! They don't need suits!

EXT. HULL -- LIFEBOAT

Hicks whirls around with the rifle, too quick a move for zero-g; momentum spins him around and he rolls, out past the prow, but manages to come up SHOOTING. Take out the two foremost Aliens at about twenty yards. The rest scuttle for cover.

EXTREME CLOSEUP

on ammo readout: 09.

ANGLE

Hicks gets to his feet, take a step back, and nearly tumbles again; he's bumped into another emergency airlock, this one still sealed. He climbs back across it and crouches against the raised housing, using it to steady his aim. The Aliens charge again. Five SHOTS, five Aliens blown apart. The rest get out of sight.

EXTREME CLOSEUP

on ammo readout: 04.

ANGLE

Six inches from Hick's faceplate, on the airlock hatch, a red light blinks on. The lock starts to open. Hicks scrambles back, the rifle ready at his hip, as the hatch opens -- and a space-suited figure straightens up, a yellow helmet...

CLOSEUP -- HICKS -- REACTION SHOT

HICKS (filter; suit radio; an instant of profound confusion)
Rosett...?

ANGLE

The Aliens charge. The figure turns, bringing up a pulse-rifle.

CLOSEUP ON BISHOP -- THROUGH FACEPLATE

as he hoses a full clip in to the Aliens, killing them all.

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
Hicks, help me out of the lock...

ANGLE

Hicks takes Bishop's arm and hauls him over the rim; the android's left leg is braced with the length of metal from the elevator, strapped to the space suit with heavy silver tape.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
What happened? You didn't blow the fusion back at twenty-two hundred,

Bishop passes him a fresh clip of ammunition.

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
Two overload is scheduled for twenty-two-thirty.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Why?

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
I thought you might need the time.

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)

Bishop? Hick! Come on, we gotta get his happening!

Hicks help Bishop across the hull.

EXT. HULL -- LIFEBOAT

CLOSEUP on Spence and Jackson crouching by the open service port.
They've made a rainbow spaghetti out of the port's wiring, but Jackson holds one raw end of the hotwire. Spence looks up as Hicks and Bishop arrive.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
What happened to you leg?

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
Molecular fatigue.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Bishop says we gotta go now.

JACKSON
(filter; suit radio)
No shit... Well...

She thrusts the hotwire against a contact, producing a burst of sparks.

Nothing happens.

Tries again.

Nothing.

JACKSON
(continuing; filter;
suit radio)
Third time's a charm.

A bigger burst of sparks. The hatch suddenly pops open with a rush of escaping AIR.

JACKSON
(continuing; filter;
suit radio)
How damn! Okay!

Jackson ducks, wedges helmet and shoulder through the opening -- and a queen-sized stinger erupts through the back of her neck, slicing the suit's alloy collar ring like butter. Brief but horrible SOUND on radio.

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
Jackson!

Jackson's being drawn into the opening by the unseen queen. Spence clutches furiously at Jackson's suit, trying to pull her back...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Forget it! She's gone!

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
Hicks!

Hicks and Spence turn. REACTION SHOT. What they see makes her forget trying to save Jackson's body.

The boots of Jackson's space suit vanishes through the lifeboat hatch.

A queen, her crest rising against the stars, leads the swarm against them in a solid wave...

Hicks pumps the pulse-rifle's grenade launcher, sheer reflex, no consideration for the effect of recoil in zero-g (pulse-charges have been assumed to be recoilless). The recoil kick him back against the lifeboat as the BLAST takes out five of the charging Aliens; sharp CLANG of his helmet against the boat's hull.

CLOSE THROUGH FACEPLACE

Hicks losing consciousness.

ANGLE

Bishop stands alone against the advancing swarm, the boot of his locked suitleg wedge into a narrow channel in the hull. He FIRES with a robotic accuracy, the rifle pivoting like the barrel of an automated gun turret.

CLOSE ON BISHOP'S EXPRESSION

No anger, no fear -- just total absorption in the task at hand.

ANGLE

Spence had Hicks' gun, is dragging him to his feet.

EXTREME CLOSEUP

on Bishop's ammo readout: working down to 01, steady as seconds on a stopwatch --

ANGLE

His last round is for the towering queen -- Android's don't miss.
Straight
into the jaws. Her head explodes.

But the headless body doesn't stop. It stumbles, tumbling forward, flips over, the vast abdomen with its lashing stinger outlined against the stars...

As Bishop tugs his wedged foot free and rolls, as the stinger whips down to gouge a chunk of bright steel from the hull. The carcass smashed into the lifeboat.

The swarm twitches, hesitates. With the loss of the queen's unifying intelligence, the Aliens are reduced to their usual level of instinctual action.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Bishop! Come on!

Hicks, with Spence, is fleeing across the hull, taking long zero-g leaps -- one more worries about drifting away!

SPENCE
(filter; suit radio)
The mast, Bishop! The Radio mast!

Bishop starts after them, abandoning his empty pulse-rifle, trying to bound along on his good leg, the stiff one obviously in his way, three Aliens rapidly gaining on him. He loses his balance...

Hicks and Spence have almost reached the foot of the radio mast. Handholds lead out to the tip.

Hicks sees Bishop struggling to right himself, the Aliens closing in. Snatches the rifle from Spence.

HICKS
(filter; suit radio;
to Spence)
Go on! Get out there!

Hicks recrosses the hull to Bishop. SHOOTS the nearest Alien, gets a grip on Bishop's suit, pulls him up, tries for the second Alien but misses. They start for the mast, Hicks FIRING back at the swarm.

Spence is a third of the way out on the mast, body drifting in space, clinging to a handhold.

Hick and Bishop haul themselves hand-over-hand along the mast.

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
The fusion package, Hicks... Overload...

HICKS
(filter; suit radio)
Yeah... But it means we win... Come on.

The swarm closes around the foot of the mast in a single writhing mass. One spring onto the handholds and scuttles out along the mast like a spider.

Hicks BLOWS it off.

EXTREME CLOSEUP

on ammo readout: 04.

BISHOP
(filter; suit radio)
Four minutes to overload.

ANGLE

Hicks blasts another Alien -- as a deafening SQUAWK of feedback rattles the suit radios, followed by a waves of STATIC.

EXT. SPACE

The U.P.P. interceptor, pitted and scorched by the nuking of Rodina, settles toward Anchorpoint on steering jets.

CLOSEUP ON A GUNPORT

sliding smoothly open, reveal the vicious-looking snout of a Gatling-style pulse-cannon.

EXT. MAST -- FROM HICKS' POV

as a stream of withering fire cuts a swathe thorough the swarming Aliens.

VIETNAMESE COMMANDO (V.O.) (filter; over static and screaming harmonics)
Come! You come!

Followed by a frantic burst in her own language.

EXT. SPACE -- FROM MAST

Spence's POV as the interceptor nears the mast tip, the cannon still pumping.
The airlock in the interceptor's lower surface slides open. Light from inside.

Spence kicks off from the mast, manages to grab the rim of the interceptor's airlock.

Hicks FIRES his last round into an Alien on the mast.

The interceptor still coming down, crumpling the tip of the mast in a burst of sparks as Hicks and Bishop kick off. Hicks grabs Spence's free hand; Bishop grabs Hick's ankle. Spence hauls them all into the cramped space of the airlock. The lock closes as an Alien launches itself from the mast...

INT. INTERCEPTOR AIRLOCK

SOUND of the Alien as it slams into the lock. Hicks, Bishop, Spence are crammed in like sardines.

EXT. INTERCEPTOR LOCK

The Alien scrabbling furiously for a hold...

INT. INTERCEPTOR

As the inner lock opens and the commando plunges her tattooed arms in to yank Spence free. Spence fumbles with her helmet and snaps it off. Bishop pulls himself from the lock; in spite of his leg, he dives for the ship's controls. His hands dart from one switchboard to the next. Nothing happens. He look up through his faceplate at the commando.

BISHOP
(voice muffled by his helmet)
Go!

She looks at him impassively. Beat. Then reaches past to press a sequence of three buttons.

EXT. SPACE

The interceptor. The Aliens cluster like aphids along the mast. The interceptor's ENGINES erupt in a gout of flame.

EXT. SPACE -- ANOTHER ANGLE

The Alien on the airlock loses its grip, tumbles into the rocket blast.

EXT. ANCHORPOINT -- INTERCEPTOR'S POV

The station is receding

The fusion package goes overload.

WHITEOUT. Beat.

FADE TO BLACK.

FADE IN:

A SINGLE STAR

Then another star. Then the interceptor, adrift, showing no lights.

EXT. INTERCEPTOR -- ANOTHER ANGLE

Additional damage visible from the Anchorpoint blast.

INT. INTERCEPTOR

Dim light. The commando is slumped against a wall of dead switches, watching Bishop. Hick, Spence, and Bishop wear their space suits, minus helmets and air tanks. Bishop is bending over a panel of exposed circuitry, working with a delicate probe. His suit is open to the waist; he wears a miniature worklight on a band across his forehead. Spence is asleep, her head on Hicks' lap.

HICKS

Bishop...

Bishop looks up, the beam of the worklight glaring in Hicks' eyes.

BISHOP

Yes?

HICKS

Bishop, are Spence and I... I mean... Are we infected, man?

A small steady tone SOUNDS, muffled inside Bishop's suit. He puts the probe down and reaches into his suit, bringing out his wristwatch.

He looks at the time. The tone stops. He puts the watch down and looks at Hicks. Beat.

BISHOP

No, you aren't. I obtained solid parameters on the incubation period... Neither of you is a carrier. Neither is she.

(glancing toward the commando)

Although I couldn't be certain until...

HICKS

Your watch? Until you watch went off?

BISHOP

Yes.

Bishop reaches into his suit again and brings out a service automatic.

The commando says something angrily, wearily, in her own language.

Bishop hands her the gun. She tosses it aside with evident disgust, curls up, eyes closed.

HICKS

That was for us? If we were...

BISHOP

Yes.

(he looks at the commando again)

She's dying, Hicks. Radiation poisoning...

HICKS

Can we do anything?

BISHOP

No.

Spence groans in her sleep. Hicks absently smooths her hair back from her eyes.

BISHOP

You're a species again, Hicks. United against a common enemy...

Hicks moves Spence's head, pillows her on a folded jacket, swings his way over to the commando, offers her water from a plastic bottle. She refuses it.

HICKS

Yeah?

BISHOP

The source, Hicks. You'll have to trace them back, find the point of origin. The first source. And destroy it.

HICKS

I dunno, Bishop. Maybe we just oughta stay out of their way...

BISHOP
You can't, Hicks. This goes far beyond mere interspecies competition. These creatures are to biological life what antimatter is to matter.

HICKS
How do you mean?

BISHOP
There isn't room for the both of you, Hicks, not in this universe.

HICKS
That's crazy, Bishop...

BISHOP
No. You're already at war, Hicks. War to extermination. The alien knows no other mode.

HICKS
Hell, man, we been at war all my life. Near enough, anyway. With her.
(he looks down at the commando)
With all her brothers and sisters. That's what got us into this shit in the first place!

BISHOP
But now you've seen the enemy, Hicks. So has she. She's not it. Neither are you. This is a Darwinian universe, Hicks. Will the alien be the ultimate survivor?

Hicks doesn't answer. He just looks at Bishop. Bishop goes back to his circuitry.

CLOSE on Spence's sleeping face, and the face of the dying commando.

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. SPACE

Approach of a large ship.

The PING of homing radar.

ANGLE ON THE HULL

As it slides past, enormous letters: KANSAS CITY.

EXT. SPACE - ANGLE UP

From below Kansas City as a wide bay opens.

The interceptor comes INTO FRAME and is drawn up into the brightly-lit hold.

The bay closes.

EXT. SPACE

Kansas City. Receding. Gone.

The stars.

FADE OUT.

THE END

All movie scripts and screenplays on this site are intended for educational purposes only.

Screenplays for You - free movie scripts and screenplays

Screenplays and movie scripts organized alphabetically:

<#>A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z PDF ALL

Alien: Resurrection (1997)

by Joss Wedon.

Final Script.

More info about this movie on IMDb.com

EXT. DEEP SPACE SILENT BLACK.

We sweep slowly across an endless tapestry of stars. Finally she comes into view:

the U.S.S. AURIGA. A massive research vessel that sits majestically just beyond Pluto's orbit.

We TRACK ALONG the side of the ship, and along the silent, empty corridors, coming at last to a door with two guards standing rigid in front of it. Full armour, powerful shockrifles, expressions empty and cold.

INT. AURIGA

INT. MEDLAB

Along a row of screens, where we see the first signs of life readouts, lights, data -- all shifting and collating on the blinking screens.

As we move ALONG them, a figure-in a labcoat passes through the frame, then another, leading us along the lab to settle on what looks like a Cryogenic tube, not big enough for a human.

Still TRACKING around it, we glimpse inside some vague, fetal mass encased in a clear, aspic-like gel.

Tubes and cables a attached to the mass, running out of the machine.

As we still CIRCLE, the shape begins to be more coherent, till we can see what might even be a face.

Eyes, shut tight. Sleeping.

Dreaming.

ANGLE: WHEAT.

A birds eyes view of a field, the soft golden waves filling the screen. Sharp contrast to what we have seen before.

There is a woman wandering through the field. Beside her a girl, seven or eight, in dingey sundress. Both have black, tousled hair.

GIRL'S VOICE

My mom always said there were no monsters -- no,real ones -- but there are.

The girl stops, looks around her. The wheat comes all the way up to her chest, and nothing else is visible as far as she can see.

She looks back at the woman but the woman is already more than fifty yards away.

The girl's expression becomes perplexed.

She slaps a bug on the back of her neck. Pulls it off and is HUGE, wriggling fleshily in her hand. Her expression becomes even more distraught, but she cannot muster forth a shout.

The sound of insects-fills the air. Another bug lands on her, another. She looks down in growing horror and sees:

Blood. At her feet, rising, filling the field, rising above the wheat, a sea of blood now, dark, thick.

The girl tries again to scream, raises her arms. She is completely covered in insects, a skittering black shroud of them, and when she finally does SCREAM they flood into her mouth.

CUT TO:

INT. LAB

Instruments show a jolt in heart rate, blood pressure.

Scientists note it down, look over at the thing in aspic.

We can tell that time has passed because it is much bigger, nearly the size of a man, and in a new case.

The camera moves in on the cardiograph, then moves down, to show a second one. Tracking a smaller, much faster heartbeat.

CUT TO:

INT. HALLWAY

Tiny. dark, and we are moving through it at impossible speed turning into another without slowing, up into an air vent, still moving, moving until we reach a chamber, some place where all we can see is a mass of dark, moving, inhuman file it welcomes us in, envelops us...

ANGLE: RIPLEY

Lying somewhere, maybe the dark-chamber -- in the dream it keeps shifting.

She opens her eyes, but they are dark, whiteless.

She reaches for her chest and begins scratching . Hard.

Tearing at it, as blood wells up, spilling over her sides.

CUT TO:

INT. OPERATING CHAMBER

And the cause of this dream becomes apparant:

ANGLE: RIPLEY'S CHEST

being cut open with a lasersaw.

We see her body still has a layer of the aspic-slime clinging to it. And her skin is unnaturally blue. But as we PAN from her chest to her face her identity is unmistakable.

Around her are several men in operating masks. Cutting her GEDIMAN, a young and enthusiastic scientist. One man, seemingly in charge, stands a bit off, watching. This, by tag on his coat, is DR WREN.

WREN

Careful ... ready with the amnio...

Gediman finishes cutting. Another man steps in with a clamp. Sets it. Pulls apart the chest.

GEDIMAN

There she is ...

He says it like he's found a lost kitten. He reaches in and pulls out a sleeping, fetal but nearly ready to burst ALIEN. Others work at severing umbilical threads that tie it to Ripley's chest.

GEDIMAN

Here we go.

He holds it up and others step in with the amnio, a sort of incubator filled with amniotic fluid.

The alien SCREAMS, its tiny mouth full with teeth, and wriggles out of his grasp.

WREN

Watch it!

Everybody panics -- but before the thing can get completely away from him, Gediman grabs it and sticks it in the amnio. Someone shuts the top rapidly.

Everybody looks at each other for a moment.

GEDIMAN

Well ...

WREN

The host?

A surgeon looks at Ripley's readings.

SURGEON

Doing fine.

Gediman looks at Wren, hopefully. Wren nods.

WREN

Sew her back up.

Gediman and the surgeon get to work, as the others carefully remove the alien.

GEDIMAN

Well, that went as well as could be expected--

Ripley's hand LASHES OUT, GRABS the surgeon's forearm. He yells in pain as her fingers dig into him, the others scramble knocking things over and we HEAR HIS BONE CRACKING.

SMASH CUT TO:

INT. RIPLEY'S CELL

Sudden stillness.

Ripley crouches in the middle of a small, dark chamber. She's wide eyed, staring straight ahead in a state of near catatonia. Hair tangled and wild. But at least she's not so blue as before.

The only light on her comes from directly above, from a thick pane of glass in the center of the ceiling.

ANGLE: ABOVE THE CELL

A guard stands on the floor above, looking into the cell through the square of glass in the floor, directly above Ripley.

(We see other panes of glass lining the floor, indicating more cells below.)

ANGLE: RIPLEY

She is still for a long while. Then she lifts her hands, looking at them.

Touches her face, her skin.

She fingers her tunic, pulls down the neck. There is a scar running along her chest.

She fingers it thoughtfully. -

She looks at her forearm. Tattooed near the crook of her elbow is the number 8.

She looks up, her face unreadable.

CUT TO':

INT. LAB

Ripley is sitting on a table as Gediman draws blood from her.

He deposits it in a test beaker, studies her eyes.

Wren enters, looking at a chart.

WREN

How's our number Eight today?

GEDIMAN.

Appears to be in good health...

WREN

(noticing his tone)

How good?

GEDIMAN

Extraordinary . As in, completely off our projected charts.

(shows him some photos) Look at the scar tissue. See the recession?

WREN

This is from --

GEDIMAN

Yesterday!

WREN

This is good. This is very good.

GEDIMAN

I'd like to run some tests: strength, coordination... We're not looking at a normal cloning arc.

WREN

Approved.

Wren goes up to Ripley, studies her face with satisfaction.

WREN

Well, it looks like you're going to make us all very proud.

She grabs his throat with dazzling speed, applying deadly pressure as she brings his face to hers. Her eyes are burn but lost.

RIPLEY

Why?

GEDIMAN

Oh my god...

He is as wide eyed as WREN , and he isn't having his windpipe crushed.

After a moment the shock wears off and he slams his hand into the alarm.

Klaxons, red light fire up.

A guard rushes in, levels his weapon at Ripley. After a moment of staring him down, she opens her hand. Wren falls to his knees gasping.

The guard FIRES his rifle at her -- a powerful electrical charge lashes out and sends her flying back into the corner.

WREN

No! No! I'm all right!

The guards keep their weapons -- 'burners' , these shockrifles are called -- leveled at Ripley. She has recovered from the shock quickly, sits crumpled in the corner, looking at nothing in particular.

RIPLEY (wearily)

Why... ?

CUT TO:

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM

Wren and Gediman watch through a one way mirror as a scientist tests Ripley.

With them is General PEREZ, the man in charge this boat. Ramrod straight and about as gruff as you would expect, he stares at Ripley suspiciously.

ANGLE: RIPLEY

The scientist is holding up cards with pictures on them: house, dog, boat.

Ripley gives answers we can't hear through the glass, looking pissed off and bored.

WREN

It's unprecedented.

GEDIMAN

Totally! She's operating at a completely adult capacity.

PEREZ

And her memories?

WREN

There are gaps. And there's some degree of cognitive dissonance.

GEDIMAN

She's freaked.

Wren shoots Gediman a stern look at his unscientific parlance.

WREN

"It" has some connective difficulties. A kind of low level emotional autism.

Certain reactions....

Perez looks at Ripley through the glass, then exits into the hall.

TO:

INT HALL - CONTINUOUS

The two scientists follow, pace him as he strides down towards a second observation room.

GEDIMAN

But the thing is, we can't terminate her. It.

PEREZ

You haven't told me what you think has caused this.

Cloned genes don't contain memory cells, not even when they're brought to adult term. I'm right?

GEDIMAN

There's been cases

PEREZ

Not like this.

WREN

Well, we don't have nearly enough data... but in some cases there is a collective memory passed down generationally . At a genetic level. Like instinct, only more complex structurally.

PEREZ

In some cases . You're talking about the alien.

WREN

Yes.

PEREZ

You promised me there wasn't going to be any crossing.

WREN

It's not like the other ones..

Perez punches code, puts his hand on the scanner and the second observation room door opens.. He steps in, the other two right behind him.

CUT TO:

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM TWO

Darker than the first one, and with two of the heavily armoured guards by the door.

Apart from-that, identical. Perez turns to the others.

PEREZ

But there is some genetic mix.

WREN

Yes.

PEREZ

Will there be further mutation?

GEDIMAN

Mutation isn't exactly... I don't think so.

WREN

That's one of the things we need to study.

PEREZ

All right. You can keep it. But secure, under obso , and for God's sake keep it away from here. I don't want any more surprises.

And as he speaks the ALIEN RISES RIGHT BEHIND HIM -- it's big, the ridges on its head indicating a young queen -- it hisses and LUNGES at the back of his head.

The reinforced plastic window between them, which we couldn't see, stops it.

As it hits, a thin laser grid buzzes to life, sparks crackling on the alien's face.

Its bile trails darkly on the glass as it backs off.

Perez turns to look at it with the others.

PEREZ

It took a hell of a lot to get us here.

GEDIMAN

No shit.

Wren shoots him another look.

PEREZ

How soon before this one's ovulating?

WREN

Days.

PEREZ

Is that normal?

WREN

No way of knowing for sure, but I'd say it's accelerated.

(After a moment) We're going to need the supplies.

PEREZ

They're coming. Soon.

CUT TO:

INT. MESS HALL

Ripley sits across from Gediman. He is eating at a good pace - Ripley, however, has stopped. She is staring at her fork, her brows furrowed. Turns it over in her hand, in her mind.

GEDIMAN

"Fork".

The memory comes, and she shakes her head wearily.

RIPLEY (softly)

Fuck....

GEDIMAN (pretending to correct her)

"Fork".

Ever so slightly, she smiles. The smile fades, and after a moment:

RIPLEY

How did you...

GEDIMAN

How did we get you? Blood samples from Fiori 16. On ice.

Do you remember that place?

RIPLEY

Does it grow?

GEDIMAN

Does it.....Yeah. Rapidly.

RIPLEY

It's a queen.

GEDIMAN

How did you know that?

RIPLEY

It'll breed. You'll die. Everyone in the ... fucking....

(searches for the word, then spits it out) ... company. Will die.

GEDIMAN

Company?

WREN (O.S.)

Weyland Yutani.

He has entered behind her, comes up to the table.

WREN

Our Ripley's former employers. Terran Growth conglomerate, had some defense contracts under the military. Before your time, Gediman -- they went under decades ago, bought out by Walmart. Fortunes of war.

(to Ripley)

You'll find things have changed a good deal since your time.

RIPLEY

I doubt that.

WREN

We're not flying blind here, you know. This is United Systems military, not some greedy corporation. The potential benefits of this race go way beyond urban pacification.

New alloys, new vaccines ... there's nothing like this in any world we've seen.

You should be very proud.

She laughs, bitterly.

RIPLEY

Oh, I am.

WREN

And the animal itself is wonderous. They'll be invaluable once we've harnessed them.

RIPLEY

It's a cancer. You can't teach it tricks.

This stops Wren, and he retreats silently. Ripley repeats word to herself, thinking.

RIPLEY

"Them" ...

CUT TO:

INT. HALL CONTINUOUS

As Wren is leaving the mess, he is accosted by an ensign.

ENSIGN

Doctor, General Perez is asking for you. We've been hailed.

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEP SPACE

we see the Auriga far in the distance Suddenly A SHIP ROARS INTO FRAME, heading for it.

A small vessel, it is every bit dirty and jerry-rigged as the Auriga is pristine.

To accentuate the difference, the sudden roar of its engines is accompanied by

HEAVY, THRASHING ROCK MUSIC.

CUT TO:

INT. COCKPIT CONTINUOUS

The music is coming from nearby. Piloting the ship toward the Auriga is HILLARD, a roughskinned woman in her forties, along with RANE, a slight and quiet fellow.

Behind them stands ELGYN, the leader of the group.

Has the kind of authority that doesn't need to flaunt itself.

Maybe fifty, by the silver in his hair. He speaks into the vidcom

ELGYN

(good naturedly)

My authorization code is 'fuck you' , son. Now open the goddamn bay or General Perez is gonna do a Wichita stomp on your virgin ass.

He switches off.

RANE

Wichita stomp?

ELGYN

I guarantee that boy's. never seen the inside of a woman.

(to Hillard)

Bring us in on three-oh descent, ride the parallel.

HILLARD

Darlin', it's done.

ELGYN

Don't cut thrust till six hundred meters. Give em a little fright.

He puts his hand on her shoulder, runs it up along her cheek as he exits.

They're more than friends.

He moves through a hallway, sticks his head in a cubicle.

ELGYN

Christie! St Just! Rise and shine. We're docking.

He proceeds into:

INT. CARGO BAY - CONTINUOUS

It's the largest space in this boat, two stories high. Taking up most of the space are two HARVESTERS, big rusty hovering threshers roughly the size of winnebagos.

As Elgyn enters, we CRANE UP to reveal ANNALEE-CALL working atop one of them.

She's young, tough -- at home with this motley bunch despite her youth and prettiness.

ELGYN

Call! CALL!

The music is louder here -- it's blasting from a box in the corner.

Elgyn switches it off.

ELGYN

Call!

CALL

What?

ELGYN

We're docking! Are the cargo trucks secured?

CALL

I checked 'em an hour ago.

ELGYN

I don't want em so much as rattled. Any leakage, I take it out of your hide.

CALL

Trust me, boss.

ELGYN (laughs)

Not my style.

He leans down, looks under the thresher. Lying on a gurneylike steel dolly, working under the machine, is VRIESS, chie mechanic. Late forties, in pretty good shape considering he's got no legs.

ELGYN

How's it looking?

VRIESS

It's never gonna be pretty. but she'll fly. The other one's a total fucking write-off.

ELGYN

You'll make it good.

VRIESS

Don't be so sure.

(calls out) Call! Adjust the generator plugs!

ELGYN (straightening up)

They just gotta run, Vriess. They don't gotta run far.

He exits.

CUT TO: INT. HALL CONTINTJOUS

CHRISTIE is up and mostly dressed. He is black, very large, and has distinctly military bearing. He speaks with quiet, don't-fuck-with-me authority.

CHRISTIE

What's our status?

ELGYN

We're coming in. Time to enjoy a little of the general's hospitality.

ST JUST

Oh great. Army food..

ST JUST ("San-Jhoost") is slim, Asian -- and the epitome of cool.

Moves quickly and silently, a sly grin playing about lips. He is strapping a contraption to his forearm. It resembles a deringer holder, but a very complex one.

ELGYN

We could use a rest, till the heat's off and Vriess can get those harvesters on their feet.

This'll keep us for a couple of days, assuming the natives are friendly.

CHRISTIE

We expecting any trouble?

ELGYN

From Perez? I doubt it. Still, let's be ever vigilant.

CUT TO: INT. CARGO BAY CONTINUOUS

ANGLE: VRIESS working intently, the extremely nasty blades of the thresher inches above his head.

VRIESS

I'm patched in. Check the sequence timer.

(no answer)

Call?

ANGLE: THE CONTROLS

A hand reaches in toward the ON switch.

ANGLE: VRIESS

VRIESS

Call?

The thresher GRINDS TO LIFE -- a hundred blades and claws spinning at Vriess's head!

Vriess wheels out from under the machine in a second flat.

VRIESS

Goddamnit!

The second he's out he hits a lever and the back of the dolly flies up, transforming it-into a wheelchair.

VRIESS

Johner! You son of a whore!

JOHNER jumps down from the machine, laughing. He's thickset, mean and ugly, with ugly scars crisscrossing his ugly bald head.

Thought I'd give you a little haircut there.

VRIESS

You fuck!

Call, who has been over on the other side of the thresher, ably climbs up on it and switches it off.

JOHNER

You should see your face. Vriess, you must have soiled yourself.

VRIESS

One of these days I'm gonna kill you. My hand to god.

JOHNER

Well, you already gave him your feet ...

CALL (jumping down)

You're a limp fucking scrotum, you know that?

JOHNER

Either of you want a piece of me, I'm less than busy.

VRIESS

Any time.

CALL

Vriess. Forget it. He's been sucking down too much homebrew.

JOHNER

Don't push me, little Annalee. You hang with us a while, you'll learn I'm not the man with whom to fuck.

He exits, full of annoying bravado.

VRIESS

That inbred cocksucker.

He feels his forehead, comes up with a bit of blood. Realizes how close it was ...

Call looks up at the thresher.

CALL

I hate machines.

VRIESS

Well, now we know it works ...

CUT TO: EXT. AURIGA DOCKING BAY

As it opens to admit the proportionally tiny ship. The bay on the bottom of the Auriga

- the doors are actually OVER the ship, which rises into the airlock.

INT. AIR LOCK

The outer doors close under the ship. Pressurized air shoot into the airlock for a few seconds, and then the inner door opens. the ship rising into the bay.

INT. BAY

The ship moves slowly along the huge dock to land gently at far end.
The top of the ship is nearly level with a grated platform that runs the length of the bay.

Three soldiers in full armour stand rigid on the platform. The hatch atop the ship slowly opens. One by one the crew files out. Seeing them en masse, we get a clearer view of what separates them from this Environment. They're not wearing uniforms. They're an eclectic, fiercely individualist group, their look varied -- spots of bright color showing through militarian space gear. Johner's bright turquoise bowling shirt. Elgy's and St Just's floorlength leather dusters. Even Vriess's chair stands out as he wheels down the platform.

What they have in common is the toughness, the wary eyes, leathery skin. The cool readiness to kill. These guys are smugglers. A long while ago, you'd have called them pirates

All eight of them emerge, one by one, looking around them. They file past the silent, uniformed soldiers. The last one suddenly puts a hand on Johner's jacket, stops him.

There is a bulge under it. A green sensor light on the back of the soldier's glove turns red when he touches the bulge.

SOLDIER

No projectile weaponry is allowed on board the vessel, sir.

Johner opens his jacket, shows what he's packing: a large thermos.

JOHNER

Moonshine. My own. Much more dangerous.

SOLDIER

Sorry, sir.

ELGYN (to Perez)

What, do you think we're going to hijack the vessel? All eight of us?

No, I think one of your asshole crew is going to get drunk and put a bullet through the hull. we are in space, Elgyn

He enters from the antechamber, motions for the crew to follow him.

Vriess comes abreast of the soldier.

VRIESS

Wanna check the chair?

The soldier makes no response, simply falls in behind Call, the last of them.

CUT TO: INT. ANTECHAMBER

The long neck that connects the bay to the body of the ship. The group proceeds down it, the crew looking about them at the sterile grandeur.

ST JUST

This place is really clean.

JOHNER (to a guard)

Hey. You got any whores on this vessel?

(the guard remains stonefaced)

Any loose women with bad eyesight?

PEREZ

I think you'll find our accommodations somewhat spartan. Although the cook sets a good-table.

JOHNER

That ain't what I'm hungry for.

VRIESS (to Call)

What's the matter?

She is looking around her, somewhat tensely.

CALL

I don't like army.

HILLARD

Yeah, join the fucking club.

CUT TO: ANGLE: MONEY

A stack of bills dropped down on a desk, then another. They're green, and identifiably money. But they're square, about the size of cocktail napkins. The face on them is unfamiliar. Thousand dollar bills.

WIDER ANGLE: INT. PEREZIS CHAMBERS LATER

A good sized suite, decorated in a sparse, military fashion. Perez is behind his desk, the money sitting between him and Elgyn.

PEREZ

This wasn't easy to come by.

ELGYN

Neither was our cargo. You're not pleading poverty, are you?

PEREZ

We're well funded. I mean the bills. There's not many that still deal in coin.

ELGYN

Just the ones that don't like their every transaction recorded. The fringe element.

I guess that would include you, though, wouldn't it?

PEREZ

Drink?

ELGYN

Constantly. I'm guessing whatever you've got going here wasn't exactly approved by congress.

Perez pours two whiskeys.

PEREZ (changing the subject)

So where do you go from here?

ELGYN

Out by the Handle. We've got a couple of harvesters, we can unload 'em on one of the collectives if Vriess and Call get 'em working.

PEPEZ

Call. Where'd you find her?

ELGYN

She is severely fuckable, isn't she? - And the very devil with a socket wrench.

I think Vriess somewhat pines.

He takes a stack of bill, smells it. He likes the smell.-

ELGYN

She is curious about this little transaction. You can hardly blame her, Awfully cloak and dagger...

Perez hands a drink to El%m.

PEPEZ

This is an army operation.

ELGYN

Most army research labs don't have to operate outside regulated space.

And they don't call for the kind of cargo we brought.

PEREZ

Do you want something, Elgyn?

ELGYN .

Just bed and board, couple of days worth. If we're not imposing.

PEREZ

Not at all. Keep out of the restricted areas, don't start any fights, and mi casa is yours too.

Elgyn drinks to that.

PEREZ

I trust, of course, that you can mind your own business.

ELGYN (smiles)

I'm famous for it.

They drink.

CUT TO: INT. HALLWAY - RESTRICTED AREA

The 'cargo' is rolled down the corridor, armed guards flank it. It is wheeled into:

INT. A CHAMBER

Where Wren and a few others are waiting. Gediman looks a little nervous, not sure this is a good idea.

The cargo is locked into place on the floor and a guard works the electric lock.

It springs open and the guard slides off a side panel.

They are stacked one on the other, five of them in all, cryotubes. People sleeping inside.

One by one the tubes are hauled to one side of the room as the second unit is wheeled in.

By the end there are ten people sleeping side by side in their tubes in the dark chamber.

The scientists meanwhile retire to INT. AN ADJOINING CHAMBER with a long glass window looking at the chamber.

The last of the guards leaves the chamber and we see the door lock behind them.

Wren starts pushing buttons.

The glass tops of the cryotubes slide open. We see temperature and lifesign gauges begin to change..

There is a thick whirring as a part of the ceiling above the tubes lowers, lowers, and rotates slowly.

Stuck to the other side of it are ten alien eggs. The ceiling rotates just enough so that they are aimed at the heads of the sleepers.

For a moment nothing happens.

One of the sleepers eyes flutter slightly. Opens. All ten eggs open simultaneously.

CUT TO: INT. CONFERENCE HALL

A huge room, used for assemblies and events. it has a chain basketball net set up at one end, crude court lines taped to the floor. Ripley stands beneath the net with a ball, dribbling absently.

At the other end are set up tables and folding chairs. The crew of the Betty, sans Elgyn, are filing in to eat here. Johner spies Ripley, smiles.

JOHNER

Ooh.

Johner comes up to Ripley. Her expression makes it clear how much she enjoys having him in her face.

JOHNER

How about a little one on one?

She keeps dribbling, says nothing.

JOHNER

What do you say?

RIPLEY

Get away from me.

JOHNER

Why should I?

RIPLEY

Because pain hurts.

He falters a moment at her quiet threat, then:

JOHNER

Are you gonna hurt me then? I think I might enjoy that.

He smiles his ugly smile. She smiles back.

She hits him solidly in the chest -- and he flies back ten feet, landing badly on a group of chairs.

His mates fly into action, Christie grabs a standing ashtray.
Hillard jumps Ripley from behind. She throws her off with a -- chucks the basketball at her hard enough to pop the air out of it.

Christie swings at her and SMASHES her right in the face.

She arcs back... and right back up, at Christie's throat before he has a chance to react, squeezing, batting away the ashtray just a trickle of blood coming down her nose --

Johner comes at her again and she leaps on him, throws him to the ground, snarling,

SHE'S GONNA RIP HIS THROAT OUT WITH HER TEETH.

WREN

Ripley.

Ripley looks up and four guards are pointing burners at her. Wren and Gediman behind them.

Call, standing to one side with Vriess, reacts visibly to the name. Everybody is slowly backing off. St Just stands with his hands behind his back, as if concealing something.

Call watches in rapt silence.

WREN

Don't let's have a scene.

Ripley lets go of Johner, stands.

RIPLEY

He... smells

WREN

I imagine he does.

JOHNER (barely breathing)

What the fuck are you?

She looks down on him -- in both senses of the phrase. -Look around at everone staring at her.

She wipes the bit of blood from under her nose, flicks it away. Exits.

WREN (to Gediman, amused)

Social skills, less than a hundred' percent.

ANGLE: RIPLEY'S BLOOD

The few drops she flicked away sizzle on the floor -- not eating through, but melting a small patch.

TO: INT. LABS - LATER

A large metal box is being wheeled next to an observation pen.
Soldiers surround it, weapons at the ready. Not one of them at ease.

Wren and Gediman watch intently.

WREN

What's the status on the Queen?

GEDIMAN

We still haven't detected the origin of the reproductive anomalies.
But the egg laying stage appears to be over.

WREN

Did we do something wrong?

GEDIMAN

I don't know. I think we covered everything. But these redundancies...

A soldier lifts a panel in the pen and then doors to the cage come open automatically.

Everyone waits.

A fullgrown alien suddenly bolts into the pen. The soldier shut it as quickly as humanly possible.

WREN

Father, check security status, observation pen six.

Father, the voice of the ship, replies after a moment in a dulcet, comforting tone.

FATHER

Pen six secure, security systems functional at 100%.

WREN

Good. Now the others.

CUT TO: INT. SLEEP CHAMBERS - NIGHT

We see VARIOUS ANGLES of people at night:

Rane, in a chamber on the Auriga.

Hillard and Elgyn, in a slightly more lush one.

Perez, in his quarters.

VRIESS, rolling about the Aurigals engine room, looking it over.

Christie, St Just, Call and Johner, all playing poker in the mess hall.

CUT TO: INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - RIGHT

A sleep cycle is indicated here by the low lighting and the near emptiness of the room.

Gediman alone is in here, writing observations down in a notebook as he watches the pen.

Inside are three aliens. Two of them seem to be hibernating, curled up in the corner, but the third faces the glass, tilting its head and hissing at it.

Gediman sits right up close to it, his face just inches away from the beast's.

It draws back its lips, opens its mouth. The metallic tongue issues slowly forth, dripping with slime.

GEDIMAN (softly, fascinated)

Is that a distended externus lingua ... or are you just happy to see me?

The creature hisses. retracts the tongue. Gediman scribbles few notes.

Something moves in the dark behind him. Before he can notice, a hand closes on his shoulder.

It's Ripley. She steps forward, eyes locked on the cage. Gediman seems only mildly surprised.

GEDIMAN

How did you get in here?

RIPLEY

Beautiful, aren't they?

GEDIMAN

Yes. Yes they are. I've been monitoring their interaction.

He points at a audiograph by the wall, blips and waves interrupting the vibrating line, indicating sound.

He notices that her hand is still on her shoulder.

GEDIMAN

They communicate. Through ultrasonic soundwaves. Sort of like bats.

RIPLEY

I know.

She looks at him.

RIPLEY

I can hear them.

GEDIMAN (smiling)

Amazing ...

She runs her hand through the back of his hair, gently urging him up off his chair.

GEDIMAN

Ripley...

RIPLEY

Shhhhh.

She pulls him close, kisses him. Lightly at first, then deeply - holding his head with both hands. He responds with surprising warmth, the kiss drawing out, pulling slowly apart.

She looks at him, smiles.

An alien tongue SHOOTs out of her mouth, burying itself in his face.

SMASH CUT TO: INT. RIPLEY'S CHAMBER

As she suddenly awakes, eyes wide, breathing hard.

She has been sleeping, we see, in the same position she was before: squatting in the middle of the room. She looks about her, recovering from the nightmare... Her breathing slows. With a somewhat fatalistic look, she settles back to sleep.

CUT TO: INTERIOR MESS HALL - NIGHT

Christie, Call, St Just and Johner are still at their all night poker game, stacks of bills, peanuts and liquor scattered the table.

They are in a tense hand, the pot impressively high.

JOHNER

I'm in.

CHRISTIE

All right.

ST JUST

Raise you two hundred.

JOHNER

Oh, fuck you!

CALL

That's it. I'm out. I'm fucked.

She throws down her cards, takes a swig of Johner's patented moonshine. It tastes horrible.

CHRISTIE

That takes me down, too. Johner?

JOHNER

Uh, Uh, fuck it. I fold.

(to St Just)

What do-you got?

St Just calmly shuffles his cards back into the deck.

ST JUST

You'll always wonder.

JOHNER

You asshole.

CHRISTIE

Johner, your deal.

CALL

Deal me out. It's not my night.

She tries to stand up, takes a spill over her chair. The others laugh.

CALL

Jesus, Johner, what do you put in that shit, battery acid?

JOHNER

Just for coloring.

ST JUST (producing a small vial)

I got something that'll take the edge off that.

CALL

Thanks, I'll walk it off.

She stumbles out of the room. Johner shuffles the deck.

JOHNER

Bitches should not play with the boys, they will get cleaned out.

(dealing)

Eight card throwback, fuck your sister and the sevens are wild.

CUT TO: INT. HALL

As soon as she is out of sight, Call straightens up, completely sober. She looks around her and takes off toward the restricted areas.

She comes to the door and making sure no one is around, star punching in code on the keypad.

CUT TO: INT. CELLBLOCK - MOMENTS LATER

As Call pads silently down it, looking for one cell.

TO: INT. RIPLEY'S CELL - CONTINUOUS

The cell door opens silently. Call hesitates a moment, then slips in, shutting the door behind her.

Ripley is sleeping, still in the squatting position in the middle of the room.

Call approaches.

She stares down at Ripley a moment. A shadow passes as a guard walks above them, Call tenses till he is gone. Look's back down at Ripley -- still sleeping.

Call extends her hand, flexes her wrist. The meanest lookin stilletto you've ever seen extends from out her sleeve. it, gotta be a foot long, and sharp enough to shave with.

She lifts back her arm, the better to punch it through Ripley's heart.

Ripley shifts slightly. Call stops.

ANGLE: RIPLEY'S CHEST

Her shirt is open enough to show a good portion of the scar. Call hesitates, staring, realization flooding her face.

RIPLEY

Well?

Call starts, moving back a pace.

RIPLEY

You gonna kill me or what?

CALL

There's no point, is there?

A flick of her wrist and the stiletto whips back up her sleeve. Ripley sits up.

CALL

It's already out of you. Christ... Is it here? Is it on board?

RIPLEY (smiling)

You mean my baby?

CALL

I don't understand. If they've got it , why are they keeping you alive?

RIPLEY

Curious. I'm the latest thing...

CALL

Those sick fucks.

She raises her arm, the stiletto gliding out again.

CALL

I can make it stop. The pain... this nightmare.. That's all I can offer you.

Ripley holds her palm up, presses it against the point of the blade.

RIPLEY

What makes you think I would let you do that?

Ripley pushes her hand out -- the blade goes RIGHT THROUGH HER PALM
.She keeps pushing her hand out slowly, a good five inches of the blade sticking out the back of her hand before she stops. Call stares at her.

CALL

What are you?

RIPLEY

Ripley, Ellen, Lieutenant first class, number 36706.

CALL

Ellen Ripley died two hundred years ago.

Ripley pulls her hand back suddenly, grimacing at the pain.

RIPLEY

What do you know about it?

CALL

I've read Morse -- I've read all the banned histories. She gave her life to protect us from the beast. You're not her.

RIPLEY

If I'm not her. What am I?

CALL

You're a thing. A construct. They grew you in a fucking lab.

RIPLEY

But only God can make a tree.

CALL

And now they've brought the beast out of you.

RIPLEY (smiling)

Not all the way out.

CALL

What?

RIPLEY

It's in my head. Behind my eyes. I can hear it moving. The beast.

The smile is gone, some real vulnerability showing through. Call softens, trying a different tack.

CALL

Help me. If there's anything human in you at all, help me stop them before this thing gets loose.

RIPLEY

It's already loose.

Call's expression changes. Those words terrify her, but she's not sure if Ripley means what she thinks.

Ripley raises her hand at Call's head -- Call flinches but Ripley stops a few inches away.

Then touches her forehead gently, almost sensually.

RIPLEY

Once the thought the hope for it ... grows here.... it has found its way.

It will come, because... man will bring it. Bring it forth.

CALL

You want that.

RIPLEY

I've come to terms with the fact of it. It's inevitable.

CALL

Not so long as there's breath-in me.

Ripley LASHES OUT and GRABS CALL'S THROAT. Call swings wit the blade but Ripley has her arm pinned before she can connect. Ripley squeezes the girls neck.

Ripley looks at the girl with a world of sadness.

RIPLEY

I can... make it ... stop...

Call's eyes are pleading, terrified. Ripley finally lets go and she drops to the ground gasping for air.

RIPLEY

Go. They're coming for you.

As soon as she can move, Call scrambles up and heads out.

CUT TO: INT. HALL - CONTINUOUS

Call comes out and before she can move a RIFLE BUT hits her the head. She goes down but not out as two guards grab her. Wren is with them and three more.

WREN

I think you're gonna find that this was ill advised.

(to the men) Where are her friends?

GUARD

Mess hall, most of them.

WREN

Sound the alarm. I want them rounded up. Now!

TO: INT. MESS HALL - MOMENTS LATER

ANGLE: THE CARD TABLE

Being kicked over.

Elgyn, Hillard and Rane are pushed into the room, sleepy and confused.

Christie, St Just, and Johner are all being herded in by soldiers.

Call is thrown into the group as well.

ELGYN

What the fuck is going on here?

CHRISTIE

Looks like a doublecross, boss.

WREN

Where's the other one? With the chair?

JOHNER (to a soldier)

Get your fucking hands off me!

ELGYN

Do you mind telling me what the fuck you're up to?

WREN

Shut up!

(to, a guard) Get the general. Wake him up.

ELGYN

Look, if there's a problem tell me what it is. we can work this out, there is no need to get emotional ...

St Just is silent, standing in the same position he was when Ripley attacked Johner.

Hands behind his back.

ANGLE: BEHIND ST JUST'S BACK

As Elgyn speaks, two guns..slip out of his sleeves and fill his hands.

CALL

They got nothing to do with this, Wren.

ELGYN (to Call)

To do with what?

WREN

I don't give a fuck. It's way too late for that. You're all looking at a firing squad.

You hear me?

ELGYN

I do. St Just?

With lightning precision, St Just raises his hands and blows of the guards away.

He takes out a third to his left without even looking that way.

One guard gets off a shot with his burner, frying Rane before Hillard's elbow knocks his teeth well into his throat.

Christie tackles the next as Johner presses a latch on the bottom of his thermos -- the top half flies off, revealing handle of a gun inside .He grabs it and another guard runs . Johner doesn't have time to pull the gun-out of the the so he SHOTS right through it, sending the guard flying..

CUT TO: INT. ALIEN OBSERVATION LAB - CONTINUOUS

Alarms, flashing red lights. Gediman looking in a video monitor.

GEDIMAN

What the fuck... You three! Go! Sector two.

All but one of the guards rush out to investigate. Gediman works the surveillance screen, trying to see what's happening

CUT TO: INT. MESS HALL - CONTINUOUS

When the smoke clears, There are two guards still standing. They point their weapons ineffectually. St Just a has gun to wren's head and a gun on the guards, who are also covered by Johner.

ELGYN

Nice and easy, boys ...

Call starts to take off.

CALL

I'm gonna finish this.

Elgyn grabs her by the hair, roughly pulls her back.

ELGYN

You're going nowhere, Annalee.

CUT TO: INT. OBSERVATION LAB - CONTINUOUS

ANGLE: IN THE PEN

The three aliens have picked up the energy. are stalking back and forth like tigers in the dim light of their pen.

ANGLE: THEIR POV

We see Gediman and the guard, their backs to us. The aliens-stop pacing. One of them, to the right, looks at the one on the left. Something passes between them. They look back at the humans. At each other.

They SET ON the middle alien, TEARING IT APART. It lets out piercing, insectile SHRIEKS as they tear it limb from limb.

Gediman spins in terror, the guard bringing up his weapon .Gediman hits the lights inside the pen and as they blink to shocking brightness we see:

The remains of the third alien on the ground as a giant pool its blood EATS A HOLE IN THE FLOOR.

GEDIMAN

Oh, God

He bolts for the failsafe but it's too late as the blood eats all the way through

- the two aliens DIVE through the hole. just as Gediman hits the button -- freezing gas fills the chamber but there's nothing to freeze.

GEDIMAN

No no no!

He hits another sequence and the door slides open. He rushes in, kneels by the hole and looks down.

ANGLE: HIS POV

Ther blood has already eaten through two levels.

GEDIMAN

Christ. They could be anywhere.

He looks up at the guard -- and an alien FLIES UP at him through the hole.

It was hanging on the ceiling below and it pulls him through before he can breathe

a decent scream.

The guard just stares, shaking.

CUT TO: INT. MESS HALL

The mexican standoff is getting even more heated.

CHRISTIE

Who gives a shit! We have to get out of here.

ELGYN

If Call's got something going here I want to know what it is!

WREN

You brought her here

Two more guards rush in. Johner shoves' his gun in Wren's mouth.

JOHNER

Drop them! I'm not fucking with you!

CHRISTIE (indicating the dead soldiers)

Boss, we got bodies here. It doesn't matter what Call's up to, we're all fucked now.

CALL

I have to stop him. If I don't we'll all die.

WREN (pulls his mouth away)

Elgyn, tell me what you know. If she's alone in this

HILLARD

In what?

Johner puts his gun to Call's temple now.

JOHNER

Does anyone want me to make this simple?

Far away, a SCREAM . Everyone stops. Wren turns slowly in the direction it came from.

WREN

No...

CUT TO: INT. HALLWAY BY LABS

A technician RUNS screaming just as an alien LEAPS on him from behind. The CAMERA

RUSHES AWAY, frenzied as the scene, to pick up a guard in the next hall firing wildly at the ceiling as an alien disappears up an airvent. There are three bodies lying dead before us.

ANGLE: IN THE PENS

We see that the aliens have been freed. Smoke, dead bodies, the plexiglass partition to one cage is cracked and open.

CUT TO: INT. RIPLEY'S CELL - CONTINUOUS

Ripley sits in the dark, the noise of Chaos just beginning filter in. And she just can't help herself.

She is LAUGHING.

CUT TO: INT. PEREZ'S QUARTERS CONTINUOUS

He is mostly dressed, still shaking off sleep. He stands at the command console, bringing up visual. Everything on the screens is smoke and noise.

PEREZ

Ensign! Damage Report! Ensign!

Nothing. On one of the screens, an alien is briefly visible. Perez stiffens at the sight of it.

He punches up a different sector. The labs, and here is a badly wounded lieutenant.

PEREZ

Status!

LIEUTENANT

Containment is impossible, sir... I think they swept the barracks.

PEREZ (to himself)

A military strike.... Christ Jesus ...

After a beat, he starts punching in the emergency override codes.

CUT TO:

INT. BARRACKS - CONTINUOUS

It's worst here -- the aliens have taken out a dozen men in their sleep, and everyone awake is screaming. One soldier runs for the weapons cabinet -- an alien hits him from behind and SMASHES him into it, falling in a tumble of guns.

Over the chaos, the emergency lighting comes on, floor light like an airplane's indicating the nearest exit. Father's voice is excruciatingly calm:

FATHER

Emergency. Initiate evacuation procedures immediately. All hands. This is not a drill.

One soldier gets a bead on an alien with his burner - fries it along with two of his friends.

They're out of commission, but the alien is hurt only momentarily. It bounds forward, takes out his face.

FATHER

Emergency. Initiate evacuation procedures ...

CUT TO..

INT. HALLWAY BY ENGINE ROOM - CONTINUOUS

The noise is too far above to be heard down here, but Fathers droning voice and the emergency lighting are on.

Vriess wheels slowly into the hall, concerned. He spins slowly, checking out his surroundings.

ANGLE: DOWN THE HALL

There is nothing.. Just the floor lights pulsing in succession towards the exit.

Vriess follows their lead, wheeling out.

CUT TO: INT. NEXT HALL - CONTINUOUS

Nothing here either. But Vriess's fur is up -- he moves slowly, carefully.

And was that a noise? He looks around, up at the ceiling.

A drop of alien blood is eating through right above him. It drips down -- and he rolls out of the way just in time, back up as the blood plops to the floor, eating casually through.

CUT TO: INT. LIFEBOAT BAY ONE - CONTINUOUS

Men are rushing into one of the lifeboats. They sit facing each other in the tiny vessel and strap themselves in. Pere is here, hurrying the soldiers in, pushing back the few who try to crowd in after.

PEREZ

Bay three! Go!

The late soldiers make for the next boat as Perez seals the hatch. He hits the eject button and steps back.

CUT TO: EXT. THE AURIGA - CONTINUOUS

As the lifeboat FIRES out of the side of the giant craft.

CUT TO: INT. BAY THREE - CONTINUOUS

Men crowd into this one too -- it's nearly full and an alien suddenly LEAPS into it..

starts feeding on the men strapped down - they are screaming.

Perez runs in as a soldier outside the lifeboat fires his burner, hitting the alien, the men, the controls -- a shower of sparks as the alien-turns, about to spring on the soldier as he rolls in a grenade . The doors shut and and a soldier hits the eject button.

TO: EXT. AURIGA - CONTINUOUS

The second lifeboat comes shooting out and moments later. EXPLODES.

CUT TO: INT. MESS HALL - CONTINUOUS

The noise of the explosion - and of a few inside as well - is all around the group.

Father's voice still urges evacuation

WREN

NO!

(to Call)

What have you done?

CALL

Nothing. Not a goddamn thing. You thought you could control it.

ELGYN

All right. We make for the Betty. Can he walk?

He is pointing at Rane, who nods, standing.

HILLARD

Betty's all the way across the ship! Who knows what's in between?

CALL (indicating Wren)

He does.

One of the soldiers steps forward. DiStephano.

DISTEPHANO (to Wren)

Sir, we have to go.

(to Elgyn) Let him go. No quarrel.

ELGYN

You can have him when we're off . Not before.

They start out, dragging Wren along. Guns still on Call and the soldiers.

What about Vriess?

JOHNER

Fuck Vriess!

CUT TO INT. FALL - CONTINUOUS

Vries enters, looking around. He is getting seriously wiggled.

The lights on the floor still pulse. urging him forward. He obeys.

Something stirs in the rafters. Coiled about the pipes.

Vriess stops, still a good thirty feet from the beast. Strains to see.

It starts MOVING, climbing at him upside down on the pipes. FAST.

Vriess starts wheeling himself back away but SLOWLY, agonizingly slowly compared to the beast.

He turns the corner, spins around.

The hall is fifty feet long. At the far end a few soldiers running through.

SERGEANT

Seal off that sector!

A soldier runs to obey, working the door controls.

VRIESS

No!

The soldier sees him, but the fear on the boy's face telegraphs his-decision.

Vriess starts pumping toward the door. He's strong, picking up speed, but

The alien rounds the corner and bolts after him.

Vriess can't even look back as the thing gains on him. The door begins to come down, the soldier finishing the sequence and running off.

Vriess rolls, face set -- the alien a few feet behind, reaching for him

An EXPLOSION far away ROCKS THE SHIP -- the hall tilted momentarily, Vriess gets a boost as he rockets downhill, the beast still on him, the door closing, too low for him to clear. He gets there and SLAMS a lever, his chair FLATTENS out to a dolly position, his head just CLEARS the closing door as the alien SLAMS into it, Vriess spinning out and flying off the chair it tilts, landing in a heap next to him.

Lying still on the ground, He listens as the beast slams against the door a few more times, then fades off.

VRIESS

Fuck everything....

He reaches up for the chair and from the back of it he pulls out a shotgun.

CUT TO: INT. LIFEBOAT BAY 5 - CONTINUOUS

Perez is trying to maintain order. He is failing. Grabs a corporal.

PEPEZ

Muster a squad to search for survivors!

CORPORAL

Fuck no! Fuck no! Fuck you!

Perez slams him to the ground with his fist.

An ALIEN LEAPS OUT at him from the ceiling. The soldiers scatter, Perez just leaping out of the way --

PEREZ

Shoot it! Fry it!

A couple of men fire their burners, to little effect.

One soldier runs up to the action. His head is bloodied, his expression vengefully grim.

The soldier whips out a pistol, private.issue, he takes a bead on the thing --

PEREZ

NO!

And the soldier FIRES -- pumps three bullets into the beast sends it flying back toward the window.

Perez is riveted by the sight of: ANGLE: DROPS OF BLOOD big ones, hitting the window. Everything seems to move slowly now -

the alien,

struggling as the soldier pumps two more bullets into it, the other soldiers,

Perez -- the monster falls and the BLOOD EATS THROUGH THE WINDOW..

PEREZ

Get out! Everyone! Now!

Soldiers are beginning to get it. . The window CRACKS, begins to SHAKE as the blood is almost through it.

Even the soldier who shot the alien has stopped, his face frozen in horror at what he's about to accomplish.

Perez shoves him, herds the rest out, looking back --

PEREZ

Clear the sector!.

at the window, the blood is almost through --

Men are pouring out of the hall -- some move down a side hall and SLAM the door shut behind them, but most are making for the main exit anyway.

FATHER

Warning. Potential hullbreach. Clear sector.

The blood eats a hole in the window -- the nearest soldier is sucked back against the window -- he SCREAMS as he is sucked through a hole no bigger than his fist.

Still men are falling over each other, Perez herding them out.

A huge CRACKING sound, and Perez shuts his eyes.

The window explodes outward, the air blowing everything into space. Debris, vehicles, men, all tangled and dead as they blown out into the black.

ANGLE: THE SECTOR DOORS

SLAM shut instantly one cutting right through a soldier halfway out.

ANGLE: AIR VENTS

Gates slam down here as well.

ANGLE: ELECTRICAL DUCTS

Foam SHOOTs into them, hardening instantly, sealing the breached sector.

FATHER

Breach contained. Sector five nonfunctional.

CUT TO: INT. HALL - CONTINUOUS

As the crew moves quickly through. They come to a shut door, red lights along it indicating it's locked.

ELGYN (to DiStephano)

Open it.

DISTEPHMO

I can't.

Johner puts his gun to the soldier's head.

WREN

He can't! The sector's closed. The hull's been breached!

ELGYN

Okay, which way?

WREN

We'll have to go through the holding cells. Here.

ELGYN

All right.

They turn left, entering

INT. CHAMBER - CONTINUOUS

that leads to the holding cells. The room is big, a railing at one end looking over another chamber two flights down.

A shut door separates the chamber from the cells.

ELGYN

Can you get that one open?

It comes from the rafters, dropping down on Elgyn in a heartbeat. He barely has time to scream before it shoots its tongue through the back of his skull.

Hillard has time. She SCREAMS as her lover's brains come out his mouth.

The beast leaps at the group, scattering them like bowling pins as it claws into one of the guards. Everybody else is scrambling for cover.

St Just tries to escape by running past the beast --its tail lashes out, tangling his feet and tripping him up, his head smashing against a pipe.

Another guard hits it with the burner -- it shrieks and lands on him. Johner shoots at it but is far too panicked to hit it.

Call has backed to the far wall -- she desperately works the controls to open the door.

It starts to rise.

CALL

Christie! Hillard! Come on!

The door rises fully. Ripley stands behind it.

Call starts back, not sure what the woman will do.

Ripley surveys the scene.

The Alien, burrowing its head into the belly of the guard, stops. Looks up.

Everyone watches as the two creatures sense each other. Th alien hisses. rears back.

Ripley looks away, contemplative We see a gamut of emotions cross her face, but her posture passive, sacrificial. She does not move.

Everyone watches, too afraid to breathe.

The alien LUNGES at her, leaping across the room in two bounds. It's on her -- and she SPINS, GPABBING IT, and HURLS IT AWAY.

It lands in a tangle but is up again in a microsecond, jumps at her, knocks her back into the room, on her, its claws digging into her skin, piston tongue at her face, inches away.

She locks an arm around its slick, long head and pulls back we hear its tendons strain, snap.

CALL (to a guard)

Shoot it! Shoot them both!

She grabs his gun and BURNS them both. Two less-than-human SCREAMS fill the room as they briefly disentangle, thrown apart.

The beast recovers first, dodging the next blast and going for Ripley again.

Ripley, on her back, reaches behind her, grabs a table leg and with inhuman strength brings the table down on the monster's head.

She dives at it as it comes out from under....

Call shoots as Ripley hits the alien, they're both fried as Ripley's momentum sends them over a railing and they FALL TWENTY FEET -- the Alien lands with a spine snapping crunch, Ripley only slightly better.

A few crew members rush to look over the railing. Christie starts down the spiral staircase to that level.

JOHNER

Where are you going?

The creature rolls back onto Ripley, grabbing her with its dying strength. Her face is rigid with pain and anger as she holds it off...

its jaws open, dripping shaking...

The tongue SHOOTS OUT and Ripley GRABS IT. HOLDS IT.

A scream wells up in her throat. A totally animal killshriek that she SCREAMS, victorious, as she RIPS THE ALIEN'S TONGUE OUT OF ITS FACE.

She stands, bellows another warrior cry. The crew has gathered near. They watch her, awed, wary. Ripley walks slowly up to them -- up to Call. Ripley looks a tad pissed.

Call tenses, maybe wishing she hadn't shot Ripley as well.

Ripley takes Call's hand, puts the tongue in it. walks on.

Call looks at the dripping souvenir. The pincers at the end still twitching.

CHRISTIE

What the FUCK is going on here?

RANE

What was that thing? Are there more of that thing?

JOHNER (to Call)

Make a hell of a necklace...

ANGLE: HILLARD

on the upper level, kneeling by Elgyn's body. No tears, but terribly quiet.

What do we do?

CHRISTIE

Same thing we were doing. We get the fuck.

RANE

What if there's more? Let's stay here and let the army guys deal. Someone will come... I mean, where are the fucking army guys?

St Just is very calmly looking up at the rafters, guns drawn

CHRISTIE

Doctor. You know what that thing is?

WREN

I do.

CHRISTIE

And there's others. How many?

The doctor looks around, almost guiltily.

WREN

Thirty.

JOHNER

Thirty! We are fucked in our pink bottoms if there's thirty of those things.

RIPLEY

There'll be more.

Everyone looks around at her. She is squatting in the corner facing away from them.

RIPLEY

They'll breed. In a few hours there'll be twice that number.

(she stands, approaches them)

So who do I have to fuck to get off this boat?

CHRISTIE

You bought your ticket when you killed that thing. welcome aboard.

CALL.

Are you fucking crazy? She doesn't care if we....

CHRISTIE (fiercely)

You got no authority here, Call!- Now secure it!

It's the first time Christie has raised his voice, and it has the desired effect.

After a silent moment, Call starts again softly.

CALL

Christie, she's not human. Wren cloned her because she was carrying an alien in her.

She could turn --

JOHNER

Nobody cares about your opinion, you bitch, you fucking mole --

CALL

She'll turn on us! Just like that!

CHRISTIE

I don't give a syphallitic fuck whether you people can get along or not. If we've got a wish to live then we work together, and that includes bug-lady.

CALL

You can't trust her.

CHRISTIE

I don't trust anyone.

CUT TO: INT. CHAMBER/CELLBLOCK - A BIT LATER

The group is still in the adjoining chamber, but looking here into the cellblock where Ripley had been. DiStephano and St Just come first, guns ready, looking about them.

They are followed by Christie and Wren.

WREN

There's a console in the guards, station. We can punch up a diagnostic of the ship and plan a route. To your ship.

CHRISTIE

That likes me fine.

He signals for the others to follow, everyone moving cautiously.

ANGLE: HILLARD

Gently lays her coat over Elgyn's face. Johner looks down a moment.

JOHNER

Via con Dios, man.

Hillard stands. Call puts a hand on her shoulder but Hillard moves away, a distrustful look on her face.

Ripley, bringing up the rear, watches the whole group with a sort of fascinated detachment.

Call looks back at her. Ripley smiles, coldly.

ANGLE: IN THE CELLBLOCK

The group makes their way slowly, quietly. They approach a bank of elevators, but Wren points down an adjoining doorway. They are about to go there when the elevator door lights up, indicating arrival.

The group backs up, spreads out. Those who can find cover take it. guns drawn.

The elevator doors open. It is too dark inside to see:

Suddenly sparks fly from the broken overhead in the elevator and a figure appears in the light.

Everyone jolts, about to fire. before they realize it is

VRIESS

Who sits in his chair, a shotgun in each hand, eyes wide. twitchier than they.

JOHNER

Oh, fuck...

CALL

vriess!

VRIESS (mock casual)

Hey, whatchyou guys doing? Hey, Annalee.

CHRISTIE

Thought you were toast for certain.

VRIESS

You've seen that fucking thing?

WREN (suspiciously)

Where were you?

VRIESS

I was down by -- what do you mean? I was in maintenance, checking out your oxidation systems.

JOHNER

Doc's got a bug up his ass 'cause Call's a mole and he thinks we're a conspiracy.

VRIESS (looking at Call)

She's a what?

JOHNER

A mole. A fucking spy.

Vriess looks hit harder by that information than anyone.

CHRISTIE

We got'a mission here, people. Let's keep moving.

They do.

CUT TO: INT. GUARDS, STATION - MOMENTS LATER

ANGLE: THE CONSOLE

A hologram of the ship appears above the screen. It looks a solid as the ship itself, except that parts of it occasional break themselves down to show interiors.

The group looks it over. Parts of the ship are simply not there, the sections around those holes red. Wren points them out.

WREN

We've had hull breach by the lifeboats, here on level five, and down -- Jesus, right by the engine room. We're very lucky.

ST JUST (sarcastically)

Lucky we.

CHRISTIE

What about the Betty? Our ship.

WREN

The dock seems to be intact.

CHRISTIE

Then we head for it.

JOHNER

Can we track those fucking things?

WREN

No.

JOHNER

We could get to the Betty and they could be all over it!

RANE

Are you toting a better fucking idea?

WREN

All of the activity seems'to have been in the aft-sector, by the barracks.

There's no reason to suppose they'd move

RIPLEY

They won't.

Everybody looks at her.

RIPLEY

They're breeding. They've got new bodies to work on. They'll stay close. If they send anybody out, it'll be here. Where the... meat is.

CALL

'The meat' . Jesus.

ST JUST

They're breeding. How long does that take?

RIPLEY

Hours.

WREN

Or less. The process has accelerated, something to do with the cloned cells.

CHRISTIE

Faster we get from here to there, the better.

ST JUST

With all the devils of hell in between.

JOHNER

Well, if we want to make decent time I say we ditch the cripple.

(to Vriess)

No offense.

VRIESS (giving him the finger)

None taken.

HILLARD

Nobody's left behind, Johner. Not even you.

Her voice is quiet, mourning still thick in it. Nobody backtalks her.

CHRISTIE

So what's our route?

WREN

I'm trying to figure it. we can cut through the labs, but we're blocked on both sides here,

I'm not sure

DISTEPHMO

Sir? There is the lift.

WREN

Show me.

DiStephano works the console and the hologram splits, the route he's indicating revealed.

DISTEPHMO

The lifts. They run straight from the top of the ship down to engineering. No stops, but if we can get in the shaft, there's a maintenance access tunnel here

(points to the center of the shaft) that runs above level one deck. Take us right to the dock.

CHRISTIE

Sounds reasonable.

DISTEPHANO

I don't have the code for the access tunnel door.

WREN

I can override.

DISTEPHMO

(indicating the route)

Then we head through the labs, then down to the kitchen. To the bottom of the shaft.

Up, through the tunnel, and onto the ship. Home free.

ANGLE: VRIESS

Is unloading additional ammo from inside his chair. He toss one of his shotguns to Hillard.

VRIESS

They never check the chair...

He pulls out a grenade launcher. It's so compact it's almost cute, cradled one handed like an uzi.

VRIESS

Call.

She looks around and he tosses it to her. The gesture is not accompanied by any show of warmth.

VRIESS

Try not to shoot your foot off.

WREN

You people should know --

ST JUST

We won't shoot at the windows, Doc.

WREN

No. The aliens, they bleed molecular acid.

CHRISTIE

That's right, I saw that.

VRIESS

So did I.

JOHNER

We can't shoot them? Fuck that, I'm shooting them.

WREN

This is a big vessel, and for the most part we should be okay. But if we get anywhere near the outer hull and start strafing them...

He indicates the hologram, the sections of the ship missing. Everyone gets it.

CHISTIE

If we're clear then let's get on it. We'll go by twos --

RIPLEY

We're moving.

CHRISTIE

What?

RIPLEY

The ship is moving. I can feel it.

RANE

I don't feel shit -- what, do you mean they're piloting this fucking thing?

VRIESS

This ship has stealthrun, even if we were moving there's no way she could feel it .

CALL

She's right.

Call is working the computer now.

CALL

The ship's been going since the attack.

WREN

It's uh, it's standard, I think.

DISTEPHANO

That's right. If the ship takes on any serious damage it autopilots back to homebase.

CALL (to Wren, pissed)

You were planning to let us know this?

WREN

I forgot.

HILLARD

WhatIs homebase?

WREN

Earth.

CALL

Oh, God. Oh, you bastard...

JOHNER

Earth? I'm not going to that fucking slum.

CALL

If those things get to Earth, It'll be...

RIPLEY (not very concerned).

The end.

ST JUST

That's not our problem.

CALL

We've got to blow the ship.

CHRISTIE

We don't have to do anything till we get off it. How long till we get there?

CALL

Three hours. Almost.

CHRISTIE

Then that's what we got. Let's move.

CALL

Don't you understand what this means?

CHRISTIE

I understand my hide. And I like it on me. Let's go.

(to Ripley)

What are you called, Ripley? You mind taking point?

She moves to the head of the line, and they start.

CUT TO: INT. LABS - LATER

As they progress. Everyone with a gun has it at the ready. Ripley is a few yards in front.

She stops, sniffs. Listens.

RIPLEY

Clear.

Johnner moves up next to her.

JOHNER

You've come up against these things before?

RIPLEY

Yes.

JOHNER

So what did you do ?

RIPLEY

I died.

He lags behind a bit, thrown.

JOHNER

That wasn't really what I wanted to hear...

DiStephano points to a door.

DISTEPFANO

This way.

And Ripley leads them in.

CUT TO: INT. LAB - CONTINUOUS

As Ripley enters, we can see that this lab has been trashed. Ripley surveys the wreckage calmly, keeps moving. As the others file in, their horrified expressions lend contrast to her lack of one.

Among the debris are three bodies, chests exploded outward.

JOHNER

Fuck me ...

CHRISTIE

Let's keep moving.

The door to the next chamber is ajar. Christie and Vriess in, then St Just, then Ripley.

INT..NEXT CHAMBER

Something LEAPS at Ripley from out of the shadows -- a metal bar SLAMS into her side, throwing her off balance.

St Just and Christie spin, weapons up, and almost shoot the figure cowering in the corner.

Everyone else rushes in as he swings the bar before him, eyes wild with terror.

PURVIS

Get away from me!

CHRISTIE

Drop the rod, man. Do it!

PURVIS.

Get away...

But the energy is out of him. The rod falls with a hollow clatter. He looks weakly from face to face.

PURVIS

What's going on?

St Just looks at his name, stitched in his coveralls.

ST JUST

Purvis. What's going on is that we're getting the fuck off this ghost ship.

PURVIS

What ship? Where am I? I was in cryo on the way to Xarem, work crew for the nickel refinery...

I wake up, I don't understand... I saw something... horrible ...

CALL

Look, you come with us. It's dangerous here.

Ripley SNIFFS. Cocks her head.

RIPLEY

Leave him.

CALL

Fuck you. We're not leaving anyone on this boat.

RIPLEY

He's carrying..

JOHNER

He's what?

RIPLEY

He's got one.... inside him. I can smell it.

PURVIS

Inside me ? What?

JOHNER

Shit, I don't want one of those things birthing anywhere near my ass.

VRIESS

It's a bad risk.

CALL

We can't just leave him.

VRIESS

I thought you came here to stop them from spreading.

CALL (to Wren, torn)

Isn't there a process, can't you stop it?

ST JUST

We've got no time for that.

WREN

I couldn't do it here. The lab's torn apart.

ST JUST (quietly)

I could do him. Painless, back of the head. Might be the best way.

CALL

There's gotta be another way. If we freeze him --

PURVIS

WHAT'S IN-FUCKING-SIDE ME?!?!?

They all look at him, a bit sheepishly.

WREN

A parasite. A foreign element that

Ripley steps in front of the doctor.

RIPLEY

There's a monster in your stomach. They (indicating the smugglers) hijacked your cryotube and sold you to him

(indicating,Wren) and he put an alien in you. In a few hours it will punch its way through your chest and you'll die. Any questions?

Purvis is wide-eyed, stunned. After a moment he stammers

PURVIS

Who are you?

RIPLEY

I'm the monster's mother.

She starts heading out of the chamber. Call turns to the others.

CALL

He comes with us. We can freeze him on the Betty and get the doctor to remove it later.

WREN

All right.

JOHNER

Since when are you in fucking charge?

CALL

Since you were born without balls.

VRIESS

Ease off, people.

CHRISTIE (to Purvis, herding him along)

Come with us. You might even live. Get twitchy on me and you will be shot.

They move out.

CUT-TO: INT. HALL - LATER

still in the same general area, still looking around every corner.
It's been too quiet too long, and the group senses that

& They move into

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM TWO - CONTINUOUS

It's in bad shape, so we might not recognize it as the chamber the queen was in.

WREN

She's gone.

ST JUST

Who?

WREN

The Queen.

JOHNER

Good.

He is loooking into the room.the queen was kept in. A residue of slime is all that's left here.

Beyond the queen's chamber is another observation room. Wren indicates that they have to go through.

Suddenly a burner blast FIRES at them, just missing them as they duck.

They hear more blasts, not aimed at them, and screams.

SOLDIER (O.S.)

Pull back! Pull back!

OTHER SOLDIER (O.S.)

It's on me!

Ripley looks up and can just see two aliens making short work of a group of soldiers.

Call instantly moves to attack, and Ripley grabs her, holds tight.

CALL

We've got to help them!

RIPLEY

Can't.

CALL

You bitch, let go of me!

She does, and Call rises.

The noise is gone. What she can see of the soldiers-is parts.

She is shaking at the vision when an alien RISES in front on the soldiers. Call ducks back down, terrified.

Christie hisses at her.

CHRISTIE

You want to get yourself killed, then you run solo.

ST JUST

How many?

RIPLEY

At least two.

ST JUST

Think they heard us?

RIPLEY

Yep.

HILLARD

Fine by me ...

JOHNER

Yeah, let em come.

CHRISTIE

Wren. Any other way around?

Wren shakes his head.

CHRISTIE

We can't just walk in there.

WREN (thinking)

No. No, but they can.

CHRISTIE

Say again?

WREN

The cages all have failsafes. Liquid nitrogen. Get 'em to come to us and I can freeze em.

CHRISTIE

Excellent. Get-ready.

Wren goes over to the failsafe button. The others look out at the aliens.

CHRISTIE

Okay... (calls out) Hey!

VRIESS

Hey, guys!

JOHNER

Here, kitty...

The aliens react, start for the cage. Four 'of them. They reach the edge of it and stop.

Look around, at each other..

But go nowhere.

DISTEPHMO

They're not coming.

JOHNER

Hey! Fresh meat here!

RIPLEY.

They know it's a trap.

RANE

Oh, bullshit!

CHRISTIE

What do we do?

JOHNER

Shoot the fucking things!

VRIESS

There's too many, and we don't have the angle.

RIPLEY

Bait.

CALL

What?

RIPLEY

Give em a reason to go in there. Throw somebody in.

HILLARD

Fuck you!

RIPLEY

DO we want to live? Give em her.

She indicates Call, who looks around, nervous at the lack of protest about this idea.

Ripley points at Rane.

RIPLEY

Or the skinny one, it doesn't matter. We can't resist the smell of meat.

CALL

We ?

JOHNER

Fuck, I'm with her! Give 'em Annalee!

CHRISTIE

Now hold on

DISTEPHMO

You people are insane.

JOHNER

Now you're not exactly in the club either, soldier.

People start pointing guns at each other.

RANE

Fuck you all, I'm not dying for you.

CALL

Stop this.

Ripley grabs her. Looks at the others.

RIPLEY

Come on! Do you want to live or not?

(to Call) It won't hurt long.

CALL (terrified)

Noo...

RIPLEY (to Wren)

NOW!

Wren hits the button just as three aliens are bounding across the cage -- they're almost to the posse, people screaming, scrambling, when the freezing gas hits, turning the beasts to statues.

The forth one sees this and flees, but St Just stands and put four bullets in it from forty yards. It slumps over.

Everyone is silent, stunned. Breathing hard.

VRIESS (realizes)

Fear.

Ripley nods.

VRIESS

That's how they knew it was a trap. They couldn't smell the fear.

RIPLEY (looking at Call)

So I gave them some.

JOHNER (gleefully)

Son of a bitch!

He pops up and FIRES at the frozen aliens - - they EXPLODE into fragments.

CUT TO: EXT. AURIGA

Gildihg through space, passing Jupiter's moons with dazzling speed.

CUT TO: INT. HALL LATER

Ripley and Call are on point. Ripley looks down the hall. Call is staring at her, and Ripley can feel the girls eyes on her back.

RIPLEY(without looking around)

Did you think I was going to... feed you to them?

CALL

I think you still might.

Ripley smiles. She may be right.

RIPLEY

I want to live.

CALL

And you don't care about anything else.

RIPLEY

No.

CALL (bitterly)

I guess you're more human than I thought.

RIPLEY

Why did you come here?

CALL

To kill you, remember? (after a beat) Because somebody has to.

RIPLEY

well it's not me. I did my time. Now I just want to...

She stops dead, staring at a door.

CLONING STORAGE FACILITY is written on it. Stencilled beneath that is `numbers 1-7`.

Ripley stares. Tries the door, which opens.

DISTEPHMO

That's not the way.

CHRISTIE

Ripley, we got no time for sightseeing.

Ripley is looking down at her arm, at the 8 tattooed on it.

She looks at Call. Looks back at wren.

WREN

Ripley... don't.

She enters.

CUT TO: INT. CLONING STORAGE FACILITY - CONTINUOUS

She stands a moment, staring, before proceeding through it. Call stands in the doorway, others crowding behind her. Every face registers the horror of what they are seeing, but none more so than Ripley's

Numbers one through seven. The first failed efforts to clone Ripley.

They are lined up like museum exhibits -- or side show freaks.

Here is the fetal Ripley, the fetal alien visible through its translucent chest.

In a jar.

Here is a prematurely old, diseased Ripley, withered blue skin cling to Collapsed bones.

Here is an attempt to separate the alien and grow it without the host -- boneless, bubbling tissue, weak and useless mouth rigored in midmew.

Each one more horrifying than the last, and the last the worst of all.

Ripley approaches, and stares at number seven.

A complete mixture of alien and human DNA.

A tortured, disgusting hybrid, half Ripley, half nightmare.

Hooked up wires and machines, it lies on the tilted-table, its head nearly level with Ripley's as she finally approaches it.

When it opens its eyes, they are hers.

it tuns its head ever so slightly to look at her. Recognises her.

Ripley cannot even speak. She begins to shake slightly looking at number seven.

NUMBER SEVEN

Kill ... us ...

Ripley's eyes go saucered as it speaks speaks out of nothing resembling a mouth.

Ripley staggers back a step, shaking now. This is too much to bear...

CALL

Ripley!

Ripley turns, slowly, still in a fever dream.

Call cocks the grenade launcher with a loud CRACK. Her eyes meet Ripley's.

Call tosses it to Ripley as the crew steps back and even a catches it Ripley FIRES, a grenade chugging to the end of room and BURSTING in fire and noise, she FIRES another, tissue and steel exploding into flame, she turns to number seven, hand shakes momentarily...And she FIRES, the poor creature dissolving in a cloud of flame.

Freezing gas jets fill the room, extinguishing potential spread, but the heart of the firestorm continues to rage in the chamber.

She backs out, the crew waiting for her outside.

The launcher falls loudly to the ground. Ripley turns to Wren, her face rigid with pain.

Wren backs up a step, looking around him for protection that the others have no thought of providing.

CALL

Ripley... Don't do it.

Ripley stops. weariness suffusing her expression.

RIPLEY

Don't do what?

The tension passes. Wren breathes a little sigh of relief.

Call PUNCHES him across the jaw, his head whipping around as collapses to the ground.

Call starts down the hall, not even looking at him.

CALL

Don't do that.

Feeling his jaw, Wren actually smiles at the absurdity of all this.

It's kind of winning.

Christie helps him up.

CHRISTIE

Had it coming, Doc.

Johner looks in at the burning lab.

JOHNER

What's the big deal? Fucking waste of ammo.

ST JUST

Let's move before anything comes to check out the noise.

JOHNER

Chicks, man....

DISTEPHANO

We go down from here.

CHRISTIE (to Vriess)

We got to lose the chair. Vriess.

VRIESS

I know.

CHRISTIE

Kawlang maneuver, all right?

Vriess is pulling a coil of cords from the chair.

VRIESS

Just like old times...

CUT TO: INT. ROOM - LATER

A hatch opens. Ripley drops down, surveys the scene. Quiet dark, empty.

Ripley comes up, Call behind her. Ripley sniffs, listens. Closes her eyes. After a beat she starts further in and Call motions for others to follow.

Slowly, they make their way down the corridor. Ripley, Cal ,Hillard , guns drawn.

Bringing up the rear is Christie, toting a shotgun.. He turn slowly, alert, and we see that Vriess is strapped to his back facing the other way, also with a shotgun.

CALL (to Ripley)

That lab... I can't imagine how that must feel.

RIPLEY

No. You can't.

Ripley looks down. The floor here is covered with a foot or so of dark water.

Ripley steps into it, moves up a few paces. The others gingerly follow.

Vriess is facing the back. He looks up.

VRIESS

The cooling tanks. They must have blown during the trouble.

ANGLE: THE COOLING TANKS

We see the round underbelly of two huge tanks. There are gaping, twisted holes in them.

JOHNER

The nasties couldn't have done it, could they?

HILLARD

What for...?

WREN

Down here. He is at the front with Ripley and-Call, where the water is waste deep.

He looks down at a stairwell, just the top of the railing visible above the murky water.

RIPLEY

There's no other way?

WREN

We're at the bottom of the ship. Some of the worst damage is down here.

Most of the sections are sealed off.

RIPLEY

You're sure?

WREN

There's the noncom's entrance back there, but it's flooded too, and it's a longer run.

CALL

He's right. We're gonna have to do it this way.

WREN

It's just through the kitchen, then up, maybe seventy feet.

RIPLEY

I don't like it.

ST JUST

What's to like?

CHRISTIE (to vriess)

You ready to get wet, partner?

VRIESS

Oh yeah.

HILLARD

You sure about the distance?

WREN

Yes.

CALL

No locked doors?

WREN

It's an open hall. Just keep left when you hit the bottom of the staircase.

JOHNER

This sucks.

ANGLE: DI STEPHANO

He flips caps over the barrel of the gun, slides a panel over the digital readout.

The burner is ready to go, watertight.

DISTEPHMO (to St Just)

You should secure your weapons.

St Just holds up his two guns.

ST JUST

These are disposables. They can take it.

DISTEPHANO

Disposables. I heard about those. How many rounds?

ST JUST

Twenty. Split points, give you a good hole even at the smaller caliber.

DISTEPHANO

Cool.

ST JUST

They're big with hitters. 'Cause you throw em away after the job. Nobody likes throwing away a weapon they're attached to. You know?

He smiles at Di Stephano, who looks a little uneasy about the turn the conversation has taken.

He joins the others who are getting ready to dive..

CALL

Do I have to tell everyone to take a deep breath?

A couple of the guys smile.

VRIESS

Christie, do me a favor. When we hit the surface on the other side... no backstroke. Okay?

CHRISTIE (laughing)

You'll be forever blowing bubbles. On three...

He counts down, the two suck in enormous breaths -- and dive right behind Call and Ripley.

One by one the entire crew slips down into the black water.

CUT TO: INT. STAIRWELL\KITCHEN - CONTINUOUS

It's all underwater. Visiblity is poor. The crew move swiftly and gracefully down the stairs and into the kitchen.

In here it's a tad labyrinthian, and the size of the room it darker. Wren heads straight for the other end.

They swim. Safety is a good fifty feet away.

They are tense, concentrated. Swimming past dark spaces. Anything could be hiding here.

Johner looks about him, very nervous. Dark spaces. He looks behind .

Three aliens are right behind him.

Panic blows half the air out of his mouth as he swings around and FIRES at them, tags one as the other two swim off into shadows with horrible ease.

Ripley, all the way to the stairs, sees. She hurries the others past her.

They swim frantically for safety, Hillard Wren, Christie and Vriess.

Rane is coming along and alien hands grab at him from the darkness, pull him into it.

Hillard FIRES in that direction, Johner bringing up the rear still firing at the third one, wounding it but not scoring killshot.

Call is swimming up ther staircase, the growing light above indicating the surface.

She is almost to it when she is IN THE WEB.

A net of translucent alien goo, it is spread just six inche below the surface.

Call struggles the goo sticking to her she's running out of air -- as Wren and Christie enconter the same thing -- they all try to tear through it, but they are getting weaker.

Ripley looks back as the last of the crew is passing her, aliens close behind.

She looks up to see the situation ab and quickly makes for the surface -- but an alien GRABS her foot, holding her down. Now SHE is running out of air KICKS at it, it lets go.

The others are fighting, Call pops her stilleto and cuts through, but it's tough, she still can't get her head up --

--Di Stephano, off to the side, is drowning. Takes in a huge mouthful of water and begins thrashing.

Ripley swims past everyone and grabs the hole Call cut, pulls it apart with a mighty heave, she glides up through --

CLOSE UP: RIPLEY'S FACE

Just BREAKS the surface, she takes in a huge GASP of air, FACEHUGGER CLAMPS DOWN ON HER.

Ripley goes back under, pulling at the thing as others break the surface.

Wren comes up and a hugger LEAPS right at him ,but Call nails it in four shots.

Christie and Vriess break surface and both begin FIRING, back to back, in a circular sweep.

They decimate a number of eggs

ANGLE: UNDERWATER

Ripley pulls the face hugger with all her might -- it comes off, its fingers singeing the sides of her face, leaving marks like warpaint. Worse, its probing fleshy member pulls last of her throat, thrashing horribly.

In utmost disgust, Ripley PULLS it APART. and the three aliens are COMING RIGHT AT HER.

ABOVE - THE SURFACE

Most of the crew has gotten up out of the water. Christie holding a facehugger inches from his face, others screaming, taking a bead on it.

CHRISTIE

Get it! Kill it!

CALL

The blood'll burn you! Throw it!

He does, and Johner nails it in midflight.

Hillard and Johner pull Di Stephano out of the water, but he is not breathing.

ANGLE: UNDER THE SURFACE

Ripley is grabbed by an alien -- and St Just comes up behind her and shoots it.

They swim up and away from the spreading, lethal bloodpool.

ANGLE: ABOVE THE SURFACE

They come up out of the water, and an alien rises right behind them. Everyone who can, shoots it. It falls back into the water.

CHRISTIE

A trap! They set a goddamn ambush!

JOHNER

Give me that!

He pulls the burner off Di Stephano's body, even as Call is giving him mouth to mouth .

Johner flips the gun open and FIRES at the water, the whole thing SMOKING and sizzling with the electrical charge. we hear an alien wail bubble from below the surface.

JOHNER (grinning feverishly)

Okay! Everybody out of the pool!

VRIESS

Let's get the fuck!

Di Stephano sputters back to life. Ripley picks him up with one hand,

HILLARD (to Wren)

Which way?

WREN

Up here.

He takes off, the others following.

WREN

Up through the lift shaft!

He stops at a pair of sliding doors, starts working the panel.
Ripley come up to the doors and pulls them apart with a grunt.

ST JUST

Company!

He's refering to the noise and shadow of approaching aliens.

She herds them into the shaft.

CUT TO: INT. LIFTSHAFT - CONTINUOUS

It goes down about four stories, and up seemingly forever.. Enough room for or three elevators, one of which is two stories below.

WREN

UP!

He starts climbing. It's not that hard -- there are ladders in each shaft section.

Call comes up behind him. Ripley and others pair off on other ladders.

They climb fast, they're three stories up before the aliens begin POUNDING on the metal door, it buckles under their might.

JOHNER

Move!

WREN

Not far!

Still POUNDING -- one alien gets its head in, looks up, hisses, pulls it out.

ANGLE: LIFT

Wren comes to a crawspace ledge. He climbs on. Set back a few feet from the shaft is a small maintenance access door. works the keypad beside it as Call climbs up behind him.

The aliens SMASH through the door, one of them SAILING across the shaft to grab a pipe on the other side. Instantly four of them are swarming up the walls, moving much faster on pipes and ridges than the humans on ladders.

On one of the aliens a facehugger crawls, constantly moving about on the adult alien's head like a frightened spider.

CALL

Hurry!

WREN

It's jammed! Shit! Gun!

She hands him her gun and without hesitation he SHOOTS HER THROUGH THE CHEST.

She flies back and DOWN THE SHAFT, lands HARD on an elevator six stories below .

Eyes wide and empty.

VRIESS

NOO!

He fires up at Wren, but Wren has punched in the code and slipped through the opening door..

Ripley LEAPS through the air and grabs the ledge, hauling herself up just in time to see the door shut. The lock lights turn red.

She SLAMS against the door, but to no avail.

The aliens are getting closer. St Just, the closest to the bottom, suddenly lets go of the ladder. His knees hooked over a rung, he drops, hangs up side down, his guns filling his hands.

He blows several holes in the nearest alien.

Ripley is furious, maybe surprised just how so. Suddenly an alien RISES OVER THE LEDGE,

it's not three feet away from her and she SCREAMS, HURLS herself at it and they both go

FLYING OFF into-space, they hit the wall on the other side, they fall.

RIPLEY GRABS a pole, it practically tears her arm out of her socket but she holds on, the alien isn't so lucky, it plummets unable to find purchase.

we see it fall past the unmoving body of Call.

ANGTE: CALLS FACE

As the facehugger CLAMPS onto it. Pauses. Pushes off a bit, two digits probing Call's nostrils. Sensing no breath, the thing scurries away to find a better host.

Another alien is fast approaching Christie and Vriess. Vriess frantically tries to reload.

VRIESS

It's on us!

Christie turns, aims -- Vriess grabs the ladder as Christie FIRES, but the alien is too close, it grabs Christie, spurting blood all over him. He SCREAMS, lets go of the ladder

Vriess takes the weight of both as Christie fires again, the alien flying off and down the shaft.

HILLARD

We gotta go!

The last alien suddenly starts scurrying back down after his brothers.

RIPLEY

We're locked in.

JOHNER

Fuck!

PURVIS

How far to the next door?

DISTEPHANO

All the way.

RIPLEY

Then we climb.

They start, moving as fast as they can.

VRIESSS (to Christie)

You just hang on, man. I'll get us there.

He starts climbing up, impressively fast considering the burden hanging from his back.

JOHNER (to Ripley)

Are they going for reinforcements?

RIPLEY

Fucked if I know.

They climb.

And climb, the minutes stretching out, still no door. Ripley easily ahead of the rest.

Finally:

RIPLEY

I think I see the door.

PURVIS (exhausted)

Great.

Vriess is having increasing trouble. Hillard notices him lagging behind, and why.

HILLARD

Vriess! Jesus!

Vriess is moving very quickly, considering. But the effort is becoming too much.

VRIESS

We're coming...

Johner scrambles down next to Vriess.

he checks the pulse in Christie's neck.

Vriess, man... he's dead.

Refusing to hear it, Vriess struggles to climb further.

VRIESS

We'll get him to medlab... just a little while ...

Johner looks over at Hillard. Without saying a word, she pull out a good-sized hunting knife, flicks it open.

She slices through the cord holding them together, and Christie's body falls free.

Vriess shuts his eyes, feeling it.

ANGLE: DOWN THE SHAFT

There is silence as Christie's body drops down the black abyss

Until, from up the shaft next to where he fell, we see two ALIENS COMING UP.

PURVIS

Fuck! Company!

Hillard looks up the shaft.

HILLARD

How much further?,

JOHNER

Too fucking far. Let's GO !

They start to climb, but the aliens are making much better time.

A loud CLACKING sounds from the bottom of the shaft. A few of them look down.

ANGLE: DOWN THE SHAFT

The aliens are still coming, but suddenly the lift passes them heading up at high speed.

JOHNER

They can work the elevators? Is there anything fucking else we should know about them?!

He's addressing this at Ripley, but she's as puzzled as the rest of them.

The lift comes up to them, stops suddenly as emergency brake is flipped.

They wait, guns ready. Out of the hatch pops Call, not especially dead.

CALL

Get on!

A moment of stunned silence, then they all jump on top of the lift.

Call drops back down inside.

An alien comes up level with the lift, prepares to jump. St Just shoots the shit out of it.

HILLARD

Where are the others?

CUT TO: INT. LIFT - CONTINUOUS

Call flips the brake off, and the lift shoots up. She is holding her jacket closed around her chest wound, but it doesn't seem to bother her particularly much.

ANGLE: ON TOP

Everybody holds on as the lift flies up the shaft.

ANGLE: INSIDE

Call waits for the signal to stop and an alien PUNCHES THROUGH the bottom of the lift.

Call yells as it gets its head and an arm through, clawing for her.

ANGLE: ON THE BOTTOM

We see the other half of the alien clinging to the lift.

ANGLE: ON TOP

Ripley sees the door approaching

RIPLEY

stop!

ANGLE: INSIDE

Call hits the emergency button and the lift stops halfway in front of the door -

- giving both Ripley and Call access. Bu the alien is still grabbing for her --

Ripley pries open the doors again, the crew pouring out into the hall. Ripley follows, jumps down and opens the lift doors

The alien hisses at Ripley as she pulls Call out -- the -alien grabs Call's ankle, but Ripley wrenches her free.

They roll out but the alien is still fighting, Pulling itself inside the lift.

Ripley grabs Hillardl's shotgun. Levels it at the cables holding the lift. FIRES.

The lift PLUMMIETS, the alien still halfway in.

It shoots down the shaft -- picking up the second alien on its way down, neither beast able to get its bearing and get out of the way as--

The lift SMASHES into the bottom of the shaft, crushing both the Aliens to jelly.

ANGLE: UPPER DOOR

Johner triumphantly sticks his head in the shaft.

JOHNER

Eat that, fuckneck!!

They all breathe hard, exhausted, before they can muster for the next stretch.

Call stands with her back to them.

VRIESS

Baby, am I glad to see you. I thought dickbag took you out for sure. Are you, hurt?

CALL

I'm fine.

DISTEPHANO

You got body armour on?

CALL

Yeah. Come on.

Ripley isn't buying.

RIPLEY

You were Gunshot. I saw.

CALL

I'm fine!

Ripley spins her around. Call stares at Ripley, sullenly a small trickle of milky white fluid comes from her nostril Ripley looks down.

ANGLE: CALL'S CHEST

Wren has indeed made a messy hole here, but where blood and bone should be there is a tangle of synthorganic wiring. To state the obvious:

A robot.

JOHNER

Call's a goddam sythetic!

HILLARD

Son of a bitch. Little Annalee's just full of surprises.

RIPLEY (quietly)

I should have known.

ST JUST

Couldn't smell this one out?

RIPLEY

No, I mean... all that crap about being human - there's no one so zealous as a Born Again.

VRIESS (to Call)

You're an LM7, aren't you? Is that it?

CALL

Leave me alone.

Her voice shocks her more than anyone her vocal track slip affected by the wounds.

The voice is a shade slow, and echoes strangely.

VRIESS

Call

CALL (bitterly)

Yes.

ST JUST

LM7? Shit. That explains a lot.

YRIESS (to Ripley)

The latest and best. They were supposed to revitalize the synthetic industry.

Instead they buried it.

Ripley looks at the girl.

RIPLEY

They were-too good.

VRIESS

Oh yeah. Overrode their own behavioral inhibitors. Didn't feel like being told what to do.

The government ordered a recall. Fucking massacre.

HILLARD

I always heard there were a few that got out alive, but man... I never thought I'd see one.

Johner starts laughing.

JOHNER

Oh, Christ. Doing fucking nickel and dime border runs, selling second hand junk to the farm belt... and we're carrying the most expensive piece of contraband in the system.

That's rich.

PURVIS (getting anxious)

It's great, she's a toaster oven... Can we leave now?

Vriess tries to touch Call's wound.

VRIESS

Let me see.

Call pulls away.

JOHNER

Yeah, get your socket wrench, Vriess.

Maybe she just needs an oil change.

RIPLEY

Let's go.

They start off again, Johner and St Just bringing up the rear

JOHNER

Can't believe I almost fucked the thing.

ST JUST

Yeah, like you've never fucked a robot.

ANGLE: RIPLEY

Letting DiStephano lead.

RIPLEY

DiStephano. Where are we?

DISTEPHANO

Upper decks... Storage... the chapell's up here, not much else.

RIPLEY

Can we get to the ship?

DISTEPHANO

Well, we're a ways out, of the way, but I think we can get through to the garden.

From there, it's down a few levels, it's do-able.

What if the fucking doctor gets there first?

VRIESS

It's a good point.

DISTEPHANO

Shit.

They have reached an access door. Debris blocks the way.

RIPLEY

Another way?

DISTEPHANO

Uh, yeah. Through the wall. We'll have to get one of these panels off. It'll take a while.

(to Vriess) You got tools?

VRIESS

Yeah, but no torch.

JOHNER

Fucking blow the door!

HILLARD

Assface, We're on the top of this thing.

(pointing to the ceiling)

That's hull.

VRIESS

What about Wren? if he gets in the computer he can really fuck us around.

RIPLEY

We have to get in too.

DISTEPHANO

There's no access console on this level. We'd have to-backtrack.

HILLARD

Fuck that.

DISTEPHANO

And I don't have the security access that Wren does anyway.

Ripley turns to Call.

RIPLEY

Call.

CALL

No. I can't.

JOHNER.

Bullshit. She's a damn well talking machine.

CALL

There's another way.

DISTEPHMO

Just tell her to access it on remote.

VRIESS

Shit, that's right. Any of the new model droids can access the mainframe.

JOHNER

Just by blinking.

CALL

I can't.

ST JUST

No time to get coy, Annalee.

CALL

I can't. I burned my modem drive. We all did.

VRIESS

You can still patch in manually. You know that.

Call looks over at the group, staring at her. She knows she doesn't have a choice.

DISTEPHANO

There's ports in the chapel.

RIPLEY

Come on.

(to the others)

You get started on that wall.

CUT TO: INT. CHAPEL - CONTINUOU@

Ripley and Call enter the small room. Ripley sits in one of the pews, pulls out a bible.

it somewhat resembles a Newton Under the leather flap is a screen reading.:

HOLY BIBLE. PRE START.

Ripley pulls out the cord from the bible's port, holds it up

CALL

Don't make me do this.

RIPLEY

Don't make me make you.

CALL

I don't want to go in there.

RIPLEY

Get over it.

CALL

It's like... your insides are liquid. It's not real.

RIPLEY

You can blow the ship. Before it reaches Earth. Kill them all.
Just give us time to get out first.

That convinces Call. She pulls up her sleeve, and begins. pushes a part of her forearm, just below the crook of her elbow. It has a spring release catch, and a small panel rises up with two computer ports on it. She takes the cable from Ripley and plugs it in.

It looks almost like she's mainlining heroin.

She cocks her head.

CALL

Dammit.

RIPLEY

Anything?

CALL

Hold on.

She reaches in her chest, reconnects some tubes. She twitches then shuts her eyes.

It's beginning.

She begins speaking very rapidly, eyes still shut.

CALL

Breach in sector seven sector three sector nine unstable -- engines operating at eighty six percent -forty six minutes until earthdock.

Her voice has a slight mechanical quality as she rattles this off.
Her eyes open.

CALL

We burned too much energy -- I can't make critical mass. I can't blow it.

RIPLEY

Then crash it.

TO: INT. HALL - CONTINUOUS

As the crew works at getting the wall panel off,.

TO: INT. CHAPPEL A BIT LATER

CALL

Ground level recalibrated... new destination 760, 403. Done. Forty one minutes until impact.

RIPLEY

Try to clear us a path to the ship.

CALL

Tracking movement in sublevels six through nine. Video is down. Attempted rerouting nonfunctional, wait, partial visual in waste tank 5, unauthorized presence...

VRIESS

Unauthorized?

CALL

Nonhuman.

RIPLEY

How many?

Please wait.. emergency override on. console 45V, level one... handprint ID...

(like herself)

It's Wren. He's almost at the Betty.

RIPLEY

And how do you feel about that?

CUT TO: INT. HALL - CONTINUOUS

Wren is holding his hand to the scanner, just as Call described.
The red light turns green and we hear the locks the door crack open.

FATHER

Emergency override validated.

The door begins to rise. Looking around him, Wren waits to through.

The door grinds to a halt, still too low to climb under. Th lights go out, only the faintest glow coming from various instrument panels. wren's expression drains.

WREN

Father, reboot systems on 45V, authorization 'starling'.

Nothing happens. Wren looks about him, beginning to sweat.

Did the aliens do this?

WREN

Father, locate power drain, report.

Father?

CALL - (on the system)

Father's dead, asshole.

Wren spins in shock at the sound of Call's voice. it,s everywhere around him.

She has downloaded her vocal matrix place of Father's.

(She's not just speaking over a PA, she is the PA.)

The door SLAMS back-down, locks clack into place. The doors behind him open up,

emergency lighting pulsing along toward him.

CALL\SHIP

Intruder on level one... all aliens please proceed to level one.

Wren is freaking. He turns back down the corridor, looking about him wildly.

CUT TO: INT. CHAPEL - CONTINUOUS

Call pulls the cord out of her port.

RIPLEY

You got a mean strak.

CALL

It's done. That should hold the fuck.

This as her voice track slips even more. She works the wires in her chest, trying to fix it.

RIPLEY

Let me see

CALL

Don't touch me.

Ripley backs off.

CALL

You must think this is pretty funny.

RIPLEY

Yes. But I'm finding a lot of things funny lately. And I'm not sure they are.

CALL

Why do you go on living? How can you stand it? How can you stand... yourself?

Ripley shrugs.

RIPLEY

Not so hard. Not much choice.

CALL

At least there's part of you that's human. I'm just... fuck. Look at me....

She looks at the hole in her chest, the white and sticky fibers.

CALL

I'm disgusting.

Her voice is at its slowest here, low and eerie. It's a mechanical problem, but it sounds just like despair.

RIPLEY

Do you dream?

CALL

I ... we have neural processors that run through.... (stops) Yes.

RIPLEY

When I sleep, I dream about it. Them. Every night. All around me ... in me.

I used to be afraid to dream, but I'm not anymore.

CALL

Why?

RIPLEY

Because no matter how bad the dreams get ... when I wake up it's always worse.

Purvis enters.

PURVIS

I guess we're almost there.

RIPLEY

Right.

He exits again. Call finishes fiddling with her internal wiring.
We hear her voice slip back to normal as she says:

CALL

Let's get going.

CUT TO: INT. TUNNEL

As they come one by one through the wall.

DISTEPHANO

Not far now.

PURVIS

God, I'm so tired...

JOHNER

Yeah, well, we'll sleep when we're dead.

Ripley follows him through.

RIPLEY

Don't count on it.

The rest of them come through and walk into:

INT. THE GARDEN CONTINUOUS

The Garden runs nearly half a mile straight across, and then down on a terraced slope.

Everywhere are different kinds of plants: trees, vegetable plants, exotic and experimental hybrids.

Access paths crisscross the beds.

It's huge, the single biggest space on the ship. Yet the low ceiling, laticed with grow-lamps now dim in nightcycle, and prodigious undergrowth make it labyrinthian, almost claustrophobic.

From where the crew is, they can barely see where it slopes down.

JOHNER

What's this fucking deal?

DISTEPHMO

This supplies most of the food for the unit.

VRIESS (holding a luscious ripe pear)

You guys got something against spam?

DISTEPHMO

And there's some lab work here too. Hybridization.

RIPLEY

At the other end?

DISTEPHMO

Runs down to the by the waste tanks. We can get to the dock from there. You, okay?

Ripley is holding her head. She shuts her eyes.

CALL

What is it?

Ripley shakes it off.

RIPLEY

Nothing. I'm okay.

She looks out at the jungle, they have to cross.

CALL

We should get moving.

ST JUST

Hey! Check it out!

He has come upon a small loading truck, a sort of platform jeep.

Vriess checks it out, takes a huge bite of his pear.

VRIESS

Beats walking.

He hauls himself up-into it. Everybody piles onto the back flatbed just a foot or so off the ground and just big enough to hold everyone but Vriess, Call and Ripley, who pushes into the driver's seat.

VRIESS

Quickly and quietly, people.

Ripley stares unconprehendingly at the controls for a momen till Call flips on the ignition.

RIPLEY

Thank,you.

The jeep pulls out. It's electric, so it emits just a low hum as she takes it at a good clip toward the other side.

The access paths are just a bit wider than the jeep itself, plants rising tall all around them.

Ripley concentrates on driving.

The pass through as section of wheat , then of corn. As they come to another section,

The crew's expressions change to one of pleased disbelief.

You gotta be fucking me. St Just! Is this real?

ST JUST

So this is what heaven looks like.

We see they have driven into a healthy section of CANNABIS plants growing ten feet high.

The car screeches to a halt. Ripley's at a crossroads of sorts.

RIPLEY

Which way?

HILLARD (looking at the plants)

I always wondered where the military got its funding...

An alien SHOOTs out of the brush and lands on Hillard everyone SCREAMS -- Ripley SLAMS her foot on the pedal

The jeep PEELS OUT, as more emerge from the brush.

HILLARD

Get it off MeeeeaaaaAAGGHRE!!!!

It bores into her head before St Just can blow it away. It's head exploding in fragments of bone and sizzling blood as it falls away from the jeep, Hillard's body still clutched in arms.

Another leaps out at them, but the jeep is going a good clip and it misses.

The crew peppering it with bullets.

They look, about them, guns ready.

ANGLE: IN THE BRUSH

Something runs parallel to them in the plants.

ANGLE: ABOVE

Two more run on top of the grow-lamps, pacing them as well.

One DROPS DOWN -- Ripley SWERVES out of the way, driving in the plants.

They are varied, exotic -- and there are aliens behind half of them.

The crew BLASTS away all around them Ripley drives a drunkard's path through the brush,

avoiding trees that dot the scape.

An alien DROPS onto the hood, another grabs the side -- Vries takes out the first, blowing it off, but the second grabs Johner, he goes flying over the side,.dropping his gun.

St Just is too preoccupied with his own problems on the othe to see that Johner is being dragged, the alien still clutching onto him.

Shots bang out, ripping into the alien, which lets go. Johner looks up to see Purvis holding Johner's gun.

Johner drags himself back on.

One jumps down onto St Just, tears a good chunk out of his midsection before he dusts it.

Another alien jumps on the hood just as the jeep SAILS over first ledge of the terraced slope, comes-down hard enough knock it off, SAILS over the next -- the crew can barely hang on as the jeep crashes down slope after slope.

Ripley swerves back onto the road, the jeep sliding over onto the steps beside it, rocking violently as they shoot down the remainder of slope, the aliens close on their heels.

Still blasting away at the beasts, the crew is able to put little distance between them as they come to the end of the garden. Here it divides into three sections, all open halls with access for the jeep.

RIPLEY

Which way?

DISTEPRMO (looking over)

Left! Left!

She swerves left, the jeep-bouncing into the hall

INT. HALL CONTINUOUS

Where windows running along either side look out onto black space.

Ripley drives as far as she can, till a staircase -- going -- fills her vision, too steep for the jeep. She SLAMS on brakes. the jeep spinning out and coming to a halt.

The crew piles out, Di Stephano grabbing Vriess. At the other end of the hall, the aliens can be seen approaching.

The crew BLASTS at them, the aliens, blood splattering the narrow hall.

ANGLE: THE BLOOD

Eating into the walls. the floor.

CALL/Ship

Warning. potential hullbreach. Clear sector.

DISTEPHANO (indicating the steps)

Down here!

They start down -- all but St Just. He gets out of the jeep with difficulty.

Looks down at his wound.

Johner looks around to see him still standing atop the steps

JOHNER

St Just! Come on, man.

St Just looks down at the wound. Back at Johner. He walks calmly away, towards the aliens.

CALL

St Just!

ST JUST

You go.

He looks at the approaching aliens.

ST JUST

I'm bored.

CALL\SHIP

Warning. Evacuate sector.

A moment, then the crew takes off.

St Just takes a handful of pills, pops them into his mouth. Only the slightest grin suffuses his face ,as he waits for the aliens.

They close on him, and he raises his guns.

CALL\SHIP

warning...

CUT TO:

INT HALL NEARBY - CONTINUOUS

The crew runs full out.

DISTEPHANO

We have to get out of the sector!

RIPLEY

Where!

DISTEPHANO

There!

He points at a door that's down two flights and across the hall.

CUT TO: INT. HALL CONTINUOUS

The aliens close, and St Just FIRES, blasting away with bot guns. Aliens writhe on the floor before him, still they cover the bodies of their brothers, still he fires,

Call\ship monotones of warning in sharp contrast to the chaos

-- St Just fires until both guns are empty. In one smooth motion he drops them both and jerks his wrists and TWO-MORE disposable guns fly into his palms and he blasts away

ANGLE: THE BLOOD

Eating through the hull.

ANGLE: THE CREW

desperately racing for the door.

ANGLE: ST JUST

Firing with quiet glee.

ANGLE: THE CREW

The first of them are through the door.

ANGLE: St JUST

The aliens are getting closer, but still he mows them down Both his guns click, spent.

ST JUST

Damn.

CALL\SHIP

Warning --

and BOOM!!!!, the hall BURSTS OPEN, everything explodes into space, the wind rushes out as BOOM!!!!, the whole garden sector rips open, sucked out, as is the last to get out, but the pressure change SUCKS HER she flies backwards, the section door coming down just in time as she SLAMS into it, the door closing fully as she falls, lack of pressure sucks at the door itself, it creaks and be inward slightly, but it holds.

ANGLE: RIPLEY

The others have exited into the next hall. They've been tossed about, but not as badly.

Call stops, runs back to Ripley, helps her up. Ripley is dazed; the door hit the back of her head solidly.

CALL

Can you walk?

RIPLEY

I think I...

CALL

I'm not fucking carrying you

Ripley doesn't even hear her; something else drowns Call out. Ripley puts her hands over her ears.

RIPLEY

Mistake ... mistake...

CALL

Ripley.

RIPLEY

I can hear them, in the hive... it's close... We're on the hive.

CALL

Jesus. Come on.

RIPLEY

I can hear them... the queen...

CALL

What... ?

RIPLEY

She's in pain.

They CRASH UP through the floor panels, six of them, surrounding the two women.

Call can barely spin before Ripley GRABS her and HURLS her fifteen feet down the corridor, out of harm's way.

The aliens close on Ripley. She struggles but she's still weak. One slams her onto the ground call recovers, looks back at Ripley

As the aliens drag her unconscious body back down under the floor.

CALL

RIPLEY!

CUT TO: INT. AIR VENT - CONINUOUS

Dark, cramped, and already covered with a hardening layer of resin.

Skittering, insectile motion at one end heralds the aliens, as two of them crawl rapidly along. The third craw upside down, the semiconscious Ripley draped over its chest. If she were awake, and out of her mind, she could be kissing the beast.

Her eyes flutter open, but she is obviously still groggy.

ANGLE: RIPLEY'S POV

Alien head, dark tunnel passing beneath.

Scuttling through a small maze, the aliens come out into:

INT. WASTE TANK 5 - CONTINUOUS

A vast, dark chamber, entirely encrusted with alien goo. air vent opens about three quarters of the way up the chamber. The aliens pour out and immediately scuttle UP, carrying Ripley to the top of the chamber.

They circle her and begin secreting resin, spinning a web around her.

The resin comes out of their backs in spits and globs.

It isn't pleasant, and Ripley struggles feebly as they begin to cocoon her.

CUT TO: INT. ANTECHAMBER CONTINUOUS

The crew piles through it on their way to the loading dock.

Call brings up the rear, still looking back regretfully.

She hesitates, and Purvis takes hold of her arm.

PURVIS

We got to be moving, miss. Best gift you can give her right now is a quick death.

CALL

It's not right...

PURVIS

I've been saying that all day, we need your help.

A moment more, and she heads out with him.

CUT TO: WASTE, TANK 5 - CONTINUOUS

The aliens have finished webbing Ripley, and climb away.

When it is done she finds herself basically hung from the ceiling, her legs encased and glued with glistening strands to the roof. She hangs therefore at an angle, looking down on the chamber.

And so it is with her, as she swims to full consciousness, we get our first real look at where we are.

There are no less than ten people strung up exactly as Ripley is, encircling the chamber, and all looking some forty feet down at:

The Queen. Lying on her back at the bottom of the-chamber, belly swollen and distended.

She is herself partially cocooned, strapped down to the at the edge of a black pool of blood and ichor. Her head moves slowly back and forth, in delirium of pain.

There are a four or five aliens tending her, spinning goo around her, vomiting blood onto her belly. They might be serving her, or imprisoning her. Both, in fact .

There is one thing missing from this tableau.

RIPLEY (softly)

No eggs ...

GEDIMAN (OS)

Multiple reproductive systems.

Ripley turns slowly, to see the person next to her. It's Gediman, looking wane and haggard.

He may be speaking to her but he stares straight ahead, his eyes glowing with near insanity.

GEDIMAN

Complete asexual reproductive cycle, self-impregnating, we found six different sets of ovaries in her. Egg laying is the first cycle, immature. Redundancies, redundancies ... she'll bring forth legion.

RIPLEY

They didn't impregnate you?

Now he looks at her, regret and glee at what has happened battling for his expression.

GEDIMAN

No... they've just been draining me.

She looks down, to see

ANGLE : GEDIMAN'S FEET

As blood from various wounds seeps slowly past his toes, dripping into the pool.

A keening SHRIEK comes out of the queen, as her limbs begin thrashing.

The aliens around her back off slightly.

The bulge in her belly starts moving.

Ripley starts struggling with her bonds, terror and determination in her eyes.

RIPLEY

I'm getting out of here. Goddamnit, I'm getting the fuck out of here!

He looks at her, the last glimmer of his sanity sinking beyond the horizon.

GEDIMAN

Don't you want to see what happens next?

CUT TO: INT: LOADING DOCK - CONTINUOUS

The crew rushes in, heads for the Betty.

JOHNER

How long till we can get airborne?

VRIESS

I'll need Call to patch in to the ship again, open the hatch.

CALL

Right.

JOHNER

We hit atmo in a few minutes, only gonna make it harder.

They all run on board

INT. THE BETTY

and head for the cockpit. DiStephano deposits Vriess in a wheelchair.

CALL

Johner, take Purvis to the freezer.

JOHNER

All right.. Nap time, buddy.

A GUNSHOT and Purvis goes flying, blood spurting out of his shoulder, Johner draws but Wren emerges from the shadows too fast.

Wren grabs Call and very carefully holds his gun to her back right below her shoulderblades.

WREN

Fuck with me and I put a bullet where her brain is!

Johner stands, uncertain.

WREN

DiStephano! Take their weapons.

DISTEPHANO

Begging your pardon, sir, but eat my fuck.

DiStephano aims at Wren. Wren backs up a step.

WREN

Drop it! Drop it or we all die together!

Heaped in the, corner, Purvis suddenly jerks forward. His eyes go wide.

CUT TO: INT. WASTE TANK 5 CONTINUOUS

Ripley is frantically trying to pull at her bonds. It's just beginning to work.

But the noise in here is getting worse, the aliens frantically agitated as the Queens belly begins moving more violently. SHRIEKS, and RIPLEY does as well, from effort or sympathy, it is hard to tell, as

THE QUEENS BELLY POPS OPEN. Blood shoots everywhere, burning into the walls.

And all the screaming stops. The movement stops. Even Ripley stops. Silence.

Something emerges from the wound.

An alien, to be sure, but nothing we've seen so far, its forelegs arch out of its back like spiders legs, its back legs set on enormous haunches, thick and powerful.

Its head is long, eyeless, like the others, but along its white expanse red veins, coming out of the skin and running like thick black hairs to the back.

It has retracted pincers at the side of head that come out when its tongue does.

Its much bigger the the others, nearly the size of the queen herself.

And it's bone white.

GEDIMAN

Beautiful.... beautiful butterfly...

He is crying with revelatory joy. Ripley is not. Grimacing the sight and smell of the new beast, she begins pulling again at her bonds.

One of the soldiers, at the 'other end of the room from Ripley wakes up.

Dangling uselessly at his side is a rifle -- the real deal, not a burner.

SOLDIER

No, God...

He SCREAMS in uncomprehending horror. The newborn stops, tilting its head:

It LEAPS up to the ceiling in a second, quick and effortless as a monstrous flea.

Leaps again and lands on the screaming soldier, gripping his sides with its four forelegs as he screams lustily.

pincers SWING out and pin either side of his head.. His eyes go wide as:

Its tongue SHOOTs into his throat. Stays there, and we watch it drain the blood from his body. We can see it, see its stomach swell, red tinged, as his body goes blue and slack. .His rifle drops into the black pool.

Gediman stares, transfixed, and it LANDS ON HIM.

CUT TO: INT. BETTY - CONTINUOUS

Johner's gun drops to the floor.

Everyone backs off.

WREN

The fucking robot is going to plug back into the Auriga and land it according to standard operational procedure.

CALL

No she's not.

DISTEPHMO

You're fucking nuts. You still want to bring those things back to earth?

JOHNER

Have you been paying any attention today?

WREN

I can handle the animals!

CALL

Fucking shoot me.

WREN

Shut up!!!

And Purvis LAUNCHES from the corner, screaming, jumps on wren - Wren gets off a couple of shots -- nails DiStephano in the face. The soldier drops like a sack.

The other shots hit the ship, Call dives for cover as Purvis SLAMS his fist across Wren's face, Wren fires again and Jo is on the ground, rolling, grabbing his gun --

Purvis is a man possessed. He grabs Wren's gunhand and SMASHES it against an instrument panel, bone cracking audibly as wren drops the gun.

Purvis jerks. Blood blooms in his chest.

Everybody stops, mesmerized. wren drops to his knees, going for the gun, and Purvis grabs him from behind, pulls him so that the back of Wren's head is against his chest.

Purvis jerks again. It takes Wren a moment to understand what's happening.

They both scream.

Then alien BURSTS out of Purvis's chest, STRAIGHT INTO WREN'S SKULL.

Everyone else is still frozen. Then the little critter bursts out of Wren's face, flying straight at Vriess.

CUT TO: INT. WASTE TANK 5 - CONTINUOUS

Ripley TEARS one of her arms free as the newborn feeds beside her.

Gediman is already a shell.

Having drained the scientist, it leaps blindingly fast onto the ceiling. Looks around.

Targets Ripley.

It has no eyes, but she can feel them on her anyway. She rips at her bonds with a terrible effort -- the newborn LEAPS at her and she PULLS FREE with a scream, PLUNGING the thirty feet to the pool as the alien flies over her, missing, landing on the far wall instead.

Ripley disappears beneath the surface of the water.

The newborn turns its head, trying to locate its lost prey. other aliens scutter closer to the pool.

Ripley stands up out of the pool, covered in blood, HOISTING THE SOLDIER'S GUN.

Killshriek rising from her throat as she FIRES, taking out a host of aliens in a single sweep, just tagging the newborn as it leaps out of the way. Aliens jump at her, trying to kill and trying to protect the newborns, but she blows them out of the air.

It feels pretty good.

A few shots go wild, and punch big holes in the side of the tank.

Light streams in through them. Ripley sees -- and continues firing in that direction.

She makes a big enough hole that she can run and SMASH through to

INT. BY TANK - CONTINUOUS rolling and coming up in an instant. She looks around her. exit this way, but there is a vent above her.

The newborn's head lunges at her, the small hole making it impossible for the creature to get all the way through. But it wriggles,pushing...

Ripley jumps up, grabbing a pipe, and KICKS open the vent grate, throwing herself up the vertical shaft with astonishing ease.

CUT TO: INT. BETTY - CONTINUOUS---

Vriess is scrambling away, knocking over things to avoid the baby alien.

Johner SHOOTs at the creature as it speeds-towards Vriess.

CALL

Don't shoot it! Betty's hull is too thin!

JOHNER

Look out!

it knocks over cannisters as it speeds across the table and behind some instruments.

VRIESS

Where'd it go?

CALL

Don't shoot it!

JOHNER

Fuck that!

It LEAPS out of the darkness and heads straight for Call ,she stumbles back, trips -- it comes at her, leaps right at her face, she pulls her hand back -- and-flicks her wrist The stilletto pops out as the creatu flies at it, the blade slides right into its mouth, ramming eight inches through its innards before it pokes out the other end.

Blood spurts on Call, on the floor. The creature wriggles and finally falls free as the stiletto melts inside it.

JOHNER

Vriess! Get behind the fucking wheel!

CUT TO: INT. VERTICAL AIR SHAFT - CONTINUOUS

Ripley is climbing up the cramped vent with the speed and agility of an alien.

Unfortunately, so are the aliens, twenty feet below her. Two drones in front, with the newborn squeezing close behind.

Ripley grabs a pole and her hand begins to steam, it's so hot. She cries out, lets go...

then looks down. Grabs the pole again and, ignoring the searing agony, pulls, pulls...

RIPS out of the wall, burning steam GUSHING out below her, slowing down the aliens.

She continues climbing, then kicks through a grate.

CUT TO:

EXT. SPACE

The Auriga races toward:

EARTH. But not as we've seen it.

The planet is still blue, but almost two thirds of it is obscured by a giant orbitting latticework of metal, a part shell that rotates slightly faster than the planet itself.

The Auriga heads for a section of exposed earth. Not long now .

CUT TO: INT. ANTE CHAMBER - CONTINUOUS

Ripley drops to the ground and heads for the dock.

CALL/SHIP

Airlock doors closing. Stand clear.

RIPLEY

No!

She doesn't bother to try the door, she HURLS herself through the window, landing

INT. DOCKING BAY

in a hail of glass.

She is on the platform that. runs the length of the dock. Betty. is barely visible past the far end, - sinking into the airlock as the massive airlock doors. slide slowly shut.

RIPLEY

NO!!

A SLAM against the metal door behind her tells her the aliens are here.

She picks herself up and RUNS -- and she can run fast.

Speeds across the platform, faster, faster, the Betty sinks of sight as the airlock doors move closer together, fifteen feet apart, ten...

Ripley reaches the edge of the platform and LEAPS, just hurls herself off of the platform, sails through the air, thirty, forty feet, and down, the airlock doors thirty feet below almost closed

She DROPS right through just before they close, falls another fifteen feet and lands

-- WHAM!! -- on top of-the Auriga, hard, rolls, lies there in extremes of pain.

CUT TO:

INT. BETTY - CONTINUOUS

The crew look up at the sound.

VRIESS

Something's on us!

JOHNER

Forget it! we'll shake it off on descent.

Airlock secure. Outer doors opening... . CUT TO:

INT. AIRLOCK - CONTINUOUS

Ripley tries to pick herself up, is momentarily too wiped. breathes heavily, gets to her knees.

ANGLE: FROM ABOVE-

we see Ripley crawling toward the hatch, and the huge outer airlock door opening beneath the ship. Blue sky and wind the screen below.

ANGLE: RIPLEY

Struggling to get to the hatch.

RIPLEY

God'...

And above her, through a window into the docking bay, we see the newborn appear.

CUT TO: INT. BETTY - CONTINUOUS

CALL

Almost there...

JOHNER

We got about forty seconds till we kiss the ground!

Go full thrust on the downdraft! We'll get clear!

JOHNER

It's gonna be fucking close.

CALL\SHIP

Warning. Procedural interruption. Ship not leveling for vertical drop. Braking system nonfunctional. Collision imminent.

JOHNER

No shit.

CALL

Almost there.

CUT TO:

INT. AIRLOCK - CONTINUOUS

The airlock doors are almost.. completely open. Ripley has reached the hatch, but cannot get it open. She pounds on it frustration -- and the newborn SMASHES through the window, JUMPS DOWN onto the ship.

RIPLEY

NOO!! NOOO!

CUT TO:

INT. BETRY - CONTINUOUS

CALL

NOW!!!

Vriess punches it

CUT TO:

INT. AIRLOCK\EXT. SKY CONTINUOUS and the Betty SHOOTs DOWN out of the airlock -- Ripley and the newborn just barely hold on,

Ripley's body thrown straight up as she grips the hatch door for dear life.

The newborn has a better grip -- it has more things to grip with but it too struggles with the sudden drop.

ANGLE: THE ATJRIGA

Speeding toward the earth. The Betty SHOOTs out the airlock and nearly smashes into the bottom of the ship as it passes, like trash thrown out of a speeding car.

INT. BETTY

The Akiriga passes, huge above them

VRIESS

Look out!

CALL

I am!

EXT. THE BETTY

The ship swerves as Call expertly avoids the Auriga -- and see Ripley and the newborn on top, still fighting for purchase

The Betty gets clear, leveling out --

The Auriga still heads straight for earth, as the terrain below becomes clear -

- deserted, snow covered mountains

ANGLE: RIPLEY

Hanging on

ANGLE: CALL

Fighting to control the Betty

ANGLE: INSIDE THE AURIGA

Deserted halls, passageways bodies, and,aliens milling here and there

CALL\SHIP

Collision in six seconds ... five... four...

(softly)

Here we go...

ANGLE: THE ATJRIGA

SMASHES INTO THE GROUND, a deafening explosion eating the massive ship in seconds, utter cacophony.

ANGLE: THE BETTY

Flying away, the thundering firestorm behind it.

ANGLE: CALL

An instrument panel suddenly SPARKS beside her warning lights flash, the ship shaking as if under massive turbulence

CALL

Johner! Fire!

VRIESS

Vector control's fucked! we gotta put down!

CALL

Find me a path!

Johner sprays foam on the fire. There is a loud BANGING heard far overhead.

What the fuck is that?

ANGLE: RIPLEY

is slamming her fist on the hatch doors, hanging on with her other arm.

The ship continues to tremble and buck -- she's nearly thrown off.

RIPLEY

Godamnit!

She looks around at the alien. It's almost on her.

Working its way painfully toward her, gripping with its legs and tendrils. Hissing.

It slams a tentacle down at Ripley, but she rolls, just holding on

ANGLE: JOHNER

Above the cockpit, looking at a fuzzy external monitor.

JOHNER

It's Ripley! Ripley's on the fucking hatch!

In the cockpit, Call nearly goes white.

CALL

Let her in!

JOHNER

Fuck no! There's something else out there with her!

VRIESS

One of them.

Johner looks at the image,. realizes how masive the newborn is .

Awed fear creeps into his voice:

JOHNER

No. it's something else.

Frustrated, Call jumps out of her seat.. Vriess fights to control the ship as she climbs up toward the hatch.

VRIESS

Goddamnit, Call!

Johner grabs her, practically throws her at the monitor.

JOHNER

Look at that fucking thing! We can't open up!

They both tumble as the ship jerks

ANGLE: RIPLEY

Is bucked OFF THE SHIP

before she grabs the newborn's tentacle, holds on to it --

The newborn SMASHES it against the ship, trying to shake her again -

- she grabs an external grate and starts climbing painfully away.

ANGLE: CALL

Pushes Johner aside as she makes for the hatch release sequence.

ANGLE: VRIESS.

Desperately pulling up as wooded, snowy mountains zoom dangerously close below.

ANGLE: THE ALIEN

Turns as the HATCH OPENS nearby, the door sliding slowly beast is torn between Ripley and this new distraction --

Ripley sees it too, starts climbing for it frantically, one on the newborn.

The beast makes for the doorway -- and CALL POPS HALFWAY OUT pointing a GRENADE LAUNCHER at the thing.. She BLASTS it once , the beast roaring and starting back, hurt but not nearly enough. Call fires again but the ship's rocking sends the shot wild.

she flies back for all of a second

The beast rears to attack but Ripley is at the hatch -- Call drags her in and closes the hatch, the beast just SLAMMING in it as it closes.

INT. THE BETTY

Ripley is hanging on Call, exhausted.

Another BANG on the hatch, and they can see the door starting to give.

VRIESS

Call! NOW!

Call and Ripley head into the cockpit. Johner continues looking at the vidscreen at the beast.

VRIESS

We can't to do a vertical setdown! Braking systems are shot!

CALL

Find me a patch of land! I'll put her down.

Call jumps back into the pilot's seat by Vriess. He pulls up hard on the wheel, but the ship is still dangerously close to the ground.

JOHNER

That thing isn't going anywhere!

VRIESS

Johner, strap in! We're coming down hard!

ANGLE: -BETTY

Approaches the rough, wooded terrain, just above the trees. Hits a relatively clear patch, touches down -- bounces back up and then down again

ANGLE: CALL

Fighting the wheel -- she can't pull it up hard enough.

ANGLE: THE BETTY

The ship blasts through trees. The newborn moves to the back of the ship to avoid debris.

JOHNER

That things gone back behind the thrusters!

Call and Ripley look at each other.

RIPLEY

Hit it.

Call throws on the thrusters, the ship ROCKETS forward

ANGLE: THE NEWBOM

Engulfed in flame, losing its grip --

THE BETTY

Going too fast -- Call can't control it

VRIESS

Kill thrust! Now!

Call does.

ANGLE: THE BETTY

Skids, skids, throwing up enormous debris. It hits another wooded area is thrown bodily into the windshield --

RIPLEY

THE BETTY

mows down a half acre of trees before finally grinding to a halt.

As soon as they've recovered, Call throws off her seatbelt.

CALL

Is everybody all right-?

JOHNER

Where're you going?

Call opens the hatch.

CALL

To make sure that thing is really dead

Its giant face LUNGES down at her, piston tongue shooting out .

It has charred black skin -- in some places that skin has fallen off and wet pink flesh shows through.

Call drops to the floor, the tongue just missing her. Johner scrambles for his gun as Ripley drags her out of the way.

AS quickly as it came, the head lurches back out.

JOHNER

I think it's gone!

VRIESS

No, it's waiting for us to come out!

Can we fly?

VRIESS

We can't fucking crawl!

RIPLEY

It's gone.

Call looks at her.

CALL

Are you sure?

JOHNER

Good! Great!

CALL

No...

Call grabs a grenade launcher.

CALL

I've got to stop it.

VRIESS

Call

CALL

That thing is thirty minutes old! In a few hours it'll grow up. If it reaches a place with people...

She heads for the door but Ripley is on her way. They exchange a look.

RIPLEY

You'll never catch it.

Call tosses her the grenade launcher.

CUT TO: EXT. BETTY - MOMENTS LATER

The ship sits silent in the woods, the trees around heavy with snow.

Ripley comes out the top. She looks around her, sees the tracks in the snow.

Huge, loping. She jumps down off the ship.

And runs.

Through the blur of trees, she moves with the grace and speed of an animal, leaping from boulders, racing through the powdered brush this is Ripley at peak speed, and it is something to see.

She starts going up, the way getting steeper and rockier, til she reaches a cliff face, and looks out on:

A CITY.

Sprawling, huge, a million tiny lights cutting through the darkness it's just before the horizon.

The newborn RISES in front of Ripley, STRIKES her before she has a chance to aim her weapon.

Its tentacle cuts deeply into her, sends her flying.

The beast is on her in a second, its enormous jaws missing her head by an inch as she rolls, grabs the grenade launcher, FIRE

The beast is thrown, but just grazed, back on her as she tries to get off another shot, it SLAMS a foot down RIGHT ON HER she SCREAMS, the launcher rolls free, the beast coming in for the kill and over the ridge FLIES THE HARVESTER, Call at the controls. aiming right for the newborn.

It rears up to see it just as the girl RAMS it into the creature's head, it knocks it on its ass, the harvester shaking but not quite spinning out, as Call comes around for another shot.

Ripley scrambles to safety as the Newborn prepares for the oncoming harvester, it whips its tentacles at it but Call swerves at the last second -- The monster spins with it, screaming, sees Ripley and slashes at her. KNOCKS HER OFF THE CLIFF

--

She falls, grabs brush it snaps -- she starts sliding down rockface and she takes her hand, SLAMS her fingers into the smooth rock face like a pick axe -- it rips her nails bloody but she digs out purchase.

ANGLE: CALL

SLAMS into the newborn from behind, the girl nearly thrown out of the harvester, the newborn spins and grabs it, Call throws it into reverse but the newborn is too strong, holds on, bringing its head up to face Call herself.

ANGLE: RIPLEY'S

Bloody and torn, it SMASHES into the rockface, as she climbs back to the top

ANGLE: THE NEWBORN

SWINGS the harvester into a tree, Call nearly knocked loose again. The monster is jolted as well, lets go, Call pilots the machine back through the trees, the alien watching it, growling --

Call flies deftly through the trees, away, away, then spins out, heads back for the beast at TOP SPEED, the wind roars as she closes

The newborn spins and she SLAMS into it, it goes flying, screaming in pain, the harvester bouncing off it, flipping over, CRASHING against the trees and landing tilted upside down, Call unconscious between it and the ground.

The newborn shudders, rises, makes for the harvester -- it clearly pissed.

Ripley pulls herself over the ridge, sees the situation, rushes toward them.

Call awakens to see the monster approaching the machine. Terrified, but determined, she reaches for a lever

RIPLEY

No! Over here!

Calling out to distract it, she runs, waving her arms.

CALL

Ripley! Let it come! Let it come!

Tears run through her voice as she strains for the lever. The beast is torn, and for a moment doesn't move.

Ripley looks over to where Call is, and understanding blooms on her face.

She looks around and spots:

ANGLE: THE GRENADE LAUNCHER

Halfway between her and the newborn.

For a moment neither of them moves. Then Ripley RUNS, the newborn comes at her with equal speed, like they're playing chicken, Ripley DIVES at the ground, rolls, comes up holdin the grenade launcher, and she FIPES!

The newborn is hit up close and dead center this time, and it rears back, screaming -

- Ripley FIRES and FIRES, driving it back toward the upended harvester.

The alien rears up to its full height, and Ripley pulls the trigger. There is a hollow click.

Furious, Ripley stares a moment at the beast. A SSCREAM wells up in her throat and she THROWS herself at it, leaping impossibly high, smashing into it and sending both of them tumbling onto the Harvester.

Call pulls the lever.

In an instant the machine roars to life, a thousand blades grinding to top speed, pulverizing the beast, consuming it, sucking it down as layer upon layer of alien flesh is chopped into messes.

And it SHRIEKS, a noise unheard before, as it thrashes frantically.

Ripley tries to pull herself off it before the blades get too close
-- but the beast grabs her, holds her. The blades ever closer as she struggles with it.

ANGLE: CALL

Still trapped below, she sees the aliens blood seeping through the machine all around her!

She squirms, trying to get away, but she's stuck. A stream of blood lands on her shoulder, eating it away. Another on her leg, and panic blooms, bright in her.

CALL

RIPLEY!

Galvanized by the cry, Ripley TEARS herself out of the beast's dying grasp, flips backwards off the Harvester as it begins to smoke and spark, blood eating through the controls.

Call writhes, blood everywhere now. She is lost in primal terror.

Ripley wriggles her way under, and, regardless of the streams of blood splattering her, wrenches Call free. She drags her' out.

A section of the harvester explodes, raining fire and debris on the dying alien.

Call lies on the ground, Ripley behind her, arms wrapped tight around her.

Covered in blood and grime, the two watch the alien go up in flames, breathing hard, holding each other as if their lives depended on it still.

DISSOLVE TO.- ANGLE: THE NEWBORN'S SKULL

Burning, hollowed out by the licks of flame that caress it.
Collapsing gently on itself.

WIDE ANGLE:

EXT. SAME - LATER

The four of them sit by the huge camp-fire, watching the flames.

Vriess tosses 'Christie a bottle of whiskey.

JOHNER

The bitch takes her time in burning.

VRIESS

Well, it looks like she's finally giving it up.

JOHNER

Troopers should be finding our ship any time now. I don't much love the idea of being around when they do.

Ripley gets up, looks out over the cliffs edge at the lights the city.

Christie offers the bottle to Call. She takes it and drinks.

VRIESS (to Call)

I guess you won't want to be answering any official Questions either.

CALL

I guess not.

She is grateful for the suggestion that they are in it together.

VRIESS

Well, we're on Earth, for Chrissake. Plenty of places to get lost here.

CALL

So I've heard.

After a moment, she gets up as well, goes over to Ripley. She hands her the bottle.

Ripley looks at it.

CALL

It's a drink. You drink it.

RIPLEY (smiling) I remember. She drinks.

CALL

So, what do you think?

RIPLEY

Think?

CALL

What should we do now?

RIPLEY

I don't know.

She looks out in the distance...

RIPLEY

I'm a stranger here myself

The two of them stand side by side staring out at the unfamiliar horizon, as the newborn dwindles in the dancing flame.

THE END

All movie scripts and screenplays on this site are intended for educational purposes only.

Screenplays for You - free movie scripts and screenplays

Screenplays and movie scripts organized alphabetically:

<#>A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z PDF ALL

Aliens (1986)

by James Cameron.

First draft. May 28, 1985.

More info about this movie on IMDb.com

FADE IN

SOMETIME IN THE FUTURE - SPACE

1

Silent and endless. The stars shine like the love of God...cold and remote. Against them drifts a tiny chip of technology.

CLOSER SHOT It is the NARCISSUS, lifeboat of the ill-fated star-freighter Nostromo. Without interior or running lights it seems devoid of life. The PING of a RANGING RADAR grows louder, closer. A shadow engulfs the Narcissus. Searchlights flash on, playing over the tiny ship, as a MASSIVE DARK HULL descends toward it.

INT. NARCISSUS

2

Dark and dormant as a crypt. The searchlights stream in the dusty windows. Outside, massive metal forms can BE SEEN descending around the shuttle. Like the tolling of a bell, a BASSO PROFUNDO CLANG reverberates through the hull.

CLOSE ON THE AIRLOCK DOOR Light glares as a cutting torch bursts through the metal. Sparks shower into the room.

A second torch cuts through. They move with machine precision, cutting a rectangular path, converging. The torches meet. Cut off. The door falls inward REVEALING a bizarre multi-armed figure. A ROBOT WELDER.

FIGURES ENTER, backlit and ominous. THREE MEN in bio-isolation suits, carrying lights and equipment. They approach a sarcophaguslike HYPERSLEEP CAPSULE, f.g.

LEADER

(filtered)

Internal pressure positive. Assume nominal hull integrity. Hypersleep capsules, style circa late twenties...

His gloved hand wipes at on opaque layer of dust on the canopy.

ANGLE INSIDE CAPSULE as light stabs in where the dust is wiped away, illuminating a WOMAN, her face in peaceful repose.

WARRANT OFFICER RIPLEY, sole survivor of the Nostromo. Nestled next to her is JONES, the ship's wayward cat.

LEADER
(voice over; filtered)
Lights are green. She's alive.
Well, there goes out salvage, guys.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. HOSPITAL ROOM - TIGHT ON RIPLEY - GATEWAY STATION 3

She's lying in a bed, looking wan, as a female MED-TECH raises the backrest. She is surrounded by arcane white MEDICAL EQUIPMENT. The Med-Tech exudes practiced cheeriness.

MED-TECH
Why don't I open the viewport?
Watch your eyes.

Harsh light floods in as a motorized shield slides into the ceiling, REVEALING a breathtaking vista. Beyond the sprawling complex of modular habitats, collectively called GATEWAY STATION, is the curve of EARTH as seen from high orbit. Blue and serene.

MED-TECH
And how are we today?

RIPLEY
(weakly)
Terrible.

MED-TECH
Just terrible? That's better than yesterday at least.

RIPLEY
How long have I been on Gateway station?

MED-TECH
Just a couple of days. Do you feel up to a visitor?

Ripley shrugs, not caring. The door opens and a MAN enters, although Ripley sees only what he is carrying. A familiar large, orange TOMCAT.

RIPLEY

Jones!

She grabs the cat like a life preserver.

RIPLEY

(cooing baby-cat talk)

Come here Jonesy you ugly old moose...you ugly thing.

Jones patiently endures Ripley's embarrassing display, seeming none the worse for wear. The visitor sits beside the bed and Ripley finally notices him. He is thirtyish and handsome, in a suit that looks executive or legal, the tie loosened with studied casualness. A smile referred to as "winning."

MAN

Nice room. I'm Burke. Carter Burke.
I work for the company, but other than that I'm an okay guy. Glad to see you're feeling better. I'm told the weakness and disorientation should pass soon. Side effects of the unusually long hypersleep, or something like that.

RIPLEY

How long was I out there? They won't tell me anything.

BURKE

(soothing)

Well, maybe you shouldn't worry about that just yet.

Ripley grabs his arm, surprising him.

RIPLEY

How long?

Burke gazes at her, thoughtful.

BURKE

All right. My instinct says you're strong enough to handle this...Fifty-seven years.

Ripley is stunned. She seems to deflate, her expression passing through amazement and shock to realization of all she has lost. Friends. Family. Her world.

RIPLEY

Fifty-seven...oh, Christ...

BURKE

You'd drifted right through the core systems. It's blind luck that deep-salvage team caught you when they...are you all right?

Ripley coughs suddenly as if choking and her expression becomes one of dawning horror. Burke hands her a glass of water from the nightstand. She slaps it away. It shatters with a SMASH. Jones dives, yowling. Ripley grabs her chest, struggling as if she is strangling.
The Med-Tech hits a console button.

MED-TECH

(shouting)

Code Blue! 415. Code Blue!
4-1-5!

Burke and the Med-Tech are holding Ripley's shoulders as she goes into convulsions. A DOCTOR and TWO TECHS run in. Ripley's back arches in agony.

RIPLEY

No...nooooo!

They try to restrain her as she thrashes, knocking over equipment. Her EKG races like mad. Jones, under a cabinet, hisses wide-eyed.

DOCTOR

Hold her...Get me an airway, stat!
And fifteen cc's of...Jesus!

AN EXPLOSION OF BLOOD beneath the sheet covering her chest! Ripley stares at the SHAPE RISING UNDER THE SHEET. Tearing itself out of her.

HER P.O.V. as the sheet rises. A GLIMPSE OF the CHITTERING HORROR...IT SCREECHES.

TIGHT ON RIPLEY screaming, snapping up INTO FRAME.
Alone in the darkened hospital room. She gasps for breath, clutching pathetically at her chest. There is no demented horror rigging itself out of her. Her eyes snap about wildly, slowly focusing on the reality of her safety. Shuddering, bathed in sweat, she kneads her breastbone with the heel of her hand and sobs.

A VIDEO MONITOR beside the bed snaps on. A MED-TECH's face.

MED-TECH
Bad dreams again? Do you want something to help you sleep?

RIPLEY
(faint)
No.. I've slept enough.

The Med-Tech shrugs and switches off. Touching a button on the nightstand she opens the viewport, REVEALING Gateway and the turquoise Earth. She hugs Jones to her and rocks with him like a child, still shattered by the nightmare. Shivering. Sleep is far off.

RIPLEY
We made it, Jones. We made it.

But at what price?

CUT TO:

EXT. PARK

4

Sunlight streams in shafts through a stand of poplars, beyond which a verdant meadow is VISIBLE.

EXTREME F.G. Jones stalks toward a bird hopping among fallen leaves. He leaps. And smack into A WALL.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Dumbshit.

WIDER ANGLE as Jones steps back confused from the HIGH-RESOLUTION ENVIRONMENTAL WALL SCREEN, a sort of cinerama video-loop. Ripley sits on a bench in what we now SEE is an ATRIUM off the medical center, still somewhere in the bowels of Gateway Station. Benches. Some unenthusiastic potted trees. The sterile corridors VISIBLE beyond glass doors b.g.

Burke ENTERS in his usual mode, casual haste.

BURKE
Sorry...I've been running behind all morning.

Ripley seems healthier now, but still a bit brittle.

RIPLEY
Have they located my daughter yet?

BURKE

Well, I was going to wait until after the inquest...

He opens his briefcase, removing a sheet of printer hard copy, including a telestat photo.

RIPLEY

Is she...?

BURKE

(scanning)

Amanda Ripley-McClaren. Married name, I guess. Age: sixty-six ...at time of death. Two years ago.

(looks at her)

I'm sorry.

Ripley studies the PHOTOGRAPH, stunned.

The face of a woman in her mid-sixties. It could be anybody. She tries to reconcile the face with the little girl she once knew.

RIPLEY

Amy.

BURKE

(reading)

Cancer. Hmmm. They still haven't licked that one. Cremated. Interred
Parkside Repository, Little Chute,
Wisconsin. No children.

Ripley gazes off, into the pseudo-landscape, into the past.

RIPLEY

I promised her I'd be home for her birthday. Her eleventh birthday. I sure missed that one.

(pause)

Well...she has already learned to take my promises with a grain of salt. When it came to flight schedules, anyway.

Burke nods, a simpatico presence.

RIPLEY

You always think you can make it up to somebody...later, you know.

But now I never can. I never can.

Let's get one thing straight...Ripley can be one tough lady. But the terror, the loss, the emptiness are, in this moment, overwhelming. She cries silently.

Burke puts a reassuring hand on her arm.

BURKE
(gently)
The hearing convenes at 0930. You don't want to be late.

INT. CORRIDOR - GATEWAY

5

Elevator doors part and Ripley emerges, in mid-conversation with Burke. DOLLYING AHEAD OF THEM as they move rapidly down the corridor.

RIPLEY
You read my deposition...it's complete and accurate.

BURKE
Look, I believe you, but there are going to be some heavyweights in there. You got Feds, you got interstellar commerce commission, you got colonial administration,
insurance company guys...

RIPLEY
I get the picture.

BURKE
Just tell them what happened. The important thing is to stay cool and unemotional.

INT. CONFERENCE ROOM - ON RIPLEY - GATEWAY

6

She's not cool. Not unemotional.

RIPLEY
Do you people have earwax, of what? We have been here three hours. How many different ways do you want me to tell the same story?

She faces the EIGHT MEMBERS of the board of inquiry at a long conference table. Gray suits and grim faces. They aren't buying. Behind Ripley on a large VIDEO SCREEN, PARKER grins like a goon from his personnel mugshot. His file prints out next to it. BRETT's face and dossier replace it, and then the others as the SCENE continues... KANE, LAMBERT, ASH the android traitor, DALLAS. VAN LEUWEN, the ICC representative, steeples his fingers and frowns.

VAN LEUWEN

Look at it from our perspective.
You freely admit to detonating the engines of, and thereby destroying, an M-Class star-freighter. A rather expensive piece of hardware...

INSURANCE INVESTIGATOR

(dryly)

Forty-two million in adjusted dollars.
That's minus payload, of course.

VAN LEUWEN

The shuttle's flight recorder corroborates some elements of your account. That the Nostromo set down on LV-426, an unsurveyed planet, at that time. That repairs were made. That it resumed its course and was subsequently set for self-destruct. By you. For reasons unknown.

RIPLEY

Look, I told you...

VAN LEUWEN

It did not, however, contain any entries concerning the hostile life form you allegedly picked up.

Ripley sense the noose tightening.

RIPLEY

Then somebody's gotten to it... doctored the recorder. Who had access to it?

The ECA (Extrasolar Colonization Administration)
Representative (ECA REP) just shakes his head.

ECA REP

Would you just listen to yourself for one minute.

Ripley glares at the ECA Rep, a woman on the ungenerous side of fifty. Van Leuwen sighs with exasperation.

VAN LEUWEN

The analysis team which went over your shuttle centimeter by centimeter found no physical evidence of the creature you describe...

RIPLEY

(losing it)

That's because I blew it out the Goddamn airlock!

(pause)

Like I said.

INSURANCE MAN

(to ECA Rep)

Are there any species like this 'hostile organism' on LV-426?

ECA REP

No. It's a rock. No indigenous life larger than a simple virus.

Ripley grits her teeth in frustration.

RIPLEY

I told you, it wasn't indigenous.
There was an alien spacecraft there.
A derelict ship. We homed on its beacon...

ECA REP

To be perfectly frank, we've surveyed over three hundred worlds and no one's ever reported a creature which, using your words...

(read from Ripley's statement)

...'gestates in a living human host'
and has 'concentrated molecular acid for blood.'

Ripley glances at Burke, silent at the far end of the table. His expression is grim. Her mouth hardens as a bit of the old nail-eating Ripley surfaces.

RIPLEY

Look, I can see where this is going. But I'm telling you those things exist. Back on that planetoid is an alien ship and on that ship are thousands of eggs. Thousands.

Do you understand? I suggest you find it, using the flight recorder's data. Find it and deal with it -- before one of your survey teams comes back with a little surprise...

VAN LEUWEN
Thank you, Officer Ripley. That will be...

RIPLEY (louder, stepping on him)
...because just one of those things managed to kill my entire crew, within twelve hours of hatching...

Van Leuwen stands, out of patience.

VAN LEUWEN
Thank you, that will be all.

Ripley stares him down, glowering at the board.

RIPLEY
That's not all, Goddamnit! If those things get back here, that will be all. Then you can just kiss it good-bye, Jack! Just kiss it goodbye.

Ripley turns sharply away, trembling with frustration and anger. Dallas looks back at her from the video screen, his eyes burning from the photograph, as we:

CUT TO:

INT. CORRIDOR

7

Ripley kicks the wall next to Burke who is getting coffee and donuts at a vending machine.

BURKE
You had them eating out of your hand, kiddo.

RIPLEY
They had their minds made up before I even went in there.
They think I'm a head case.

BURKE
(cheerfully)
You are a head case. Have a donut.

INT. CONFERENCE ROOM - TIGHT ON RIPLEY - LATER

8

Van Leuwen clears his throat.

VAN LEUWEN
It is the finding of this board of inquiry that Warrent Officer Ellen Ripley, NOC-14672. has acted with questionable judgment and is unfit to hold an ICC license as a commercial flight officer.

Burke watches Ripley taking it on the chin, white-lipped but subdued.

VAN LEUWEN
Said license is hereby suspended indefinitely. No criminal charges will be filed at this time and you are released on own recognizance for a six month period of psychometric probation, to include monthly review by an ICC psychiatric tech...

INT. CORRIDOR

9

DOLLY BACK as the conference room door bangs open and Ripley strides through. She shrugs off Burke's restraining arm and catches up to Van Leuwen walking down the corridor.

RIPLEY
(insistent)
Why won't you check out LV-426?

VAN LEUWEN
(condescendingly)
Because I don't have to. The people who live there checked it out years ago and they never reported and 'hostile organism' or alien ship. And by the way, they call it Acheron now.

RIPLEY
What are you talking about.
What people?

Van Leuwen steps into an elevator with some others, but Ripley holds the door from closing.

VAN LEUWEN
Terraformers...planet engineers.
It's what we call a shake 'n' bake colony. They set up atmosphere processors to make the air breathable...big job. Takes decades. They've already been there over twenty years. Peacefully.

The door tries to close. Ripley slams it back. People are getting annoyed.

RIPLEY
How many colonists?

VAN LEUWEN
Sixty, maybe seventy families.

RIPLEY
(low)
Sweet Jesus.

ELEVATOR PASSENGER
Do you mind?

Ripley's hand slides off the door, strengthless.

TIGHT ON HER FROM INSIDE the elevator as the doors close like fate on her lost expression.

EXT. ALIEN LANDSCAPE - DAY 10

A hideous, storm-blasted vista. Tortured rock forms.
Bleak twilight at midday.

PAN SLOWLY ONTO a CORRODED METAL SIGN set in concrete pylons, which reads:

HADLEY'S HOPE - POP. 159
"WELCOME TO ACHERON"

Some local has added below in spray-can graffiti
"Have a nice day." Gale-force wind SCREECHES around the steel sign, driving a freezing rain.

The COLONY, b.g., is a squat complex with lots of floodlights.

EXT. COLONY COMPLEX 11

The town is a cluster of bunkerlike metal and concrete buildings connected by conduits. Neon signs throw garish colors across the vaultlike walls, advertising bars and other businesses. It looks like a sodden cross between the Krupps munitions works and a truckstop casino in the Nevada boondocks.

Huge-wheeled tractors crawl toadlike in the rutted "street" and vanish down rampways to underground garages.

ANGLE ON THE CONTROL BLOCK the largest structure. It resembles vaguely the superstructure of an aircraft carrier...a flying bridge.

VISIBLE across a half kilometer of barren heath, b.g., is the massive complex of the nearest ATMOSPHERE PROCESSOR, looking like a power plant bred with an active volcano. Its fiery glow pulses in the low cloud cover like a steel mill.

INT. MAIN CONCOURSE - NEAR CONTROL BLOCK

12

A central space, laid out like a scaled-down shopping mall with no styling flourishes. We SEE a cross section of the types of people who have come to live on Godforsaken Acheron. Tough. Pragmatic. "Grapes of Wrath" faces. Calloused hands. Not too many interior decorators. Some children race in the corridor on things that look suspiciously like "Big Wheels."

INT. OPERATIONS ROOM - CONTROL BLOCK

13

Jammed with computer terminals, technicians, displays... most of the business of running the colony flows through here. It's high tech but used and scrungy. Papers piled up. Coffee cup rings.

DOLLY AHEAD OF LYDECKER, the Assistant Operations Manager, as he catches up to the harried Operating Manager, SIMPSON.

LYDECKER

You remember you sent some wildcatters out to that plateau, out past the Ilium range, a couple days ago?

SIMPSON

Yeah. What?

LYDECKER

There's a guy on the horn, mom-and-pop survey team. Says he's homing on something and wants to know if his claim will be honored.

SIMPSON

Christ. Some honch in a cushy office on Earth says go look at a grid reference in the middle of nowhere, we look. They don't say why, and I don't ask. I don't ask because it takes two weeks to get an answer out here and the answer's always 'don't ask.'

LYDECKER

So what do I tell this guy?

SIMPSON

Tell him, as far as I'm concerned, he finds something it's his.

EXT. ACHERON - THE MIDDLE OF NOWHERE - A SIX-WHEELED TRACTOR - DAY 14

It roars across corrugated rock, blasting through soggy drifts of volcanic ash.

INT. TRACTOR

15

At the controls, intent on a PINGING scope, is RUSS JORDEN, independent prospector. Beside him is his wife/partner ANNE and in the back their two kids are playing among the heavy sampling equipment.

JORDEN

(gloating cackle)

Look at this fat, juicy magnetic profile. And it's mine, mine, mine.

ANNE

Half mine, dear.

NEWT, their six-year-old daughter, yells from the back...

NEWT

And half mine!

JORDEN

I got too many partners.

NEWT

Daddy, when are we going back to town?

JORDEN
When we get rich, Newt.

NEWT
You always say that. I wanna go back. I wanna play 'Monster Maze.'

Her older brother TIM sticks his jeering face close to hers.

TIM
You cheat too much.

NEWT
Do not. I'm just the best.

TIM
Do too! You go in places we can't fit.

NEWT
So! That's why I'm the best.

ANNE
Knock it off! I catch either of you playing in the air ducts again
I'll tan your hides.

NEWT
Mom. All the kids play it...

JORDEN
(reverently)
Holy shiiit!

ANGLE THROUGH FRONT CANOPY ON a bizarre shape looming ahead. An enormous bonelike mass projecting upward from the bed of ash. The tractor slows.

Canted on its side and buckles against a rock outcropping by the lava flow, it is still recognizable as an EXTRATERRESTRIAL SHIP. Bio-mechanoid. Nonhuman design.

JORDEN
Folks, we have scored big this time.

EXT. TRACTOR

16

Jorden and Anne step down, wearing ENVIRONMENT SUITS. Carrying LIGHTS, PACKS, CAMERAS, TEST GEAR. Their breath clouds in the chill air.

ANNE
You kids stay inside. I mean it! We'll be right back.

They trudge toward the alien derelict.

ANNE
Shouldn't we call in?

JORDEN
Let's wait till we know what to call it in as.

ANNE
(nervous)
How about 'big weird thing'?

They pause at a twisted gash in the hull. Blackness inside.

INT./EXT. TRACTOR

17

Newt has her face pressed to the glass, steaming it.
Watching her parents enter the strange ship. Tim GRABS
HER from behind. She SHRIEKS.

TIM Cheater!

EXT. LANDSCAPE - NIGHT

18

The tractor and the derelict are dark and motionless.
The wind HOWLS around them.

Tim is curled up in the driver's seat. Newt shakes him awake, trying hard not to cry.

NEWT
Timmy...they've been gone a long time.

Tim considers the night. The wind. The vast landscape.

He bites his lip.

TIM
(quavering)
It'll be okay, Newt. Dad knows what he's doing.

CRASH! Newt SCREAMS as the door beside her is RIPPED OPEN. A dark shape lunges inside!

Anne, panting and terrified, grabs the dash mike.

ANNE
Mayday! Mayday! This is Alpha Kilo Two Four Niner calling Hadley Control.
Repeat. This is...

As Anne shouts the mayday Newt looks past her, to the ground. Russ Jorden lies there inert, dragged somehow by Anne from inside the ship. There is SOMETHING ON HIS FACE. An appalling MULTILEGGED CREATURE, pulsing with obscene life. Newt begins to SCREAM hysterically, competing with the shrieking wind which rises to a crescendo as we:

CUT TO:

INT. RIPLEY'S APARTMENT - GATEWAY - DAY

20

Silence. Ripley, looking haggard, sits at a table in the dining alcove contemplating the smoke rising from her cigarette. The place is modest, to be charitable, and there are few personal touches. Though it's late in the day Ripley is still wearing a robe. The bed is unmade. Dishes in the sink. Jones prowls across the counter. The WALLSCREEN is on, blaring rapidly.

VOICE FROM VIDEO
(o.s.)
Hey, Bob! I heard you and the family are heading off for the colonies!

BON
(o.s.)
Best decision I ever made, Bill.
We'll be starting a new life from scratch, in a clean world.
No crime. No unemployment...

The door BUZZES. Ripley jumps like a cat. Jones doesn't.

INT. CORRIDOR

21

Carter Burke stands in the narrow, dingy corridor with LIEUTENANT GORMAN, Colonial Marine Corps. Young and severe in his officer's dress-black. The door opens slightly.

BURKE
Hi, Ripley. This is
Lieutenant Gorman of the...

SLAM. Burke buzzes again. Talks to the door...

BURKE
Ripley we have to talk.
(pause)
They've lost contact with the colony on Acheron.

The door opens. Ripley considers the ramifications of that. She motions them inside.

INT. RIPLEY'S APARTMENT - A LITTLE LATER

22

Burke and Gorman are seated, nursing coffee. Ripley paces, very tense.

RIPLEY
No. There's no way!

BURKE
Hear me out...

RIPLEY
I was reamed, steamed and dry-cleaned by you guys...and now you want me to go back out there? Forget it.

We SEE that she's gut scared, covering it with anger.
Burke sees it.

BURKE
Look, we don't know what's going on out there. It may just be a down transmitter. But if it's not, I want you there...as an advisor. That's all.

GORMAN
You wouldn't be going in with the troops. I can guarantee your safety.

BURKE
These Colonial Marines are some tough hombres, and they're packing state-of-the-art firepower.
Nothing they can't handle...right,

Lieutenant?

GORMAN

(cool)

We're trained to deal with these kinds of situations.

RIPLEY

(to Burke)

What about you? What's your interest in this?

BURKE

Well, the corporation co-financed that colony with the Colonial Administration, against mineral rights. We're getting into a lot of terraforming... 'Building Better Worlds.'

Burke is revealing his early days in sales.

RIPLEY

Yeah, yeah. I saw the commercial.

BURKE

I heard you were working in the cargo docks.

RIPLEY

(defensive)

That's right.

BURKE

Running loaders, forklifts, that sort of thing?

RIPLEY

(shrugging)

It's all I could get. Anyway, it keeps my mind off of... everything. Days off are worse.

BURKE

What if I said I could get you reinstated as a flight officer? And that the company has agreed to pick up your contract?

RIPLEY

If I go.

BURKE

If you go.
 (pause)
It's a second chance, kiddo. And it'll be the best thing in the world for you to face this fear and beat it. You gotta get back on the horse...

 RIPLEY
 (frosty) Spare me, Burke. I've had my psych evaluation this month.

Burke leans close, a let's-cut-the-crap intimacy.

 BURKE
Yes, and I've read it. You wake up every night, sheets soaking, the same nightmare over and over...

 RIPLEY
 (shouting)
No! The answer is no. Now please go. I'm sorry. Just go, would you.

Burke nods to Gorman who rises with him. He slips a TRANSLUCENT CARD onto the table, heads for the door.

 BURKE
Think about it.

EXT. ACHERON LANDSCAPE - NIGHT

23

As the wind HOWLS through tormented rock, BUILDING IN PITCH until we:

CUT TO:

INT. APARTMENT

24

Ripley lunges INTO FRAME with an animal outcry. She clutches her chest, breathing hard. Bathed in sweat she lights a cigarette with trembling hands. Do we hear a faint, desolate wind?

TIGHT ON PHONE CONSOLE as Ripley's hand inserts Burke's card into a slot. "STAND BY" prints out on the screen and is replaced by Burke's face, bleary with sleep.

 BURKE
 (on video phone)

Yello? Oh, Ripley. Hi...

RIPLEY

Burke, just tell me one thing.
That you're going out there to kill them. Not study. Not bring back. Just burn them out...clean
...forever.

BURKE

That's the plan. My word on it.

CLOSEUP - RIPLEY taking a deep slow breath. It's time to look the demon in the eye.

RIPLEY

All right. I'm in.

She punches off before Burke replies, before she can change her mind. She turns to Jones sitting on the bed and her tone becomes admonishing...

RIPLEY

And you my dear, are staying
right here.

Jones blinks, cynical cat eyes..."count me right out."

CUT TO:

EXT. DEEP SPACE - THREE WEEKS LATER

25

An empty starfield. Metal spires slice ACROSS FRAME.

A mountain of steel following. A massive military transport ship, the SULACO. Ugly, battered... functional.

INT. CORRIDOR TO CARGO LOCK

26

An empty corridor, seemingly miles long. No movement.
The THRUMMING of hyperdrive engines.

INT. CARGO LOCK

27

An enormous chamber, cavernous and dark. Squatting in the shadows are two orbit-to-surface shuttles.
DROP-SHIPS. Heavy machinery all around them... cranes, loading equipment.

INT. BRIDGE

28

Dark electronic womb. CAMERA DOLLIES SLOWLY among murmuring instrumentation. A sudden high-pitched TRILLING accompanies a sequence of lights. An alarm.

INT. HYPER_SLEEP VAULT

29

Blackness, until a bank of indicators lights up. Hydraulics lift a grid of equipment from a row of horizontal HYPER_SLEEP CYLINDERS. It reaches the ceiling. Locks.

CLOSE ON RIPLEY'S CAPSULE as trickles of water run down the frosted canopy.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. HYPER_SLEEP VAULT

30

Lit up, white and sterile.

The canopies of the row of capsules are raised. Ripley sits up. Rubs her arms briskly. Next to her Gorman and Burke are stirring and beyond them the troopers, wearing shorts and dog tags. They are:

MASTER SERGEANT APONE

UNIT LEADER

CORPORAL HICKS

B-TEAM LEADER

CORPORAL DIETRICH (female)

MED-TECH

PFC HUDSON

COM-TECH

PFC VASQUEZ (female)

'SMART-GUN' OPERATOR

PRIVATE DRAKE

'SMART-GUN' OPERATOR

PRIVATE FROST

TROOPER

PRIVATE CROWE

TROOPER

PRIVATE WIERZBOWSKI

TROOPER

CORPORAL FERRO (female)

DROP-SHIP PILOT

PFC SPUNKMEYER

DROP-SHIP CREW CHIEF

The ship is fully automated in interstellar flight so there is no crew, except for EXECUTIVE OFFICER (ECA) Bishop, who supervises planetary maneuvering.

GROANS echo across the chamber.

SPUNKMEYER

Arrgh. I'm getting too old for this shit.

SPUNKMEYER says this sincerely, though he must have enlisted underage not long ago. Looking surly, DRAKE sits up. He's young as well but street-tough. Nasty scar curling his lip into a sneer.

DRAKE

They ain't payin' us enough for this.

DIETRICH

Not enough to have to wake up to your face, Drake.

DRAKE

Suck air. Hey, Hicks...you look like I feel.

HICKS, an older lifer-type who keeps his own counsel, just snorts good-naturedly.

Ripley scans the group as they shuffle past her to a bank of lockers. Though not supermen they are lean and hardened...tough, capable, jaded. They combine the specialized techno-combat training of the twenty-first century fighting man with those qualities universal to "grunts" through the ages. SERGEANT APONE moves down the row of freezers.

HUDSON

This floor's freezing.

APONE

Christ. I never saw such a buncha old women. You want me to fetch your slippers, Hudson?

HUDSON

Would you, Sir?

Ripley steps back as the troopers shuffle past nodding cursory hellos. She feels isolated by the camaraderie of this tightknit group.

VASQUEZ eyes her coldly as she passes. Like Drake, Vasquez is younger than the rest and her combat-primer was the street in a Los Angeles barrio. She is tough even by the standards of this group. Hard-muscled.

Eyes cunning and mean.

HUDSON

Hey, Vasquez...you ever been mistaken for a man?

VASQUEZ

No. Have you?

She slaps Drake's open palm and it clenches into a greeting which is part contest. It gets rougher.
Painful. Until she cuffs him hard and they break with vicious laughter. Dobermans playing. Conscripted from juvenile prison, the two of them were trained to operate the formidable "SMART-GUNS." That is part of their bond.

BISHOP is helping everyone like a valet. As he passes close to her Ripley notices a strange TATTOO across the back of his left hand...an ALPHA-NUMERIC CODE.

FROST

Hey, hand job, you take my towel?

SPUNKMEYER

(overlapping)

I need some slack, man. How come they send us straight back out like this? We got some slack comin', man.

HICKS

You just got three weeks.

SPUNKMEYER

I mean breathing, not this frozen
shit.

DIETRICH

Yeah, 'Top'...what about it?

APONE

You know it ain't up to me.

(louder)

Awright! Let's knock off the grabass. First assembly's in fifteen...let's shag it.

INT. SHOWERS

31

High pressure water jets and a blast of hot air when you step out...a drive through car wash for people.

Through the swirling steam Hudson, Vasquez and FERRO are watching Ripley dry off.

VASQUEZ
Who's the fresh meat again?

FERRO
She's supposed to be some kinda consultant...
(exaggerated)
...She was an alien once.

HUDSON
Whooooah! No shit? I'm impressed.

APONE
Let's go...let's go. Cycle through!

INT. MESS HALL

32

An unconscious segregation takes place at the troopers assemble at one long table while Gorman, Burke, Bishop and Ripley sit at another. Everybody is nursing a coffee, waiting for eggs from the AUTOCHEF. Among the troopers dress discipline is lax...fatigues customized and emblazoned with patches. Drake's tunic is cut off to a vest and has "Eat the apple and fuck the Corps" stenciled on back. "Peace Through Superior Firepower," "Pray for War" and "I've Served My Time in Hell: Cetti Epsilon NC-104" are some others.

HUDSON
Hey, 'Top.' What's the op?

APONE
Rescue mission. There's some juicy colonists' daughters we gotta rescue from virginity.

Apone is stocky, grizzled, with peregrine eyes. He runs it loose and fair, but only because he knows his people are the best.

SPUNKMEYER
Shee-it. Dumbass colonists.
What's this crap supposed to be?

WIERZBOWSKI
Cornbread, I think. Hey, I wouldn't mind getting me some more a that Arcturan poontang. Remember that time?

HICKS

(low)

Looks like that new Lieutenant's too good to eat with us grunts.

WIERZBOWSKI

(glancing over shoulder)

Yeah. Got a corn cob up his ass, definitely.

Across the room, at the other table, Gorman sits with his creases perfect...the consummate strack NCO. Bishop takes a seat beside Ripley, who pointedly gets up and moves to the far side of the table. He looks wounded.

BISHOP

I'm sorry you feel that way about Synthetics, Ripley.

Ripley spins on Burke, her tone accusing.

RIPLEY

You never said anything about an android being here! Why not?

BURKE

Well, it didn't occur to me. It's been policy for years to have a synthetic on board.

BISHOP

I prefer the term 'artificial person' myself. Is there a problem?

BURKE

A synthetic malfunctioned on her last trip out. Some deaths were involved.

BISHOP

I'm shocked. Was it an older model?

BURKE

Cyberdyne Systems 120-A/2.

Bishop turns to Ripley, very conciliatory.

BISHOP

Well, that explains it. The
A/2's were always a bit twitchy.

That could never happen now with out behavioral inhibitors. Impossible for me to harm or, by omission of action, allow to be harmed a human being.

(smiling)

More cornbread?

WHAM! Ripley knocks the plate out of his hand, halfway across the room.

RIPLEY

Just stay away from me, Bishop!
You got that straight?

Burke and Gorman exchange glances.

Wierzbowski, at the next table, shrugs and turns back to the other troopers.

WIERZBOWSKI

She don't like the cornbread either.

INT. READY ROOM - TIGHT ON APONE - ARMORY

33 bellowing.

APONE

Tench-hut!

WIDER ANGLE as the troops snap to from their lounging among the racks of high-tech weaponry. Gorman enters with Burke and Ripley.

GORMAN

At ease. I'm sorry we didn't have time to brief before we left Gateway but...

HUDSON

Sir?

GORMAN

(annoyed)

Yes, Hicks?

HUDSON

Hudson, Sir. He's Hicks.

GORMAN

What's the question?

HUDSON

Is this going to be a stand-up fight, Sir, on another bug-hunt?

GORMAN

All we know is that there's still no contact with the colony and that a xenomorph may be involved.

WIERZBOWSKI

A what?

HICKS

(to Wierzbowski;
low)

It's a bug-hunt.

(louder)

So what are these things?

Gorman nods to Ripley, who stands before the troops.
She sets some RECORDING DISKETTES on the table.

RIPLEY

I've dictated what I know on these.

APONE

Tease us a bit.

SPUNKMEYER

Yeah...previews.

RIPLEY

Okay. It's important to understand this organism's life cycle. It's actually two creatures. The first form hatches from a spore...a sort of large egg, and attaches itself to its victim. Then it injects an embryo, detaches and dies.
It's essentially a walking sex organ.
The --

HUDSON

Sounds like you, Hicks.

RIPLEY

(controlled)

The embryo, the second form, hosts in the victim's body for several hours. Gestating. Then it...

(with difficulty)

...then it...emerges. Moults.

Grows rapidly --

VASQUEZ
I only need to know one thing.

RIPLEY
Yes?

VASQUEZ
Where they are.

Vasquez coolly points her finger, cocks her thumbs, and blows away an imaginary alien.

DRAKE
Yo! Vasquez. Kick ass!

VASQUEZ
Anytime. Anywhere.

HUDSON
Somebody said alien...she thought they said illegal alien and signed up.

VASQUEZ
Fuck you.

HUDSON
Anytime. Anywhere.

RIPLEY
(icy)

Am I disturbing you conversation
Mr. Hudson?

Hudson settles down, smirking. Ripley locks eyes with Vasquez.

RIPLEY
I hope you're right. I really do.

BURKE
(to all)
I suggest you study the disks
Ripley has been kind enough to prepare for you.

GORMAN
Are there any questions? Hudson?

HUDSON
How do I get out of this chicken-shit outfit?

Gorman scowls then, thanking Ripley with a nod, takes over the predrop briefing.

GORMAN
All right. I want this to go smooth and by the numbers. I want DCS and tactical database assimilation by 0830.
(some groans)
Ordnance loading, weapons strip and drop-ship prep details will have seven hours...

EXT. SPACE - ACHERON

34

They have arrived. From orbit the planet looks serene ...Pearlescent cloud cover masking the environmental torment beneath. The SULACO floats, its MANEUVERING JETS FIRING. A bluish glow. Then twice more, rapidly.

INT. BRIDGE

35

Bishop is installed in his command seat, hemmed in by instrumentation.

BISHOP
(into mike)
Attention. This concluded final maneuvering operations. Thank you for your cooperation. You may resume work.

INT. LOADING BAY - TIGHT ON MASSIVE FORKS - CARGO LOCK 34

sliding into a heavy ordnance rack with an echoing CLANG. PULL BACK as the rack of tactical missiles is lifted, REVEALING two powerful hydraulic arms.

Spunkmeyer, seated inside a POWER LOADER, swings the ordnance up into a belly nacelle of the DROP-SHIP where it locks into place. As he exerts pressure with his hands against the servo-controls the hydraulic arms move correspondingly...but with a thousandfold increase in power. The forklift-style CLAWS on each arm can crush with tons of pressure. The loader has an open ROLL CAGE to protect the operator, and is supported by squat HYDRAULIC LEGS which also move correspondingly with the driver's movements.

You have never seen anything like this before.
Advanced as it is to us, it's only an old forklift to them...battered and well used. Covered with grease.
Repainted many times. Across the back is stencilled
"CATERPILLAR."

Spunkmeyer's machine swings out from under the drop-ship and we become aware of the intense activity throughout the cavernous loading bay. Troopers on foot or driving TOW-MOWERS, OVERHEAD LOADING ARMS...all in motion.
Hicks checks off items on an electronic manifest.

INT. READY ROOM - ARMORY

37

Wierzbowski, Drake and Vasquez are fieldstripping light weapons with precise movements. Around them, in racks, is an arsenal of advanced personal artillery.

Vasquez likes the feel of the guns, the weight...the authority. Her hands move without hesitation. CLACK.
CLACK. CLACK. She swings one of the SMART-GUNS out on a work stand. Using a body brace and GYRO-STABILIZED SUPPORT ARM, it is a computer-aimed, video targeted automatic weapon. The futuristic equivalent of a .30 caliber light machine gun. Sort of a steadicam that kills.

INT. LOADING BAY - ANGLE ON BURKE AND GORMAN

38 with pre-flight activity b.g.

BURKE
Still nothing from the colony?

GORMAN
Dead on all channels.

Ripley watches the drop-ship being loaded. A cross between a Huey Aircobra gunship and the space shuttle might describe it. An orbit-to-surface troop carrier, heavily armed for the close support of ground missions.
She watches a six-wheeled APC, ARMORED PERSONNEL CARRIER, being raised hydraulically into the ship's belly. Ripley looks around as Frost wheels a rack of incomprehensible equipment toward her.

FROST
Clear, please.

Ripley jumps aside, nodding apologetically. She turns.
Steps hastily back. Hudson cruises by with a laden forklift.

HUDSON
Excuse me.

ANGLE ON APONE standing with Hicks, as Ripley approaches him

RIPLEY
I feel like a fifth wheel here. Is there anything I can do?

APONE
I don't know. Is there anything you can do?

RIPLEY
(pointing)
I can drive that loader. I've got a Class Two rating. My latest career move.

Apone turns. A SECOND POWER LOADER sits unused in an equipment bay.

TWO SHOT APONE AND HICKS skeptical. Considering.

TIGHT ON POWER SWITCH as Ripley's finger punches it on.
A RISING WHINE of power.

TIGHT ON THE HYDRAULICS as the massive machine stirs to life.

FULL, as the loader starts. Ripley is strapped into the safety cage, her arms and legs inserted in the servo-sensor assemblies. She takes a step. BOOM!
Two tons of hardened steel takes a step.

Ripley spins the wrist servos. The huge claws swing, open...slide smoothly into lifting brackets on a cargo module, nearby. She raises it deftly.

RIPLEY
Where you want it?

Hicks looks at Apone, cocks an eyebrow appreciatively.

INT. READY ROOM - ARMORY

39

The troopers are suiting up for the drop. Strapping on their bulky COMBAT-ARMOR...interlocking plates like football padding. They tape their wrists. Draw on segmented boots. The sole cleats CLACK like hooves on the deck plates. Lockers SLAM.

WEB BELTS. PACKS. HARNESES. HELMETS. COM-SETS. Their fingers move methodically over the fastenings. It has its own rhythm...CLICK. CLICK. CLICK.

APONE
Let's move it, girls! On the ready line. Let's go,
let's go.

INT. DROP-SHIP - APC

40

Ripley, wearing a flight jacket and headset, files into the ship with the hulking troopers. Inside they pass directly into the APC we saw loaded earlier and take seats facing each other across a narrow aisle. They will drop already strapped into their ground vehicle for rapid deployment. A KLAXON SOUNDS, signalling depressurization of the cargo lock.

Hudson prowls the aisle, his movements predatory and exaggerated. Ripley watches him working his way toward her.

HUDSON
I am ready, man. Ready to get it on. Check-it-out. I am the ultimate badass...state of the badass art. You do not want to fuck with me. Hey, Ripley, don't worry. Me and my squad of ultimate badasses will protect you.
Check-it-out...

He slaps the SERVO-CANNON controls in the GUN BAY above them.

HUDSON
Independently targetting particle-beam phalanx. VWAP!
Fry half a city with this puppy.
We got tactical smart-missles,
phased-plasma pulse-rifles,
RPG's. We got sonic eeelectronic ballbreakers, we got nukes, we got knives...sharp sticks --

Hicks grabs Hudson by his battle harness and pulls him into a seat. His voice is low, but it carries.

HICKS
Save it.

HUDSON
Sure, Hicks.

Ripley nods her thanks to Hicks. MOTORS WHINE and the craft lurches. Burke, next to Ripley, grins eagerly like this is a sport fishing trip.

BURKE
Here we go.

She looks like she's in a gas chamber waiting for the pellet to drop.

EXT. SULACO 41

The drop-ship lowers from the cargo-lock on a massive launch rig. The night side of Acheron yawns below... enigmatic.

INT. COCKPIT 42

Ferro and Spunkmeyer run rapidly through the switches.

FERRO
Initiate release sequencer on my mark. Three. Two. One. Mark!

EXT. SULACO - DROP-SHIP 43

Hydraulic WHINE. Clamps SLAM BACK. The ship drops.

INT. DROP-SHIP - APC 44

Apone, stalking the aisle, snatches for a handhold. Bishop, Burke and Gorman groan at the sudden gees. Ripley closes her eyes...the point of no return.

EXT. DROP-SHIP 45

It screams down through the stratosphere, plunging into dark turbulence.

INT. COCKPIT 46

Beyond the canopy is gray limbo. The craft shudders and lurches.

FERRO
(icy calm)
Switching to DCS ranging.

SPUNKMEYER
Two-four-o. Nominal to profile.
Picking up some hull ionization.

FERRO
Got it. Rough air ahead.

INT. HOLD - APC
47

TIGHT ON HICKS asleep in his harness.

FERRO
(voice over;
filtered)
Stand by for some chop.

TIGHT ON GORMAN as the ship begins to buck, his eyes closed. Pale. Sweating. He rubs his hands on his knees repeatedly.

RIPLEY
How many drops is this for you,
Lieutenant?

GORMAN
Thirty-eight...simulated.

VASQUEZ
How many combat drops?

GORMAN
Well...two. Three, including this one.

Vasquez and Drake exchange do-you-believe-this-shit expressions. Ripley looks accusingly at Burke.

INT. COCKPIT

48

FERRO
Turning on final. Coming around to a seven-zero-niner. Terminal guidance locked in. Where's the damn beacon?

EXT. DROP-SHIP

49

It emerges from the low cloud ceiling. From the twilight haze ahead the distant colony LANDING BEACONS become visible.

INT. HOLD - APC

Stumbling as the ship pitches, Ripley makes her way forward to the MOBILE TACTICAL OPERATIONS BAY (MTOB), a control console lined with monitor screens. She joins Burke watching over Gorman's shoulder as the Lieutenant plays the board like a video director.

TIGHT ON MONITOR CONSOLE REVEALING screens labelled with the names of the troopers. Two for each soldier. The upper screens show images from the IMAGE-INTENSIFIED VIDEO CAMERAS in their helmets. The lower screens are BIO-MONITORS: EEG, EKG, and other graphic life-function readouts. Other screens show EXTERIOR VIEWS.

GORMAN

Let's see. Everybody on line.
Drake, check you camera. There seems to be a...

CLOSE ON DRAKE as he whacks himself on the head with an ammo case. A familiar malfunction.

GORMAN

(o.s)

...that's better. Pan it around a bit.

APONE

Awright. Fire-team A. Gear up.
Let's move. Two minutes.
Somebody wake up Hicks.

A clatter of activity as they don backpacks and weapons. Vasquez and Drake buckle on their smart-gun body harnesses.

Ripley watches the AP station loom on the exterior screens.

RIPLEY

That the atmosphere processor?

BURKE

Uh-hunh. One of thirty or so, all over the planet. They're completely automated. We manufacture them, by the way.

EXT. SHIP - AP STATION

51

The tiny ship circles the roaring tower. A metal volcano thundering like the engines on God's Lear jet.

INT. HOLD - APC
52

Gorman plays with the controls, zooming the image of the colony.

GORMAN
(to Ferro via mike)
Hold at forty. Slow circle of the complex.

RIPLEY
The structure seems intact. They have power.

On the screen the colony buildings loom in and the low visibility like wrecks of freighters on the sea floor.

GORMAN
(to Apone)
Okay, let's do it.

APONE
Awright! I want a nice clean dispersal this time.

Ripley turns as Vasquez squeezes past her.

VASQUEZ
You staying in here?

RIPLEY
You bet.

VASQUEZ
(turning away)
Figures.

GORMAN
(to Ferro via mike)
Set down sixty meters this side of the telemetry mast. Immediate dust off on my 'clear,' then stay on station.

APONE
Ten seconds, people. Look sharp!

EXT. COLONY COMPLEX

53

Landing beacons sweep harsh light across the wet Tarmac. The ship roars down, extending the loading ramp. Slams down on hydraulic LANDING LEGS. The APC hits the ground a moment later, pulling away from the ship as it leaps up in a cloud of spray and peels off, circling.

The APC pulls to the edge of the complex. The CREW DOOR opens. Troopers hit the ground running. Spread out. They drop behind immediate cover. Apone scans with him image intensifier visor lowered.

APONE'S P.O.V. through the starlight-scope visor. Bright as a sunny day, though contrasty and lurid, we SEE the colony buildings. Trash blows in the street. No other movement.

GORMAN
(voice over;
filtered)
First squad up, on line. Hicks, get yours in a cordon. Watch the rear.

APONE
Vasquez, take point. Let's move.

Sprinting in a skirmish line, Apone's team advances on the colony main entry-lock. Parked tightly across the doors are two heavy-duty tractors. Vasquez reaches one of the tractors, looks inside. The controls are ripped out, as if by a crowbar or axe. She moves on.

EXT. COLONY BUILDING

54

Vasquez reaches the main doors, Drake flanking on the right. Apone tries the door controls. Nothing.

APONE
Sealed. Hudson, run a bypass.

Hudson, all business now, moves up and studies the door control panel. He pries off the facing and starts clipping on the bypass wires.

APONE
First squad, assemble on me at the main lock.

The wind roars around the bleak structures. A neon sign creaks overhead. Hudson makes a connection. The door shrieks in its tracks and rumbles aside. It jams halfway open. Apone motions Vasquez inside. She eases over the wrecked tractor, through the doors. The others follow.

GORMAN
(voice over;
filtered)
Second team, move up.
Flanking positions.

INT. COLONY - MAIN CONCOURSE

55

DOLLYING SLOWLY FORWARD, following Vasquez and Apone as they move into the broad corridor. A few emergency lights are still on. Wind moans along the concourse. Pools of water cover the floor. Farther down, rain drips through blast holes in the ceiling. Evidence of a fire fight with pulse-rifles.

ON VASQUEZ moving forward. Taut. Alert. Her smart-gun cannon swinging slowly in an arc. She studies the video aiming monitor, looking down rather than ahead. Their footsteps echo.

INT. APC

56

Ripley watches as the bobbing images reveal the empty colony building.

GORMAN
Quarter and search by twos. Second team move inside. Hicks, take the upper level. Use your motion trackers.

INT. MAIN CONCOURSE - SECOND LEVEL

57

Hicks leads his squad up the stairwell to second level. They emerge cautiously. An empty corridor recedes into the dim distance. Hicks unslings a rugged piece of equipment. Aims it down the hall. He adjusts the "gain." It remains silent.

HICKS
Nothing. No movement.

They pass rooms and offices. Through doors they see increasing signs of struggle. Furniture overturned. Papers scattered...floating sodden in the puddles.

INT. APC

58

Ripley et al watching.

BURKE
Looks like my room in college.

Nobody laughs.

INT. SECOND LEVEL

59

Hicks' group passes several burnt-out rooms. There are no bodies. In several offices the exterior windows are blown out, admitting wind and rain. Hicks picks up a half-eaten donut beside a coffee cup overflowing with rainwater.

INT. LOWER LEVEL - QUARTERS

60

Apone's men are searching systematically in pairs. They pass through the colonists' modest apartments, little more than cubicles. Hudson, on tracker, flanks Vasquez as they move forward. Hudson touches a splash of color on the wall. Dried blood. His tracker BEEPS.

Vasquez whirls, cannon aimed. The BEEPING grows more frequent as Hudson advances toward a half open door. The door is splintered partway out of its frame. Holes caused by pulse-rifle rounds pepper the walls. Vasquez eases up to the door. Kicks it in. Tenses to fire.

Inside, dangling from a piece of flex conduit, a junction-box swings like a pendulum in the wind from a broken window. It clanks against the rails of a child's bunkbed as it swings.

INT. DROP-SHIP - APC

61

Ripley watches Hicks' monitor.

RIPLEY
Wait! Tell him to...
(plugs in headset jack)
...Hicks. Back up. Pan left.
There!

TIGHT ON MONITOR as the image shifts, revealing a section of wall corroded almost through in an irregular pattern.

TIGHT ON RIPLEY knowing what it is.

HICKS
(voice over;
filtered)
You seeing this okay? Looks melted.

Burke raises an eyebrow at Ripley.

BURKE
Hmm. Acid for blood.

HICKS
(voice over;
filtered)
Looks like somebody bagged them one of Ripley's bad guys here.

INT. FIRST LEVEL

62

Hudson is looking at something.

HUDSON
Hey, if you like that, you're gonna love this...

WIDER ANGLE showing the trooper standing beneath a gaping hole. Another hole, directly beneath, is at his feet. The acid has melted right down through two levels into the maintenance level. Revealing pipes, conduit, equipment...eaten away by the ferocious substance.

APONE
Second squad? What's your status?

HICKS
(voice over;
filtered)
Just finished our sweep.
Nobody home.

APONE
(to Gorman)
The place is dead, Sir. Whatever happened, we missed it.

INT. APC

63

Gorman turns to the others.

GORMAN
All right, the area's secured.
Let's go in and see what their computer can tell us.
(into mike)
First team head for operations.
Hudson, see if you can get their CPU on line. Hicks, meet me at the south lock by the up-link tower...

INT. FIRST LEVEL

64

GORMAN
(voice over)
...We're coming in.

HUDSON
(cupping his mike)
He's coming in. I feel safer already.

VASQUEZ
(sotto voice)
Pendejo jerkoff.

EXT. COLONY COMPLEX

65

Lights arc across the dormant buildings as the APC turns onto the "main drag." It trundles down the rutted street, throwing up sheets of filthy water as the massive wheels hit pondlike potholes. Windblown rain lashes across the headlights.

Hicks emerges from the south lock just as the APC rolls up close to the entrance. The crew-door slides back. Gorman emerges, followed by Burke, Bishop, and Wierzbowski. Burke looks back to see Ripley stop in the APC doorway, eyeing the ominous colony structure. She meets his eyes. Shakes her head "no." Not ready.

HUDSON
(voice over;
filtered)
Sir, the CPU is on-line.

GORMAN
Okay, stand by in operations.
(to those present)
Let's go.

INT. APC

66

The crew-door cycles home with a clang. Ripley sits in the dark interior, lit by the tactical displays. The wind howls outside, an incredibly desolate sound. She hugs herself. Alone. Unarmed. She knows she's in a tank, but remembers the acid. Leaps up. Hits the door switch.

EXT. APC - SOUTH LOCK

67

The crew-door opens and Ripley emerges. In time to see the lock doors rumbling closed.

RIPLEY
(shouting)
Burke!

The wind snatches her words away. The crew door whines shut behind her. She walks to the exterior lock door-controls and studies them. She punches some unfamiliar buttons. Nothing happens. She looks really nervous, alone in the howling wind. She hits another button. The door-motors come to life and she relaxes a little. Glances behind her. AND SCREAMS! There's a face right there! Right at her shoulder. She jumps back, gasping for breath.

WIERZBOWSKI
Scare you?

RIPLEY
Christ, Wierzbowski!

WIERZBOWSKI
Sorry. Hicks said to keep an eye on you.

He gestures for her to precede him inside.

INT. CONTROL BLOCK CORRIDOR

68

Ripley catches up with the others as they move into the bowels of the complex.

GORMAN
(to Burke)
Looks like you company can write off its share of this colony.

BURKE
(unconcerned)
It's insured.

ON RIPLEY as they move along the corridor...reacting to the fact that she is back in alien country. She sees the ravaged administration complex. Fire-gutted offices. Hicks notices her looking around nervously. He motions to big Wierzbowski with his eyes and the trooper casually falls in beside her on the other side, rifle at ready. a two-man protective cordon. She glances at Hicks. He winks, but so fast maybe it's something in his eye.

Trooper Frost emerges from a side corridor ahead.

FRONT

Sir, you should check this out...

He leads the way into the corridor.

INT. CORRIDOR

69

This wing is completely without power. The troopers switch on their pack lights and the beams illuminate a scene of devastation worse than they have seen. Her expression reveals that Ripley is about to turn and flee.

FROST
Right ahead here...

They approach a barricade blocking the corridor, a hastily welded wall of pipes, steel-plate, outer-door panels. Acid holes have slashed through the floor and walls in several places. The metal is scratched and twisted by hideously powerful forces, peeled back like a soup can on one side. They squeeze through the opening.

INT. MEDICAL WING

70

They pack-lights play over the devastation of the colonists' last ditch battle. The equipment of the med labs has been uprooted to add to the barrier. The walls are perforated by pulse-rifle fire and acid. Scorched by untended fires to bare metal. A few instruments glow with emergency power.

WIERZBOWSKI
Last stand.

GORMAN
No bodies?

FROST
No, Sir. Looks like it was a helluva fight.

TIGHT ON RIPLEY transfixed by something.

RIPLEY
(low)
Over there.

The others turn and approach, seeing what she sees. She has entered a second room, part of the med lab area. In a storage alcove at near eye level stand seven transparent cylinders. STASIS TUBES. They glow faintly with an eerie violet light given off by the field which preserves the specimens inside.

They look like jars containing SEVERED ARTHRITIC HANDS, the palsied fingers curled in a death-rictus. Structurally they are more like spiders with sickening translucent skin, a flacid scrotal body, gill-like organs underneath drifting in the suspension fluid. Something you definitely do not want on your face, for example.

BURKE
Are these the same...?

Ripley nods, unable to speak. Burke leans closer in fascination. His face almost touching one cylinder, is lit by its glow.

RIPLEY
Watch it, Burke...

The creature inside lunges suddenly, slamming against the glass. Burke jumps back. From the palm of the thing's handlike body emerges a pearl-escent TUBULE. like a tapered piece of intestine, which slithers tonguelike over the inside of the glass. Then it retracts into a sheath between the "gills."

HICKS
(to Burke)
It likes you.

Only two of the creatures seem to pulse with life. Burke taps the other stasis cylinders but the hand-things remain inertly clenched.

BURKE
These are dead. There's just the two alive.

On top of each cylinder is a file folder. Ripley takes a folder from above one of the live specimens. Inside is a medical chart printout with handwritten entries.

RIPLEY
(reading)
Removed surgically before embryo implantation. Subject: Marachuk,
John L. Died during procedure.
(looking up)
They killed him getting it off.

HICKS
Poor bastard.

They are startled by a LOUD BEEP. They turn. Hicks is intent on his motion tracker, aimed back toward the shattered barricade. BEEP. BEEP.

HICKS
Behind us.

He gestures at the corridor they just passed through.

RIPLEY
One of us?

GORMAN
(into headset)
Apone...where are your people?
Anybody in D-Block?

APONE
(voice over; filtered)
Negative. We're all in Operations.

Vasquez swings the smart-gun to ready position on its support arm, locking it with an authoritative CLICK. She and Hicks head toward the source of the signal, the others following.

INT. CORRIDOR

71

Hicks' tracker is reading out more rapidly. They turn into the kitchens, a stainless steel labyrinth.

Ripley hangs back. Then realizes there is nothing behind her but darkness. She catches up to the group.

INT. KITCHENS

72

The troopers enter, their lights bouncing around the stainless steel surfaces.

HICKS
It's moving.

Vasquez is scanning, gaze intense. The other troops grip their weapons tightly.

VASQUEZ
Which way?

Hicks nods toward a complicated array of food processing equipment. They move forward, weapons leveled.

Ripley shuffles forward in the dark. Wierzbowski trips over a metal cannister, sending it CLANGING. Ripley half climbs the wall.

Hicks' tracker beeps steadily. The beeps merge. Become a solid tone. CRASH. Something moves in the dark, toppling a rack of stockpots.

ON VASQUEZ pivoting smoothly to fire. In the same instant Hicks' rifle slashes INTO FRAME. Slams Vasquez' barrel upward. A STREAM OF TRACER FIRE rips into the ceiling, the rounds SEARING LIKE LIGHTNING.

VASQUEZ
You fuck!

Hicks ignores her, moving past and aiming his light under a row of steel cabinets. He gestures to Ripley, who steps forward. Trusting his judgment. She crouches beside him.

RIPLEY'S P.O.V. lit by Hicks' pack-light...a tiny cowering figure. A very dirty, very terrified NEWT JORDEN. She clutches a plastic food packet in one hand, its top gnawed partway through. In the other hand she grips the HEAD OF A LARGE DOLL, holding it by the hair. Just the head. Eyes staring. Newt is pathetically emaciated...fragile-looking as Dresden china, her hair tangled and matted.

RIPLEY
(soothingly)
Come on out. It's all right...

Ripley moves toward her, reaching slowly under the cabinet. Newt backs away, trembling visibly, her vision fixated like a rabbit blinded by headlights. Ripley's hand almost reaches her.

The kid bolts like a shot, scuttling along beneath the cabinetry. Ripley scrambles to follow...to keep her in sight. Crabbing frantically sideways. Hicks makes a grab, catching one tiny ankle. He snaps his hand out a moment later.

HICKS
Ow! Shit. Watchit, she bites.

The girl reaches a ventilation duct set in the baseboard, its grille kicked out. She scrambles inside, her tiny body barely fitting, wriggling like a fish.

In his bulky armor Hicks knows he'll never make it into the tiny duct. Ripley dives. She squirms into the duct without thinking. Just ahead she sees Newt enter a dark space and slam a steel hatch. Ripley pushes the hatch open before the child can latch it, and crawls in after her.

Newt is backed into a cul-de-sac in the tiny steel chamber. Ripley shines her light around in amazement. It is a NEST. A nest built by a child. Wadded up blankets and pillows line the space, mixed up with a haphazard array of TOYS, STUFFED ANIMALS, DOLLS, CHEAP JEWELRY, COMIC BOOKS, EMPTY FOOD PACKETS, even a battery operated TAPE PLAYER. All foraged from the wrecked colony. Ripley marvels at the child's incredible adaptability, the ability to function even in this nightmarish environment.

Newt edges along the far wall and dives for the hatch.

Ripley grabs her, controlling her in a bear hug. The kid struggles wildly, like a cat at the vets. Eyes wide, hands lashing out in a frenzy...but silent. No scream.

RIPLEY

It's okay, it's okay. It's over... you're going to be all right now...
it's okay...you're safe...

Newt goes limp, almost catatonic.

CLOSE ON NEWT'S TRAUMATIZED, VACANT STARE her lips are white and trembling, her eyes track wildly and she flinches from unseen terrors. We READ a dark nightmare world in her eyes.

Ripley's light falls on something amidst the debris... a FRAMED PHOTOGRAPH of Newt, dressed up and smiling, a ribbon in her hair. In embossed gold letters underneath it says:

FIRST GRADE CITIZENSHIP AWARD
REBECCA JORDEN

INT. OPERATIONS - ON NEWT - MANAGER'S OFFICE

73 sitting huddles in a chair, arms around her knees.

Looking at a point in space.

GORMAN
(O.S.)
What's her name again?

DIETRICH
(O.S.)
Rebecca.

WIDER ANGLE REVEALING Gorman sitting in front of her while Dietrich watches the readouts from a BIO-MONITORING CUFF wrapped around Newt's tiny arm.

GORMAN
Now think, Rebecca.
Concentrate. Just start at the beginning...

No response. Ripley enters, carrying a coffee mug.

GORMAN
Where are your parents? You have to try...

RIPLEY
(sharply)
Gorman! Give it a rest would
you.

Gorman stands with a sigh of dismissal.

GORMAN
Total brain-lock.

DIETRICH
(shrugs)
Physically she's okay.
Borderline malnutrition, but I don't think any permanent damage.

She unsnaps the bio-monitoring cuff.

GORMAN
Come on, we're wasting our time.

Gorman and the others exit, leaving only Ripley with Newt. Through the window of the office, out on the main floor of the operations room, we SEE Gorman join Burke and Bishop at a computer terminal.

Ripley kneels beside Newt, brushing the girl's unkempt hair out of her eyes in a gentle, maternal fashion.

RIPLEY
Here, try this. A little instant hot chocolate.

She wraps the child's hands around the cup. Raises it to her lips for her. The girl drinks mechanically, spilling down her chin.

RIPLEY
(soothing)
Poor thing. You don't talk much do you? That's okay by me. Most people do a lot of talking and they wind up not saying very much.

She sets the cup down and wipes the child's chin clean.

RIPLEY
Uh oh. I made a clean spot here. Now I've done it. Guess I'll just have to do the whole thing.

She pours water from a squeeze bottle onto a small cloth and gently washes the little girl's face.
Newt's eyes seem to focus on her for the first time.

RIPLEY
Hard to believe...there's a little girl under all this.
And a pretty one at that.

Newt gazes at her. Ripley smiles.

INT. OPERATIONS
74

The ground teams are gathered around a terminal in the computer center. Hudson has the CPU main computer on-line and reading out.

TIGHT ON MONITOR SCREEN as an abstract of the main colony ground plan drifts across the screen.
Searching.

Hudson bashes at the keyboard, his fingers dancing expertly.

BURKE
(to Gorman)
What's he scanning for?

GORMAN
PDT'S. Personal-Data Transmitters.
Every adult colonist had one surgically implanted.

HUDSON
If they're within twenty klicks we'll read it out here, but so far...zip.

INT. OFFICE

75

Ripley is washing Newt's tiny hands with a cloth, pink skin emerging from black grime.

RIPLEY
I don't know how you managed to stay alive but you're one brave kid, Rebecca.

Newt's voice is almost inaudible.

NEWT
N-newt.

Ripley leans closer. Feels like she's breathing on coals. The sound was incomprehensible.

RIPLEY
What did you say?

NEWT
Newt. My n-name's Newt.
Nobody calls me Rebecca except my dork brother.

Ripley grins inanely, not wanting to move or speak...
or break the spell.

RIPLEY
Well, Newt it is then. My name's Ripley...and people call me Ripley.

Ripley picks up her tiny limp hand, shaking it formally.

RIPLEY
Pleased to meet you. And who is this? Does she have a name?

Newt glances at the disembodied doll, still clutched in one filthy hand.

NEWT
Casey. She's my only friend.

RIPLEY
What about me?

Newt's reply is flat, neutral.

NEWT
I don't want you for a friend.

RIPLEY
Why not?

NEWT
Because you'll be gone soon, like the others. Like everybody. You'll be dead and you'll leave me alone.

Ripley gazes at her, chilled both by the ominous statement and by the situation which could have produced this outlook in a child.

RIPLEY

Oh, Newt. You mom and dad went away like that, didn't they?

Newt nods, staring at her knees.

RIPLEY
(soothingly)
They'd be here if they could, honey. I know they would.

NEWT
(with cold certainty)
They're dead.

RIPLEY
Newt. Look at me...Newt. I won't leave you. I promise.

NEWT
You promise?

RIPLEY
Cross my heart.

NEWT
And hope to die?

Ripley smiles grimly at the inadvertently macabre expression.

RIPLEY
(quietly)
And hope to die.

And because she's a child, the darkest terrors, even the ones seen and not imagined, can still be banished by a smile and a single promise.

Newt's eyes brim as she gazes at Ripley. Her lower lip starts to tremble, and her face slowly deforms into an abject mask. She sobs as she clamps her arms around Ripley's neck. The sobs come in waves as Ripley rocks her, tears of suppresses terror and grief and hurt rolling down her face. It is a breakthrough.

Ripley closes her eyes, hoping that this promise can be kept.

INT. OPERATIONS
76

Everyone jumps as Hudson cries out triumphantly.

HUDSON
Hah! Stop your grinnin' and drop your linen! Found 'em.

GORMAN
Alive?

HUDSON
Unknown. But, it looks like all of them. Over at the processing station...sublevel
'C' under the south tower.

TIGHT ON SCREEN showing an amoebalike cluster of flashing blue dots clumped tightly in one area.

HICKS
Looks like a Goddamn town meeting.

GORMAN
Let's saddle up.

APONE Awright, let's go girls, they ain't payin' us by the hour.

EXT. ACHERON - TWILIGHT

77

The APC roars across the stygian landscape, traversing the causeway which connects the colony to the ATMOSPHERE STATION a kilometer away. Behind it the drop-ship settles to the ground at the colony landing field.

PAN WITH THE APC TO REVEAL the massive structure. Like a vast foundry the conical exhaust tower flickers with spectral light.

INT. APC

78

The troopers sit, more subdued now, swaying and bouncing in the heavily sprung vehicle. Wierzbowski is in the saddle. Ripley and Newt sit side by side just aft of the driver's cockpit.

NEWT
I was the best at the game.
I knew the whole maze.

RIPLEY
The 'maze'? You mean the air ducts?

NEWT
Yeah, you know. In the walls, under the floor. I was the ace. I could hide better than anybody.

RIPLEY
You're really something, ace.

Ripley's gaze shifts out the windshield as the processing station looms ahead.

EXT. APC/STATION

79

The vast structure towers above the parked personnel carrier. Deploying in front of the APC, backlit by its lights, the troopers cast long shadows. They look ominous. Hulking techno-samurai.

The base of the station is a depthless maze of conduits and pressure vessels, like an oil refinery.

Or a Dantean version of one. The THRUM of functioning machine systems echoes through the labyrinth.

GORMAN
(voice over; static)
Forty meters in. Ramp on axial two-two. Access to sublevels.

The troopers start down the open rampway. Light filters down through several levels of steel mesh floor, catwalks and pipes. Below that is darkness.

GORMAN
(voice over; static)
B-Level. Next one down.

The thrumming of machines grows louder as they descend.

INT. APC

80

Huddles around the screens are Ripley, Burke and Gorman. Newt squeezes in from behind. Gorman is doing his video wizard bit, dancing on the buttons.

GORMAN
(to team)
We're not making that out too well. What is it?

HUDSON
(voice over; static)
You tell me. I only work
here.

INT. COMPLEX

81

The group stands before a bizarre tableau. Among the refinerylike lattice of pipes and conduits something new and not of human design had been added.

It is a structure of some sort, extending from and crudely imitating the complex of plumbing, but made of some strange encrusted substance. It vaguely resembles the chambered nests of swallows on a much larger scale, and it attenuates so gradually into the original hardware that it is hard to see where one ends and the other begins.

The alien structure seems to extend far back into the complex of machinery. The plant thrums loudly, its functioning seemingly not impaired.

INT. APC

82

Ripley stares at the scene in dread fascination.

GORMAN
What is it?

RIPLEY
I don't know.

GORMAN
(to team)
Proceed inside.

INT. ALIEN STRUCTURE

83

They enter the organic labyrinth, playing their lights over the walls. Revealing a BIO-MECHANICAL LATTICE, like the marrow of some vast bone. The air is thick with STEAM. Trickling water. The place seems almost alive.

INT. APC

84

They watch in various helmet-camera P.O.V.'s of the wall detail.

RIPLEY
(low)
Oh God...

CLOSE ON VIDEO as it PAN SLOWLY...REVEALING a bas-relief of detritus from the colony: furniture, wiring, human bones, skulls...Fused together with a translucent, epoxylike substance.

DIETRICH
(voice over; static)
Looks like some sort of secreted resin.

GORMAN
They ripped apart the colony for building materials.

RIPLEY
And the colonists...When they were done with them.
(turning)
Newt, you better go sit up front. Go on.

INT. ALIEN STRUCTURE

85

Steam swirls around them as the troopers move deeper inside.

FROST
Hotter'n hell in here.

HUDSON
Yeah...but it's a dry heat.

INT. APC

86

Ripley leans forward suddenly, studying the graphic readout of the STATION GROUND PLAN.

RIPLEY
They're right under the primary heat exchangers.

BURKE
Yeah? Maybe the organisms like the heat, that's why they built...

RIPLEY
That's not what I mean. Gorman, if your men have to use their weapons in there, they'll rupture the cooling system.

BURKE
(realizing)
She's right.

GORMAN
So.

RIPLEY
So...then the fusion containment shuts down.

GORMAN
(impatient)
So? So?

BURKE
We're talking thermonuclear explosion.

GORMAN

Shit.
 (into mike) Apone, collect magazines from everybody. We can't have any firing in there.

INT. ALIEN STRUCTURE

87

The troopers look at each other in dismay.

 WIERZBOWSKI
Is he fucking crazy?

 HUDSON
What're we supposed to use, man? Harsh language?

 GORMAN
 (voice over; static)
Flame-units only. I want rifles slung.

 APONE
Let's go. Pull 'em out.

He walks among the troopers, collecting the magazines from each one's weapon.

Vasquez turns hers over reluctantly.

The three who are carrying them get out small incinerator units. When Apone moves on, Vasquez slips a spare magazine from concealment and inserts it in her weapon. Drake does the same. Hicks hangs back in the shadows. He opens a cylindrical sheath attached to his battle-harness. Slides out an old style PUMP TWELVE-GAUGE with a sawed-off butt stock. Chambers a round.

 HICKS
 (low, to Hudson)
I always keep this handy.
For close encounter.

 APONE
 (o.s.)
Let's move. Hicks, back us up.

The air is thick. Lights flare.

GORMAN
(voice over;
very faint)
Any movement?

Hudson watches his tracker, scanning.

HUDSON
Nothing. Zip.

Apone stops, his expression changing. They face a wall of living horror. The colonists have been brought here and entombed alive...

COCOONS protrude from the niches and interstices of the structure. The cocoon material is the same translucent epoxy. The bodies are frozen in carelessly twisted positions. Macabre image of frozen agony. Many are disiccated. Skeletal. Rip-cages burst outward, as if exploded from within. Paralyzed, brought here, entombed in living death as hosts for the embryos growing within then.

Dietrich moves close to examine one of the figures, perhaps the most "recent." A WOMAN, ghost-white and drained. The WOMAN'S EYES SNAP OPEN...They seem to plead.

DIETRICH
Sir!

The woman's lips move feebly.

WOMAN
Please...God...kill me.

Ripley watches the woman, white knuckled. The sound of RETCHING comes over the general frequency.

The woman begins to convulse. She SCREAMS, a sawing shriek of mindless agony.

APONE
Flame thrower! Move!

Frost hands it to him. Suddenly, the woman's chest EXPLODES in a gout of blood. A SMALL FANGED HEAD EMERGES, HISSING VICIOUSLY.

Apone pulls the trigger. Then the other troopers carrying flame throwers open fire. An orgy of purging fire. The cocoons vanish in the shimmering heat.

A SHRILL SCREECHING begins, like a siren made from fingernails on blackboards.

ANGLE ON WALL as something begins to emerge. Dimly glimpsed, a glistening bio-mechanoid creature larger than a man. Lying dormant, it had blended perfectly with the convoluted surface of fused bone. The troopers don't see it. Smoke from the burning cocoons quickly fills the confined space. Visibility drops to zero.

HUDSON
Movement!

APONE
Position?

HUDSON
Can't lock up...

APONE
(with an edge)
Talk to me, Hudson.

HUDSON
Uh, seems to be in front and behind.

INT. APC

91

Gorman is plating with the gain controls on the monitors.

GORMAN
We can't see anything back here, Apone. What's going on?

Ripley senses it coming, like a wave at night. Dark, terrifying and inevitable.

RIPLEY
(low)
Pull you team out, Gorman.

INT. COCOON CHAMBER - TIGHT ON SEVERAL WALLS AND CEILING NICHES

92

as they come alive. Bonelike, tubelike shapes shift, becoming emerging ALIENS. Dimly glimpsed...glints of slime. Silhouettes.

APONE

Go to infrared. Looks sharp people!

The squad members snap down their image-intensifier visors.

HUDSON

Multiple signals. All round.
Closing.

Dietrich turns to retreat, her flamethrower held tightly. A nightmarish silhouette materializes out of the smoke behind her! It strikes like lightning.
SEIZES HER. She fires reflexively, wild. The jet of flame engulfs Frost nearby.

Apone spins as the double SCREAM. Can't see anything in the thick smoke.

INT. APC

93

Ripley watches Frost's monitor go black. His bio-readouts flatten. The other screens show glimpses of shimmering infrared silhouettes of the aliens, the images bobbing and panning confusedly.

INT. COCOON CHAMBER

94

Vasquez nods to Drake with grim satisfaction.

VASQUEZ

Let's rock.

They OPEN UP simultaneously, lighting up the smoke like welders' arcs.

GORMAN

(voice over; static)
Who's firing? I ordered a hold fire, dammit!

Vasquez rips off her headset. She is riveted to the targetting screen, moving ferret-quick in a pivoting dance. Thunder and lightning. Better than sex for her. FLASH-CRACK! An alien SCREECH from the darkness.

The battle of phantoms unfolds on the video screens. Ripley flinches as another scream comes over the open frequency. Wierzbowski's monitor breaks up. His life signs plummet. Voices blend and overlap.

HUDSON
(voice over)
Let's get the fuck out of here!

HICKS
(voice over)
Not that tunnel, the other one!

CROWE
(voice over)
You sure? Watch it...behind you. Fucking move, will you!

Gorman is ashen. Confused. Gulping for air like a grouper. How could the situation have unravelled so fast?

RIPLEY
(to Gorman)
GET THEM OUT OF THERE! DO IT NOW!

GORMAN
Shut up. Just shut up!

CRASH! Crowe's telemetry cuts off like the plug was pulled. Flat line.

GORMAN
Uh,...Apone, I want you to lay down a suppressing fire with the incinerators and fall back by squads to the APC, over.

APONE
(voice over;
heavy static)
Say again? All after incinerators?

Ripley watches it fall apart.

GORMAN
I said...

INT. COCOON CHAMBER

96

Apone adjusts his headset.

GORMAN
(voice over;
static)
...lay down (garbled) ...by squads to...(garbled)

Gorman's voice breaks up completely. A SCREAM.
Apone whirls, uncertain.

APONE
Dietrich? Crowe? Sound off! Wierzbowski?

Nothing. He spins. Almost blows Hudson's head off.

HUDSON
(freaked)
We're getting juke! We're gonna die in here!

Apone hands him a magazine. Hudson slaps it home, looking truly terrified.

APONE
Yeah. Right. Right! Fuck
the heat exchanger!

He FIRES. Vasquez, nearby, is laying down a horrendous field of fire. Strobe-bright flashes sear the darkness. She pivots, firing mechanically in controlled bursts. Scoring points in her own private video game.

She SPINS as Hicks approached laterally. WHAM! She fires "at" him. Hicks whirls...to see a nightmarish figure right behind him, catapulted backwards by Vasquez' blast.

INT. APC

97

Apone's monitor SPINS CRAZILY AND GOES DARK.

GORMAN
(distantly)

I told them to fall back...

RIPLEY
(viciously)
They're but off! Do something!

But he's gone. Total brain-lock.

TIGHT ON RIPLEY as she struggles with a decision. She's terrified...of what she knows she's about to do. But more than that, she's furious. Shouldering past a paralyzed Gorman she runs up the aisle of the APC.

RIPLEY
(in passing)
Newt, put your seatbelt on!

Ripley jumps into the driver's seat of the APC. Takes a deep breath. Starts slapping switches.

GORMAN
Ripley, what the hell...?

She slams the tractor into gear.

EXT. APC 98

as the drive-wheels spin on the wet ground. The massive machine leaps forward.

INT. APC 99

Ripley sees smoke pouring out of the complex ahead as she slides sideways onto the descending rampway. She slams the left and right drive-wheel actuators viciously, spinning the machine in a roaring pivot. Gorman lunges forward along the aisle, abandoning his command center.

GORMAN
(shrill)
What are you doing? Turn around! That's an order!

He claws at her, hysterical. Burke pulls him off.

INT. ALIEN STRUCTURE 100

The APC roars down into the smoky structure, tearing away outcroppings of alien-encrustation. Ripley hits the floodlights. Strobe-beacon. Siren. She homes on the flash of weapons fire ahead.

The APC crashes inside, showering debris. Hicks, supporting a limping Hudson, appears out of the smoke. The APC pulls up broadside and Burke gets the crew-door open.

Drake and Vasquez back out of the dense mist, firing as they fall back.

Drake goes empty, slams the buckles cutting loose his smart-gun harness, and unslings a flame thrower.

Hicks pushes Hudson inside, leaps in after him and drags Vasquez inside, massive gear and all. She sees a DARK SHAPE lunge toward Drake. She fires one burst, prone. Clean body hit.

The flash lights up the hideous inhuman grin, blowing open the thing's thorax. A spray of BRIGHT YELLOW ACID slashes across Drake's face and chest, eating into him like a hot knife through butter. He drops in boiling smoke, reflexively triggering his flame thrower.

The jet of liquid fire arcs around as he falls, engulfing the back half of the APC.

INT. APC
102

Vasquez rolls aside as a gout of napalm shoots through the crew-door, setting the interior on fire. Hicks is rolling the door closed when Vasquez lunges, clawing out the opening. He stops her, dragging her inside.

VASQUEZ
Drake! He's down!

Hicks screams right in her face.

HICKS
He's gone! Forget it, he's gone!

VASQUEZ
(irrational)
No.. No, he's not. He's --

Burke and Hudson help him drag her from the door.

HICKS
(to Ripley)
Let's go!

Ripley jams reverse. Nails the throttle. The APC bellows backward up the ramp. Hudson disappears under a pile of equipment as a storage rack breaks free. Hicks gets the door almost closed. Suddenly CLAWS appear at the edge. Newt screams. Against the combined efforts of Hicks, Burke and Vasquez the door is being SLOWLY WRENCHED OPEN FROM OUTSIDE. Hicks yells at a paralyzed Gorman.

HICKS
Get on the Goddamn door!

Gorman backs away, eyes wide. Hicks jams his shoulder against the latching lever and frees one hand to raise his 12-gauge. An alien head wedges through the opening, its hideous mouth opening. And Hicks jams his SHOTGUN MUZZLE between its jaws and pulls the trigger! BLAM! The creature is flung backward, its shattered head fountaining acid blood. The spray eats into the door, the deck, hits Hudson on the arm. He shrieks. They slide the door home and dog it tight.

EXT. APC
103

The armored vehicle roars backward up the ramp. Slams into a mass of conduit. Tears free. Ripley works the shifters, pivoting the massive machine. Everybody's shouting, trying to put out the fire. Pandemonium.

INT./EXT. APC
104-

105

Something lands on the roof with a metallic clang.

Gorman has plastered himself against a wall, as far from the door as possible. A latch lever behind his head turns. The small hatch against which he was leaning is ripped away and SOMETHING snatches him out the opening. He disappears to the waist with a shriek, legs kicking. The alien clings to the roof, pulling him out. Its tail whips over, scorpionlike, and buries a four inch stinger in Gorman's shoulder. Hicks grabs a joy stick at the FIRE-CONTROL CONSOLE and turns it rapidly. On the roof the alien looks up as servo-motors whir. A remote control turret cannon, a 20mm chain-gun, swivels toward it in a curt arc. VOOM. The creature is blasted off the vehicle's armored back and tumbles away. Gorman, slumped unconscious, is dragged back inside.

The APC rips away a section of catwalk and heads for clear air, its flank trailing fire like a comet. Ripley fights the controls as the big machine slews, broadsiding a control-room out-building. Office furniture and splintered wall sections are strewn in the APC's wake.

Suddenly, an alien arm arcs down, right in front of Ripley's face. It smashes the windshield. Glistening, hideous jaws lunge inside...

Ripley recoils. Face to face once again with the same mind-numbing horror. She reacts instinctively. Slams both sets of brakes with all her strength. The huge wheels lock. The creature flips off, landing in the headlights. Ripley hits full throttle. The APC roars forward, smashing over the abomination. Its skeletal body is crushed under the massive wheels. It rolls, tumbling...lost in the darkness behind as the machine thunders onto the causeway and away from the station.

A sound like bolts dropped in a meat grinder is coming from the APC's rear end. Hicks eases Ripley's hand back on the throttle lever. Her grip is white knuckled.

HICKS
It's okay...we're clear. We're clear. Ease up.

The grinding clatter becomes deafening even as she slows the machine.

HICKS
Sounds like a blown transaxle.
You're just grinding metal.

EXT. APC
106

The tractor limps to a halt. A HALF-KILOMETER from the atmosphere processing station. The APC is a smoking, acid-scarred mess.

INT. APC
107

Ripley, still running on the adrenalin dynamo, spins out of her seat into the aisle.

RIPLEY
Newt? Where's Newt?

Feeling a tug at her pants leg she looks down. Newt is wedged into a tiny space between the driver's seat and a bulkhead. She is trembling, and looks terrified, but it's not the basket case catatonia of before.

RIPLEY
You okay?

Newt gives her a THUMBS-UP, wan but stoic. Ripley goes back to the others. Hudson is holding his arm and staring in stunned dismay at nothing, playing it all back in his mind.

HUDSON
Jesus...Jesus...I don't believe
it.

Burke tries to have a look at Hudson's arm.

HUDSON
(jerking away)
I'm all right, leave it!

Ripley joins Hicks who is bent over Gorman, checking for a pulse.

HICKS
He's alive. I think he's paralyzed.

VASQUEZ
He's fucking dead!

She grabs Gorman by the collar, hauling him up roughly, ready to pulp him with her other fist.

VASQUEZ
(to Gorman)
Wake up pendejo! I'm gonna kill you, you useless fuck!

Hicks pushes her back. Right in her face.

HICKS
Hold it. Hold it. Back off, right
now.

Vasquez releases Gorman. His head smacks the deck. Ripley opens Gorman's tunic, revealing a bloodless purple puncture wound.

RIPLEY
Looks like it stung him.

HUDSON
Hey...hey! Look, Crowe and Dietrich aren't dead, man.

They turn to see Hudson at the MTOB monitors, pointing at the bio-function screens.

HUDSON
They must be like Gorman. Their signs are real low but they ain't dead!

Hudson is pale, panicky, and his voice echoes around the tiny metallic space and comes back to all of them as the near hysteria they all feel, fluttering just at the edges of their minds.

RIPLEY
You can't help them. Right now they're being cocooned just like the others.

HUDSON
(sagging)
Oh, God. Jesus. This ain't
happening.

Ripley and Vasquez lock eyes. Ripley doesn't want it to be "I told you so" but Vasquez reads it that way. She turns away with a snap.

INT. MED LAB

108

Bishop is hunched over an occular probe doing a dissection of one of the dead parasites. Spunkmeyer enters with some electronics gear on a hand truck and parks it near Bishop's work table.

SPUNKMEYER
Need anything else?

Bishop waves "no" without looking up.

EXT. COLONY - DROP-SHIP

109

Spunkmeyer emerges, crossing the Tarmac to the loading ramp of the ship. As he nears the top of the ramp, his boot slips...skidding on something wet. Kneeling, he touches a small puddle of thick slime. He shrugs, and hits the controls to retract the ramp and close the doors.

INT. APC
110

ON VASQUEZ wired and intense.

VASQUEZ
All right, we can't blow the fuck out of them...why not roll some canisters of CN-20 down there.
Nerve gas the whole nest?

HUDSON
Look, man, let's just bug out and call it even, okay?

RIPLEY
(to Vasquez)
No good. How do we know it'll effect their biochemistry? I say we take off and nuke the entire site from orbit. It's the only way to be sure.

BURKE
Now hold on a second. I'm not authorizing that action.

RIPLEY
Why not?

Burke senses the challenge in her tone and backpedals flawlessly into conciliatory mode.

BURKE
Well, I mean...I know this is an emotional moment, but let's not make snap judgments. Let's move cautiously. First, this physical installation had a substantial dollar value attached to it --

RIPLEY
They can bill me. I got a tab running. What's second?

BURKE
This is clearly an important species we're dealing with here.
We can't just arbitrarily exterminate them --

RIPLEY
Bullshit!

VASQUEZ
Yeah, bullshit. Watch us.

HUDSON
Maybe you haven't been keeping up on current events, but we just got out asses kicked, pal!

Ripley faces Burke squarely and she's not pleased.

RIPLEY
Look, Burke. We had an agreement.

Burke moves in, lowering his voice. He takes her aside from the others.

BURKE
I know, I know, but we're dealing with changing scenarios here. This thing is major, Ripley. I mean really major. You gotta go with its energy. Since you are the representative of the company who discovered this species your percentage will naturally be some serious, serious money.

Ripley stares at him like he's a particularly disagreeable fungus.

RIPLEY
You son of a bitch.

BURKE
(hardening)
Don't make me pull rank, Ripley.

RIPLEY
What rank? I believe Corporal Hicks has authority here.

BURKE
Corporal Hicks!?

RIPLEY
This operation is under military jurisdiction and Hicks is next in chain of command. Right?

HICKS
Looks that way.

Burke starts to lose it and it's not a pretty sight.

BURKE
Look, this is a multimillion dollar operation. He can't make that kind of decision. He's just a grunt!
(glances at Hicks)
No offense.

HICKS
(coolly)
None taken.
(into mike)
Ferro, you copying?

FERRO
(voice over; static)
Standing by.

HICKS
Prep for dust-off. We're gonna need an immediate evac.
(to Burke)
I think we'll take off and nuke the site from orbit. It's the only way to be sure.

He winks. Burke looks like a kid whose toy has been snatched.

BURKE
This is absurd! You don't have the authority to --

CLACK! The sound of a rifle bolt snapping home truncates his rant. Vasquez has a pulse-rifle cradled, not exactly aimed at Burke but not exactly aimed away either. Her expression is masklike. End of discussion.

Ripley sits behind Newt, putting her arm around her.

RIPLEY
We're going home, honey.

EXT. DROP-SHIP

111

The ship rises through the spray thrown up by the downblast of the VTOL jets, hovering above the complex like a huge insect, its searchlights blazing.

EXT. APC
112

The group is filing out of the personnel carrier, which is clearly a write off. Hicks and Hudson have Gorman between them, and the others emerge into the wind. They watch the ship roar in on its final approach.

INT. DROP-SHOP COCKPIT

113

Ferro flicks the intercom switch several times. Thumps her headset mike.

FERRO
Spunkmeyer? Goddammit.

The compartment door behind her slides slowly back.

FERRO

(turning)
Where the fu --

Her eyes widen. It's not Spunkmeyer.

Am impression of leering jaws which blur forward, then a whirl of motion and a truncated scream. The throttle levers are slammed forward in the melee.

EXT. APC - LANDSCAPE - STATION

114

They watch in dismay as the approaching ship dips and VEERS WILDLY. Its main engines ROAR FULL ON and the craft accelerates toward them even as it loses altitude. It skims the ground. Clips a rock formation. The ship slews, sideslipping. It hits a ridge. Tumbles, bursting into flame, breaking up. It arcs into the air, end over end, a Catherine wheel juggernaut.

RIPLEY
Run!

She grabs Newt and sprints for cover as a tumbling section of the ship's massive engine module slams into the APC and it explodes into twisted wreckage.

The drop-ship skips again, like a stone, engulfed in flames...AND CRASHES INTO THE STATION. A TREMENDOUS FIREBALL.

The remainder of the ground team watches their hopes of getting off the planet, and most of their superior fire power, reduced to flaming debris.

There is a moment of stunned silence, then...

HUDSON
(hysterical)
Well that's great! That's just fucking great, man. Now what the fuck are we supposed to do, man?
We're in some real pretty shit now!

HICKS
Are you finished?
(to Ripley)
You okay?

She nods. She can't disguise her stricken expression when she looks at Newt, but the little girl seems relatively calm. She shrugs with fatalistic acceptance.

NEWT
I guess we're not leaving, right?

RIPLEY
I'm sorry, Newt.

NEWT
You don't have to be sorry. It wasn't your fault.

HUDSON
(kicking rocks)
Just tell me what the fuck we're supposed to do now. What're we gonna do now?

BURKE
(annoyed)
May be could build a fire and sing songs.

NEWT
We should get back, 'cause it'll be dark soon. They come mostly at night. Mostly.

Ripley follows Newt's look to the AP station looming in the twilight, the burning drop-ship wreckage jammed into its basal structure.

EXT. CONTROL BLOCK - NIGHT

115

The wind howls mournfully around the metal buildings, dry and cold.

INT.

The weary and demoralized group is gathered to take stock of their grim options. Vasquez and Hudson are just setting down a scorched and dented packing case, one of several culled from the APC wreckage.

Hicks indicates their remaining inventory of weapons, lying on a table.

HICKS

This is all we could salvage. We've got four pulse-rifles with about fifty rounds each. Not so good. About fifteen M-40 grenades and two flame throwers less than half full...one damaged. And We've got four of these robot-sentry units with scanners and display intact.

He opens one of the scorched cases, revealing a high-tech servo-actuated machine gun with optical sensing equipment, packed in foam.

RIPLEY

How long after we're declared overdue can we expect a rescue?

HICKS

About seventeen days.

HUDSON

Man, we're not going to make it seventeen hours! Those things are going to come in here, just like they did before, man... they're going to come in here and get us, man, long before...

RIPLEY

She survived longer than that with no weapons and no training.

Ripley indicates Newt, who salutes Hudson smartly.

RIPLEY

So you better just start dealing with it. Just deal with it, Hudson...because we need you and I'm tired of your bullshit. Now get on a terminal and call up some kind of floor plan file. Construction blueprints, maintenance schematics, anything that shows the layout of this place. I want to see air ducts, electrical access tunnels, subbasements. Every possible way into this wing.

Hudson gathers himself, thankful for the direction.
Hicks nods approval of her handling of it.

HUDSON
Aye-firmative. I'm on it.

BISHOP
I'll be in medical. I'd like to continue my analysis.

RIPLEY
Fine. You do that.

INT.
OPERATIONS

117

Burke, Ripley, Hudson and Hicks are bent over a large HORIZONTAL VIDEOSCREEN, like an illuminated chart table. Newt hops from one foot to the other to see.

RIPLEY
This service tunnel is how they're moving back and forth.

HUDSON
Yeah, right, it runs from the processing station right into the sublevel here.

He traces a finger along the abstract ground plan.

RIPLEY
All right. There's a fire door at this end. The first thing we do is put a remote sentry in the tunnel and seal that door.

HICKS
We gotta figure on them getting into the complex.

RIPLEY
That's right. So we put up welded barricades at these intersections...
(pointing)

...and seal these ducts here and here. Then they can only come at us from these two corridors and we create a free field of fire for the other two sentry units, here.

Hicks contemplates her game plan and raises his hand, satisfied.

HICKS
Outstanding. Then all we need's a deck of cards. All right, let's move like we got a purpose.

HUDSON
Aye-firmative.

NEWT
(imitating Hudson)
Aye-firmative!

INT. SERVICE TUNNEL - SUBLEVEL

118

A long straight service tunnel, lined with conduit, seems to go on forever. Vasquez and Hudson have finished setting up two of the robot sentry guns on tripods in the tunnel.

VASQUEZ
(shouting) Testing!

She hurls a wastebasket down the tunnel, into the automatic field of fire. The sentry guns swivel smoothly, the wastebasket bounces once...and is riddled by two quick bursts of EXPLODING 10MM ROUNDS into dime-sized shrapnel. They retreat behind a heavy steel FIRE DOOR which they roll closed on its track. Vasquez, using a PORTABLE WELDING TORCH, begins sealing the door to its frame, as Hudson paces nervously.

HUDSON
Hudson here. A and B sentries are in place and keyed. We're sealing the tunnel.

INT. SECOND LEVEL CORRIDOR

119

Hicks pauses in his work.

HICKS

(into mike)

Roger.

He and Ripley are covering an air duct opening with a metal plate, welding it in place, showering sparks in the dark corridor. Behind them Burke and Newt are moving back and forth with cartons of food on a hand truck, stacking it inside the operations center. Hicks sets down his welder and pulls a small object out of a belt pouch. A braceletlike EMERGENCY LOCATING BEEPER.

HICKS

Here, put this on. Then
I can locate you anywhere in the complex on this --

He indicates a tiny TRACKER hooked to his battle harness. He shrugs, a little self-consciously.

HICKS

Just a...precaution. You know.

Ripley pauses for a moment, regarding him quizzically.

RIPLEY

(strapping it on)

Thanks.

HUDSON

Uh, what's next?

She consults a printout of the floor plan.

EXT. CONTROL BLOCK

120

The wind has died utterly and in the even more eerie stillness a diffuse mist has rolled into shroud the complex. Visibility is low in the fog. Everything looks underwater. There is no movement.

INT. CORRIDOR

121

In the barricaded corridor sentry-gun "C" sits waiting, its "ARMED" light flashing green. Through a hole torn in the ceiling at the far end of the corridor the fog swirls in. Water drips. An expectant hush.

INT. MED LAB ANNEX - OPERATING ROOM

122

Ripley carries an exhausted Newt through the inner connecting rooms of the medical wing. She reaches an OPERATING ROOM which is small but very high-tech ...vaultlike metal walls, strange equipment. Several metal cots have been set up, displacing O.R. equipment which is pushed into one corner.

Newt is resting her head on Ripley's shoulder, barely awake...out of steam. Ripley sets her on one of the cots and Newt lies down.

RIPLEY
Now you just lie here and have a nap. You're exhausted.

NEWT
I don't want to...I have scary dreams.

This obviously strikes a chord with Ripley, but she feigns cheerfulness.

RIPLEY
I'll bet Casey doesn't have bad dreams.

Ripley lifts the doll's head from Newt's tiny fingers and looks inside. It is, of course, empty.

RIPLEY
Nothing bad in here. Maybe you could just try to be like her.

Ripley closes the doll's eyes and hands her back. Newt rolls her eyes as if to say "don't pull that five-year-old shit on me, lady. I'm six."

NEWT
Ripley...she doesn't have bad dreams because she's just a piece of plastic.

RIPLEY
Oh. Sorry, Newt.

NEWT
My mommy always said there were no monsters. No real ones. But there are.

Ripley's expression becomes sober. She brushes damp hair back from the child's pale forehead.

RIPLEY
(quietly)
Yes, there are, aren't there.

NEWT
Why do they tell little kids
that?

Newt's voice reveals her deep sense of betrayal.
She's seen that the world can be just as terrifying as her most primal child's nightmare if not more so, and that's a lot worse than finding out there is no Santa.

RIPLEY
Well, some kids can't handle it like you can.

NEWT
Did one of those things grow inside her?

Ripley begins pulling blankets up and tucking them in around her tiny body.

RIPLEY
I don't know, Newt. That's the truth.

NEWT
Isn't that how babies come?
I mean people babies...they grow inside you?

RIPLEY
No, it's different, honey.

NEWT
Did you ever have a baby?

RIPLEY
Yes. A little girl.

NEWT
Where is she?

RIPLEY
(quietly)
Gone.

NEWT
You mean dead.

It's more statement than question. Ripley nods slowly.

She turns, reaching for a PORTABLE SPACE HEATER sitting nearby, and slides it closer to the bed. She switches it on. It HUMS and emits a cozy orange glow.

NEWT

Ripley, I was just thinking...
Maybe I could do you a favor and fill in for her. Just for a while. You can try it and if you don't like it, it's okay.
I'll understand. No big deal.
Whattya think?

Ripley gazes at her a long time before answering... a conflict between the urge to crush the child to her in a forever hug and the knowledge that neither of them may see another dawn.

RIPLEY

I think it's not the worst idea
I've heard all day. Let's talk about it later.

She switches off the light and starts to rise. Newt grabs her arm. A plaintive voice in the dark.

NEWT

Don't go! Please.

RIPLEY

I'll be right in the other room, Newt. And look...I can see you on that camera right up there.

Newt looks at the VIDEO SECURITY CAMERA above the door.
Ripley unsnaps the TRACKER BRACELET given to her by Hicks and puts it on Newt's tiny wrist, cinching it down.

RIPLEY

Here. Take is for luck. Now go to sleep...and don't dream.

Ripley walks away and Newt rolls on her side, hugging
Casey and gazing at the hypnotically pulsing function light on the bracelet. The space heater hums comfortingly.

ECU Gorman, his eyelids slitted open like those of a corpse, but with the eyes tracking erratically. The only sign of life.

RIPLEY
(voice over)

How is he?

Ripley stands over the Lieutenant, who is lying motionless on an examining table. Bishop looks up from his instruments nearby, the light of a single gooseneck lamp giving his features a macabre cast.

BISHOP
I've isolated a neuro-muscular toxin responsible for the paralysis. It seems to be metabolizing. He should wake up soon.

RIPLEY
Now let me get this straight.
The aliens paralyzed the colonists, carried them over there,

cocooned them to be hosts for more of those...

Ripley points at the stasis cylinders containing the face-hugger specimens.

RIPLEY
Which would mean lots of those parasites, right? One for each person...over a hundred at least.

BISHOP
Yes. That follows.

RIPLEY
But these things come from eggs...so where are all the eggs coming from.

BISHOP
That is the question of the hour. We could assume a parallel to certain insect forms who have hivelike organization.

An ant of termite colony, for example, is ruled by a single female, a queen, which is the source of new eggs.

RIPLEY

You're saying one of those things lays all the eggs?

BISHOP

Well, the queen is always physically larger than the others. A termite queen's abdomen is so bloated with eggs that it can't move at all. It is fed and tended by drone workers, defended by the warriors. She is the center of their lives, quite literally the mother of their society.

RIPLEY

Could it be intelligent?

BISHOP

Hard to say. It may have been blind instinct...attraction to the heat of whatever...but she did choose to incubate her eggs in the one spot where we couldn't destroy her without destroying ourselves. That's if she exists, of course.

Ripley ponders the ramifications of Bishop's analysis.

RIPLEY

(rising)

I want those specimens destroyed as soon as you're done with them.
You understand?

Bishop glances at the creatures, pulsing malevolently in their cylinders.

BISHOP

Mr. Burke have instructions that they were to be kept alive in stasis for return to the company labs. He was very specific.

Ripley feels the fabric of her self-restraint tearing.
She slaps the intercom switch.

RIPLEY

Burke!

INT. MED LAB ANNEX

124

In a small observation chamber separated from the med lab by a glass partition, Ripley and Burke have squared off.

BURKE

Those specimens are worth millions to the bio-weapons division. Now, if you're smart we can both come out of this heroes. Set up for life.

RIPLEY

You just try getting a dangerous organism past ICC quarantine. Section 22350 of the Commerce Code.

BURKE

You've been doing your homework. Look, they can't impound it if they don't know about it.

RIPLEY

But they will know about it, Burke. From me. Just like they'll know how you were responsible for the deaths of one hundred and fifty-seven colonists here --

BURKE

Now, wait a second --

RIPLEY

(stepping on him)
You sent them to that ship. I just checked the colony log... directive dates six-twelve-seventy-nine. Signed Burke, Carter J.

Ripley's fury is peaking, now that the frustration and rage finally have a target to focus on.

RIPLEY

You sent them out there and you didn't even warn them, Burke. Why didn't you warn them?

BURKE

Look, maybe the thing didn't even exist, right? And if I'd made it a major security situation, the Administration would've stepped in. Then no exclusive rights, nothing.

He shrugs, his manner blase, dismissive.

BURKE

It was a bad call, that's all.

Ripley snaps. She slams him against the wall, surprising herself and him, her hands gripping his collar.

RIPLEY

Bad call? These people are fucking dead, Burke! Well, they're going to nail your hide to the shed... and I'll be there when they do.

She steps back, shaking, and looks at him with utter loathing, as if the depths of human greed are a far more horrific revelation than any alien.

BURKE

(sadly)

I expected more of you, Ripley. I thought you would be smarter than this.

RIPLEY

Sorry to disappoint you.

She turns away and strides out. The door closes. Burke stares after her, his mind a whirl of options.

INT. CORRIDOR

125

Ripley is walking toward operations when a STRIDENT ALARM begins to sound. She breaks into a run.

INT.

OPERATIONS

126

Ripley double-times it to Hicks' TACTICAL CONSOLE where Hudson and Vasquez have already gathered. Hicks slaps a switch, killing the alarm.

HICKS

They're coming. They're in the tunnel.

The TRILLING of the motion sensor remains, speeding up. TWO RED LIGHTS on the tactical display light up simultaneously with an echoing crash of gunfire which vibrates the floor.

HICKS
Guns A and B. Tracking and firing on multiple targets.

The RSS guns pound away, echoing through the complex.
Their separate bursts overlap in an irregular rhythm.
A counter on the display counts down the number of rounds fired.

HUDSON
They must be wall to wall in there. Look at those ammo counters go. It's a shooting gallery down
there.

INT. SERVICE TUNNEL - TIGHT ON RSS GUNS 127

blasting stroboscopically in the tunnels. Their barrels are overheating, glowing cherry red. One CLICKS empty and sits smoking, still swiveling to track targets it can't fire upon.

INT. 128
OPERATIONS

The digital counter on B gun reads zero.

HICKS
B gun's dry. Twenty on A.
Ten. Five. That's it.

SILENCE. Then a GONGLIKE BOOMING echoes eerily up from sublevel.

RIPLEY
They're at the fire door.

The BOOMING INCREASES in volume and ferocity.

HUDSON
Man, listen to that.

Mixed with the echoing crash-clang is a nerve-wrecking SCREECH of claws on steel. The intercom buzzes, startling them.

BISHOP
(voice over) Bishop here. I'm afraid I have some bad news.

HUDSON
Well, that's a switch.

INT. OPERATIONS - MINUTES LATER

129

Everyone, including Bishop, is crowded at the window, intently watching the AP station which is a dim silhouette in the mist. Suddenly a column of flame, like an acetylene torch, jets upward from the complex at the base of the cone.

BISHOP
That's it. See it? Emergency venting.

RIPLEY
How long until it blows?

BISHOP
I'm projecting total systems failure in a little under four hours. The blast radius will be about thirty kilometers. About equal to ten megatons.

HICKS
We got problems.

HUDSON
I don't fucking believe this.
Do you believe this?

RIPLEY
And it's too late to shut it down?

BISHOP
I'm afraid so. The crash did too much damage. The overload is inevitable, at this point.

HUDSON
Oh, man. And I was gettin' short, too! Four more weeks and out. Now I'm gonna buy it on this fuckin' rock. It ain't half fair, man!

VASQUEZ
Hudson, give us a break.

They watch as another gas jet lights up the fog-shrouded landscape.

RIPLEY

(to Hicks)
We need the other drop-ship. The on one the Sulaco. We have to bring it down on remote, somehow.

HUDSON
How? The transmitter was on the APC. It's wasted.

RIPLEY
(pacing)
I don't care how! Think of a way. Think of something.

HUDSON
Think of what? We're fucked.

RIPLEY
What about the colony transmitter?
That up-link tower down at the other end. Why can't we use that?

BISHOP
I checked. The hard wiring between here and there was severed in the fighting.

Ripley is wound up like a dynamo, her mind spinning out options, grim solutions.

RIPLEY
Well then somebody's just going to have to go out there. Take a portable terminal and go out there and plug in manually.

HUDSON
Oh, right! Right! With those things running around. No way.

BISHOP
(quietly)
I'll go.

RIPLEY
What?

BISHOP
I'm really the only one qualified to remote-pilot the ship anyway.
Believe me, I'd prefer not to. I may be synthetic but I'm not stupid.

RIPLEY

All right. Let's get on it. What'll you need?

VASQUEZ

Listen. It's stopped.

They listen. Nothing. An instant later comes the HIGH-PITCHED TRILLING of a motion-sensor alarm. Hicks looks at the tactical board.

HICKS

Well, they're into the complex.

INT. MED LAB

130

One of the acid holes from the colonists' siege has yielded access to subfloor conduits. Bishop lying in the opening, reaches up to grasp the portable terminal as Ripley hands it down to him. He pushes it into the constricted shaft ahead of him. She then hands him a small satchel containing tools and assorted patch cables, a service pistol and a small cutting torch.

BISHOP

This duct runs almost to the up-link assembly. One hundred eighty meters. Say, forty minutes to crawl down there. One hour to patch in and align the antenna. Thirty minutes to prep the ship, then about fifty minutes flight time.

Ripley looks at her watch.

RIPLEY

It's going to be closer. You better get going.

BISHOP

(cheerfully)

See you soon.

She squirms into the shaft, pushing the equipment along ahead of him with a scraping rhythm. The diameter of the conduit is barely larger than the width of his shoulders. Vasquez slides a metal plate over the hole and begins spot welding it in place.

INT. CONDUIT

131

Bishop looks back as the welder seals him in. He sighs fatalistically and squirms forward. Ahead of him the conduit dwindles straight to seeming infinity. Like being in the bore of a very long Howitzer.

INT. MED LAB

132

Ripley jumps as an ALARM suddenly blares through the complex.

HICKS
(voice over)
They're in the approach corridor.

RIPLEY
(into mike)
On my way.

Ripley jumps up, unslinging a FLAMETHROWER from her shoulder in one motion, and sprints for Operations with Vasquez. The sound of SENTRY GUNS opening up in staccato bursts echoes from close by.

INT.
OPERATIONS

133

Ripley runs to the tactical console where Hicks is mesmerized by the images from the surveillance cameras. The flashes of the sentry guns flare out the sensitive video, but impressions of figures moving in the smoky corridor are occasionally visible. The robot sentries hammer away, driving streamers of tracer fire into the swirling mist.

HICKS
Twenty meters and closing.
Fifteen. C and D guns down about fifty percent.

The digital readout whirl through descending numbers. An inhuman SHRILL SCREECHING is audible between bursts of fire.

RIPLEY
Now many?

HICKS
Can't tell. Lots. D gun's down to twenty. Ten. It's out.

Then the firing from the remaining guns stop abruptly. The video image is a swirling wall of smoke. Small fires burn, dim glows in the mist. There are black and twisted shapes, and pieces of twisted shapes, scattered at the edge of visibility. However, nothing emerges from the wall of smoke. The motion sensor TONE shuts off.

RIPLEY
They retreated. The guns stopped
them.

The moment stretches. Everyone exhales slowly.

HICKS
Yeah. But look...

The digital counters for the two sentry guns read "0" and "10" respectively. Less than a second's worth of firing.

HICKS
Newt time then can walk right up and knock.

RIPLEY
But they don't know that. They're probably looking for other ways to get in. That'll take them awhile.

HUDSON
Maybe we got 'em demoralized.

HICKS
(to Vasquez and Hudson)
I want you two walking the perimeter.
I know we're all in strung out shape but stay frosty and alert.
We've got to stop any entries before they get out of hand.

The two troopers nod and head for the corridor. Ripley sighs and picks up a cup of cold coffee, draining it in one gulp.

HICKS
How long since you slept?
Twenty-four hours?

Ripley shrugs. She seems soul weary, drained by the nerve-wracking tension. When she answers, her voice seems distant, detached.

RIPLEY
(grimly)
They'll get us.

HICKS

Maybe. Maybe not.

RIPLEY

Hicks, I'm not going to wind up like those others. You'll take care of it won't you, it if comes to that?

HICKS

If it comes to that, I'll do us both. Let's see that it doesn't. Here, I'd like to introduce you to a close personal friend of mine.

He picks up his pulse-rifle and with the casually precise movements of long practice he snaps open the bolt, drops out the magazine and hands it to her.

HICKS

M-41A 10mm pulse-rifle, over and under with a 30mm pump-action grenade launcher.

Ripley hefts the weapon. It is heavy and awkward. But there is an irrational promise of security in its lethal cold steel lines, to at least the sense that she will be in some greater measure the master of her own fate. She raises it clumsily.

RIPLEY

What do I do?

INT. CONDUIT

134

Bishop is in claustrophobic limbo between two echoing infinities. The pipe rings with his scraping advance. He approaches an irregular hole which admits a tiny shaft of light. He puts his eyes up to the acid-etched opening.

HIS P.O.V. as drooling jaws flash toward us, SLAMMING against the steel with a vicious scraping SNAP.

Bishop flattens himself away from the opening and inches along, looking pale and strained. He glances at his watch.

INT.

OPERATIONS

135

Ripley has the stock of the M-41A snugged up to her cheek and is awkwardly trying to keep up with Hicks' instructions. The Corporal is standing close behind her, positioning her arms. It's intimate but that's the last thing on their minds.

HICKS
Just pull it in real right. It will kick some. When the counter here heads zero, hit this...

He thumbs a button and the magazine drops out, clattering on the floor.

HICKS
Just let it drop right out. Get the other one in quick. Just slap it in hard, it likes abuse.
Now, pull the bolt.

CLACK.

HICKS
You're ready again.

Ripley repeats the action, not very smoothly. Her hands are trembling. She indicates a stout TUBE underneath the slender pulse-rifle barrel.

RIPLEY
What's this?

HICKS
Well, that's the grenade launcher
...you probably don't want to mess with that.

RIPLEY
Look, you started this. Now show me everything. I can handle myself.

HICKS
Yeah. I've noticed.

INT. CORRIDOR

136

DOLLYING WITH Ripley walking down the corridor, now carrying the newfound friend, the M-41A. Gorman steps out of the door to the med lab, looking weak but sound.
Burke is right behind him.

RIPLEY
How do you feel?

GORMAN
All right, I guess. One hell of a hangover. Look, Ripley...

I...

RIPLEY
Forget it.

She shoulders by him into the med lab. Gorman turns to see Vasquez staring at him with cold, slitted eyes.

GORMAN
You still want to kill me?

VASQUEZ
(turning away)
It won't be necessary.

INT. MED LAB - ANNEX

137

Ripley crosses the deserted lab, passing through the annex to the small O.R. where she left Newt.

INT. MED LAB - O.R.

138

Entering the darkened chamber, Ripley looks around. Newt is nowhere to be seen. On a hunch she kneels down and peers under the bed. Newt is curled up there, jammed as far back as she can get, fast asleep. Still clutching "Casey."

Ripley stares at Newt's tiny face, so angelic despite the demons that have chased her through her dreams and the reality between dreams. Ripley lays the rifle on top of the cot and crawls carefully underneath. Without waking the little girl, she slips her arms around her.

Ripley becomes merely the larger of two children huddling together in the darkness under their bed.

Newt's face contorts with the externalization of some tormented dreamscape. She cries out, a vague inarticulate plea. Ripley rocks her gently.

RIPLEY
There, there. Sssshh. It's all right.

EXT. Up-LINK TOWER - VIEW OF AP STATION

139

A VIEW OF the processing station from the colony landing platform. A rising wind is clearing out the low fog and the silhouette of the station grows sharper. Several systems of high pressure conduits at the base of the conical tower are actually glowing dull red with heat in the darkness. High voltage discharges arc around the upper latticework, lighting the blighted landscape with irregular glaring flashes.

PAN ONTO BISHOP, F.G. hunched against the wind at the base of the telemetry tower. He has a TEST-BAY PANEL open and the portable terminal patched in. His jacket is draped over the keyboard and monitor unit to protect it from the elements and he is typing frenetically.

BISHOP
(to himself)
Now, if I did it right...

He punches a key marked "ENABLE."

INT. SULACO CARGO LOCK - IN ORBIT

140

The drop bay is empty and silent, with the remaining ship brooding in the shadows. A KLAXON sounds and rotating clearance lights come on. Hydraulics whine to life. Drop-ship two moves out on its overhead track and is lowered into the drop bay for launch-prep. Service booms and fueling couplers move in automatically around the hull. A recorded announcement echoes across the huge chamber.

FEMALE VOICE Attention. Attention. Automatic fueling operations have begun.
Please extinguish all smoking materials.

INT. OPERATING ROOM - TIGHT ON RIPLEY - MED LAB

141

as she awakens with a start. She checks her watch... an hour has passed. She gently disengages herself from Newt and is about to crawl out from beneath the cot when she sees something and FREEZES.

Across the room, just inside the door to the med lab, are two innocuous but nonetheless chilling objects. TWO STASIS CYLINDERS. Their tops are hinged open, and the suspension fields are switched off. They are both EMPTY. Ripley feels a slow upwelling wave of terror rise through her in that silent frozen moment...the inescapable certainty of a lethal presence. Unable to move or breathe, she looks around frantically, assessing the situation.

RIPLEY
(whispers)
Newt. Newt, wake up.

NEWT

Wah...? Where are...?

RIPLEY

(whispers)

Sssh. Don't move. We're in trouble.

Newt nods, now wide awake. They listen in the darkness for the slightest betrayal of movement. The scrabble of multiple legs across the polished floor, for example.

There is only the droning HUM of the little space heater. Ripley reaches up and, clutching the springs of the underside of the cot, begins to inch it away from the wall.

The SQUEAL OF METAL as the legs scrape across the floor is jarringly loud in the stillness.

When the space is wide enough she cautiously slides herself up between the wall and the edge of the cot, reaching for the rifle she left lying on top of the mattress. Here yes clear the edge of the bed. The rifle is GONE.

She snaps her head around. A SCUTTLING SHAPE LEAPS TOWARD HER from the foot of the bed! She ducks with a startled cry. The obscene thing hits the wall above her, legs moving lightning fast. Reflexively she slams the bed against the wall, pinning the creature inches above her face. Its legs and tail writhe with incredible ferocity and it emits a demented, piercing SQUEAL.

Ripley heaves Newt across the polished floor and in a frenzied scramble rolls from beneath the cot. She flips it over, trapping the creature underneath.

They back away, gasping. Ripley's eyes flash around the shadowed room where every corner of space between equipment holds lethal promise. The creature scuttles from beneath the bed and disappears under a back of cabinets in a blur. Ripley hugs Newt close and heads toward the door, moving as if every object in the room had a million volts running through it. She reaches the door. Hits the wall switch. Nothing happens. Disabled from outside. She tries the lights. Nothing. She pounds on the door. The acoustically dampened door panel thunks dully. She moves to the observation window, glancing frantically over her shoulder. The bare floor behind her is like a screaming threat.

RIPLEY

(shouting)
Hey...hey!

She pounds on the window. Through the double thickness window we can SEE that the lab is dark and empty. Ripley whirls, hearing a loathsome scrabbling behind her. Newt starts to whimper, feeding off her fear. She steps in front of the video surveillance camera and waves her arms in a circle.

RIPLEY
Hicks! Hicks!

INT. OPERATIONS - TIGHT ON VIDEO MONITOR

142 showing Ripley waving her arms. There is no sound, a surreal pantomime.

A hand ENTERS FRAME and switches off the monitor. Ripley's image vanishes.

WIDER ANGLE as Burke straightens casually from the console. Hicks is talking via headset with Bishop and hasn't noticed Ripley's plight or Burke's action.

HICKS
(into mike)
Roger. Check back when you've activated the ship.
(turning)
He's at the up-link tower.

BURKE
(calmly)
Excellent.

INT. OPERATING ROOM

143

Ripley picks up a steel chair and slams it against the observation window. It bounces back from the high-impact material. She tries again.

REVERSE ANGLE from the med lab side, showing her futile efforts, the chair hitting with a dull THWACK barely audible through the double thickness pressure port.

Ripley turns, studying the room. She fumbles through a clutter of equipment on a counter next to her and finds a SMALL EXAMINATION LIGHT. Snapping it on she plays the beam over the walls. Tall assemblies of surgical and anaesthesiology equipment loom in the dark. She hears, or thinks she hears, movements. The light spins across the room, swiveling and bobbing frantically. Like an indicator of her growing panic. Newt starts a thin, high wailing.

NEWT
Mommy...mommmmyyyy...

Ripley steadies herself, realizing Newt's terror and the child's dependence on her. She plays the beam across the ceiling. Holds on something. Gets an idea. She removes her lighter from a jacket pocket and picks up some papers from the counter. Moving cautiously she boosts Newt up onto the SURGICAL TABLE in the center of the room and clambers up after her.

NEWT
Mommy...I mean, Ripley...I'm scared.

RIPLEY
I know, honey. Me too.

Ripley lights the papers and holds the flaming mass under the temperature sensor of a fire control system SPRINKLER HEAD. It triggers, spraying the room from several sources with water. An ALARM sounds throughout the complex.

INT.
OPERATIONS

144

Hicks jumps at the sound of the alarm, finally identifying its source among the lights flashing on his board. He bolts for the door, yelling into his headset as he moves.

HICKS
Vasquez, Hudson, meet me in medical! We got a fire!

INT. OPERATING ROOM

145

Ripley and Newt are drenched as the sprinklers continue to drizzle in the darkness. The SIREN hoots maniacally, masking all other sound. Ripley scans the room with her light, her hair plastered to her face, wiping water out of her eyes. She is eye level with a complex surgical MULTILIGHT. She looks into its tangle of arms and cables, inches away. Looks away. Her eyes snap back. SOMETHING LEAPS AT HER FACE. She SCREAMS and topples off the table, splashing to the floor. Newt shrieks and scrambles away as Ripley hurls the CHITTERING creature off of her. It slams against a wall of cabinets, clings for a moment, then leaps back as if driven by a steel spring. Ripley scrambles desperately, pulling equipment over on top of herself, clawing across the floor in a frenzy of motion. In a blurr of multijointed legs the creature scuttles up her body.

She tears at it, but it is incredibly powerful for its size. It moves like lightning toward her head, avoiding her fumbling hands. Newt screams abjectly, backing away, until she is pressed up against a desk in one corner.

Ripley has both hands up, forcing the pulsing body back from her face. The thing's tail whips around her throat and begins to tighten, forcing the underside of its body close to her. Ripley thrashes about, knocking over equipment, sending instruments CLATTERING. Water streams over her, into her eyes, blinding her and making it impossible to get a grip on the creature's body.

ANGLE ON NEWT as crablike legs appear from behind the desk, right behind her. She sees it and, thinking fast, jams the desk against the wall, pinning the writhing thing. The desk jumps and shudders against all the pressure her tiny body can bring to bear on it. She wails between gritted teeth as the second creature gets one leg free, then another and another. Squeezing itself inexorably onto the desk top...toward her.

The legs of the chittering thing claw at Ripley's head, getting a surer grip even as she whips her head from side to side. The obscene TUBULE extrudes wetly from the sheath on the creature's underside, forcing itself between the arms she has crossed tightly over her face.

A figure appears at the observation window, a silhouette behind the misted-over glass. A hand wipes a clear spot. Hick's eyes appear. He steps back. WHAM! A burst of pulse-rifle fire shatters the tempered glass. Hicks dives into the crazed spider web pattern and explodes into the room in a shower of fragments. He hits rolling, his armor grinding through the shards, and slides across to Ripley. He gets his fingers around the thrashing legs of the vicious beast and pulls. Between the two of them they force it away from her face, though Ripley is losing strength as the tail tightens sickeningly around her throat. Hudson leaps into the room, flings Newt away from the desk to go skidding across the wet floor, and blasts the second creature against the wall. Point-blank. Acid and smoke.

Gorman appears at Ripley's side and grabs the tail, unwinding its writhing length like a boa constrictor coil from her throat. All of them grip the struggling, SHRIEKING creature.

HICKS
The corner! Ready?

HUDSON
Do it!

Hicks hurls the thing into the corner. It scrabbles upright in an instant and leaps back toward them. WHAM! Hudson gets it clean.

Ripley collapses, gagging. The alarm and sprinklers shut off automatically. Hicks sees the stasis cylinders.

RIPLEY
(coughing)
Burke...it was Burke.

INT. OPERATIONS - ANGLE ON HUDSON

146

looking decidedly stressed-out. He grips his rifle tightly, AIMED RIGHT AT CAMERA.

HUDSON
(intense)
I say we grease this rat-fuck son of a bitch right now!

THE GROUP is gathered around Burke who sits in a chair, maintaining an icy calm although beads of sweat betray intense concealed tension. Only a few minutes have passed and everyone is still buzzed on adrenaline, as if the whole group is charged with high voltage.

HICKS
(pacing)
I don't get it. It doesn't make any Goddamn sense.

Ripley stands in front of Burke, every fiber of her being accusing him with absolute outrage. Burke tries to break Ripley's stare, which is like a diamond drill. He can't.

RIPLEY
He wanted an alien, only he couldn't get it back through quarantine. But if we were impregnated

...whatever you call it...and then frozen for the trip back at just the right time...then nobody would know about the embryos we were carrying.
We and Newt.

Ripley glances at the little girl, a frail figure sitting nearby, hugging her knees and watching the proceedings with somber eyes. She is all but lost in an adult jacket someone has found for her, and her still damp hair is plastered to her forehead and cheeks.

HICKS
Wait a minute. We'd know about it.

RIPLEY
The only way it would work is if he sabotaged certain freezers on the trip back. Then he could jettison the bodies and make up any story he liked.

HUDSON
Fuuuck! He's dead.
(to Burke)
You're dogmeat, pal.

BURKE
This is total paranoid delusion.
It's pitiful.

RIPLEY
(wearily)
You know, Burke, I don't know which species is worse. You don't see them screwing each other over for a fucking percentage.

HICKS
(serious)
Let's waste him.
(to Burke)
No offense.

Ripley shakes her head, the rage giving way to a sickened emptiness.

RIPLEY
Just find someplace to lock him up until it's time to --

THE LIGHTS GO OUT. Everyone stops in the sudden darkness, realizing instinctively it is a new escalation in the struggle. Hicks looks at the board. Everything is out.

Doors. Video screens.

RIPLEY
They cut the power.

HUDSON
What do you mean, they cut the power? How could they cut the power, man? They're animals.

Ripley picks up her rifle and thumbs off the safety.

RIPLEY
Newt! Stay close.
(to the others)
Let's get some trackers going.
Come on, get moving. Gorman, watch
Burke.

Hudson and Vasquez pick up their scanners and move to the door. Vasquez has to slide it open manually on its track.

INT. CORRIDOR

147

The two troopers separate and move rapidly to the barriers at opposite ends of the control block.

DOLLYING WITH VASQUEZ as she moves forward with feral steps in the darkness.

ON HUDSON scanning the med lab and the nearby barrier.

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Anything?

BEEP. Hudson's tracker lights up, a faint signal.

HUDSON
There's something.

He pans it around. Back down the corridor. It beep again, louder.

HUDSON
It's inside the complex.

VASQUEZ
(voice over)
You're just reading me.

HUDSON

No. No! It ain't you. They're inside. Inside the perimeter.
They're in here.

RIPLEY
Hudson, stay cool. Vasquez?

ANGLE ON VASQUEZ swinging her tracker and rifle together.
She aims it behind her. BEEP.

VASQUEZ
(cool)
Hudson may be right.

INT.
OPERATIONS

148

Ripley and Hicks share a look..."here we go."

HICKS
(low)
It's game time.

RIPLEY
Get back here, both of you. Fall back to Operations.

INT. CORRIDOR

149

Hudson backtracks nervously, peering all around. He looks stretched to the limit.

HUDSON
This signal's weird...must be some interference or something.
There's movement all over the place...

RIPLEY
(voice over)
Just get back here!

Hudson reaches the door to operations at a run, a moment before Vasquez. They pull the door shut and lock it.

INT.
OPERATIONS

150

Hudson joins Ripley and Hicks, who are laying out their armament. Flamethrowers. Grenades. M-41A magazines.
Hudson's tracker beeps. Then again. The tone continues through the SCENE, its rhythm increasing.

HUDSON
Movement! Signal's clean.

He pans the scanner. Stops. The range display reads out, counting down.

HUDSON
Range twenty meters.

RIPLEY
(to Vasquez)
Seal the door.

Vasquez picks up a hand-welder and moves to comply.

HUDSON
Seventeen meters.

HICKS
Let's get these things lit.

He hands one flamethrower to Ripley and begins priming the other himself. It lights with a muffled POP. Ripley's lights a moment later. Sparks shower around Vasquez as she begins welding the door. Hudson's tracker is beeping like mad now, as fast as their hearts.

RIPLEY
They learned. They cut the power and avoided the guns. They must have found another way in, something we missed.

HICKS
We didn't miss anything.

HUDSON
Fifteen meters.

RIPLEY
I don't know, an acid hole in a duct. Something under the floors, not on the plans.
I don't know!

She picks up Vasquez' scanner and aims it the same direction as Hudson's.

HUDSON
Twelve meters. Man, this is a big fucking signal. Ten meters.

RIPLEY
They're right on us. Vasquez, how you doing?

Vasquez is heedlessly showering herself with molten metal as she welds the door shut. Working like a demon.

HUDSON
Nine meters. Eight.

RIPLEY
Can't be. That's inside the room!

HUDSON
It's readin' right. Look!

Ripley fiddles with her tracker, adjusting the tuning.

HICKS
Well you're not reading it right!

HUDSON
Six meters. Five. What the fu --

He looks at Ripley. It dawns on both of them at the same time. She feels a cold premonitory dread as she angles her tracker upward to the ceiling, almost overhead. The tone gets louder.

Hicks climbs onto a file cabinet and raises a panel of acoustic drop-ceiling. He shines his light inside.

HICKS' P.O.V.

151

A soul-wrenching nightmare image. Moving in the beam of light are aliens. Lots of aliens. They are crawling like bats, upside down, clinging to the pipes and beams of the structural ceiling, not touching the flimsy acoustic panels. They glisten hideously as they claw their way forward in silence. They cover the ceiling of the operations room. The inner sanctum is utterly violated.

ON HICKS
152 blasted by fear.

Something moves...he snaps the light around. It's a meter behind him. IT LUNGES! He drops reflexively, the claws raking across his armor.

Hicks falls into the room just as the creatures detach en masse from the handholds. THE CEILING EXPLODES, raining debris. Nightmare shapes drop into the room. Newt screams. Hudson opens fire. Vasquez grabs Hicks, pulls him up, firing one handed with her flamethrower. Ripley scoops up Newt and staggers back. Gorman turns to fire and Burke bolts for the only remaining exit, the corridor connecting to the med lab. In the strobelike glare of the pulse-rifles we SEE flashes of aliens, moving forward in the smoke from the flamethrower fires. They move like nothing human... leaping quick as insects at times or gliding with powerful, balletic grace.

RIPLEY
Medical! Get to medical!

She dashes for the corridor.

INT. MED LAB CORRIDOR

153

DOLLYING BEHIND HER as she sprints, the walls becoming a frenzied blur. Ahead of her Burke clears the door to the med lab. HE SLIDES IT CLOSED. Ripley slams into the door. Tries the latch. Hears it LOCK from the far side.

RIPLEY
Burke! Open the door!

NEWT
Look!

Behind her an alien is moving down the corridor like a locomotive, a graceful skeleton shape as lethal and inhuman as you can imagine. Strobe flashes backlight the demented silhouette. Shaking, Ripley raises her rifle. She squeezes the trigger. NOTHING HAPPENS. The creature HISSES, baring its teeth as it advances. Ripley checks the SAFETY. The safety is off. The DIGITAL COUNTER. The magazine is full. Newt begins to wail. Ripley's hands, slick with sweat, are trembling so much she almost drops the rifle. Panic screams in her brain. The thing is almost on her, filling the corridor, when she remembers. She snaps the bolt back, chambering a round. Whips the stock to her shoulder. FIRES. FLASH-CRACK! A FLASHBULB GLIMPSE OF shrieking jaws as the silhouette is hurled back, screeching insanely.

Ripley is slammed against the door by the recoil, blinded by the flash and deafened by the concussion.

INT.
OPERATIONS

154

Hicks looks up. Fires POINT-BLANK at a leaping silhouette. SCREEEECH! The fire-control system has tripped, with sprinklers spraying the room and a mindless SIREN wailing. Total pandemonium.

HUDSON
(hysterical)
Let's go! Let's go!

HICKS
Fuckin' A!

Hudson screams as floor panels lift under him, and clawed arms seize him lightning fast, dragging him down. Another skeletal shape leaps on him from above. He disappears into the subfloor crawlway. Hicks, Vasquez and Gorman make it to the med lab access corridor.

INT. CORRIDOR

Stunned, Ripley sees through dissipating smoke the creature rising to advance again. Flinching against blast and glare she drills it POINT-BLANK with a BLINDING BURST that carries the M-41A's muzzle right up toward the ceiling. Newt covers her ears against the CONCUSSION.

HICKS
(o.s.)
Hold you fire!

The troopers seem to materialize out of the smoke.

RIPLEY
(indicating door)
Locked.

HICKS
Stand back.

Hicks snaps the torch off his belt and cuts into the lock. Inhuman shapes enter the far end of the corridor. Vasquez hands her flamethrower to Gorman and unslings her rifle. She starts loading 30mm grenades into the launcher, like oversize 12-guage shells.

GORMAN
You can't use those in here!

VASQUEZ
Right. Fire in the hole!

She pumps a round up and fires. The grenade EXPLODES and the blast almost knocks them down. Hicks kicks the door open, molten droplets flying.

HICKS
(shouting at Vasquez)
Thanks a lot! Now I can't hear shit.

VASQUEZ
(shouting)
What?

INT. MED LAB ANNEX

156

Vasquez slides the door almost closed, then fires three grenades rapid-fire through the gap. She slams the door home as the grenades detonate, the explosion sounding gonglike through the metal.

Ripley sprints across the room, trying the far door. Burke has locked it as well. Hicks switches his hand-torch from CUT to WELD and starts sealing the door they just passed through.

INT. MED LAB

157

Burke, hyperventilating with terror, backs across the dark chamber. Gasping, almost paralyzed with fear, he crosses the chamber to the door leading to the main concourse. His fingers reach for the latch. It moves by itself. The door opens slowly.

ON BURKE his eyes wide, transfixed by his fate. We hear the BULLWHIP CRACK of a tail-stinger striking as we:

CUT TO:

INT. MED LAB ANNEX

158

The door dimples with a clanging impact, separating slightly from its frame. Another crash, the squeal of tortured steel. Newt grabs Ripley by the hand and tugs her across the room.

NEWT
Come on! This way.

She leads Ripley to an air vent set low in the wall and expertly unlatches the grille, swinging it open. Newt starts inside but Ripley pulls her back.

RIPLEY
Stay behind me.

Ripley trades her rifle for Gorman's flamethrower before he can protest and enters the air shaft, which is a tight fit. Newt scrambles in behind, followed by Hicks, Gorman and Vasquez on rearguard. Glancing back fearfully Newt pushes on Ripley's butt as they crawl rapidly through the shaft.

NEWT
Come on. Crawl faster.

RIPLEY
DO you know how to get to the landing field from here?

NEWT
Sure. Go left.

Ripley turns into a larger MAIN DUCT where there is enough room to crab-walk in a low crouch. She runs, scraping her back on the ceiling. The troopers' armor clatters in the confined space. They approach an intersection. She fires the flamethrower around the corner, the looks. Clear.

NEWT
Go right.

They sprint into the narrow connecting duct, the maze becoming a blur. Ripley fires the flamethrower periodically, as they pass side ducts covered by louvered grilles or vertical shafts going to higher or lower levels.

HICKS
(into headset)
Bishop, you read me? Come in, over.

There is a long pause then Bishop's VOICE, almost unintelligible with interference, comes over the radio.

BISHOP
(voice over;
static)
Yes, I read you. Not very well...

EXT. UP-LINK RELAY - LANDING FIELD

159

Bishop is huddled against the base of the telemetry mast, out of the wind which is now gusting viciously.

BISHOP
(yelling; over enunciating)

The ship is on its way. ETA about sixteen minutes. I've got my hands full flying... the weather's come up a bit.

Bishop's fingers are blurring over the terminal keys and he squints, watching the screen as the flight telemetry updates rapidly.

In the b.g. the AP station has become a raging demon, wreathed in boiling steam and electrical discharges.

INT. AIR DUCT

160

HICKS
All right, stand by there. We're on our way. Over.

The beam of Ripley's light wavers hypnotically in the tunnel ahead. She blinks, seeing something...not sure.
A GLINTING OBSCURE FORM MOVING TOWARD THEM, filling the tunnel at the absolute limit of the light's power.

RIPLEY
Back. Go back!

They try to crawl back, jamming together. Behind them, the way they have come, a GRATING is battered in with a FEROCIOUS CLANG and the deadly silhouette of a warrior flows into the duct. They are trapped. Vasquez uses her flamethrower, bathing the tunnel in fire. Hicks snaps out his hand-welder and cuts into the wall of the duct. Molten metal spatters him, as sparks fill the tunnel with lurid light. Vasquez' flamethrower sputters.

VASQUEZ
(icy) Losing fuel.

Between eye-searing bursts of flame Ripley sees the glistening apparitions closing in. Hicks' torch feathers out. Empty. Bracing his back he kicks hard at the cherry-hot metal. It bends aside.

Beyond is a narrow SERVICE WAY, lined with pipes and conduit. Hicks slides through the searing hole, lifting Newt safely through as Ripley hands her out.
Ripley follows and turns to help Gorman. Vasquez' flamethrower goes dry. She draws her SERVICE PISTOL.
Suddenly she looks up as a WARRIOR SCREECHES DOWN FROM A VERTICAL SHAFT, right above her.

She fires with incredible rapidity...BAM! BAM! BAM!

Rolls aside. It lands on her legs and she snaps her head to one side just as its TAIL STINGER buries into the metal wall beside her cheek. She fires again, emptying the pistol, kicking the thrashing shape away.

Acid cuts through her chickenplate armor, searing into her thigh. She cries out, gritting her teeth against the white-hot pain. Gorman sees Vasquez hit, unable to move. Sees the creatures coming the other way...and turns away from the escape hole. He crawls back to her, grabs her battle harness and starts dragging her towards safety. Too late. The approaching alien warriors have reached and passed the opening. Vasquez sees him, barely conscious.

VASQUEZ
(hoarse whisper)
You always were an asshole, Gorman.

She seizes his hand in a deadly grip, but we RECOGNIZE it as the "power greeting" she shared with Drake... something for the chosen few. Gorman returns the grip. He hands her two grenades and arms two himself as the creatures are upon them.

INT. SERVICE WAY

161

RUSHING WITH Ripley, Newt and Hicks as a full tilt run. The service way lights up with a POWERFUL BLAST behind them and they stumble with the shock wave. Newt breaks out ahead and it's all Ripley and Hicks can do to keep up.

NEWT
This way. Come on, we're almost there!

RIPLEY
Newt, wait!

The kid moves like lightning, diving and dodging around obstacles. If it wasn't clear before it's clear now that we are on her turf, and she's the ace. Running on and on, their breathing loud and echoing...the walls a directionless blur. Newt never hesitates.

They reach a junction with a narrow ANGLED CHUTE which runs upward at a steep 45 degrees.

NEWT
Here! Go up.

INT.

Ripley looks up the angles shaft, seeing light at the top...an exterior vent hood. The sound of wind booms down from above. Like blowing across a bottle top vastly amplified.

Ripley enters, bracing her feet on perilously narrow side ribs in the shaft. She looks down. The chute descends far into the depths, lost in shadow. She starts to climb with Newt behind/below her, and Hicks, just emerging from the side duct.

NEWT
Just up there --

Newt slips, a rusted rib collapsing under her foot. She slides...catches herself with one hand. Ripley reaches for her, dropping her light. The hand-light goes skittering and bumping down the chute, around a bend, and disappears.

Ripley strains, reaching, her hand groping for Newt's. They miss, inches apart.

NEWT
Riiiiipppleee --

She slips. Hicks lunges, grabbing her oversized jacket. AND SHE SLIPS OUT OF IT. With an echoing scream Newt plummets, sliding down the chute into darkness.

MOVING WITH HER, the walls racing by in a dizzy blur like a bobsled ride. The shaft pitches left. Newt bounces, sliding halfway up the wall. The chute forks ahead. Newt tumbles into the right shaft, which drops at a steeper angle into the depths. Just disappearing down the LEFT SHAFT we SEE Ripley's light.

Ripley looks Hicks in the eye. And kicks free...sliding down the chute after Newt. Ripley slams her feet into the side-ribs, bracing herself in a controlled descent. Ripley reaches the "V." Sees the glow of the light in the left fork. She goes left.

RIPLEY
Newt!

She hears a plaintive reply, so echoey and distorted it has no direction.

NEWT
(o.s.)

Mommy...where are you?

Ripley reaches the bottom of the chute where it intersects with a HORIZONTAL SERVICE TUNNEL. The light is lying there, but no Newt. The echoing wail comes again.

NEWT
(O.S.)
Mooooommmeee...

Ripley starts down the tunnel, answering. Newt's call comes again. Fainter? She can't tell. She spins in a growing panic, starts the other way.

RIPLEY
(to her headset)
Hicks, get down here. I need that locator.

INT.
SUBBASEMENT

163

Newt is in a low grottolike chamber, filled with pipes and machines. It is flooded, almost up to Newt's waist. She looks up, seeing light streaming through a grating. Ripley's voice seems to come from there.

RIPLEY
(O.S.)
Newt! Star wherever you are!

Newt climbs some pipes, straining to reach the grating.

INT. SERVICE TUNNEL

164

Hicks joins Ripley, unsnapping the emergency-locator from his belt. They follow the signal into a lighted area where the power apparently was not cut.

HICKS
This way. We're close...

Following the signal they come to a grating set in the floor.

NEWT
Here! I'm here. I'm here.

Ripley runs to the grating. Looking down she sees Newt's tearstreaked face. Newt reaches up. Her tiny fingers wriggle up through the bars of the grate. Ripley squeezes the child's precious fingertips.

RIPLEY
Climb down, honey. We have to cut through this grate.

Newt backs away, climbing down the pipe as Hicks cuts into the bars with his hand-torch.

INT.
SUBBASEMENT

165

Newt, standing waist deep in the water, watches sparks shower blindingly as Hicks cuts. She bites her lip, trembling. Cold and terrified. Silently a glistening shape rises in one graceful motion from the water behind her. It stands, dripping, dwarfing her tiny form. Newt turns, sensing the movement...She SCREAMS as the shadow engulfs her.

INT. SERVICE TUNNEL

166

Ripley panics, hearing screaming below, then splashing.
She and Hicks kick desperately at the grating, smashing it down. Heedless of the cherry-hot edges Ripley lunges into the hole with her light.

RIPLEY
Newt! Newt!

The surface of the water reflects the beam placidly.
Newt is gone. Bobbing in the water, eyes staring, is "Casey" the doll head. In sinks slowly, distorting, vanishing in darkness.

Hicks pulls Ripley away from the hole. She struggles furiously, trying to tear out of his grip.

RIPLEY
No! Noooo!

He drags her back. It takes all of his strength.

HICKS
(intense)
She's gone! Let's go!

He sees something moving toward them through a lattice of pipes. Ripley is irrational. Hysterical.

RIPLEY
No! No! She's alive! We have to --

HICKS
All right! She's alive. I believe it. But we gotta get moving! Now!

He drags her toward an ELEVATOR not far away at the end of the tunnel. Gets her inside, slamming her against the back wall. Hits the button to go to surface level. An alien warrior leaps into the tunnel, starts toward them. The doors are closing. Not fast enough. The creature gets one arm through, the doors closing on it. THEY OPEN AGAIN, an automatic safety feature. THE WARRIOR HISSES, LUNGING. Hicks FIRES, POINT-BLANK. It spins away, SCREECHING. Acid sluices between the closing doors, across Hicks' armored chest plate, as he shields Ripley with his body. The lift starts upward. Hicks' fingers race with the clasps as the stuff eats its way toward his skin. Galvanized out of her hysteria, Ripley claws at his armor, helping him as much as she can. He screams as the acid contacts his chest and arm. He shucks out of the combat armor like a madman, dropping the smoking pieces to the floor. Acrid fumes fill the air, searing eyes and lungs. The elevator stops. The doors part and they stumble out, Ripley supporting Hicks who is doubled over in agony.

RIPLEY
Come on, you can make it.
Almost there.

EXT. LANDING FIELD

167

Drop-ship two descends toward the landing grid, side-slipping in hurricane gusts. Bishop stands, guiding it with the portable terminal. The ship sets down hard. Slides sideways. Stops. Bishop turns as Ripley and Hicks stumble out of a doorway in the colony building behind him. He goes to them, helping to support Hicks and they run toward the ship, buffeted by the gale. Ripley shouts, her words barely audible over the wind.

RIPLEY
HOW MUCH TIME?

BISHOP
PLENTY! TWENTY-SIX MINUTES!

RIPLEY
WE'RE NOT LEAVING!

The loading ramp deploys and they run into the ship.

EXT. PROCESSING STATION

168

An infernal engine, roaring out of control. Steam blasts and swirls, lightning zaps around the superstructure and columns of incandescent gas thunder hundreds of feet into the air.

We APPROACH, hypnotically. The drop-ship ENTERS FRAME, moving toward the station. It pivots, hovering in the blasting turbulence, and settles onto a NARROW LANDING PLATFORM ten levels above the ground, or about a third of the way up the enormous structure.

INT. DROP-SHIP

169

Ripley finishes winding tape around a bulky object and drops the roll. She has crudely fastened a M-41A assault rifle together, side by side, with a flamethrower. A massive, unwieldy package of absolute firepower. Her movements are curt, precise...determined. She works rapidly, snatching magazines, grenades, belts and other gear from the fully stocked ordnance racks of the drop-ship.

Bishop comes aft from the pilot's compartment to help Hicks dress his injuries. Hicks is sprawled in a flight seat, the contents of a FIELD MEDICAL KEY strewn around him. He's out of the game...contorted with pain.

BISHOP
Ripley...

RIPLEY
She's alive. They brought her here and you know it.

BISHOP
In seventeen minutes this place will be a cloud of vapor the size of Nebraska.

Ripley is stuffing gear rapidly into a satchel, her hands flying.

RIPLEY
Hicks, don't let him leave.

HICKS
(grimacing with pain)
We ain't going anywhere.

She hefts the hybrid weapon, grabs the satchel and spins to the door controls. The door opens. Wind and machine-thunder blast in.

RIPLEY
See you, Hicks.

Hicks is holding a wad of gauze plastered over his face.

HICKS
Dwayne. It's Dwayne.

Ripley grabs his hand. They share a moment, albeit brief. Mutual respect in the valley of death.

RIPLEY
Ellen.

HICKS (nods with satisfaction)
Don't be long, Ellen.

Ripley runs down the ramp, crossing the platform to the open doors of a LARGE FREIGHT ELEVATOR. The doors close.

INT. FREIGHT ELEVATOR

170

The elevator descends. Bars of light move rhythmically across her as Ripley stands facing the doors, watching the landings go by. The heat grows more intense. Pipes glowing cherry-red pass by. Steam hisses and billows. The lift clatters in a steady beat. Hypnotic.

Ripley removes her jacket and dons a battle harness directly over her T-shirt. Her hair is matted, and she glistens with sweat. Her eyes burn with a determination that holds the gut-panic in check.

The elevator descends. She checks her weapon. Attaches a BANDOLIER OF GRENADES to her harness. Primes the flamethrower. Checks the rifle's magazine. Racks the bolt, chambering the first round. She checks the MARKING FLARES jammed in the thigh pockets of her jump pants. She drops an unprimed grenade, trembling, forcing herself to be strong. We SEE she doesn't know doodley about grenades.

This is the most terrifying thing she has ever done. She begins to hyperventilate, soaking with sweat. Her fingers slick and slippery on the rifle. The elevator descends.

The lift motors whine, slowing. It hits bottom with a bump. The safety cage retracts. Slowly, expectantly, the doors open.

HER P.O.V. THROUGH the parting doors...an empty corridor. Dark, swirling with steam, a ruddy glow VISIBLE here and there. It seems to have been a descent into Dantean Hell. The air itself vibrates with heat distortion. Couplings groan. Machinery whines and throbs. Like the beating of a vast heart the pounding of massive pumps echoes through the station.

INT. CORRIDOR

171

Ripley moves out of the lift, knuckles white on the rifle. Her eyes dart, straining to penetrate the lethal gloom. Behind her we SEE a SECOND ELEVATOR next to hers, its lift cage somewhere on a higher floor. Ahead the corridor is encrusted with the alien excrement and not far down the bio-mechanoid catacomb begins. She enters the maze, darting glances at Hick's LOCATOR, taped to the top of her kludge weapon.

A VOICE echoes down the tunnels, calm and mechanical.

VOICE
Attention. Emergency. All personnel must evacuate immediately. You now have fourteen minutes to reach minimum safe distance.

INT. CATACOMB

172

Range and direction read out in rapid-fire alpha-numerics on the locator display.

Ripley blinks sweat out of her eyes, moving through the swirling steam of the alien maze. She approaches an intersecting tunnel. Flashing emergency lights illuminate the insane fresco of the walls. She spins, firing the flamethrower. Nothing there. She whirls back. Moves forward, trembling and adrenalized.

Skeletal figures drown in the walls, frozen in macabre tormented positions like human insects in amber. Steam blasts, blinding her. The locator signal strengthens as she turns, crouches through a low passage, turns again. At each intersection she quickly lights a FIFTEEN-MINUTE MARKING FLARE and drops it. For the way back. She has to turn sideways, inching through a fissure between two walls of death...cocoon niches, human bas-relief sealed in resin.

SUDDENLY SOMETHING SHOOTS OUT, GRABBING HER! A hand. She recovers, then recognizes the face sealed in the wall. Carter Burke.

BURKE
Ripley...help me. I can feel it...inside. Oh, God...it's moving! Oh goood...

She looks at him. No one deserves this.

RIPLEY
Here.

She hands him a grenade, wrapping his fingers around the spoon, and pulls the primer. She moves on.

VOICE
You now have eleven minutes to reach minimum safe distance.

Ripley moves ahead. The locator signals shows she is almost there. A CONCUSSION rocks the place, like an earthquake, jarring her almost off her feet. Then another. The whole station seems to shudder. A SIREN begins to wail a demented rhythm. Following the tracker she turns a corner and stops. The RANGE INDICATOR READS ZERO. She looks down, horrified to see Newt's tracer bracelet lying on the floor of the tunnel. All hope recedes, disintegrating into mindless chaos.

INT. EGG
CHAMBER

173

Newt is cocooned in a pillarlike structure at the edge of a cluster of upright OVOID SHAPES...alien eggs. Her eyelids flutter open and she becomes aware of her surroundings. The egg nearest her begins to move...opening like an obscene flower at its top to reveal something stirring within. Newt stares, transfixed by terror, as the jointed legs appear over the lip of the ovoid one by one. She SCREAMS.

INT. CATACOMBS

174

Ripley hears the scream and breaks into a run.

INT. EGG
CHAMBER

175

Newt watches the face-hugger emerge and turn toward her. Ripley runs in just as it is tensing to leap, and FIRES, blasting it with a burst from the assault rifle. The flash illuminates the figure of an adult warrior, nearby. It spins, moving straight for Ripley. Firing from the hip she drills it with two controlled bursts which catapult it back. She steps toward it, FIRING AGAIN. Her expression is murderous. AND AGAIN. It spins onto its back. She unleashes the flamethrower and it vanishes in a fireball. Ripley runs to Newt and begins tearing at the fresh resinous cocoon material, freeing the child. She swings her up onto her back.

NEWT
(weakly)
I knew you'd come.

RIPLEY
Newt, I want you to hang on,
now. Hang on tight.

Groggily Newt hooks her arms and legs through the belts of Ripley's battle harness as Ripley picks up her weapon. More warriors are moving toward her among the eggs. She fires the flamethrower. The eggs are engulfed. One of the warriors lunges forward, a living fireball. She blasts it in half with two bursts from the M-41A. Ripley retreats, ducking under a glistening cylindrical mass. A PIERCING SHRIEK fill the chamber. She turns. And there it is.

A massive silhouette in the mist, the ALIEN QUEEN glowers over her eggs like a great, glistening black insect-Buddha. What's bigger and meaner than the Alien? His momma. Her fanged head is an unimaginable horror. Her six limbs, the four arms and two powerful legs, are folded grotesquely over her distended abdomen. The egg-filled abdomen swells and swells into a great pulsing tubular sac, suspended from a lattice of pipes and conduits by a weblike membrane as if some vast coil of intestine were draped carelessly among the machinery. Ripley realizes she ducked under part of it a moment before. Inside the abdominal sac can be SEEN the forms of countless eggs, churning their way toward the pulsating ovipositor where they emerge glistening, to be picked up by DRONES. The drones are tiny scuttling albino versions of the "warrior" aliens we have already seen.

Ripley pumps the slide on her grenade launcher. She fires. Pumps and fires again. Four times. The grenades punch deep into the egg sac and EXPLODE, ripping it open from within. Eggs are tons of gelatinous matter pour across the chamber floor. The Queen goes berserk, SCREECHING like some psychotic steam whistle. Ripley lays about her with the flamethrower, igniting everything in sight with an insane fury. Eggs shrivel in the inferno, and figures of warriors and drones vanish in frenzied thrashing. Over all is the Queen's shrieking as she struggles in the flames. Two warriors emerge from the boiling smoke, closing on her. She pulls the trigger...an empty click. DIGITAL COUNTER flashing crimson zeroes. She drops the magazine, grabs another from her belt, rams it home and OPENS UP.

The creatures vanish in rapid-fire flashes. Ripley backs away, venting her terror in a sustained orgy of fire as she blasts everything that moves in one long eye-searing expenditure of energy. Then she dashes into the catacombs, navigating by sheer primal instinct.

INT. CATACOMBS

176

Ripley runs, blindly, with panting intensity verging on hysteria. Impressions crash upon her...the maze blurring by, sirens howling, the station rocking with explosions, emergency lights flashing, steam blasting, red-hot steel hissing. Reality itself is reduced to a concussive series of strobeline instants of relentless forward motion.

She sees one of the flares she dropped and turns. Sees another, sprinting toward it as the foundations of the world shake.

INT. EGG
CHAMBER

177

Lashing in a frenzy, the QUEEN DETACHES FROM THE EGG SAC, ripping away and dragging torn cartilage and tissue behind it. SEEN DIMLY THROUGH swirling smoke, it rises on its powerful legs and steps forward.

INT. CATACOMBS - CORRIDOR
179

178-

Ripley uses the flamethrower ahead of her, firing bursts of pulse-rifle fire down side corridors at indistinct shapes and shadows. The weapon is empty when she reaches the freight elevators. A mass of debris, falling down the shaft from a higher level, has demolished the life cage she descended in. She slams the control for the other cage and hears the sound of the LIFT MOTOR'S WHINE as it begins its slow descent from several levels up. AN ENRAGED SCREECH ECHOES in the corridor. Ripley sees a silhouette moving in the smoke...a glistening black shape which FILLS THE CORRIDOR TO THE CEILING...THE QUEEN. Her last cartridge is reading zeroes. The flamethrower sputters uselessly when she tries that.

The grenades are gone. Ripley drops the weapon and looks up the shaft to the descending lift...then at the approaching FIGURE. The elevator won't be in time. She runs to a ladder set in the wall as a horrendous screech beats in her ears. She scrambles up the rungs.

INT. SECOND LEVEL

180

Ripley struggles up through a narrow hatch, Newt clinging to her. She dives aside as a POWERFUL BLACK ARM shoots up through the opening, its razor claws slamming into the grille-floor inches from her. Looking down through the grille she sees the great horrifying jaws directly below her, wet and leering. She scrambles up, running, as the grille-floor lifts and buckles behind her with the titanic force of the creature below. It hurls itself with insane ferocity against the metal, pacing her from below as she runs.

INT. STAIRWELL

181

Ripley reaches an open-grid emergency stairwell and sprints upward. It rocks and shudders with the station's death throes.

VOICE

You now have two minutes to reach minimum safe distance.

INT. CORRIDOR - ELEVATORS

183

182-

The lift reaches bottom, the doors rolling open. The Queen turns and freezes, as if contemplating the open lift cage.

INT. STAIRWELL

184

Ripley stumbles, smashing her knees against the metals stairs. As she rises she hears the LIFT MOTORS start up. Looking down through the lattice work of the station she sees the life cage start ominously upward. She knows there is only one explanation for that. She runs on, the stairwell becoming a crazy whirl around her.

EXT. LANDING PLATFORM

185

Ripley, with Newt still clinging to her, slams through the door opening onto the platform.

Through wind-whipped streamers of smoke she sees...THE SHIP IS GONE.

RIPLEY
BISHOP!

Her shouts become inarticulate screams of hatred, outrage at the final betrayal. She scans the sky.
Nothing.

RIPLEY
(hysterical)
BISHOP!

Newt is sobbing.

The lift rises ponderously INTO VIEW. Ripley turns, backing away from the doors toward the railing. There is no place to run to on the platform. EXPLOSIONS detonate in the complex far below and huge fireballs swell upward through the machinery. The platform bucks wildly. Nearby a cooling tower collapses with a THUNDEROUS ROAR and the SHRIEK OF RENDING STEEL. More EXPLOSIONS, one after another, rocketing up from below.

Ripley stares transfixed as the lift stops. The safety cage parts.

RIPLEY
(to Newt; low)
Close your eyes, baby.

The lift doors begin to open. A glimpse of the apparition within.

ANGLE ON RIPLEY AND NEWT as the drop-ship RISES RIGHT BEHIND THEM, its hovering jets roaring.

VOICE
You now have thirty seconds to reach...

Ripley leaps for the loading boom projecting down from the cargo bay and it raises them into the ship. A TREMENDOUS EXPLOSION RIPS THROUGH THE COMPLEX nearby, slamming the ship sideways. Its extended landing legs foul in a tangle of conduit, grinding with a hideous squeal of metal on metal.

INT./EXT. DROP-SHIP - STATION

Ripley leaps into a seat with Newt, cradling her. Begins strapping in. Bishop wrestles with the controls. The landing legs retract, ripping free. Ripley slams her seat harness latches home.

RIPLEY
Punch it, Bishop!

The entire lower level of the station disappears in a fireball. The air vibrates with intense heat waves and concussion. The drop-ship engines fire. Ripley is slammed back in her seat. The ship vaults out and up, Bishop standing it on its tail, pouring on the gees. Ripley and Newt see everything shake into a blur.

EXT. STRATOSPHERE 188

The drop-ship lunges up and out of the cloud layer into the clear high night. Below, the clouds light up from beneath from horizon to horizon.

A SUN HOT DOME OF ENERGY bursts up through the cloud layer, WHITING OUT THE FRAME. The tiny ship is slammed by the shockwave, tossed forward...and climbs, scorched but functioning, toward the stars.

INT. DROP-SHIP 189

Ripley and Newt watch the blinding glare fade away and they sit, wide-eyed, trembling, realizing they are finally and truly safe. Newt starts to cry quietly, and Ripley strokes her hair.

RIPLEY
It's okay, baby. We made it. It's over.

INT. SULACO CARGO LOCK - IN ORBIT - LATER 190

The scorched and battered ship once again sits in its drop-bay, steam blasting from cooling vents beside the engine. Rotating clearance lights sweep the dark chamber hypnotically.

INT. DROP-SHIP 191

Bishop stands behind Ripley as she kneels beside a comatose Hicks.

BISHOP
I gave him a shot, for the pain.
We'll need to get a stretcher to cart him up to medical.

Ripley nods and, picking up Newt, precedes Bishop down the aisle to the loading ramp.

BISHOP
I'm sorry if I gave you a scare but that platform was just becoming too unstable...

INT. CARGO LOCK - DROP-SHIP

192

Bishop continues as they move down the ramp.

BISHOP
I had to circle and hope things didn't get too rough to take you off.

Ripley turns to him, stopping partway down the ramp.
She puts her hand on his shoulder.

RIPLEY
You did okay, Bishop.

BISHOP
Well, thanks, I --

He notices a tiny innocuous drop of liquid splash onto the ramp next to his shoe. SSSSSS. Acid. SOMETHING BURSTS FROM HIS CHEST, spraying Ripley with milklike android blood. It is the razor-sharp scorpion TAIL of the alien QUEEN. Driven right through him from behind. Bishop thrashes, seizing the protruding section of tail in his hands, as is slowly lifts him off the deck. Above them the Queen glowers from its place of concealment among the hydraulic mechanisms inside one landing-leg bay. It blends perfectly with the machinery until it begins to emerge. Seizing Bishop in two great hands it rips him apart and flings him aside, shredded, like a doll. It descends slowly to the deck, the rotating lights glistening across its shiny black limbs, dripping acid and rage. Still smoking where Ripley half-fried it. The Queen is huge, powerful...and very pissed off. It descends slowly, its six limbs unfolding in inhuman geometries.

Ripley moves with nightmarish slowness herself, staring hypnotized...terrified to break and run. She lowers Newt to the deck, never taking her eyes off the creature.

RIPLEY
(to Newt)
Go!

Newt runs for cover. The Alien drops to the deck, pivoting toward the motion. Ripley waves her arms, decoying.

RIPLEY
Here!

Without warning it moves like lightning, straight at her. Ripley spins, sprinting, as the creature leaps for her. Its feet slam, echoing, on the deck behind her. She clears a door. Hits the switch. It WHIRRS closed. BOOM. The Alien hits a moment later.

INT. DARK CHAMBER 193

Ripley moves ferret-quick among dark, unrecognizable machines.

VARIOUS ANGLES VERY TIGHT ON what she is doing...her feet going into stirruplike mechanisms. Velcro straps fastened over them. Fingers stabbing buttons in a sequence. Her hand closing on a complex grip-control. The HUM of powerful motors. The WHINE of hydraulics.

INT. CARGO
LOCK 194

The Queen turns its attention from the doors to Newt as the little girl crawls into a system of trenchlike service channels which cross the deck. The channels are covered by steel grillework and barely big enough for her to crawl through.

INT. CHANNEL 195

Newt scurries like a rabbit as the looming figure of the Alien appears above, seen through the bars. A section of grille is ripped away behind her. She scrambles desperately. Another section is ripped away right at her heels. Light pouring in. The next will be right above her.

INT. CARGO
LOCK 196

The Queen spins at the sound of door motors behind her. The parting doors REVEAL an inhuman silhouette standing there.

Ripley steps out, WEARING TWO TONS OF HARDENED STEEL. THE POWER LOADER. Like medieval armor with the power of a bulldozer. She takes a step...the massive foot CRASH-CLANGS to the deck. She takes another, advancing.

Ripley's expression is one you hope you'll never see... Hell hath no fury like that of a mother protecting her child and that primal, murderous rage surges through her now, banishing all fear.

RIPLEY
Get away from her, you bitch!

The Queen SCREECHES pure lethality and leaps.

WALLOP! A roundhouse from one great hydraulic arm catches it on its hideous skull and slams it into a wall. It rebounds into a massive backhand. CRASH! It goes backward into heavy loading equipment.

RIPLEY
(screaming)
Come on!

The Queen emerges as a blur of rage, lashing with unbelievable fury. The battle is joined.

Claws swipe, tail lashes. Ripley parries with radical swipes of the steel forks. They circle in a whirling blur, demolishing everything in their path. The cavernous chamber echoes with nightmarish sounds...WHINE, CRASH, CLANG, SCREECH.

They lock in a death embrace. Ripley closes the forks, crushing two of the creature's limbs. It lashes and writhes with incredible fury, coming within inches of her exposed body. She lifts it off the ground. The hind legs rip at her, slamming against the safety cage, denting it in. The striking teeth extend almost a meter from inside its fanged maw, shooting between the crash-bars. She ducks and the teeth slam into the seat cushion behind her dead in a spray of drool. Yellow acid foams down the hydraulic arms toward her. The creature rips at high-pressure hoses. Purple hydraulic fluid sprays...machine blood mixing with alien blood. They topple, off balance. The Queen pins her. Ripley hits a switch. The power loader's CUTTING TORCH flares on, directly in the thing's face. They roll together, over the lip of a RECTANGULAR PIT, A VERTICAL LOADING AIRLOCK.

INT. LOADING LOCK

197

They crash together four meters below, twisted in the loader's wreckage. The Alien shrieks, pinned.

Ripley pulls her arm out of the controls of the loader and claws toward a panel of airlock actuating buttons. She slaps the red "INNER DOOR OVERRIDE" and latches the "HOLD" locking-key down. A KLAXON begins to sound. She hits "OUTER DOOR OPEN" and there is a hurricane shriek of air as the doors on which they are lying separate, REVEALING the infinite pit of stars, below.

All this time the Alien has been lashing at her in a frenzy and she has been parrying desperately in the confined space. The airlock becomes a wind tunnel, blasting and buffetting her as she struggles to unstrap from the loader. The air of the vast ship howls past her into space as she claws her way up a service ladder.

INT. CARGO BAY

198

Newt screams as the hurricane airstream sucks her across the floor toward the airlock. Bishop, torn virtually in two, his pastalike internal organs whipped by the wind, grips a stanchion and reaches desperately for Newt as she slides past him. He catches her arm and hangs on as she dangles, doll-like, in the airblast.

INT. LOADING LOCK

199

The Alien seizes Ripley's ankle. She locks her arms around a ladder rung, feels them almost torn out of their shoulder sockets.

The door opens farther, all of space yawning below. The loader tumbles clear, falling away. It drags the Alien, still clutching one of Ripley's lucky hi-tops, into the depths of space. Its SHRIEK fades, it gone.

With all her strength Ripley fights the blasting air, crawling over the lip of the inner doorway. She releases the OVERRIDE from a second panel. The inner doors close. The turbulent air eddies and settles.

She lies on her back, drained of all strength. Gasping for breath. Weakly she turns her head, seeing Bishop still holding Newt by the arm. Encrusted with his own vanilla milkshake blood. Bishop gives her a small, grim smile.

BISHOP
Not bad for a human.

He winks.

Ripley crosses to Newt.

NEWT
(weakly)
Mommy...Mommy?

RIPLEY
Right here, baby. Right here.

Ripley hugs her desperately.

INT. CORRIDOR

200

Ripley limps along the corridor, carrying Newt on her hip.
The ship's systems hum comfortingly. Newt's head rests on her shoulder.

NEWT
Are we going to sleep now?

RIPLEY
That's right.

NEWT
Can we dream?

RIPLEY
Yes, honey. I think we both can.

HOLD ON THEM AS they recede down the long straight corridor.

FADE OUT
THE END

All movie scripts and screenplays on this site are intended for educational purposes only.

SECTION 8

"Pilot"

by

Zak Penn & Michael Karnow

FIRST DRAFT
March 1, 2008

©2008, ABC Studios. All rights reserved. This material is the exclusive property of ABC Studios and is intended solely for the use of its personnel. Distribution to unauthorized persons or reproduction, in whole or in part, without the written consent of ABC Studios is strictly prohibited.

ACT ONEFADE IN:

INT. HALLWAY - FEDERAL COURTHOUSE - DAY

A drab strip of corridor that connects an underground parking lot to the FEDERAL COURTHOUSE in Manhattan.

A man whom we will know as THE WITNESS - a Vietnamese man in an inexpensive suit and tie - is being led by his lawyer and two of NYPD's finest to a service elevator.

The Witness is sweating bullets, nervously glancing at every open door or passing sound. A loud CLANG makes him flinch.

It's just the service elevator, coming to a stop.

The COPS look at each other, roll their eyes. Talk about paranoid.

INT. COURTHOUSE - ELEVATOR BANK - MAIN LEVEL

Elevator doors slide open. The Witness and his escorts exit, walk past a glass divider and a bank of metal detectors manned by NYPD. Clearly a very secure area. As they exit the elevator, we hear pre-lapped dialogue, the mannered lingo of a depositional hearing --

PROSECUTOR (V.O.)

...in previous testimony you... excuse me... you told police investigators Frankel and Pierce that from March 2005 to...uh...

The Witness heads towards a set of double doors, warily eyeing his destination.

NOW WE REVEAL

A man in a suit, watching this procession with a keen eye. His name is MOREZ, and we will remember him because of his distinctive METAL BRIEFCASE, with an enigmatic symbol etched into its side.

Morez watches as the Witness disappears through the doors of the deposition room. He pulls out a cell phone and dials. We hear the phone connect, and Morez presses a button.

The sound we hear is muffled, through a phone speaker, but it is still instantly recognizable as one of those ubiquitous, annoying RINGTONES.

PROSECUTOR (V.O.)
... from March 05 to November 07, you received more than 12.5 tons of nearly pure-grade heroin from the defendant,
Juan Carlos Sanchez.

INT. DEPOSITION ROOM - DAY

A simple, box-like space, with a large conference table in the center, chairs all around. No windows, no contact with the outside world except a single, small vent in the wall blowing air back into the room. THIS ROOM IS SEALED TO THE OUTSIDE WORLD.

A sweaty PROSECUTOR looks up from his notes as another lawyer adjusts the DEPOSITION MICROPHONE, bolted into the table in front of the witness. The witness stares at the Prosecutor, terrified and mute.

PROSECUTOR (V.O.)
Will you please confirm that the testimony you gave these officers was both truthful and accurate?

The witness swallows hard, then whispers something to his LAWYER, seated next to him. They briefly confer.

The Prosecutor exchanges a look with his Assistant US Attorney. Is this guy gonna roll on them or not? The Assistant shrugs.

PROSECUTOR (CONT'D)
(forcefully)
Mr. Duong, your plea agreement with the prosecution is predicated on your testimony against Mr. Sanchez. Should you decline a response, there will be consequences and you will have to live with them.

The witness nods. He leans forward to speak, clearing his throat...

And at that moment, at the precise instant that he opens his mouth...

We HEAR SOMETHING.

Not loud, but distinctive and sharp, the "plock" of a pebble bouncing off your windshield when you're doing seventy on the highway.

The lawyers flinch, everyone looks around, trying to find the source...

Except the Witness.

He does nothing. His eyes go glassy, rolling back a bit. And then a trickle of blood snakes its way down from a dark, red spot, dead center between his eyes.

PROSECUTOR (CONT'D)

Mr. Duong?

The Witness falls forward, head thumping against the microphone. And that's it.

He's dead. The screen goes black. And over it, we hear a voice.

ROSEN (O.S.)

The most magnificent creation the universe has ever known is the human brain.

MONTAGE BEGINS

The line between what is possible and what is real will be razor thin on this show, as evidenced in the following montage. The images that come up are a combination of ACTUAL VIDEOS CULLED FROM YOUTUBE and stuff that we create to look like the same.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)

And yet, the brain remains a mystery to us. Most of us live our lives in ignorance of its potential.

- We see through the window of a 24 Hour gym in a strip mall, where people are marching like automatons on a row of stairmasters.

- We see face-masked workers on an assembly line repeating the same task over and over.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)

But not everyone. A few have dedicated themselves to exploring the outer limits of their most miraculous possession.

And now we see the real eye-grabbing stuff.

- A YOUNG BOY, age 7, plays Rachmaninoff to perfection.

- A YOGI, sitting in the lotus position, lowers his heart rate to thirty.
- KASPAROV defeats Deep Blue in a game of Chess.
- TIGER WOODS bounces a golf ball on his club in an amazing display of dexterity.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)
Musical skill, computation, heightened concentration, control of the autonomic nervous system, uncanny recall of vast information -- the potential of the human brain seems infinite.

- A man in his twenties named GARY BELL paints a perfect, photo-realistic portrait of Manhattan from memory.
- A HYPNOTIST gets a NEWLYWED COUPLE to act like chickens in front of a packed audience.
- MICHEL GONDRY solves a Rubik's cube with his feet in ten seconds.
- Some KID performs an amazing quarters shot, bouncing ten coins into ten separate cups with a single toss.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)
Such gifts come at a price, however. More often than not, these increased capabilities carry with them a crippling deficiency in other areas.

INT. SUBURBAN HOME - MORNING

On the face of it, there is nothing unusual about the BELL household. But as we follow SANDRA BELL (early fifties, single mom) carrying a load of laundry, we begin to notice something strange; THE NOISE.

Every electronic appliance in the house is on; the stereo, the TV, even a white noise machine in a hallway. In the center of this cacophony is the painter with the photographic memory, Sandra's only son, GARY, a 25-year-old, highly-functioning autistic.

ROSEN (V.O.)
...the ability to memorize and reproduce enormous amounts of information, flawlessly...

Gary sits in the living room, playing his PSP and watching the weather channel at the same time. The sound doesn't seem to faze him in the slightest. As Sandra gets him ready to go to work, we sense just how difficult it can be, caring for a grown man who is still in many ways a child.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)
...is coupled with a reduction in emotional understanding, a condition often described under the rubric of autism.

EXT. APARTMENT BUILDING - MORNING

BILL HARKEN, a cup of coffee in his hand, emerges from his apartment building on Third Avenue (one of those dorm-like hi-rises in the so-called "Jello Shot District.") He's a burly, imposing, former frat-boy with a temper that he struggles to control.

ROSEN (V.O.)
Others can tap into our brain's most ancient structures, drawing on primal instincts and responses, turning them on and off at will...

He arrives at his car, an American-made sedan, the kind a cop would drive. In a typical, New York City move, drivers in front and behind him have wedged him in, inches of clearance at each bumper. Harken grimaces.

ROSEN (V.O.)
... but this too comes at a price.
Some of our neural responses are out of our control for good reason.

Harken throws the car in reverse and mashes fenders with the guy behind him. He steams for a moment, curses. Then gets out of his sedan and marches over to the offending car and...

JAMS HIS THUMB INTO THE FRONT TIRE, AMAZINGLY PUNCTURING IT.

Air hisses out of the tire, leaving us to wonder where a man like Bill Harken might have developed the strength to do such a thing. He gets back in his car and drives away.

ROSEN (V.O.)
Still others have developed skills that give them control over the minds of others.

INT. NINA'S APARTMENT - MORNING

NINA THEROUX opens her eyes and rolls over in bed to discover her latest conquest is already up and getting dressed.

Nina's in her early thirties, sexy, and powerful in ways that most women can only imagine. She has a confidence that comes from getting exactly what she wants, all the time--

Like this guy. He's a decade younger with model good looks. He glances over at Nina who is naked beneath the sheets. He seems confused, almost like he doesn't remember how he got here. Before he can finish throwing on his outfit, a parking attendant uniform, Nina motions for him to come back to bed. He is hesitant.

ROSEN (V.O.)

Through processes we are only beginning to understand, they can affect the states of another's brain, forcing whatever response they desire.

Nina places her hand on his arm, says a few words. He leans in and kisses her, starts pulling off his clothes again.

ROSEN (V.O.)

These abilities are the most powerful, and accordingly the most frightening to contemplate.

EXT. OFFICE PARK - MORNING

An anonymous office complex in Rockland County, thirty miles north of New York City, on the Jersey side.

ROSEN (V.O.)

My name is Dr. Leigh Rosen, and it is my mandate to find these people, to help them and train them. We work for the United States Government, under the auspices of the National Security Agency. Our existence is classified... or should I say, was.

Across the street is a Starbucks, a Chinese Restaurant and a 24 Hour gym. Whatever visions you had of hi-tech headquarters or secret lairs beneath the subway system - forget it. Section 8 rents office space like the rest of America.

INT. ROSEN'S OFFICE - DAY

We find Rosen at his desk, typing the opening chapter of a book on an old Smith Corona daisy wheel, clearly an affectation given the fancy desktop sitting idle a few feet away.

ROSEN

(reading to himself)

For while this book is intended to be a work of science, recounting case studies and my conclusions, the secrets that will be revealed might change the very nature of what it means to be human.

(backing up, reading it again, making changes)

...inherently make it.. Change the very... change the fabric of...

He suddenly stops, yanks the piece of paper out of the typewriter.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Ugh. So maudlin, Leigh.

He crumples up that page and tosses it. He takes the rest of a stack he has written and straightens them into a neat pile, the top page marked "INTRODUCTION." He opens a locked drawer, then drops the new pages down on about seven hundred others he will never show anyone.

He locks the drawer, then picks up an unrelated FOLDER sitting on his desk. He gets up to leave, the file under his arm.

INT. SECTION 8 HALLWAY - MORNING

Rosen crosses through a mundane-looking office space -- grey carpeting, utilitarian furniture and a bank of fluorescents that flicker and buzz. The space could have been a dentist's office in a former life.

Along the way, he peeks his head into an open office.

Inside, NINA is taking off designer sunglasses and shaking out her hair as she faces another work week. Rosen holds up the folder.

ROSEN

Good morning. Conference room, ten minutes.

Nina grimaces, and Rosen continues to...

INT. SECTION 8 - BREAK ROOM - MORNING

Plastic table and chairs, candy and soda vending machines against one wall.

Gary Bell is putting his lunch in the refrigerator, clearly marked "Gary's Lunch Please DON'T TOUCH" in his Mom's handwriting.

Rosen puts a kettle on the range and grabs a mug and tea bag.

ROSEN

How was your weekend, Gary?

GARY

I have ascended to the rank of Master Sergeant by unlocking achievements on the arid sand dunes of Arochim.

ROSEN

Wonderful. Ten minutes, okay?

Gary nods and Rosen exits.

INT. SECTION 8 BULLPEN - MORNING

Harken enters, now on his second cup of coffee. As he hurries towards his desk, he almost collides with the one member of our team that we still haven't met--

RACHEL MYERS.

You can understand why someone might walk right into her. She's a classic wallflower, shy and quiet. She's in the purposefully modest dress and head scarf of a woman from an orthodox Jewish home.

HARKEN

Jesus. You scared the piss outta me.

Rachel steps out of his way, her eyes on the floor. She doesn't say a word. On her neck we notice a discrete ELECTRONIC DEVICE resting against her larynx.

It's a strange little bit of technology, more advanced looking than one might expect. This is something that will be commonplace in the world of Section 8.

HARKEN

You never showed up Saturday. We coulda used you.

Rachel still doesn't respond.

HARKEN

You got an explanation for that?

NINA (O.S.)

Sabbath.

Nina walks by. Harken looks at her, quizzically.

NINA

Saturday's the Sabbath, you idiot.
She can't work.

Rachel gives Harken a look, then scurries away to her office. Harken shakes his head.

HARKEN

Like I'm supposed to know that. Girl doesn't say a word.

INT. RACHEL'S OFFICE - DAY

Rachel sits in her office, marking up a copy of the New Delhi Post with a hi-liter. Her office is cluttered with computers, magazines, newspapers and non-fiction books. She spends her days looking for "chatter" that might signify alpha activity, a job she attacks with focused precision.

Rosen appears at the door and waves the folder.

ROSEN

Great find, my dear. Looks like we may have something.

Rachel allows herself a satisfied smile.

ROSEN (O.S.)

We have a witness, a small-time drug dealer turning state's evidence against an international ring of heroin smugglers...

INT. CONFERENCE ROOM - DAY -- LATER

Nina, Harken, Rachel and Gary sit around the conference table, Rosen paces, presenting the case Rachel found.

ROSEN

Murdered during a deposition, the cause of death a bullet to the brain.

The tone at this meeting is as informal as you can imagine. People talking over each other, getting up to get coffee and returning. They talk about the things that people who work together talk about; the parking, the kitchen and who does/doesn't clean it up, gossip.

Gary is particularly bad at waiting his turn, randomly interrupting to announce some pertinent piece of information, like, for example, that he detests any type of cheese that is white and that cat dander is corrosive to leather.

Nina reads a magazine while sipping from a glass of water fizzling with two alka-seltzer.

The world of the office should feel improvisational in tone, hyper-real, even mundane at points; a sharp contrast with some of the extraordinary things we will see.

ROSEN

No one in the room saw a shot fired.
Ballistics are inconclusive. A classic, locked-room mystery.

Harken notices Nina sipping her alka seltzer cocktail.

HARKEN

You're a little old to be out drinking like a sorority sister, dontcha think?

NINA

Bite me.

ROSEN

(nodding to Rachel)

The reportage in today's paper leaves key details out, but Rachel's source inside the DOJ confirm her suspicions.
She believes there is something here.
And so do I.

HARKEN

You sure this is an alpha, and not something else?

ROSEN

I'm sure of nothing in this green world, Bill, but we get nowhere without striving forward, am I right?
(beat)
You know the drill. Let's get to it people.

Nina yawns.

EXT. FEDERAL COURTHOUSE - DAY

Nina and Gary make for an unlikely pair as they arrive at the Federal Courthouse. Gary is taking note of everything around them, collating it all in that magnificent brain and spitting it back out. They talk over each other...

GARY

Less than thirty percent of the building still contains metal-sheath wiring. More than sixty eight percent contains mineral-insulated cable allowing the maximum current flow according to the electrical safety code...

NINA

Fascinating, Gary. I never knew that. Please don't stop.

They go inside the building.

INT. FEDERAL COURTHOUSE - DAY

The Courthouse is swarming with police officers, but many of them stop what they're doing to check Nina out. She knows how to work it, she likes the attention. She responds with a flirty smile, a wink to the cuter guys in their blues.

GARY

Construction on the Foley Square courthouse was completed April seventh, 1935 with additional renovations made in 1971 and 1993.

On Gary's IPHONE, his fingers flip through page after page of blueprints. He doesn't blink. He is literally memorizing the plans of the building as they walk.

NINA

That's even more interesting than the stuff about mineral insulated wiring. How about you tell me where the Deposition Room is?

Gary leads Nina to a door marked STAIRWELL at the back of the lobby. They slip through it.

INT. FBI FIELD OFFICE -- MANHATTAN BRANCH - DAY

At the FBI Building in Manhattan, we pan through the bustle of one of the nation's busiest field offices: phones ringing, people working, Agents heading in and out on important cases, TO FIND...

BILL HARKEN making his way through the rows of cubicles. He's uncomfortable, avoiding eye contact, particularly when he is recognized by a former coworker. He can feel the conspiratorial whispers behind his back. The occasional nod hello is always awkward.

Whatever made him leave, it's not something he's proud of.

QUINN (O.S.)

Nobody's asking who did this, we all know who did it.

INT. AGENT QUINN'S OFFICE - DAY

Harken sits behind the desk that bears the nameplate of AGENT GERALD QUINN, sifting through a box of files marked Sanchez. We hear Quinn's voice, although he is out of view.

QUINN (O.S.)

Sanchez is the biggest narcotics trafficker in the world, two of his top guys in South East Asia flipped, so he's taking em out before they testify.

Reveal Agent QUINN, a fit guy in his late fifties, rolling his back on one of those big red playground balls, trying to loosen up.

QUINN

Only question is who he paid to pull the guy's ticket.

HARKEN

How it got done is another question.

QUINN

Inside job. Someone in the room.

Harken, glancing the CSI report, seems skeptical.

HARKEN

Slug was from a thirty-aught-six. You telling me someone in the room had a rifle?

QUINN

I'm saying an inside job. Only thing that makes sense.

(switching subjects)

How's Nancy, by the way?

HARKEN

Dead to me.

QUINN

Nice, mother of your child. Very nice.

Quinn gets to his feet and continues his stretching, touching his toes, extending his arms above his head.

QUINN

She letting you see Anna?

HARKEN

She doesn't make it easy. Could you please stop with that?

Quinn has now moved onto legs, doing some pretty silly looking knee lifts.

QUINN

This is why I can sit in a chair all day. You'll see, when you get to be my age. You'll wish you did this.

HARKEN

(re: the files)

There's nothing in here. Not one lead. You guys punting this case?

QUINN

You kidding? DOJ's going nuts. The other witness, the dead guy's partner. A Mr. Non Duc Minh. They got him in protective custody, secret service, the works. Believe me, nobody's punting.

Harken packs up a few files. After a beat...

QUINN
What do you do, Bill?

HARKEN
Huh?

QUINN
I mean, seriously. One week you come in here, asking for a file on some 100 year old Soviet chess master, then its info on an enemy combatant at Guantanamo. Now this thing.

HARKEN
It's a job.

QUINN
You get booted from here, one step from ending up behind bars, and next thing you're working for the NSA? What exactly are you doing for these people, Bill?

Harken gives him a look. A look between two old friends that says "Don't ask." Quinn shrugs.

QUINN
Fine, I'm tired of grilling you. Get out of here.

HARKEN
Thanks for this, Gerry.
(holding up the CSI report)
I'm gonna take this with...

Quinn nods, watches as Harken goes. He's concerned.

INT. DEPOSITION ROOM - DAY

The same room we began our story in, preserved in a frozen state of chaos. Chairs overturned from the panic following the witness's death. The microphone has been unscrewed from the table. And a taped chalk outline where he slumped over.

NINA (O.S.)
I think I know which seat he was in.

Reveal Nina, in the middle of the room, poking around. Gary is just standing there, staring at the wall. Her gallows humor is lost on him.

NINA

You got something for me?

GARY

Yes. I'm thinking.

NINA

Cause I got no clue what you're looking at.

GARY

Be quiet, I'm thinking.

POLICE DETECTIVE (O.S.)

Hey!

They both turn to look, a young, handsome POLICE DETECTIVE pulls the tape aside and enters the room.

POLICE DETECTIVE

You can't be in here. This area's restricted.

NINA

It's not a problem.

The detective cuts her off. Repeats his question more emphatically.

POLICE DETECTIVE

Whattya mean not a problem? It's a big problem, who are you people?

When Gary answers, it's a stream of information delivered in the mechanical cadence of someone with no internal filter. It's both disconcerting and funny.

GARY

We are part of a secret organization, and we cant tell you about it. If you don't let us do stuff then we can't stop the bad guys and everybody will die, so stop bugging us.

NINA

(cutting Gary off)

Gary, that's enough.

(to the detective)

Detective, walk with me a second.

She puts a firm hand on his shoulder. But this isn't a friendly or suggestive move, it has a purpose.

CLOSE ON HER FINGERTIPS

As they press against the skin on his neck. Something is happening here. Nina is doing something to him.

NINA

Who WE are isn't important. You don't care who we are. What you wanna do is go downstairs and tell everyone to stay out of this room. Then you'll forget we ever spoke.

(beat)

Now, tell me what you're gonna do.

We notice, now, that the detective's pupils are dilated, his body relaxed, his whole demeanor having shifted from a moment before.

His response is strangely muted, almost like he's talking to himself.

POLICE DETECTIVE

I don't care who you are. I'm gonna tell everyone to stay out. Gonna forget we spoke.

NINA

Okay, go.

The detective heads for the door, but then...

NINA

Wait!

(he stops)

Are you single?

The detective holds up his hand, showing his wedding ring. He tries to talk again, the words barely coming, but Nina just cuts him off.

NINA

Never mind. Take off.

And the detective leaves, just like that. Nina shuts the door after him.

GARY

You did it to him?

(no answer from Nina)

(MORE)

GARY(cont'd)

Dr. Rosen says we're not supposed to use our skills unless it's an emergency.

NINA

You got ten minutes before that cop gets it together and comes back. So hurry up.

Gary resumes his silent vigil, and now we realize that he is staring at the VENT up near the ceiling. There's a small DENT in one of the louvers. He raises his hands in front of his face and begins gesticulating. It looks like the stereotyped behavior seen in many autistics...

NINA

What is it, Gary? What'cha got?

...but in Gary's case, it has a very specific purpose.

We SUDDENLY SHIFT INTO GARY'S POV --

Gary's view of the world is like a hyper-detailed, all knowing Google Maps with the 3D rendering software built in. He uses his hands to explore and manipulate the OVERLAID BLUEPRINT of the Courthouse, revealing that the VENT actually extends away from the room and all the way across the building.

BACK IN REALITY, something has clicked for Gary.

GARY

We need to go to the bank.

Off Nina's confused look...

EXT. MANHATTAN - DAY

An aerial shot closes in on the rooftop of a century-old Savings and Loan. A lone figure stands near the ledge. It's Rosen. He's gazing out across the city, mentally working through the details of some conundrum.

The door to a nearby stairwell opens. Nina and Gary walk out onto the roof, followed a moment later by Rachel and Harken.

HARKEN

We're meeting on top of buildings now?

NINA

Nice view.

HARKEN

Thirty dollars for parking. I'm in a red zone. I'm probably getting towed.

Rosen squints off into the hazy distance. Several blocks away is the Courthouse.

ROSEN

So he would have been standing right about here. Is that right, Gary?

Gary moves next to Rosen, then points to a spot several feet to the left.

GARY

No, here.

ROSEN

Very well, the shooter was standing here when he took the shot.

HARKEN

That killed the witness in the Sanchez case? He would have to put that slug through three feet of masonry and five interior walls.

ROSEN

Not if the bullet entered the courthouse through an air vent as Gary has suggested.

Rosen nods to Gary.

GARY

I saw an abrasion. In the air vent
And I followed it.

The rest of the team is confused.

And now we go into-- A VISUAL RECREATION OF THE SHOT.

THE CAMERA FLIES off the building following the trajectory of the imaginary bullet as it hurtles towards a vent in the side of the courthouse...

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)

The shooter fired a single round which travelled in through an exterior manifold.

The bullet POV enters the intake housing where it makes its way through the ventilation system.

ROSEN

...along the ventilation shaft, and into the deposition room, where it caromed off the baffle of the vent, striking the victim in the head.

It hits the vent, scraping it, then caroms off and...

PLOCK! Hits the Witness' right between the eyes.

BACK ON SCENE

Gary is seeing the whole thing in his mind's eye.

GARY

The shot is possible with a margin of error less than .0007797 millimeters.

HARKEN

And he factors in a bird farting a mile away. It's crazy.

Rachel has been studying the ground near where they are standing. Wearing surgical gloves, she searches through the gravel until she finds something...

RACHEL

(whispering)

Maybe not so crazy.

She holds up her discovery a dented brass object about two inches long. It's THE CASING.

From a SNIPER BULLET.

FADE TO BLACK:

END OF ACT ONE

ACT TWOFADE IN:

INT. SECTION 8 OFFICE - DAY

Rosen and Harken are walking through the office. Harken is examining a photo taken from a military ID card. It shows a guy in his late twenties, handsome, enigmatic, if not a little troubled. His name appears in bold letters...

HARKEN

Christian Hicks. This is him?

ROSEN

It was his fingerprint.

(to himself)

Where did I leave them?

HARKEN

You sure you want to go after this guy?

ROSEN

Very much so. If I can ever find the keys to the truck.

Rosen glances around the room, then it hits him.

ROSEN

Who drove it last?

INT. SECTION 8 OFFICES - HALLWAY - DAY

Harken leafs through the file on Hicks as he follows Rosen down the hall.

HARKEN

Have you read the jacket? I mean we're not just dealing with some kid who can bend spoons or add a bunch of numbers in his head. The guy was a sniper in the Marine Corps.... before he went AWOL.

As they pass the conference room, Rosen pokes his head in.

INT. CONFERENCE ROOM - CONTINUOUS

On the conference table are a number of high-tech surveillance cameras and microphones. Rachel is packing them carefully into a case.

ROSEN

Rachel dear, you wouldn't have happened to see the keys to the truck?

Rachel shakes her head. Mimics Gary's gesticulations.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Of course.

INT. SECTION 8 OFFICES - HALLWAY - DAY

Rosen and Harken head for the break room.

HARKEN

The guy is dangerous, Doc. More than these people can handle.

ROSEN

It's our job, Bill. Identification and analysis of Alphas. Like everyone else, we have to sing for our supper.

HARKEN

Well, can I talk to those people? I'd like to know who I'm singing for.

Rosen stiffens a bit, this is something he doesn't want to talk about.

ROSEN

We should talk about why you feel the need to ask me that when you know I can't answer, Bill. It's important for you to come to grips with your anxieties.

And Rosen walks away, the discussion over.

INT. BREAK ROOM - DAY

Gary pumps some change into a vending machine with a MASSIVE DENT in the side (someday we'll hear why Harken did it.)
Rosen enters.

ROSEN
(firmly) Keys, Gary.

Gary pulls a candy bar from the machine.

GARY
I got a Kit Kat.

ROSEN
Now...

Rosen holds out his hand.

GARY
I wanna drive.

ROSEN
I know you do. And I know you you've committed to memory every last street in Manhattan and the outer boroughs.
It's a terrific asset. But you are absolutely not driving.

GARY
My Mom said I could.

ROSEN
She most assuredly did not. But I will call her and see if you can come along.

Gary reluctantly pulls out the keys. Rosen takes them.

INT. NINA'S OFFICE - DAY

Nina is behind her desk, her hands engaged in some busywork we can't see. Harken enters, steaming.

HARKEN
I hate it when he pulls that.

NINA
Hate who what?

HARKEN
Rosen? The turning your question back on you thing?

NINA
Ah yes. Your question becomes THE question.
(MORE)

NINA(cont'd)

(mimicking Rosen)

"Why would you ask me that, Nina? Did Daddy spank you when you were bad?"

Nina lifts her hands up and aims the semi-automatic pistol she has been loading. Harken is startled.

HARKEN

Jesus!

NINA

Chill out, Grandma. I passed my level threes. I'm ready.

Nina pushes past him, leaving Harken angry and frustrated.
He balls a fist to punch the wall...

Then pulls out his pill case and pops three yellows instead.

CUT TO:

INT. SUPERMARKET - DAY

A STOCKBOY, wearing an apron, carefully stacks a new shipment of oranges. He places each of them just so, forming a perfect, symmetrical pyramid.

The stockboy is the man we saw in the military ID, CHRISTIAN HICKS, and he couldn't look more harmless. He's clean cut and handsome, relatively stable looking, and seems content with the work-a-day banality of his job. Still, it is instantly clear that he does not belong here, he was meant for more than this.

A MOTHER with three rambunctious kids approaches with her grocery cart and accidentally bumps Hicks' perfect pyramid of oranges.

One of the oranges rolls off of the top. Before it hits the floor...

Hicks backhands it.

With a flick of his wrist, he tosses the orange back on the pile. He puts so much "English" on it that it spins back up to the top of the pyramid, where it rotates for a moment then comes to a gentle stop.

One of the children -- a wide-eyed five-year-old GIRL, looks up at Hicks in amazement.

GIRL

Pull the trigger.

Hicks stares back at her... what?

GIRL

Do it again.

Hicks is confused. Did he mishear her the first time?

Before he can ask her, the girl's mother pulls her away.

A little shaken, Hicks turns back to his produce section, only now the sign that should read "Oranges .99 lb." reads "Pull the trigger." Hicks double takes...

Something is not right here...

MR. MARTINEZ (O.S.)

Hicks....

Hicks looks up. His manager, MR. MARTINEZ approaches. He's mid-fifties, friendly.

Hicks glances back at the sign. It's back to normal: "Oranges .99 lb."

MARTINEZ

What are you doing here?

HICKS

Just the... fruits and vegetables.

MARTINEZ

You had a shift yesterday.

HICKS

Yeah. So?

MARTINEZ

You missed it, Chris. You never showed up.

HICKS

What are you talking about?

Martinez shakes his head, feels bad for the guy.

MARTINEZ

I don't know what's going on with you buddy, but we talked about this. It's the third time. I told you if it happened again, that's it.

Hicks is baffled.

HICKS

I was here. I know I was.

He just stands there, racking his brain to remember, WHERE WAS I? But the memories clearly aren't there.

HARKEN (O.S.)

This can't be right.

EXT. SUPERMARKET PARKING LOT - DAY

Reveal Nina and Harken sitting in the SUV. They watch Hicks and the Manager talking through the storefront window. Sitting behind them in the back seat is Gary. He's scrolling through the map application on his iPhone, studying the surrounding streets in detail.

HARKEN

What kind of deadly assassin works in a grocery store? And why would he leave a bullet casing with his fingerprints at the scene of the crime?

NINA (CONT'D)

(referring to Hicks)

He's kinda hot.

HARKEN

Wow, no shame at all, huh?

NINA

I like the blue collar thing. It works for me.

HARKEN

I'm sure it does.

GARY

Here he comes.

Nina and Harken suddenly glance towards the supermarket and see that Hicks is coming towards them, head down, hands in pockets -- a portrait of defeat.

There's a moment of tension as he walks right past them.

GARY

He's walking south.

HARKEN

Great, thanks.

GARY

His apartment is eight blocks South.
He will be there in fourteen minutes
if that's where he's going.

Harken suddenly realizes...

HARKEN

His apartment. Rachel...

Nina suddenly catches on too. She whips out her phone as Harken starts the SUV.

INT. LIVING ROOM - HICKS APARTMENT - DAY

It's a one-bedroom, sparsely furnished, not very cheerful.
If Hicks has a past, he clearly running away from it -- no photos of family, friends or sweetheart. No souvenirs. Just a threadbare sofa from the Salvation Army, a crappy TV, and a bookshelf with a few self-help paperbacks with titles involving "recovery."

Rachel is standing on a chair in the center of the room, having trouble reaching a light fixture. She's trying to plant a surveillance camera with a wireless transmitter, but she's too short to reach.

The CELL PHONE in her pocket starts VIBRATING. She reaches for it, fumbles and drops it. Standing with the fixture in her hand, she ignores the phone and hurries to finish what she's doing.

INT. SUV (MOVING) - DAY

Nina, frustrated, leaves Rachel a message.

NINA

(into phone)

Rachel, it's Nina. He's coming. Get out NOW.

She flips the phone closed.

HARKEN

We're gonna have to take him down.

GARY

Dr. Rosen said 'observe, not engage.'

NINA

Those were the orders...

HARKEN

She's gonna get caught in there.

NINA

We should call Rosen.

INT. HICKS' APARTMENT - DAY

Rachel has the cell phone to her ear. She blanches as Nina's frantic message plays.

EXT. HICKS' BUILDING - DAY

A row of run-down brownstones line the street, their brick faces dotted with competing graffiti markings. Hicks heads up the stoop to his building's front door, just as Harken, Nina and Gary pull up in the SUV.

HARKEN

She's not trained for this.

NINA

She can take care of herself if she needs to. You've seen what she can do.

HARKEN

That's not the same as this. We gotta get her out.

Harken bolts from the automobile just as Hicks goes inside.

NINA

STOP!

Harken ignores her and charges towards the front door.

NINA

(to Gary)

Call Rosen!

She jumps out of the car and runs after Harken.

HOLD ON GARY --

Alone in the car. He looks around, not used to being unsupervised. He climbs in the front seat and starts playing with the steering wheel, pretending to drive.

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

Hicks walks up to his apartment door. He's about to put the key in the lock, when... He hears something. Heavy footsteps. Not coming from inside the apartment, but from the stairwell.

Hicks listens for a moment, then shrugs it off and puts his key in the door.

INT. HICKS APARTMENT - DAY

Rachel restores the light fixture to its proper position, then heads for the front door. She's about to reach for it when...

The front door begins to open. Rachel quietly backs up, then turns and bolts for the BACK DOOR.

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

Hicks is about to enter his apartment when...

BOOM!

The staircase door slams open and BILL HARKEN stumbles out into the hall. But he looks different. His pupils are dilated, the veins on his neck strain against his skin, his face reddens as a flood of adrenaline courses through his body. These are the actual physiological manifestations of the "fight or flight" instinct.

He sees Hicks at the door to his apartment.

HARKEN

Hey!

Hicks, turns, shocked to see this crazed man rushing towards him, pointing at him and yelling.

HARKEN

DOWN ON THE GROUND NOW!

BY THE STAIRS, Nina arrives to see Harken about to tackle Hicks.

NINA

Bill!

Harken ignores her, lunges at Hicks.

And, in the face of attack, another side of Hicks suddenly emerges. The wounded look and the world weary slouch vanish, his heightened agility kicks in.

As Harken reaches for him...

Hicks counters with a jackrabbit-fast evasive maneuver. Then a sweep kick that knocks Harken off his feet.

Even more enraged, Harken scrambles back to his feet and swings a fist at Hicks.

Hicks dodges it --

And Harken's hand smashes RIGHT THROUGH THE WALL!

Hicks is momentarily stunned at the strength of Harken's blow.

Nina reaches for Hicks but he nimbly evades her and goes out through an open window.

The chase is on.

FADE TO BLACK.

END OF ACT TWO

ACT THREEFADE IN:

EXT. NEW YORK STREET - DAY

It's a quiet narrow street lined with shops. Hicks suddenly comes barreling around the corner, running for his life.

He runs down a block when, suddenly...

The SUV cuts in front of him and Harken springs out from the driver's seat to block his path.

Hicks doesn't break stride, just keeps running right at the bigger man, then snatches up an empty beer bottle from the gutter and throws it at Harken, but ten feet over his head.

The bottle hits the release on a fire escape ladder and just as the two men are about to collide Hicks LEAPS up and

CLANG!

The ladder slides down.

Hicks grabbing the bottom rung with perfect timing and pulling himself UP AND OVER Harken, who flails beneath him.

He pushes off the top of Harken's head with one foot, then swings up onto a narrow ledge, so thin that most would have trouble standing. He runs across it and around the corner of the building, leaving a frustrated Harken in his dust.

NINA emerges from the opposite side of the SUV and picks up the chase.

She realizes she's no match for Hicks in a footrace and tries something else. She grabs a jogger by his wrist...

JOGGER

Hey!

NINA

Follow me!

And he does. She continues down the street, tapping people as she passes them. She grabs onto the sleeve of a repairman in a jumpsuit.

NINA

This way!

He yanks his arm away.

REPAIRMAN

Get offa me!

Nina grabs his hand and repeats her command. This time he does as he's told -- Nina's ability only works skin on skin.

NINA (CONT'D)

Let's go, follow me!

Soon, she has a a motley assortment of businessmen, joggers, and hot-dog vendors trailing behind, her own private team.

Nina speaks into a blue-tooth earpiece.

NINA (CONT'D)

Help me out, Gary. He went down an alley on 15th.

INT. SUV - DAY

Gary is back in the driver's seat, his hands dancing in the air.

WE GO BACK INTO GARY VISION --

Gary uses his hands to manipulate the map of the neighborhood floating in front of him. He zooms in on a section, then, with a flick of his wrist, spins the 3D image, revealing the alley Hicks has chosen to run down.

BACK TO SCENE, Gary talks into his cell on speakerphone.

GARY

There's only two ways out of there.
One's blocked by a fence.

EXT. NEW YORK STREETS - CONTINUOUS

Nina stops at the entrance to the alley, she turns to her followers, barks out orders.

NINA

You three, block this entrance. Don't let anyone pass. You, jogger guy, circle the block. If you see someone running, you tackle them.

Everybody takes off, except for the jogger, the first guy Nina touched.

He stumbles about in a daze, not sure where he is. Nina's alpha skill has severe limits, it wears off in minutes.

NINA (CONT'D)
(to first guy)
Hey you.

She grabs him, firmly. Puts a hand on his chin to pull his face closer.

NINA (CONT'D)
Pay attention. Circle the block.
Tackle anyone running.

Reprogrammed, he snaps back to attention and follows her command.

INT. ALLEY - DAY

Spoiled heaps of trash litter the pavement. The shadows of the tall buildings framing the alley cover it in darkness.

HICKS drops down from a ledge above. He heads out towards the street but then sees the JOGGER moving into position at the end of the alley.

So he heads off in the opposite direction.

He comes to a stop when he reaches a chain-link fence that blocks the alleyway. But it's not the fence that stops him.

It's Nina.

She's on the other side, her gun trained on him.

NINA
Don't move!

HICKS
Why are you chasing me?

NINA
Gee, why do you think?

HICKS
I didn't do anything!

NINA
Then why are you running?

Hicks doesn't have a good answer for her. She takes a step closer, and now notices something.

It's the look in his eye; kind of glassy, confused. It's a look she's familiar with.

Nina aims her gun, drawing a bead on him.

NINA
I'll shoot you.

HICKS
You'll miss. It's a harder shot than you think.
(beat)
And you won't shoot me anyway.

Hicks suddenly takes off.

ON NINA -- finger on the trigger, but, damnit, he's right.

Hicks runs back out the way he came, then turns to give her one last look when--

BAM!

Harken decks him with a cross-check that cracks a rib, rattles his teeth and leaves him sucking air.

Hicks tries to get up and Harken grabs him with one hand and tosses him like a rag doll. He smashes into a dumpster, tipping it and spilling garbage all over the street.

Hicks looks up, blood dripping from a gash on his head, to see Harken lumbering towards him, hyperventilating, his face beet-red, sweat pouring off his forehead.

Hicks grabs some debris off the ground... some peach pits, a can of soda, anything he can get his hands on.

He scrambles to his feet and starts winging them at Harken as he races for the mouth of the alley.

Harken dodges most of the missiles, but one of the pits catches him right in the throat. A ROTTEN APPLE sails past Harken, but then ricochets off the alley wall and hits Harken in the back of his heel, kicking his foot up, pitching him forward onto his face. It's an amazing, precise, billiards shot of a throw -- Minnesota Fats would be proud.

EXT. ALLEY MOUTH - DAY

Hicks bursts out into the street, Harken stumbling behind him. Cars block Hicks' path for a moment, giving Harken the chance to catch up, but then...

THE JOGGER runs right at Harken and TACKLES HIM.

Well, it's not much of a tackle. He really bounces off Harken's massive frame. But it's enough of a distraction. Hicks makes it through traffic.

In moments, he's gone. Harken curses into his cell-phone.

HARKEN

He got away.

EXT. DESERTED SIDE STREET - DAY

It seems like Hicks has lost his pursuers. He slows to a quick walk, trying not to draw attention. But as he heads towards the next intersection, he hears...

A STRANGE LOW-PITCHED SOUND

Almost imperceptible at first, it grows in strength. Hicks stumbles, his nervous system no longer obeying the signals from his brain.

He collapses to his knees, shaking like an epileptic.

Reveal RACHEL at the end of the block. Her mouth is barely open, but her throat is vibrating, super low frequency waves emanating out from her body.

As she gets closer to Hicks the sound increases in intensity until he is literally paralyzed on the ground. Rachel wills the sound to stop, then leans over and whispers...

RACHEL

I'm sorry.

Hicks is unconscious. The chase is over.

FADE TO:

A SERIES OF YOU TUBE CLIPS

These are home made clips of people performing feats of agility, balance and aim. A kid bounces a ping pong ball off five surfaces and into a beer cup. A girl stacks fifty cups in three seconds. A guy tries to do a triple flip on his motocross bike...

ROSEN (V.O.)

For most of us, there is a gap between what we imagine ourselves doing in our mind's eye, and what our bodies can actually accomplish.

...and wipes out. Badly. We see a few more examples. Michael Jordan showing incredible body control as he switches hands midair and hits a reverse lay-up. A group of kids playing "parkour soccer" fire passes back and forth across the rooftops of Mexico City.

ROSEN (O.S.)

But for the lucky few, the opposite is the case. Any physical feat their mind can imagine, their body can achieve. The phenomenon is known as "hyper-kinesis."

And finally, some footage that looks like something torn from a soldier's web-blog, a bit of home video of a SNIPER UNIT stationed in the foothills around Kabul. A SNIPER lines up a shot on a truck full of insurgents so far away you can barely see it.

ROSEN (V.O.)

They have perfect balance...perfect aim. Perfect synchrony between thought and action.

He squeezes off the shot and there is a sharp clang in the distance as the bullet smacks off a highway sign and ricochets into the truck. A moment later the truck SWERVES VIOLENTLY off the road, its driver now dead. The sniper turns to face us, smiling, his buddies patting him on the back... We freeze frame on ...a younger CHRISTIAN HICKS.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)

Christian Hicks was born with it.

EXT. HIGH SCHOOL BASEBALL FIELD - DAY

A typical, gung-ho, high school baseball game, but with the razor sharp tension of a perfect game on the line. Everything is shot handheld, the POV of a proud parent with a handycam, filming from the stands.

One out in the ninth, and on the mound, an even younger Christian Hicks throws yet another laser-guided pitch for a strike. The crowd goes wild, the magical feat just two pitches away.

ROSEN (V.O.)
Hyperkinesis, like all alpha grade skills, confers extraordinary advantages...

Hicks winds up again and throws another fastball on the outside corner, but this time the batter almost accidentally gets wood on the ball, sending a slow dribbler down the first base line.

Hicks springs off the mound and gathers the ball, but doesn't have a clean throw to first base.

Instead, he laces the ball through the striding legs of the runner and hits the corner of the base.

Miraculously, the ball bounces STRAIGHT UP and into the mitt of the first baseman. The crowd explodes.

ROSEN (V.O.) (CONT'D)
...coupled with profound drawbacks.

INT. SECTION 8 OFFICES - EXAMINATION ROOM - NIGHT

Hicks is lying in a make-shift "hospital bed". He's unconscious, heavily sedated. His wrists are restrained by heavy, leather bands, as are his ankles.

ROSEN (V.O.)
There is an extreme sensitivity to stimuli. Emotional issues become magnified, self medicating ensues to dull the exquisitely tuned senses, and what was once perfection.....

Rosen stands in front of a monitor, displaying the image of Hicks, restrained in bed. The rest of the team looks on.

ROSEN
... turns into disaster. Which is how a boy with so much promise ends up like this.

HARKEN
A perfect game, huh?

ROSEN

And in his one week in the majors he walked fifteen straight batters. It's a pattern he would repeat, accelerating through the ranks in the Army Rangers. And then, suddenly, going AWOL. His own worst enemy.

RACHEL

(whispering)

Like the rest of us.

HARKEN

You don't see me killing people for money, sister.

NINA

I'm not sure he did, either.

HARKEN

Really? Cause I am sure. His prints are on the shell casing. He DID it.

NINA

That's not what I meant. When I spoke to him, in the street, he had this look in his eyes. I know that look. I've seen it before, when I push someone.

Rosen is interested by this, he suddenly perks up.

ROSEN

Really? Can you elaborate?

HARKEN

Wait a second, don't tell me you're falling for this...

ROSEN

I wondered why someone with his training would leave behind a fingerprint...

HARKEN

Oh please, she's creaming her jeans for the guy!

ROSEN

Bill, that's completely inappropriate.

HARKEN

Y'know what's inappropriate, is we got a guy who killed someone sitting here, instead of in jail. Just cause she...

Harken suddenly realizes: Nina's not in the room with them anymore.

HARKEN (CONT'D)

Hey. Where is she?

Rosen and Harken look up. Rachel points to the monitor. Both men are surprised by what they see...

NINA IS ENTERING THE ROOM WITH HICKS.

INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - NIGHT

Hicks, awake now, struggles to pull himself to a sitting position. He winces at his pounding headache -- a by-product of Rachel Meyer's unusual gift.

NINA

Like the worst hangover you ever had, right? Rachel's done it to me a couple times, by accident. I think.
Here, take these...

He looks up to see Nina, holding out some pills. With his wrists restrained, he can't do much.

NINA

Open wide.

She sits on the bed, next to him, then puts the pills in his mouth. She puts a glass of water to his lips and he chugs it down as fast as she can pour, his throat parched.

HICKS

Where am I?

NINA

We'll get to that. First, I have some questions.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - NIGHT

Everyone is watching the scene tensely through the monitor.
Harken looks like he's ready to bust into the next room.

ON THE MONITORS--

Nina sits very close to Hicks now. She lifts her hands up towards his face. He flinches, pulls back instinctively. We see their lips move but can't hear what they are saying.

Very gently, she places her hands on the base of his neck. For a moment, it almost seems like she might pull him forward to kiss him.

But she doesn't. She whispers something in his ear, and Hicks eyes go glassy...

INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - NIGHT

The line between professional and personal interest is blurry for Nina, so it's hard to tell if she actually feels something for the guy, or if it's all just a technique.

NINA

Where were you at 9:30 on Monday morning?

HICKS

I don't... know. I don't remember.

NINA

Why don't you remember?

HICKS

I... have black outs. I can't... I don't remember what happens.

NINA

Dig deeper, Christian, into your unconscious. Why do you have blackouts? When did they start?

Memories are flooding into his brain now, REPRESSED MEMORIES.

HICKS

Someone... did this to me.

Even Hicks seems to be surprised by this revelation. Nina glances towards the one-way mirror with an "I told you so look."

HARKEN (O.S.)

It doesn't prove anything.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - LATER

The team is discussing their options now. Everyone in the room looks at Rosen, who is busy with his monitors.

HARKEN

This is a mistake, Rosen. We gotta turn this guy in.

NINA

Give it a rest Bill.

HARKEN

You got the hots for the guy, so...

ROSEN

GO HOME.

NINA

You're the one whose judgement lives in his pants. That's why...

HARKEN

At least I know what...

ROSEN

STOP IT! Both of you!

They are shocked by this sudden outburst.

ROSEN

The phrase "get a room" comes to mind.
Now GO HOME. Everyone.

Sheepishly, they turn and walk out of the room. Rosen taps Rachel's arm.

ROSEN

Not you Rachel. You stay.

Rosen turns back to the image of Hicks on the monitor.

ROSEN

We have work to do.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - NIGHT

Rachel pulls a cart of electronics across the room, plugs it in. As it lights up...

ROSEN (O.S.)
Take a look at this...

Rachel joins Rosen by a monitor.

ROSEN
This is the beta wave of a normal subject.

Rosen gestures towards a series of measurements, marked Beta.

ROSEN
Now a subject influenced by Nina's
"pushing."

Rosen quickly calls up another screen. The inconsistent wave has been smoothed out a bit.

ROSEN
Now Mr. Hicks...

He hits a few buttons, nothing happens. He reaches down, plugs in some wires that head into the next room, makes sure they're secure and POP, another reading comes up...

ROSEN
The beta wave is almost completely suppressed.

The brain wave is a flat line. Rachel reacts.

RACHEL
Have you ever seen this before?

ROSEN
Not to this extent. It's similar to Nina, but much more powerful. Hmm, we'll need to up the dose...

He drums his fingers, counting, a nervous habit.

RACHEL
Don't we wait for the MRI results?

ROSEN
No, we just need to compensate for the strength of the suppression.
(beat) Prepare a dose of Topiramate for our guest. We should have him straightened out in short order.

As Rachel moves towards the medicine cabinet...

CUT TO:

INT. BAR - NIGHT

It's a working class joint -- Billy Joel on the jukebox, off-duty cops and Feds knocking back tall ones and shooting pool. Quinn is at the bar, blowing off steam with some of the guys from work.

HARKEN (O.S.)
Knew I'd find you here.

Quinn spins to see Harken.

QUINN
(a little shitfaced)
Hey, Billy. You almost missed me, bro. I was just leaving.

Harken sidles up to the bar, the TWO AGENTS next to Quinn are giving him the stink eye. Harken nods a greeting, and the drunker of the two, a red faced sparkplug name WHELAN grits his teeth.

WHELAN
You got no right bein' here, you piece a trash.

QUINN
Hey, come on now, boys. Ancient history.

Whelan glances at Quinn, defers to his superior, though not happy about it. He picks up his drink and moves, followed by the other agent. Quinn looks over at Harken...

QUINN (CONT'D)
Jeez, Bill, sorry bout that...

HARKEN
Forget it. You get my message?

Quinn shakes his head, then points to his watch.

QUINN
Gotta catch the PATH. Wasn't checking.

HARKEN

If I had a lead on that Sanchez witness case, you think you could track something down?

QUINN

The Sanchez...? Billy, we got that one in the bag already. No worries there.

Harken is surprised to hear this.

QUINN (CONT'D)

Ernesto Morez. Wasn't that much of a stretch. He's the go-to guy for the cartels. One of our informants confirmed he got the contract on both witnesses.

Quinn clumsily scrolls through his Blackberry, then holds it up. On screen, a grainy photo shows a man standing in a doorway. In his hand -- the conspicuous metal briefcase.

QUINN (CONT'D)

Slippery bastard, Everything's circumstantial on this guy. Never leaves anything, no evidence. That's his MO. Nothing but a corpse.

Harken is startled, and a bit alarmed, by this news. He doesn't quite see how the pieces fit.

QUINN (CONT'D)

Second witness comes in tomorrow. They're... you know these guys, they're puttin' out fake schedules, using body doubles. Hopin' ta flush this scumbag out.

Quinn pulls on his beer, wipes his mouth. Three sheets to the wind.

QUINN (CONT'D)

I gotta make the train, Billy. Can you grab this one for me?

Before Harken can answer, Quinn is pushing through the crowd. Harken watches him go.

HARKEN

(under his breath)
Ancient history, right.

Harken motions for the check. The bartender starts counting empties. Harken frowns, stuck by that cheapskate again.

EXT. BAR - NIGHT

Quinn heads for the subway, squinting through beer goggles to make out the sign for the PATH train at the Columbus Circle station, when suddenly...

Someone grabs him. And shoves him, right into the wall. And puts something up to his mouth, a plastic breathing mask. Snaps the band around his head. The fight drains out of Quinn like air from a balloon, he just deflates, and now he's being dragged away. The whole confrontation has taken seconds, and he's just gone, like he was never there.

INT. VAN - NIGHT

A groggy Quinn comes to in the back of a van, even more confused by the alcohol and the chemical solvent mickey he just got slipped. He looks up to see...

ERNESTO MOREZ, the man himself. Next to him, that briefcase is snapped open, and he is holding a long, thin, razor-sharp needle that is attached by a tube to an apparatus in the briefcase. The whole setup looks like something from a Cronenberg movie, it's just creepy as shit.

Quinn tries to mumble something, but finds he can barely move. He watches in mute, paralyzed horror as Morez bends his head forward and SLIDES THE NEEDLE RIGHT INTO HIS BRAIN STEM. As he meets resistance, Morez presses harder. This isn't a smooth process. It's messy and difficult, and probably too intense for younger viewers.

Quinn is in a daze, his eyes fluttering.

With the needle inserted, Morez reaches into Quinn's jacket and finds his Blackberry. His fingers fly across it as he reprograms the settings, and then...

That annoying RING-TONE plays, the same one we heard at the courthouse. Morez puts it up to Quinn's ear. He speaks quickly and clearly, not wasting a moment.

MOREZ

When you hear this tone, you wait for instructions. You WAIT until I tell you. You follow every word I say...

(beat)

(MORE)

MOREZ(cont'd)

I want to know when Duc Minh is transferred to the courthouse. Itinerary, travel route, security detail. If it changes, you call me.

Morez makes some adjustments on the equipment in his case. He grabs Quinn's slumping face and focuses it.

MOREZ

LISTEN TO ME! Anything that comes in about me, Morez, Ernesto Morez, you update me. You call the number. You will notify me every time my name comes up. You will not let them catch me.

Morez checks Quinn's pulse, then his pupils with a penlight. Satisfied, he yanks the needle out of his neck, wipes the blood with a rag and puts it back in the suitcase.

MOREZ

You hear the ringtone, you forget everything. In 5 minutes, you wake up.

Morez hits the ringtone again and now we JUMP CUT TO:

EXT. THE STREET -- NIGHT

Quinn suddenly comes to, slumped down on the sidewalk next to the subway sign. The same place he disappeared from. It takes his brain a moment to reboot, then he gets to his feet.. He checks his watch.

QUINN

Damn it, missed the goddamn train.

It's like the whole attack never happened.

CUT TO:

END OF ACT THREE

ACT FOURFADE IN:

INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - NIGHT

Back in the offices of Section 8, all is quiet. It's late at night. Hicks wakes up, slowly. He is surprised to see the straps removed from his arms and legs. His head feels clear.

ROSEN (O.S.)
Feeling better?

He looks up to see Dr. Rosen, standing there.

ROSEN
We have a lot to talk about, Mr.
Hicks.

INT. HALLWAY AT SECTION 8

Rosen hands Hicks his belongings, phone, wallet, keys -- as he leads him through the office.

ROSEN
... our official purpose is to locate alphas, and determine if they're assets or liabilities to national security. In practice, however, we are tasked with training them, treating them, rehabilitating them if need be.

HICKS
Can you back up a second. You keep saying "alpha"...

ROSEN
An individual with enhanced abilities due to differences in their brain structure. It's just a term...

HICKS
Like the girl who gave me the headache? You're saying she did that with her brain?

ROSEN

Rachel, and, well...yes. An anomaly in the structure of her left parietal lobe allows her to manipulate sound waves with her vocal chords.

INT. SECTION 8 OFFICES

Rachel Myers sits in her office, reading from a Hebrew prayer book. She nervously eyes a wine glass in front of her.

ROSEN (O.S.)

Before Rachel, the largest recorded vocal range for a human being was 12 and a half octaves. When I came across her, she just happened to be working at the CIA as an analyst. And her vocal range was over thirty five octaves, past the level of sonar or a dog whistle.

The wine glass begins to vibrate, and Rachel adjusts the implant on her throat, manages to finish without breaking it.

Pleased at her success, she lets out a small SQUEAK. The glass shatters. Shit.

We reveal Rosen and Hicks, watching this from the hallway.

ROSEN

The same wiring that allows her to control octaves kept her from forming speech. Her strict, religious upbringing didn't help matters, as her parents refused to get her therapy. So we're trying to make up for lost time.

EXT. SECTION 8 OFFICES

Rosen and Hicks walk past the reception area of the offices.

ROSEN

Each person on the team has some alpha skill. Gary Bell, for example, is an autistic with a 3D mapping ability that would put a Satellite Array to shame. Which presents its own challenges.

HICKS

I don't know what that means.

ROSEN

Or Bill Harken? You met him on the street, I believe.

Hicks winces at the memory, his ribs are still throbbing in pain.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Bill can tap into his "fight or flight" reflex, giving him extraordinary strength and resistance, for a brief period of time. But when I first met him, he had no control of this ability...

EXT. SUBURBAN HOME - NIGHT

We see Harken at the front door of a quiet single family home talking to a woman, his EX-WIFE, on the other side of a screen door. Though we don't hear the details, they appear to be having a heated discussion. Every time he raises his voice, his wife flinches, the fear of Bill's temper never that far from her mind.

ROSEN (V.O.)

Any loss of his temper ended with serious repercussions. An unfortunate situation at his former job lost him his career, and eventually his family. But now, with medication and treatment, Bill can better control his brain's release of epinephrine and adrenaline.

The arguments cease as their daughter comes out to say good night to her dad. He gives her a hug and a smile.

Harken eyes his ex-wife. It's a tenuous relationship, but they're working on it.

INT. SECTION 8 HALLWAY - NIGHT

Rosen leads Hicks out of the main offices now, towards the vending machines.

HICKS

What about the woman, in the room...
She did something to me.

ROSEN

Nina. She "pushed" you.

Hicks looks at him.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

You've seen hypnosis, I'm sure? Well, when Nina touches someone, she transfers a wavelength that resonates directly in the frontal lobe. It induces a small seizure, which lowers inhibition and makes the person extremely vulnerable to her suggestion. A chemical hypnosis. We call it "pushing."

HICKS

So what's the downside there? Seems like she can get whatever she wants.

Rosen smiles awkwardly, this is a whole can of worms.

ROSEN

Yes, well, that's true, but...

EXT. TRUMP TOWERS - NIGHT

An exotic sports car pulls up to the building. Nina gets out of the drivers' seat and tosses her keys to the valet she woke up next to. She touches his arm as she passes.

INT. NINA'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

Nina's apartment in a deluxe Manhattan hi-rise is ostentatiously expensive, if a little bare. Not what you'd expect for someone with her pay-grade, but knowing Nina, it's easy to imagine that she didn't pay for any of it. The eager valet follows her inside. Nina directs him to undress and get in bed.

ROSEN (V.O.)

...there is a price for always getting what you want. You can never trust that people's feelings for you are genuine.

INT. BEDROOM

Nina and the Valet are going at it in her bedroom. Nina whispers in the Valet's ear.

It doesn't seem to have any effect. So she puts her hands on his head. Now, more emphatically, we hear her say...

NINA

Tell me you love me.

VALET

I love you.

He says it like he means it, but it isn't real and Nina knows it. The pure carnality of the moment is undercut by the profound sense of disgust she has with herself. The pleasure fades from her eyes.

ROSEN (V.O.)

Imagine the insecurity that would create.

INT. BREAK ROOM - NIGHT

Rosen and Hicks stop in a hallway across from the breakroom.

HICKS

I don't know, man, I'm having a hard time with all this. I feel like I'm being put on.

ROSEN

That's good, that means you're listening. Now, I want you to do something for me, Christian.

Rosen reaches into his pocket, fishes out a handful of quarters. He hands them to a confused Hicks, then motions to THE VENDING MACHINE, which is visible across the hall, through an open door. About ten yards away.

ROSEN

I want you to get me a soda.

Hicks, a bit baffled by this request, takes the quarters and starts walking towards the machine. Rosen grabs his arm.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

No, from here. Throw them.

HICKS

What? That's... I can't do that.

ROSEN

Yes. You can.

Hicks gives him a look like he's crazy. Then he reaches back and casually tosses the quarter at the machine. Miraculously, it sails across the room and right into the coin slot.

Hicks looks at Rosen, amazed. Rosen smiles.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

See?

He motions for him to throw the next one.

Hicks flicks the next quarter, which also flies true. The third quarter misses, glancing off the slot, just a few millimeters from the target.

Rosen reassures Hicks...

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Nobody's perfect.

Hicks then throws the final quarter, makes it in.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

But you're close.

Rosen picks up the last quarter, drops it in. The soda tumbles out. Rosen pops it open and takes a sip. It's flat. He puts it aside.

ROSEN

You are an Alpha, Christian. One of the most talented ones I've ever encountered. Which is probably what made you a target.

HICKS

Me? It doesn't make sense, I can't even hold a job down.

ROSEN

Someone wanted your skills, Mr. Hicks. And they weren't willing to take no for an answer.

The reality of this settles on Hicks. In between all the information he's spitting out, Rosen is starting to cut through.

HICKS (CONT'D)

I killed someone. Didn't I?

ROSEN

I realize it's hard to accept. But there's something you can do about it. We need to find the person who did this to you. We need to find them and stop them from doing this again. That's why we need your help.

Rosen notices his pager ringing. He glances down at the screen. It's a message from Rachel, "URGENT."

ROSEN

Will you excuse me for a minute?

As Rosen leaves, Hicks' head drops. The weight of everything Rosen has told him is finally hitting home.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - NIGHT

TIGHT ON A 3D rendering of a brain rotating on a monitor. Rosen joins Rachel who's staring at the image.

RACHEL

Look. Right here.

Rachel points to a spot on the screen. It's a BB-SIZED OBJECT that is LODGED INSIDE HICKS' BRAIN, like a tumor.

Rosen leans in for a closer look.

The object is perfectly spherical, man-made looking.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

(an understatement)

Oh. That isn't good.

INT. BREAK ROOM - NIGHT

Hicks is left alone, contemplating his situation, the implications that he's a killer. And then we hear something. It is a familiar sound. That same damned jingle, the ringtone...

Hicks picks up his cell phone. For some reason he can't explain, he hesitates.

Should he answer it? Finally, he flips it open.

HICKS

Hello?

MOREZ (O.S.)
(over the phone)
Six am tomorrow. Roof of the Bancroft building. Do not be late. SIX A.M.
Time to kill, Mr. Hicks.

Off Hicks...

INT. HALLWAY - NIGHT

Rosen and Rachel are rushing towards the break room, when the door suddenly swings open and Hicks steps out.

ROSEN
Christian? Are you alright?

HICKS' POV:

As Rosen speaks, we hear something different come from his mouth.

ROSEN
6 AM. Bancroft Building. Time to kill.

Rosen tries to tell him again...

ROSEN
6 AM. Bancroft Building. Time to kill.

ROSEN knows something is wrong. He puts his hand out to touch Hicks' arm and...

Without warning, Hicks grabs his hand and PUSHES HIM, right into Rachel. Knocking the two of them to the ground. Then he bolts for the exit.

Rosen struggles to get up, his ankle twisted. Rachel tries to help him, but he waves her off.

ROSEN (CONT'D)
Follow him. Don't lose him!

Rachel takes off after Hicks.

FADE TO BLACK:

END OF ACT FOUR

ACT FIVEFADE IN:

EXT. TIMES SQUARE - DAY

A cab pulls to a stop on the corner of 44th and Broadway. Hicks steps out into the bustle of New York's Times Square. As he looks up, he is startled to see...

A huge billboard showing a model in designer jeans along with fifteen foot letters saying, "SIX A.M."

Two shoppers stroll past and we overhear one casually telling the other--

SHOPPER
Bancroft building...

A businesswoman passing the other way, jabbars into a cell phone.

BUSINESSWOMAN
...time to kill. Six AM...

A passing bus has an ad on the side for a holiday movie, "BANCROFT BUILDING TIME TO KILL."

A dogwalker's t-shirt says, "6 AM."

The crosswalk light flashes, "TIME TO KILL"

And now, as Hicks steps out into the busy intersection--

THE CAMERA COMES UP BEHIND HIM and reveals the MONEY SHOT of our episode --

Because EVERY SINGLE WORD SPOKEN, WRITTEN, or DISPLAYED anywhere in Hicks' field of vision says the exact same thing. Repeating the same chilling message...

"TIME TO KILL. TIME TO KILL. TIME TO KILL."

Hicks walks up to the Bancroft building itself and goes inside.

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING - ROOF - DAY

Hicks emerges from a stairwell and walks out onto the roof of the building.

In a trance now, guided by instructions he is not even consciously aware of, Hicks is not surprised to see someone waiting on the roof for him.

It's MOREZ.

Besides his trademark suitcase, he also has a duffle bag slung casually over one shoulder.

MOREZ

You're late.

Hicks follows him over to the building's edge as Morez looks irritated by Hicks' tardiness. Morez passes Hicks the duffle bag.

MOREZ

I called you four times. Where were you?

Hicks doesn't answer. He reaches into the duffle and pulls out a brand new 30.06 SNIPER RIFLE...

MOREZ

The people who employ me expect absolute punctuality. That's what they pay for. You don't jeopardize that.

This is a man used to being in total control of events, and the fact that he is even a minute behind has thrown him off.

Hicks racks the bolt on the rifle and slides a bullet into the chamber.

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING - DAY

Nina and Harken pull to a stop in front of the Bancroft Building. Rachel is waiting for them.

RACHEL

He's on the roof.

HARKEN

(to Rachel)

Stay here. Watch the exits.

Nina's cell phone rings. She answers as she and Harken rush for the entrance.

NINA
(into cell)
Were here.

Nina and Harken head inside.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - DAY

Rosen is studying the 3D image of Hicks' brain, his eyes focused on the BB-size object nestled in the parietal lobe. Rosen zooms in on the object revealing circuitry beneath a translucent shell. Rosen speaks into a speaker phone.

ROSEN
I was wrong. The beta waves were a side effect, the source of Mr. Hicks problem is a physical object, an artificial tumor. Point nine millimeters in diameter. Silica based. It's pressing against the language center of his parietal lobe, which explains the hallucinations. But it also means verbal communication will likely be ineffective...

EXT. ROOF - DAY

Despite his condition, Hicks' unconscious mind knows how to aim a rifle. It's as ingrained in him as riding a bicycle.

As Hicks adjusts the scope on his gun as Morez takes him through his motions.

MOREZ
This shot should be fairly simple for you.
(beat)
Here is the target.

Morez shows him a picture of the target -- Another Vietnamese Man, thuggish-looking.

Morez indicates the skyline, where two distant office towers are separated by less than a hundred yards of open space.

MOREZ (CONT'D)
You'll have a three second window. That should give you ample opportunity. Once he passes out of view the opportunity is gone. Do not let that happen.

Satisfied that everything is in place, Morez picks up his BRIEFCASE and heads for the far side of the roof.

Morez pulls out binoculars and glances at his watch. It's 6:10am. And then we hear a distant sound rising over the din of traffic far below. It's the helicopter.

INT. GOVERNMENT HELICOPTER - DAY

Seated in the rear, next to two ARMED GUARDS, is NON DUC MINH, the second witness.

He stares out the window, knowing whatever happens today is sure to change his life.

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING ROOFTOP - DAY

The scope to his eye, Hicks aims his rifle at the dead space between the towers.

INT. ELEVATOR - DAY

Nina and Harken are standing among several lawyer-types and a bike messenger. They watch the numbers light up as the elevator rapidly ascends.

ROSEN (O.S.)

(over cell)

Nina, your language based suggestion won't work without the proper trigger...

NINA

(into cell)

That's great, so...

Other elevator-riders scowl at Nina. She lowers her voice.

NINA (CONT'D)

(into cell)

How do I stop him?

ROSEN (O.S.)

(over cell)

You need to engage the pre-lingual portion of his brain, the limbic system. You must go around the tumor and elicit a primal emotional response.

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING ROOFTOP - DAY

We can hear the chopper getting steadily closer. Hicks eases his finger onto the trigger and starts to exhale. Then--

The door to the roof bursts open.

NINA AND HARKEN come running out.

Nina sees Hicks immediately and starts running towards him.

Harken spots Morez, his binoculars out, at the other end of the roof. He heads for him.

NINA

Stop!

Hicks turns to look at Nina, racing towards him, but all he can perceive is her saying--

NINA (CONT'D)

Time to kill!

He puts the scope back up to his eye, then finds the target in his cross-hairs.

THE HELICOPTER flies between the two buildings now, Non Doc Minh clearly visible through the window.

Hicks is about to pull the trigger when a hand reaches out and GRABS HIM. It's Nina.

Hicks is compelled by a force he cannot control, but Nina's Alpha skill combats that force. There is literally a war going on inside his head.

NINA (CONT'D)

DON'T DO IT. Don't pull the trigger.

Hicks hesitates. Then shoves her aside and aims his rifle at the chopper.

Nina realizes Rosen was right. There's only one way to stop him.

ON HICKS

As his finger tenses on the trigger...

NINA suddenly grabs him and KISSES HIM. And she isn't shy about it.

Hicks' response is primal and emotional. His body relaxes, the instructions from his parietal lobe temporarily interrupted.

THE CHOPPER passes behind the second building, safely out of range.

MOREZ is shocked, unable to process that the shot didn't happen.

He turns his binoculars towards Hicks and sees Nina pulling the gun away from him. Morez is furious, but then something suddenly blocks his frame and he lowers the binoculars to see...

HARKEN, angry and filled with adrenaline, rushing towards him.

His frustration and rage stifled most of the time, Harken finally has a chance to let loose. He lifts Morez up off his feet and hurls him backwards. Too far, in fact. Morez tumbles over the edge of the roof. Harken panics for a moment, he didn't mean to... He races to the side and sees...

A BALCONY, one floor below.

EXT. BALCONY - BANCROFT BUILDING - CONTINUOUS

Morez just lays there, stunned for a moment, gasping for breath. Then he gathers himself and begins to crawl away, grabbing his metal briefcase.

EXT. ROOFTOP - BANCROFT BUILDING - CONTINUOUS

Hicks stands on the rooftop, Nina by his side, squeezing his hands tightly.

The glassy look in his eye seems to be fading, the spell is broken. Still, he's disoriented. No idea where he is or how he got there.

But something catches his eye. Morez, heading into the stairwell, Harken on his tail.

FADE TO BLACK:

END OF ACT FIVE

ACT SIXFADE IN:

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING ENTRANCE - DAY

Morez pushes through the revolving doors at the entrance. Rachel sees him, and wants to try to stop him, but there are too many innocent people for her to scream. Rachel tries to block Morez's path but he shoves her aside and races past her.

Moments later, Harken comes through the door and sees Rachel on the ground. He stops and helps her to her feet. Then spots Morez disappearing down the block.

Harken barks into his cell phone.

HARKEN

I lost him.

EXT. CITY STREET - CONTINUOUS

At a full sprint, Morez pulls his cell phone from his jacket. Speed dials a number--

EXT. BUILDING ROOFTOP - CONTINUOUS

Hicks and Nina are on the edge of the roof. Nina points to Morez, escaping.

NINA

That's him. He's the one who's been pulling your strings.

Hicks tracks Morez's path with the scope of his rifle.

HICKS

Not anymore.

EXT. INTERSECTION - CONTINUOUS

Morez hits redial on his phone, then glances at the screen. It says, "NO SERVICE."

Just as it seems that Morez has made it around the corner and safely out of range...

EXT. BANCROFT BUILDING ROOFTOP - CONTINUOUS

Hicks exhales calmly and FIRES.

WE TRACK THE BULLET--

As it explodes from the barrel and zips through the air.

EXT. INTERSECTION - CONTINUOUS

The bullet CLANGS off a street sign, an echo of his earlier shot --

And disappears around the corner.

EXT. BUILDING ROOFTOP - CONTINUOUS

We don't know for a moment if Hicks got Morez or not. But Hicks seems confident. He lowers the sniper rifle and gives Nina a look of grim satisfaction.

HICKS

It's done.

EXT. INTERSECTION - DAY

An hour later, Agent Quinn pushes through a crush of bystanders, then flashes his badge to a patrol officer to be let inside the CRIME SCENE.

As he moves past a group of cops towards the BODY lying in the street, Quinn is met by another AGENT.

AGENT ONE

Got confirmation. It's Morez.

Quinn bends down to inspect, sees the bullet hole in the head.

AGENT ONE

Kinda strange. Same way as that witness in the courthouse. Bullet out of nowhere.

Quinn nods, not quite getting it. The pieces don't fit.

AGENT ONE

You hear? Sanchez took a plea. Once the other guy testified, they cut a deal to avoid the chair. Sometimes you get a happy ending, huh?

Quinn nods, then notices the cell phone in Morez's hand.

He slips on a plastic glove and delicately picks up the phone. The screen says, "LAST CALL DIALED." Quinn considers this, then hits "SEND."

We hear the familiar annoying RING TONE: it's coming from the phone on Quinn's belt.

A change comes over Quinn. His eyes go glassy.

The other Agents leans over.

AGENT ONE

And you said we'd never catch him.
Beer's on you tonight, Quinnie.

Agent Quinn responds in a monotone.

QUINN

Beer's on me tonight.

Off Quinn's glazed look...

INT. ROSEN'S OFFICE - NIGHT

A CLOSE UP of the strange device from Morez's briefcase. A combination of technology and parts that almost look organic. It's unlike anything we've ever seen before.

Examining the apparatus, Rosen is concerned. Rachel looks on.

ROSEN

I was alarmed by the prospect of an Alpha out there with a power even greater than Nina's. But something about this...

Referring to the device--

ROSEN

...this technology that mimics her ability, it actually frightens me more.

Rachel nods, sympathetically, then whispers...

RACHEL
He's ready.

INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - DAY

Hicks lies unconscious on the hospital bed.

Standing over him are Rosen and Rachel who both wear scrubs and a surgical masks. Rachel assists Rosen who works the needle into the back of Hick's neck.

A filament leads from the needle to a side table where Morez's device quietly hums inside the metal briefcase.

INT. OBSERVATION ROOM - DAY

Nina stares at a stack of monitors showing different camera angles on the examination room. The operation is over. Hicks sleeps on the hospital bed. Rachel cleans up.

Rosen comes up behind her.

ROSEN (CONT'D)
He's been through a lot, Nina. It's not a pleasant experience knowing you've been manipulated, forced to do things against your will.

NINA
(annoyed)
Why don't you just tell me what you mean?

ROSEN
The things that come to you deservedly are more satisfying, Nina. You have to trust me on that.

Nina frowns, not liking the implication of Rosen's advice. She walks out.

INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - DAY

Hicks opens his eyes, groggily. Rachel stands over him. She smiles and whispers.

RACHEL
It's gone.

Hicks smiles. It's the first time we've seen it.

EXT. TRUMP TOWERS - NIGHT

Nina drives up in her car. The familiar Valet is there. He takes her keys. She gets out and eyes him. His bare skin passes close to hers... But this time she resists. She heads inside alone.

EXT. SECTION 8 - NIGHT

It's dark out now. Hicks walks out into the parking lot. He is a bit shaky, but no other side effects from the impromptu brain surgery. He waits on the sidewalk, and then is joined by Rosen.

ROSEN

Need a lift?

HICKS

No. I called a cab.

As they stand there together, Rosen nods towards the gym across the street. Despite the hour, it's brightly lit and packed with people working out on treadmills and stair-masters.

ROSEN

Look at them. Marching away, hour after hour, day after day. Some see a waste of consciousness. I see limitless potential.

Hicks nods, he understands Rosen's point.

ROSEN

There is so much I can do to help you, Christian. And so much you can do to help us.

HICKS

I'm flattered, Dr. Rosen. And I'm very grateful for everything you've done. But I've worked for the government before. Didn't turn out for me...

ROSEN

Christian...

HICKS

Guess I'm not big on authority. Not much of a joiner.

Rosen nods, sympathetically.

ROSEN

Of course. I just thought it might be a good way to relieve your guilt. To kill a man is a terrible burden.

Hicks looks surprised, not sure what Rosen's getting at.

HICKS

I.. I didn't kill him. I mean, I had no choice, you know that.

ROSEN

Yes, I know that...

Rosen smiles at him, and now we see another side to the good doctor -- a cold, calculating and absolutely ruthless side that will not compromise when it comes to his mission.

ROSEN

... and you know that. But who else does? And who would ever believe it?

The implications of what Rosen is saying wash over Hicks. This was not an invitation.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Really, the best place for you now is with us. Where I can protect you.

And with that, Rosen heads off towards his car, disappearing into the darkness of the lot.

We hold on Hicks, staring after him, as we hear Rosen's voice one last time, echoing through the darkness.

ROSEN (CONT'D)

Welcome to Section 8, Mr. Hicks.

FADE OUT:

END OF SHOW

Listed on KeelyNet as _____ courteously shared from California

ALTERNATIVE 3

LESLIE WATKINS

FROM THE ANGLIA TELEVISION FILM
ALTERNATIVE 3
DEvised BY DAVID AMBROSE AND CHRISTOPHER MILES
WRITTEN BY DAVID AMBROSE
DIRECTED BY CHRISTOPHER MILES

SPHERE BOOKS LIMITED

First published by Sphere Books Ltd. 1978
27 Wrights Lane, London W8 5TZ
Original television script copyright by David Ambrose & Christopher Miles 1977
Book version copyright Leslie Watkins 1978
Reprinted 1979, 1980 (twice), 1987

This book is dedicated to Ann Clark, Robert Patterson and Brian Pendlebury - wherever they may be

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

Filmset in Photon Times

Printed and bound in Great Britain by Collins, Glasgow

The frighteningly erratic behaviour of the climate over the past few years...Unidentified Flying Object activity at an all-time peak...the continuing pollution and despoliation of planet Earth by overpopulation and industry...the mounting incidence of unexplained dissapearances of people in mysterious circumstances...horrendous new killing techniques including spontaneous combustion - used by government assassins against those who pose a threat to the security of an ultra-secret organization...terrifying advances in mind-control by agencies like the CIA and their use in creating a class of mindless human-robot slaves...astounding revelations of clandestine collaboration in space between the USA and the USSR over a period of decades...bizzare features observed on the Moon and Mars - but for some reason barely mentioned in the media...

These and many other sinister features unearthed and examined by those investigating the horrific enigma of ALTERNATIVE 3 are the strands in a web of conspiracy which could only exist in our age of terminal technology. Top journalist Leslie Watkins, making use of the research for the original TV expose - much of which was not incorporated into the programme itself for various reasons - and of material that has come to light subsequently, has written a book with the grip, pace and compulsion of a thriller. And with the grim bite of terrible truth - a truth which is sure to be denied by those who are themselves terrified that the most explosive secret in human history is about to blow up in their faces...

3

SECTION ONE

No newspaper has yet secured the truth behind the operation known as ALTERNATIVE 3. Investigations by journalists have been blocked - by governments on both sides of the Iron Curtain. America and Russia are ruthlessly obsessed with guarding their shared secret and this obsession, as we can now prove, has made them partners in murder.

However, despite this intensive security, fragments of information have been made public. Often they are released inadvertently - by experts who do not appreciate their sinister significance - and these fragments, in isolation, mean little. But when jigsawed together they form a definite pattern - a pattern which appears to emphasise the enormity of this conspiracy of silence.

On May 3, 1977, the Daily Mirror published this story:

President Jimmy Carter has joined the ranks of UFO spotters. He sent in two written reports stating he had seen a flying saucer when he was the Governor of Georgia.

The President has shrugged off the incident since then, perhaps fearing that electors might be wary of a flying saucer freak.

But he was reported as saying after the "sighting": "I don't laugh at people any more when they say they've seen UFOs because I've seen one myself."

Carter described his UFO like this: "Luminous, not solid, at first bluish, then reddish...it seemed to move towards us from a distance, stopped, then moved partially away."

Carter filed two reports on the sighting in 1973, one to the International UFO Bureau and the other to the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena.

Heydon Hewes, who directs the International UFO Bureau from his home in Oklahoma City, is making speeches praising the President's "open-mindedness."

But during his presidential campaign last year Carter was cautious. He admitted he had seen a light in the sky but declined to call it a UFO.

He joked: "I think it was a light beckoning me to run in the California primary election."

Why this change in Carter's attitude? Because, by then, he had been briefed on Alternative 3?

A 1966 Gallup Poll showed that five million Americans - including several highly experienced airline pilots - claimed to have seen Flying Saucers. Fighter pilot Thomas Mantell had already died while chasing one over Kentucky - his F.51 aircraft having disintegrated in the violent wash of his quarry's engines. The U.S. Air Force, reluctantly bowing to mounting pressure, asked Dr. Edward Uhler Condon, a professor of astrophysics, to head an investigation team at Colorado University.

4

Condon's budget was $500,000. Shortly before his report appeared in 1968, this story appeared in the London Evening Standard:

The Condon study is making headlines - but for all the wrong reasons. It is losing some of its outstanding members, under circumstances which are mysterious to say the least. Sinister rumors are circulating...at least four key people have vanished from the Condon team without offering a satisfactory reason for their departure.

The complete story behind the strange events in Colorado is hard to decipher. But a clue, at least, may be found in the recent statements of Dr. James McDonald, the senior physicist at the Institute of Atmospheric Physics at the University of Arizona and widely respected in his field. In a wary, but ominous, telephone conversation this week, Dr. McDonald told me that he is "most distressed."

Condon's 1,485 - page report denied the existence of Flying Saucers and a panel of the American National Academy of Sciences endorsed the conclusion that "further extensive study probably cannot be justified."

But, curiously, Condon's joint principal investigator, Dr. David Saunders, had not contributed a word to that report. And on January 11, 1969, the Daily Telegraph quoted Dr. Saunders as saying of the report: "It is inconceivable that it can be anything but a cold stew. No matter how long it is, what it includes, how it is said, or what it recommends, it will lack the essential element of credibility."

Already there were wide-spread suspicions that the Condon investigation had been part of an official coverup, that the government knew the truth but was determined to keep it from the public. We now know that those suspicions were accurate. And that the secrecy was all because of Alternative 3.

Only a few months after Dr. Saunders made his "cold stew" statement a journalist with the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch embarrassed the National Aeronautics and Space Agency by photographing a strange craft - loooking exactly like a Flying Saucer - at the White Sands missile range in New Mexico.

5

At first no one at NASA would talk about this mysterious circular craft, 15 feet in diameter, which had been left in the "missile graveyard" - a section of the range where most experimental vehicles were eventually dumped.

But the Martin Marietta company of Denver, where it was built, acknowledged designing several models, some with ten and twelve engines. And a NASA official, faced with this information, said: "Actually the engineers used to call it "The Flying Saucer." That confirmed a statement made by Dr. Garry Henderson, a leading space research scientist: "All our astronauts have seen these objects but have been ordered not to discuss their findings with anyone."

Otto Binder was a member of the NASA space team. He has stated that NASA "killed" significant segments of conversation between Mission Control and Apollo 11 - the space-craft which took Buzz Aldrin and Neil Armstrong to the Moon - and that those segments were deleted from the official record: "Certain sources with their own VHF receiving facilities that by-passed NASA broadcast outlets claim there was a portion of Earth-Moon dialogue that was quickly cut off by the NASA monitoring staff."

Binder added: "It was presumably when the two moon-walkers, Aldrin and Armstrong, were making the rounds some distance from the LEM that Armstrong clutched Aldrin's arm excitedly and exclaimed - "What was it? What the hell was it? That's all I want to know."

Then, according to Binder, there was this exchange -

MISSION CONTROL: What's there ? ... malfunction
(garble) ... Mission Control calling Apollo 11...
APOLLO 11: These babies were huge, sir...enormous....
...Oh, God you wouldn't believe it!...I'm telling you there are other space-craft out there...lined up on the far side of the crater edge...they're on the Moon watching us...

NASA, understandably, has never confirmed Binder's story but Buzz Aldrin was soon complaining bitterly about the Agency having used him as a "traveling salesman." And two years after his Moon mission, following reported bouts of heavy drinking, he was admitted to hospital with "emotional depression."

"Travelling salesman".... that's an odd choice of words, isn't it? What, in Aldrin's view, were the NASA authorities trying to sell? And to whom? Could it be that they were using him, and others like him, to sell their official version of the truth to ordinary people right across the world?

6

Was Aldrin's Moon walk one of those great spectacles, presented with maximum publicity, to justify the billions being poured into space research? Was it part of the American - Russian cover for Alternative 3?

All men who have travelled to the Moon have given indications of knowing about Alternative 3 - and of the reasons which precipitated it.

In May, 1972, James Irwin - officially the sixth man to walk on the Moon - resigned to become a Baptist missionary. And he said then: "The flight made me a deeper religious person and more keenly aware of the fragile nature of our planet."

Edgar Mitchell, who landed on the Moon with the Apollo 14 mission in February, 1971, also resigned in May, 1972 - to devote himself to parapsychology. Later, at the headquarters of his Institute for Noetic Sciences near San Francisco, he described looking at this world from the Moon: "I went into a very deep pathos, a kind of anguish. That incredibly beautiful planet that was Earth...a place no bigger than my thumb was my home...a blue and white jewel against a velvet black sky...was being killed off.: And on March 23, 1974, he was quoted in the Daily Express as saying that society had only three ways in which to go and that the third was "the most viable but most difficult alternative."

Another of the Apollo Moon - walkers, Bob Grodin, was equally specific when interviewed by the Sceptre Television reporter on June 20, 1977: "You think they need all that crap down in Florida just to put two guys up there on a...on a bicycle? The hell they do! You know why they need us? So they've got a P.R. story for all that hardware they've been firing into space. We're nothing, man! Nothing!"

On July 11, 1977, the Los Angeles Times came near to the heart of the matter - nearer than any other newspaper - when it published a remarkable interview with Dr. Gerard O'Neill. Dr. O'Neill is a Princeton professor who served, during a 1976 sabbatical, as Professor of Aerospace at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and who gets nearly $500,000 each year in research grants from NASA. Here is a section from that article:

The United Nations, he says, has conservatively estimated that the world's population, now more than 4 billion people, will grow to about 6.5 billion by the year 2000. Today, he adds, about 30% of the world's population is in developed nations. But, because most of the projected population growth will be in underdeveloped countries, that will drop to 22% by the end of the century. The world of 2000 will be poorer and hungrier than the world today, he says.

7

Dr. O'Neill also explained the problems caused by the earth's 4,000 mile atmospheric layer but - presumably because the article was a comparatively short one - he was not quoted on the additional threat posed by the notorious "greenhouse" syndrome.

His solution? He called it Island 3. And he added: "There's really no debate about the technology involved in doing it. That's been confirmed by NASA's top people."

But Dr. O'Neill, a family man with three children who likes to fly sailplanes in his spare time, did not realise that he was slightly off-target. He was right, of course, about the technology. But he knew nothing of the political ramifications and he would have been astounded to learn that NASA was feeding his research to the Russians.

Even eminent political specialists, as respected in their sphere as Dr. O'Neill is in his own, have been puzzled by an undercurrent they have detected in East - West relationships. Professor G. Gordon Broadbent, director of the independently - financed Institute of Political Studies in London and author of a major study of U.S. - Soviet diplomacy since the 1950s, emphasised that fact on June 20, 1977, when he was interviewed on Sceptre Television: "On the broader issue of Soviet - U.S. relations, I must admit there is an element of mystery which troubles many people in my field." He added: "What we're suggesting is that, at the very highest levels of East - West diplomacy, there has been operating a factor of which we know nothing. Now it could just be - and I stress the word "could" - that this unknown factor is some kind of massive but covert operation in space. But as for the reasons behind it...we are not in the business of speculation."

Washington's acute discomfort over O'Neill's revelations through the Los Angeles Times can be assessed by the urgency with which a "suppression" Bill was rushed to the Statute Book. On July 27, 1977 - only sixteen days after the publication of the O'Neill interview - columnist Jerry Campbell reported in the London Evening Standard that the Bill would become law that September. He wrote:

It prohibits the publishing of an official report without permission, arguing that this obstructs the Government's control of its own information. That was precisely the charge brought against Daniel Ellsberg for giving the Pentagon papers to the New York Times. Most ominous of all, the Bill would make it a crime for any present or former civil servant to tell the Press of Government wrong - doing or pass on any news based on information "submitted to the Government in private."

8

Campbell pointed out that this final clause "has given serious pain to guardians of American Press freedom because it creates a brand new crime." Particularly as there was provision in the Bill for offending journalists to be sent to prison for up to six years.

We subsequently discovered that a man called Harman - Leonard Harman - read that item in the newspaper and that later, in a certzin television executives' dining-room, he expressed regret that a similar Law had not been passed uears earlier by the British government. He was eating treacle tart with custard at the time and he reflected wistfully that he could then have insisted on such a Law being obeyed. That, when it came to Alternative 3, would have saved him from a great deal of trouble...

He had chosen treacletart, not because he particularly liked it, but because it was 2p cheaper than the chocolate sponge. That was typical of Harman.

He was one of the people, as you may have learned already through the Press, who tried to interfere with the publication of this book. We will later be presenting some of the letters received by us from him and his lawyers - together with the replies from our legal advisers. We decided to print these letters in order to give you a thorough insight into our investigation for it is important to stress that we, like Professor Broadbent, are not in the "business of speculation."

We are interested only in the facts. And it is intriguing to note the pattern of facts relating to astronaut who have been on Moon missions - and who have therefore been exposed to some of the surprises presented by Alternative 3. A number, undermined by the strain of being party to such a horrendous secret, suffered nervous or mental collapses. A high percentage sought sanctuary in excessive drinking or in extra marital affairs which destroyed what had been secure and successful marriages. Yet these were men originally picked from many thousands precisely because of their stability. Their training and experience, intelligence and physical fitness - all these, of course, were prime considerations in their selection. But the supremely important quality was their balanced temperament.

It would need something stupendous, something almost unimaginable to most people, to flip such men into dramatic personality changes. That something, we have now established, was Alternative 3 and, perhaps more particularly, the nightmarish obscenities involved in the development and perfection of Alternative 3.

We are not suggesting that the President of the United States has had personal knowledge of the terror and clinical cruelties which have been an integral part of the Operation, for that would make him directly responsible for murders and barbarous mutilations.

9

We are convinced , in fact, that this is not the case. The President and the Russian leader, together with their immediate subordinates, have been concerned only with the broad sweep of policy. They have acted in unison to ensure what they consider to be the best possible future for mankind. And the day - to - day details have been delegated to high-level professionals.

These professionals, we have now established, have been classifying people selected for the Alternative 3 operation into two categories: those who are picked as individuals and those who merely form part of a "batch consignment." There have been several "batch consignments" and it is the treatment meted out to most of these men and women which provides the greatest cause for outrage.

No matter how desperate the circumstances may be - and we reluctantly recognise that they are extremely desperate - no humane society could tolerate what has been done to the innocent and the gullible. That view, fortunately, was taken by one man who was recruited into the Alternative 3 team three years ago. He was, at first, highly enthusiastic and completely dedicated to the Operation. However, he became revolted by some of the atrocities involved. He did not consider that, even in the prevailing circumstances, they could be justified.

Three days after the transmission of that sensational television documentary, his conscience finally goaded him into action. He knew the appalling risk he was taking, for he was aware of what had happened to others who had betrayed the secrets of Alternative 3, but he made telephone contact with television reporter Colin Benson - and offered to provide Benson with evidence of the most astounding nature.

He was calling, he said, from abroad but he was prepared to travel to London. They met two days later. And he explained to Benson that copies of most orders and memoranda, together with transcripts prepared from tapes of Policy Committee meetings, were filed in triplicate - in Washington, Moscow and Geneva where Alternative 3 had its operational headquarters. The system had been instituted to ensure there was no misunderstanding between the principal partners. He occasionally had access to some of that material - although it was often weeks or even months old before he saw it - and he was willing to supply what he could to Benson. He wanted no money. He merely wanted to alert the public, to help stop the mass atrocities.

Benson's immediate reaction, after he had assessed the value of this offer, was that Scepter should mount a follow-up program - one which would expose the horrors of Alternative 3 in far greater depth. He argued bitterly with his superiors at Sceptre but they were adamant. The company was already in serious trouble with the government and there was some doubt about whether its license would be renewed.

10

They refused to consider the possibility of doing another programme. They had officially disclaimed the Alternative 3 documentary as a hoax and that was where the matter had to rest. Anyway, they pointed out, this character who'd come forward was probably a nut...

If you saw the documentary, you will probably realise that Benson is a stubborn man. His friends say he is pig-obstinate. They also say he is a first-class investigative journalist.

He was angry about this attempt to suppress the truth and that is why he agreed to co-operate in the preparation of this book. That co-operation has been invaluable.

Through Benson we met the telephone caller who we now refer to as Trojan. And that meeting resulted in our acquiring documents, which we will be presenting, including transcripts of tapes made at the most secret rendezvous in the world - thirty five fathoms beneath the ice cap of the Arctic.

For obvious reasons, we cannot reveal the identity of Trojan. Nor can we give any hint about his function or status in the operation. We are completely satisfied, however, that his credentials are authentic and that, in breaking his oath of silence, he is prompted by the most honourable of motives. He stands in relation to the Alternative 3 conspiracy in much the same position as the anonymous informant "deep Throat" occupied in the Watergate affair.

Most of the "batch consignments" have been taken from the area known as the Bermuda Triangle but numerous other locations have also been used. On October 6, 1975, the Daily Telegraph gave prominence to this story:

The disappearance in bizarre circumstances in the past two weeks of 20 people from small coastal communities in Oregon was being intensively investigated at the weekend amid reports of an imaginative fraud scheme involving a "flying saucer" and hints mass murder.

Sheriff's officers at Newport, Oregon, said that the 20 individuals had vanished without trace after being told to give away all their possessions, including their children, so that they could be transported in a flying saucer "by UFO to a better life".

Deputies under Mr. Ron Sutton, chief criminal investigator in surrounding Lincoln County, have traced the story back to a meeting on September 14 in a resort hotel, the Bayshore Inn at Waldport, Oregon.

11

Local police have received conflicting reports as to what occurred (at the meeting). But while it is clear that the speaker did not pretend to be from outer space, he told the audience how their souls could be "saved through a UFO".

The hall had been reserved for a fee of $5 by a man and a woman who gave false names. Mr. Sutton said witnesses had described them as "fortyish, well groomed, straight types".

The Telegraph said that "selected people would be prepared at a special camp in Colorado for life on another planet" and quoted Investigator Sutton as adding:

"They were told they would have to give away everything, even their children. I'm checking a report of one family who supposedly gave away a 150-acre farm and three children.

"We don't know if it's a fraud or whether these people might be killed. There are all sorts of rumours, including some about human sacrifice and that this is sponsored by the (Charles) Manson family."

Most of the missing 20 were described as being "hippy types" although there were some older people among them. People of this calibre, we have now discovered, have been what is known as "scientifically adjusted" to fit them for a new role as a slave species.

There have been equally strange reports of animals - particularly farm animals - disappearing in large numbers. And occasionally it appears that aspects of the Alternative 3 operation have been bungled, that attempts to lift "batch consignments" of humans or of animals have failed.

On July 15, 1977, the Daily Mail - under a "Flying Saucer" headline - carried this story:

Men in face masks, using metal detectors and a geiger counter, yesterday scoured a remote Dartmoor valley in a bid to solve a macabre mystery.

All appeared to have died at about the same time, and many of the bones have been inexplicably shattered. To add to the riddle, their bodies decomposed to virtual skeletons within only 48 hours.

Animal experts confess they are baffled by the deaths at Cherry Brook Valley near Postbridge.

Yesterday's search was carried out by members of the Devon Unidentified Flying Objects center at Torquay who are trying to prove a link with outer space.

They believe that flying saucers may have flown low over the area and created a vortex which hurled the ponies to their death.

12

Mr. John wyse, head of the four-man team, said: "If a spacecraft has been in the vicinity, there may still be detectable evidence. We wanted to see if there was any sign that the ponies had been shot but we have found nothing. This incident bears an uncanny resemblance to similar events reported in America."

The Mail report concluded with a statement from an official representing The Dartmoor Livestock Protection Society and the Animal Defence Society: "Whatever happened was violent. We are keeping an open mind. I am fascinated by the UFO theory. There is no reason to reject that possibility since there is no other rational explanation."

These, then, were typical of the threads which inspired the original television investigation. It needed one person, however, to show how they could be embroidered into a clear picture.

Without the specialist guidance of that person the Sceptre television documentary could never have been produced - and Trojan would never have contacted Colin Benson. And it would have been years, possibly seven years or even longer, before ordinary people started to suspect the devastating truth about this planet on which we live.

That person, of course, is the old man....

13
SECTION TWO

They realise now that they should have killed the old man. That would have been the logical course - to protect the secrecy of Alternative 3.

It is curious, really, that they did not agree his death on that Thursday in February for, as we have stated, they do use murder. Of course, it is not called murder - not when it is done jointly by the governments of America and Russia. It is an Act of Expediency.

Many Acts of Expediency are believed to have been ordered by the sixteen men, official representatives of the Pentagon and the Kremlin, who comprise the Policy Committee. Grotesque and apparently inexplicable slayings in various parts of the world - in Germany and Japan, Britain and Australis - are alleged to have been sanctioned by them.

We have not been able to substantiate these suspicions and allegations so we merely record that an unknown number of people - including distinguished radio astronomer Sir William Ballantine - have been executed because of this astonishing agreement between the super-powers.

Prominent politicians, including two in Britain, were among those who tried to prevent the publication of this book. They insisted that it is not necessary for you, and others like you, to be told the unpalatable facts. They argue that the events of the future are now inevitable, that there is nothing to be gained by prematurely unleashing fear. We concede that they are sincere in their views but we maintain that you ought to know. You have a right to know.

Attempts were also made to neuter the television programme which first focused public attention on Alternative 3. Those attempts were partially successful. And, of course, after the programme was transmitted - when there was that spontaneous explosion of anxiety - Sceptre Television was forced to issue a formal denial. It had all been a hoax. That's what they were told to say. That's what they did say.

Most people were then only too glad to be reassured. They wanted to be convinced that the programme had been devised as a joke, that it was merely an elaborate piece of escapist entertainment. It was more comfortable that way.

In fact, the television researchers did uncover far more disturbing material than they were allowed to transmit. The censored information is now in our possession. And, as we have indicated, there was a great deal that Benson and the rest of the television team did not discover - not until it been screened. And they did not know, for example, that Sir William Ballantine's freakish death - not far from his base at 14

Jodrell Bank - was mirrored by that of an aerospace professor called Peterson near Stanford University at Palo Alto, California. Nor did they know of the monthly conferences beneath the ice of the Arctic.

Alternative 3 appears a preposterous conception -until one analyses the history of the so-called space-race. Right from the start the public have been allowed to know only what is considered appropriate for them to know. Many futuristic research developments - and the extent of information pooled between East and West -have been kept strictly classified.

There was a small but typical example in 1951 when living creatures were hurtled into the stratosphere for the very first time. Or, at least, the public were eventually told it was for the first time. Four monkeys - code-named Albert 1,2,3 and 4 - were launched in a V2 rocket from White Sands, New Mexico.

Remember White Sands? That's where the Columbus Dispatch man photographed that strange craft - the one which a NASA official grudgingly admitted was known as "The Flying Saucer".

The monkeys were successfully brought back to earth. Three survived. One died, shortly afterwards, of heat prostration.

Much later, when news did leak out, it was explained that Operation Albert had been kept secret for only one reason - to avert any possibility of animal-lovers staging a protest demonstration.

Most people accepted the official story - that the four Alberts really had been this world's first travellers in space. But was that the truth?

By 1951 the V2 rocket, a relic of World War II, had been superseded by far more sophisticated missiles. So would it be logical, or indeed practical, to use an obsolete vehicle for the first launch of living creatures?

Is it not more feasible to argue that Operation Albert was no more than a subsidiary experiment which happened to slip through the security net? That the authorities were not too perturbed about having to confirm it - because it helped conceal the real and gigantic truth?

There is abundant evidence that by 1951 the super powers were far more advanced in space technology than they have ever admitted. Much of that evidence has been supplied by experienced pilots. By men like Captain Laurence W. Vinther...

At 8:30 p.m. on January 20, 1951, Captain Vinther -then with Mid-Continent Airlines - was ordered by the controller at Sioux City Airport to investigate a "very bright light" above the field.

He and his co-pilot, James F. Bachmeier, took off in a DC3 and headed for the source of the light.

15

Suddenly the light dived towards them at great speed and passed about 200 feet above them. Then they discovered that it had reversed direction, apparently in a split second, and was flying parallel to the airliner. It was a clear moonlit night and both men could clearly see that the light was emanating from a cigar-shaped object bigger than a B-29. Eventually the strange craft lost altitude, passed under the DC3 and disappeared.

Two months later, on March 15, thousands of people in New Delhi were startled by a strange object, high in the sky, which appeared to be circling the city. One witness was George Franklin Floate, chief engineer with the Delhi Flying Club, who described "a bullet-nosed, cigar-shaped object about 100 feet long with a ring of flames at the end". Two Indian Air Force jets were sent up to intercept. But the object suddenly surged upwards at a "phenomenal speeds" and vanished into the heights.

So, despite all official denials, sufficient advances had been made by 1951 to provide the basis for planning Alternative 3.

By the mid-Seventies there were so many rumours about covert information-swapping between East and West - with men like Professor Broadbent becoming progressively more curious - that the American-Russian "rivals" staged a masterpiece of camouflage. They would show the world, quite openly, how they were prepared to co-operate in space! The result was seen in July, 1975: the first admitted International Space Transfer. Television cameras showed the docking of a Soyuz spacecraft with and Apollo - and the crews jubilantly exchanging food and symbolic halves of medals.

Leonid Brezhnev sent this message to the united spacemen: "Your successful docking confirms the correctness of technical solutions that were worked out and realised in co-operation by Soviet and American scientists, designers and cosmonauts. One can say that Soyuz-Apollo is a prototype of future international orbital stations."

Gerald Ford expressed the hope that this "tremendous demonstration of co-operation" would set the pattern for "what we have to do in the future to make it a better world". And at his home near Boston, Massachusetts, former Apollo man Bob Grodin switched off his television set in disgust.

Grodin's comment was more succinct than that of either leader. He said: "How they've got the bloody neck!" Then he poured himself another tumbler of bourbon.

Grodin had cause to be bitter that day. Bitter and also cynically amused. There'd been no television coverage, no glory of any sort, when he'd done the identical maneuver -140 miles above the clouds - on April 20, 1969. He's shaken hands up there with the Russians and laughed at their bad jokes - exactly like Tom Stafford had just been doing - but there'd been none of this celebrity crap about that operation.

16

It was crazy...the way they were kidding people by making it all seem such a big deal! Christ! It hadn't been a big deal even when he'd done it. There'd been all the others before him...

We now know, in fact, that this American-Russian docking technique was successfully pioneered in the late Fifties - with specially-designed submarines in the black depths of the North Atlantic. It was pioneered specifically because of Alternative 3. Because of the need for the ultimate in security. The system made it possible for men who were officially enemies, who played the charade of distrusting each other in public, to travel separately and discreetly to meetings far below the waves.

Thursday, February 3, 1977. A landmark. A Policy Committee meeting infiltrated, via the transcript, for the first time by Trojan. Information about earlier meetings, held in a variety of locations, still not available. Complete transcript obviously filed in separately-secured sections. Sensible precaution. And frustrating. Trojan obtained only small section. Enough to confirm murder conspiracy. Major break-through.

The venue: the wardroom of a modified Permit nuclear submarine. Thirty-five fathoms beneath ice of Arctic. Permit subs "seek out and destroy enemy". So American taxpayers are told. Cold War concepts are readily accepted. They distract from real truth...

No names on transcript. No names, apparently, ever used. Only nationalities and numbers. Eight Russians - listed as R ONE through to R EIGHT - and eight Americans.

Procedure shown by subsequent transcripts - A EIGHT and R EIGHT alternate monthly as chairmen.

February 3. Chairman: A EIGHT. Transcript section starts:

A FIVE: You're kill-crazy...you know that?... absolutely kill-crazy...

A TWO: No...the guys right...that old man is dangerous...

R SIX: I am reminding you that it was agreed...right from the start it was agreed...that expedencies would be kept to a minimum...

A TWO: And the old man, friend, is right there inside that minimum...the way he talks...he'll blow the whole goddam thing...

R ONE: Who do you suppose ever listens to him? Eh?... nobody...that's who listens. Come...he knows nothing...not after all these years. Theories...that's all he's got...theories and memories...

17

A FIVE: That just says it, dosen't it? Here we are wasting time and wetting ourselves because of theories that are twenty years old...Jeez!...if we start spreading expediencies so low because...

R FOUR: The theories have not changed so much in twenty years and in my considered opinion...

A FIVE: ...so low because of a semi-senile and garrulous old man...

A EIGHT: He's not semi-senile...he's not even that old ...I heard him lecture last year at Cambridge and, you take my word, he's certainly not semi-senile... What,precisely, has he been saying?

A TWO: About getting air out of the soil..about how the ice is melting...people at that university... they're beginning to listen to him...

A FIVE: That's no more, for Chrissakes, than he was saying in Alabama back in 1957...hell, I was right there at Huntsville when he said it...

R FOUR: The Huntsville Conference was like this meeting...the discussions there were not for outsiders and...

A FIVE: Yes...but not many people took him seriously even then...and now that he"s over the hill...

R FOUR: It is still a serious breach of security... it is dangerous and it could start a panic among the masses...

A FIVE: So all right!...Kill him! He's a harmless and doddering old has-been but if it makes you feel better...go ahead and kill him...

A EIGHT: Expediencies aren"t to make us feel better... and our friend here was right...we have agreed to restrict them to the minimum...anything else against this man?

A TWO: Yeah...the real bad news...I hear he"s been dropping hints...nothing specific but oblique hints about the big bang...about the earth-air thing being cracked

R SIX: But it is not possible for him to be knowing that...

A TWO: Mabey he doesn"t know...not know for sure... but he's sure done some figuring

A ONE: You're saying he"s guessed...right? That's what you"re saying

R ONE: So it is as I said...theories and memories and now guesses! We sentence an old man to death because of his guesses? That is how you Americans wish us to work?

A EIGHT: Let's cut the East-West stuff...we're a team here, remember, and we've got a hell of an agenda to get through and we've spent quite long enough on this Englishman. So let's vote...Those for expediency?

and this character Harry Carmell...looks to me like there's no room for question about either of them.

R SEVEN: This Harry Carmell...we are certain that he has stolen that circuit from NASA?

A EIGHT: Positive certain. And heads, I can promise you have rolled at Huston. We also know that he's somewhere in England...probably London...so if he should link up again with Ballantine...

R SEVEN: I think we are all aware of what could happen if he should link up again with Ballantine...

A TWO: Especially with Ballantine's contacts in Fleet Street...

R SEVEN: How was it possible for a man like Carmell to get out of America...?

A EIGHT: Don't tell me...I can say it for you...he'd never have got out of Russia that easily...but there it is...our people goofed and now it's down to us...

R SEVEN: As you say then, there is no room for question...both of them have got to be expedencies.

A EIGHT: All agreed?...Good...I suggest a couple of hot jobs...coroners always play them quiet...

R SEVEN: But first, presumably, we'll have to find Carmell...

A EIGHT: We'll find him...Londons not that big a town and he'll soon be needing his shots.

A THREE: How hooked is he?

A EIGHT: Hooked enough...Now what about Peterson? Same deal?

R FOUR: We've all seen the earlier report on Peterson.. what is the latest assessment?

A EIGHT: He's getting more and more paranoiac about the batch consignments...

R FOUR: You mean the scientific adjustments?

A EIGHT: Yeah...the scientific adjustments...he's running off at the mouth about ethics...that sort of crap...

A TWO: Ethics! What the hell do some of these guys think we're all at? Jesus! We're smack in the middle of the most vital exercise ever mounted...with the survival of the whole human race swinging on it... and they bleat about ethics...

A EIGHT: That surgery bit...it really got to him...

A FIVE: They should never have told him...he didn't need to know that...look, we owe Peterson...he's done good work...couldn't we just get him committed?

A TWO: No way...much too risky...he'd squeal his bloody head off.

A EIGHT: I endorse that. I'm sorry because I like the guy...but there's no choice. Anyone against an expediency for Peterson?...okay...that's carried... now for God's sake let's get down to the big problem...this stepping-up of the supplies-shuttle. Any word from Geneva?

That was where the transcript section ended. Three murders, quite clearly, had been agreed. No matter what they chose to call them, they were still talking about murder. But scientific adjustments? A great deal had already been published in the Western Press about strange experiments being conducted on inmates - chiefly dissidents and political prisoners - at the Dnepropetrovsk Mental Hospital in the Ukraine. They were barbaric, these experiments, but they had been known about and talked about for years. To push this Peterson to such agony of mind - to push him into risking and forfeiting his life - that surely had to be something new.

Trojan, by that time, had supplied us with information about that "something new" - for it was precisely that something which had decided him to make his dangerous break and talk to Benson. But he had nothing in writing. Nothing to document or substantiate his claims. We decided they were worth investigating but that it would be irresponsible merely to assume their accuracy.

We sought help from contacts in Washington. Contacts with influence in Senate and Congressional committees. And we were surprised by the speed with which those contacts achieved results. They didn't manage to bring the full story into the open, not at that stage, but they did make it possible for the public to see a glimmering of the truth.

On August 3, 1977, The London Evening News carried this story:

Human "guinea pigs" have been used by the CIA in experiments to control behaviour and sexual activity.

The American intelligence agency also considered hiring a magician for another secret program on mind control.

The experiments over the past 20 years are revealed in documents which were thought to have been destroyed, but which have now been released after pressure from United States senate and congressional committees. The attempts to change sex patterns and other behaviour involved using drugs on schizophrenic as well as normal people. Hallucinatory drugs like LSD were used on students.

Another heavily censored document shows that a top magician was considered for work on mind control.

20

The give-away word was "prestidigitation" - sleight of hand - which appeared in a 1953 memo written by Sidney Gottlier, then chief of the CIA's chemical division.

That story, we are convinced, would never have appeared if it had not been for the information supplied by Trojan. The "guinea-pig" facts would have remained as secret as the rest of the Alternative 3 operation.

The following day - August 4 - other newspapers developed the story. Ann Morrow, filing from Washington, wrote in the Daily Telegraph:

Some of the more chilling details of the way the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) tried to control individual behavior by using drugs on willing and unwilling human "guinea pigs" were disclosed yesterday by its director, Mr. Stansfield Turner.

In a large wood-pannelled room, Mr. Turner, who likes to be known by his rank of Admiral, told the Senate's Intelligence Committee and Human Resources Sub-committee on Health that such tests were abhorrent to him.

He admitted that the tests were carried out in "safe houses" in San Francisco and New York where unwitting sexual psychopaths were subjected to experiments and attempts were made to change sexual conduct and other forms of human behavior.

At least 185 private scientists and 80 research institutions, including universities, were involved.

Mr. Turner went on to say that one man had killed himself - by leaping from an hotel window in New York City - after he had "unknowingly " been used in a "CIA - sponsored experiment:. The report continued:

Senator Edward Kennedy asked some incisive questions, but like other members of the Senate Committee found it difficult to keep a straight face when asking about the CIA's operations "Midnight" and "Climax".

Questioning two former CIA employees about the experiments which began in the 1950s and ended in 1973, Senator Kennedy read out a bizarre list of accessories for the "safe houses" in San Francisco and New York where prostitutes organized.

In his flat Bostonian accent he reeled off, straight - faced: "Rather elaborate dressing table, black velveteen skirt, one French Can - Can dancer's picture, three Toulouse Lautrec etchings, two - way mirrors and recording equipment." Then he admitted that this was the lighter side of the operation.

21

Mr. John Gittinger, who was with the CIA for 26 years, trembled and put a handkerchief to his eyes. He just nodded in agreement.

The Times, as you can check for yourself in any good reference library, carried a similar story from Washington that day. It described documents taken from CIA files and added:

Batches of the documents have been made available to reporters in Washington under the Freedom of Information Act, which guarantees the public access to Government papers. They are nearly all heavily censored.

That's the give - away - there in that last line. Nearly all heavily censored. Alternative 3, right from its conception in the Fifties, has always been considered exempt from the Freedom of Information Act. And it is no coincidence that these controversial experiments also started - as is now openly admitted - in the Fifties.

The editors of these newspapers had no way of knowing that their stories, disturbing as they were, had a direct connection with Alternative 3. Nor that they had secured only a fraction of the truth about those CIA experiments.

Information obtained from the complete experiments was pooled with that gained at the Dnepropetrovsk Mental Hospital. It was pooled so that factory - production methods could be developed to manufacture a slave species.

Remember that curious statement made by criminal investigator Ron Sutton in October, 1975 - after the disappearance of the "batch consignment" from Oregon?

"They were told they would have to give away everything, even their children. I'm checking a report of one family who supposedly gave away a 150 - acre farm and three children." That's what he said. And now those words fit into perspective.

In the days before the American Civil War slaves had no right to a family, no right to keep their own children, and they had no property. They WERE property. That horrifying philosophy, we can now prove, has been adopted by the space slave - masters of the Seventies.

Alternative 3 needs regular consignments of slaves. It needs them to labour for the key people. For people like Dr. Ann Clark.

22

Three people unwittingly inspired that television documentary and, although they would be dismayed to realize it, they helped alert the world to the horrors of Alternative 3.

Dr. Ann Clark is a research scientist specializing in solar energy. Brian Pendlebury, a former RAF man, is an electronics expert. Robert Patterson is a senior lecturer in mathematics - or, rather, he was until the time of his disappearance. Today, almost certainly, Patterson no longer teaches mathematics but is working full - time for Alternative 3.

So these people, then, were the catalyst for the entire investigation. That is why, although we have never met them, we have dedicated this book to them.

Ann Clark, a raven - haired and attractive woman who was just nudging thirty, made her big decision towards the end of 1975. She would never have made it - although her pride stopped her admitting as much on television - if her fiance' had not unexpectedly broken their engagement.

Her future had seemed all set. She'd intended to soldier on despite all the frustrations, at the research laboratory in Norwich until they got married. And then, probably, until their first child was born. Conditions at the laboratory were, as she'd often said, "pretty grotty" but she was prepared to tolerate them. After all, it wasn't going to be for too long...

Then Malcolm had shattered her with his news. He'd been astonishingly casual about it. Quite unlike the Malcolm she'd thought she'd known. He'd just told her, brutally, that their engagement was a mistake, that he didn't "want to get tied down." And then, only four weeks later, she's heard he was talking about marrying some girl called Maureen...

Suddenly the laboratory, and everything about it, had seemed intolerably depressing. Squalid and almost sordid. All the authorities admitted that their research was important. Particularly with the energy shortage and the climbing cost of oil. But apparently it wasn't important enough to have money poured into it.

Experimental projects often took three times as long as they should because of equipment which was makeshift and, in some cases, almost obsolete. Certain projects could not even be started. "Maybe in the next financial year but, at the moment, there's no budget available." That was a stock answer from the administrators. And Ann Clark became progressively more frustrated.

She wanted, now, to throw herself harder than ever into her research, to immerse herself in it completely, but she was increasingly aware that - like the others - she was not being allowed to make full use of her training. She's never have felt so strongly if it hadn't been for Malcolm and his plan for marrying this Maureen...that's what really decided her to start a new life.

23

Plenty of others were doing the same that year. They were getting out of Britain, heading for the big - money jobs in Europe and in the Middle East. And in America. They were doubling their salaries and picking up bonus perks like company cars and lavish homes. They were also being offered far better conditions in which to work.

The Brain Drain. That's what it's called. And it is an accurate label. In the twelve years up to December, 1975 - the month Ann Clark reached her decision - nearly 4 million people had evacuated from the United Kingdom. More than a third of them were from the professional and managerial levels of British society.

One of the department heads at Norwich had left for a top post in America at the beginning of that year and, as his occasional letters had shown, he had not regretted the move. His only regret, in fact, was that he'd not made it years earlier. Ann Clark decided to write to him.

To her amazement, he telephoned her from California as soon as he got the letter. There'd be no problem at all, he told her. Not with her ability and experience. She was exactly the type they needed and, if she wanted, he could certainly get her fixed with the right job.

If she wanted! She'd never imagined it could possibly be that easy. Excitement surged through her as she listened. Apparently there was a man in London who was recruiting scientists for the company in California and if she cared to contact this man...

She jotted down the name and address of the man in London, together with his telephone number. "I'll get in touch with him today," she said. I can't tell you how grateful...

"Let me call him first," he interrupted. "I'll put him in the picture about you."

"Thank you," she said. "Thank you very much indeed."

She met the man in London the following day and it was all settled within an hour. She drafted her resignation on the train back to Norwich.

That was the week, as we will explain later, that she was first contacted by Sceptre Television. And, at first, she was more than happy to talk to them about her plans. She didn't mention Malcolm, of course, because the viewers didn't need to know about him. However, it was important, she felt, for people to be told exactly why scientists were flocking away from Britain. She was flattered, in fact, to be given the opportunity and she told herself that, by speaking out, she might help get conditions improved for those she was leaving...

Now we reach a mystery which we still have not completely resolved. The information we have fitted together has come from Ann Clark's friends and colleagues in Norwich. It almost provides an answer...but it also leaves questions.

24

Shortly after the Sceptre Television film unit arrived at the laboratory in January, 1976, for the first of a series of interviews - Ann Clark was visited there by a strange American. He'd made no appointment but just turned up and they assumed he was connected, in some way, with her new job. The American talked to her, privately, for a long time and afterwards she seemed upset. She refused to say what he'd wanted or what they'd discussed but she was obviously extremely upset.

That American, we have now established, went to her flat that evening and stayed for three hours. And after that evening her attitude to those around her, and to the Sceptre Television people, changed in the most extraordinary manner. She did her work as conscientiously as ever but she was oddly withdrawn. She refused to be drawn into any conversations. It was as if she had brought a shutter down all around herself.

There was also something else. One of her colleagues, an elderly man, told us: "I started noticing that she was sometimes looking at me - and at others - with a funny sort of expression in her eyes. It was almost as if, for some reason or other, she felt sorry for us. All a bit odd...

All VERY odd. Dr. Ann Clark left Norwich in a self - drive hired car on February 22, 1976. She left without working out her notice because, as she explained, the Americans were in a hurry to have her. So she became part of the Brain Drain. But she has still not joined that company in California.

Brian Pendlebury was thirty - three when he became part of the Brain Drain in July, 1974. His principal reason for leaving was that he disliked the climate, particularly the climate in Manchester. He was very much a sun person.

Since leaving university, with a degree in electronics, he'd acquired a taste for travel as a special - projects officer with the RAF.

The Air Force had shown him the world. It had also shown him that he wasn't the type to settle down in any hum-drum routine. Certainly not in Manchester.

Five months after leaving the service he applied for a job with a major electronics firm in Sydney, Australia. And, to the acute disappointment of his parents, he got it.

They were, they now admit, disappointed for a selfish but very understandable reason. He was their only child and they absolutely adored him - having scrimped to get him through university and been so proud over his success - and for years they'd seen so very little of him. They had hoped that now he would live at home, for a year or so, at least. His mother also had this cosy vision of Brian marrying some nice sensible Lancashire girl and of herself becoming a doting grandmother.

25

"Maybe we can work out some compromise," he'd made up his mind. He did promise, however, that he'd keep closely in touch. He'd write regularly and he'd send lots of photographs. Yes, he knew that he'd said all that before...but this time he really would.

He kept that promise. He kept it for five months after leaving Manchester. Every week they got a letter with news of his life in Australia. The job, it seemed, was going fine and he was really enjoying himself there. They also got photographs: Brian surfing...Brian with friends at a nightclub...Brian in front of Sydney Harbor bridge. That bridge picture was a particularly good one. They had it framed and they put it on the mantelpiece.

So everything was fine, absolutely fine, except for some disconcerting facts.

Brian Pendlebury did not live at the address shown on his letters. The company for which he claimed to be working insist they have never heard of him. The truth, as far as we can establish it, is that Pendlebury never got to Australia.

Britain's system of taxation was a favorite hate subject with forty-two-year-old Robert Patterson. And, as a mathematician, he always had the latest facts to justify his anger.

His friends at the University of St. Andrews, where he was a senior lecturer, had become accustomed to a regular bombardment of figures:

"Do you realize that in Germany the most a man has to pay on the topslice of his taxable earnings is only 56 per cent! And in America...now that's a country where they really appreciate the value of incentive...in America it's only 50 per cent!"

Every one of his sentences, when he was talking tax, seemed to finish with a fiery exclamation mark.

"But what's it here in Britain? You ask me that and I'll tell you! Eighty - three per cent...that's what it is here...83 per cent! And you wonder why people here aren't interested in working harder!"

This sort of conversation - with Patterson supplying all the questions and answers - could go on indefinitely without anyone else saying a word. It was a hangover from his lecture - room technique and it made him quite intolerably boring.

Many people at the university were rather relieved when he eventually announced that he was going to follow his own advice. He and his wife Eileen were getting out of Britain. They were taking their two children off to a fresh start in America.

26

He was unusually reticent about what he was going to do in America, saying no more than that he'd been "invited on an interesting project". It seemed obvious, despite his evasiveness, that he'd accepted some really plum post in America. And at the university, they weren't surprised, for he was recognized as one of the most brilliant mathematicians in Britain. It was a pity that he was also such a bore.

Patterson broke his news at the beginning of February, 1976, and a paragraph appeared in the Guardian.

One of the researchers at Sceptre Television - the one who'd organized the initial interview with Ann Clark - saw the paragraph and immediately contacted Patterson. He was offering Patterson the best platform he'd ever had to air his views on taxation for the program Science Report was networked right across the country.

"Thank you for the invitation," said Patterson.

"Normally I'd love to take it up but I've got a time problem. We're flying at the end of next week and there's so much I've got to do..."

"We wouldn't need all that much of your time," persisted the researcher. He'd had trouble enough finding the right people and he wasn't going to let a prize like Robert Patterson slip away too easily. "We could send a reporter and film unit up to Scotland and do it, perhaps, at the university or at your home." Harman, he knew, would probably squeal about the cost of sending a unit all that way from London - just for one interview - but let him bloody squeal.

They couldn't expect to hold a network slot without spending a few bob. Anyway, he thought, Chris Clements could fight that out with Harman. That's what producers were for. His job was to get the right people and he was damned well doing it. "It wouldn't take long, Mr. Patterson," he said. "And we could do it almost any time to suit you."

Patterson hesitated. "How about next Tuesday morning?" he said.

"Fine. What time?"

"Eleven o'clock?"

"Right. And where?"

"It would be more convenient here at my house."

"Then your house it is, Mr. Patterson. We'll be there at eleven. And thank you."

Colin Benson, now co-operating with us, was the TV reporter who went to Patterson's home on that Tuesday morning. He found the house locked and obviously empty. The Pattersons, according to neighbors, had driven off in a hurry at lunchtime on the Saturday.

If you watched that particular edition of Science Report, you will probably recall that the family's car was later found abandoned in London. But the Pattersons - Robert, Eileen, sixteen - year - old Julian and fourteen - year - old Kate - have not been seen since.

27

February 6, 1977. Sir William Ballantine kept looking nervously at his watch. He couldn't understand why Carmell hadn't telephoned. That, quite specifically, had been the arrangement. He should have telephoned - and fixed the meeting - as soon as he arrived in England.

From his study window, stark against the unseasonably bright blue of the afternoon sky, Ballantine could see the gigantic listening saucer of the Jodrell Bank radio telescope.

He stared at it now, trying to stifle the conviction that something had gone dreadfully wrong. For days he'd had this premonition that somehow they had discovered what he was planning, that time was draining fast away.

It had been a mistake, a terrible mistake, to have kept the tape a secret for so long. He should have told the public, months earlier, what was really happening in space. He should have done it that day when - at NASA headquarters in America - he saw the undeniable proof..that men had achieved the impossible.

But, There again, who would have believed him? The facts were so fantastic that, despite his international standing as a radio astronomer, there would have been scepticism. Particularly if NASA denied the story - and Harry Carmell had warned him that NASA would deny it most emphatically.

Carmell had helped him. He'd been nervous about doing so but - without seeking permission from his superiors - he had helped. He'd played Ballantine's Jodrell Bank tape through one of the NASA electronic decoding circuits. And then they'd seen, just the two of them, the astounding pictures which were suddenly flowing from the unscrambled tape.

Carmell, immediately, had been terrified. "Don't yap about this - not to anybody," he'd said. "These bastards would kill us if they knew what we've seen. Take a word of advice, friend, and destroy that damned tape..."

We have those words, exactly as they were spoken, for they made a big impression on Ballantine. Enough of an impression for him to record them in his 1976 diary.

Ballantine did not speak of what he'd seen at NASA. He tried to forget. But, of course, he couldn't forget.

On Wednesday, January 26, 1977, Ballantine got an unexpected telephone call from Carmell in America. Most of Ballantine's telephone conversations contained such a mass of technical information that he taped them for future reference. He taped this particular one and now, by permission of Lady Ballantine, we are able to present it:

28

CARMELL: Did you do like I said?...Did you destroy that tape?

BALLANTINE: I haven't told anybody about it...but I've still got it safe...

CARMELL: Thank Christ! Then we can burst the whole bloody thing...

BALLANTINE: I'm sorry...what are you talking about?

CARMELL: Batch consignments...that's what I'm talking about...I tell you, friend, it's incredible what these goons are doing...

BALLANTINE: Batch consignments?...I don't know what that means...

CARMELL: Stinking atrocities...that's what it means ...But I don't want to say no more, not on the wire...I'll tell you when I get to you...

BALLANTINE: You're coming to England?

CARMELL: By the first damned flight I can...I've quit NASA and I've borrowed a baby juke - box...

BALLANTINE: I don't think I caught that...

CARMELL: A juke - box...you know...a de-coder like we used last year...I've got one and I'm bringing it to England...

BALLANTINE: But what's happened?...And what are batch consignments?

CARMELL: Wait till we meet, friend, and it'll blow your mind...Jesus, I knew these bastards were evil but I never imagined...look, I'll ring you when I get to London, okay?

BALLANTINE: You expect to get here tomorrow?

CARMELL: Can't rightly say...they know I've got this baby and they're looking for me...so I gotta play it smart. I might get up through Canada and out that way...give me till...well, let's say a week Sunday...I should have made it before then...

BALLANTINE: You know, I find this very hard to credit...you really are in some danger?

CARMELL: Not some danger, friend...the worst danger possible....but I couldn't stand by and just let them do what they're doing...now, look, I gotta go...so a week Sunday at the outside, okay?

BALLANTINE: That'll be February 6...

CARMELL: Yeah...but with luck it'll be earlier...if you haven't heard from me again by February 6 - let's say by four in the afternoon - you'll know it's all screwed up...

BALLANTINE: And what does that mean?

CARMELL: That I'll be dead, friend, that's what it means.

29

BALLANTINE: Good Lord!...but if that were to happen... what should I do?

CARMELL: If you give a damn about decency or human dignity...you'll go right ahead and expose the whole stinking shebang...there's a guy in Geneva who'll help you...his name is...

That was the core of the conversation. We are not printing the name mentioned at that stage by Harry Carmell for it is that of the man we now refer to as Trojan. In view of the way Trojan has helped in this investigation, his life would be in acute danger if he were in any way to be identified in this book.

So there was Ballantine in his study on February 6. It was nearly 4:45 in the afternoon. And there was still no call from Carmell.

Maybe, he thought, Carmell had been caught. Maybe he'd been caught and killed. It all bordered on being outrageously impossible but, after what he had seen at NASA, Ballantine no longer considered anything impossible.

Obviously he ought to contact the man in Switzerland. He'd promised Carmell that he would. Well, he'd more or less promised him. But even that wasn't as simple as it seemed. Carmell had given him no address or telephone number. Only a surname. And Geneva was rather a large place.

By 5:30 he was convinced that Carmell was dead. He was also convinced that there was serious danger for himself. Carmell's words kept running through his mind: "I knew these bastards were evil but I never imagined..." And now Ballantine's own imagination was churning over. They probably already knew about his tape and about what he intended doing with it..."

He took the tape from the drawer, knowing that he had to get it to somewhere safe. That was when he realized there was one friend who might be able to advise him - John Hendry, the London managing editor of an international news agency.

Kendry, to start with, had a staff reporter in Geneva - and he would almost certainly trace the man named by Carmell. Hendry would also be able to tell him the best way to break the news - for it was essential to make as big an initial impact as possible. He'd pull the whole bizarre business right into the eye of the public. He'd also force a thorough investigation into the disappearance of Harry Carmell.

He checked his watch again. Early Sunday evening. Chances were that John Hendry was still at his office. They worked odd hours in Fleet Street. It was worth trying.

He was lucky. He caught Hendry just as he was preparing to leave. Here, again with Lady Ballantine's permission, is a transcript of that telephone call:

30

BALLANTINE: John?...This is William Ballantine...

HENDRY: Well. what a happy surprise! How are things a Jodrell?

BALLANTINE: I've got a problem, John...rather a serious problem...and I need your help...

HENDRY: Certainly, you know full well that any help I can give...what sort of problem?

BALLANTINE: Can I meet you this evening?

HENDRY: You in London?

BALLANTINE: I'm calling from home...but it wouldn't take me long to drive..

HENDRY: Well...I was just about wrapping up for the night...

BALLANTINE: It is important, John...and I promise you it's the biggest story you've seen this year...

HENDRY: So how can I say "no"? You want to come to the office?

BALLANTINE: I'll be with you as quickly as possible. Oh - and John - I'm also putting a package in the post to you...but I'll explain that when I see you...

HENDRY: I don't follow...why not bring it with you...?

BALLANTINE: Because I've got a feeling...a premonition if you like...that events are starting to move rather fast...and I want it safely out of my possession...

HENDRY: And that's supposed to be logic? William, what is all this about?

BALLANTINE: Just wait for me...then you'll understand everything.

The sequence of events which immediately followed the conversation have been described by Lady Ballantine. We met her on July 27, 1977. Here is the statement she made then:

I entered the study just as my husband was replacing the receiver and I couldn't help noticing, right away, that he was in a state of agitation. This extremely self - possessed man. He never allowed himself to get flustered. He had been behaving a little strangely, a little out - of - character, for about a week - ever since he had a phone call from some man in America. He wouldn't discuss it with me - which, again, was unusual - but he seemed to be very much on edge.

However, I'd never seen him quite as he looked when I went into his study. I had the distinct feeling - and I don't think I'm dramatizing with hindsight - that he was frightened.

31

I asked him what was troubling him, for it was obvious that something was, but he kept shaking his head and saying there was nothing.

He told me that he had to drive to London immediately for a meeting...

Lady Ballantine became rather distressed during this part of the statement and we waited for a while until she had composed herself. She apologized for crying and said she was anxious to continue because she wanted to assist. Our investigation, she pointed out, would have had the fullest endorsement from her husband. She went on:

He took a package from the drawer of his desk and sealed it into a large envelope which he addressed to Mr. Hendry in London. He put stamps on it and asked me to take it straight away to the post box. He said it was most urgent and, although I pointed out that there was no collection that evening, he was quite adamant that I should take it then.

He said that he would probably be back from London in the early hours of the Monday morning but, as you know, I never saw him again.

Why did Ballantine act so strangely over that tape? It would have been more logical, surely, for him to have taken it with him to London. Getting his wife to post it - so ensuring it would be delayed before reaching Hendry - seems to make little sense. We confess we do not have the answer. Unless there is one to be found in that transcript of his conversation with Hendry...

"I've got a feeling...a premonition if you like ..."That's what he said. And it could be the key. We now know that the tape would never have reached Hendry if it had gone into Ballantine's car. But then, borrowing an expression from Lady Ballantine, we do have the benefit of hindsight.

Ballantine's death, as you may recall, made all the front pages. The splash headline in one of the tabloids read FREAK SKID KILLS SCIENCE CHIEF - and that seemed to sum it up. There was no obvious explanation for his car having careered off the road on that journey to London. Ballantine was a competent and steady driver who had travelled that route often before. He would have known about that awkward bend and about that terrible drop beyond the protective fencing.

And, even in an agitated state, he would almost certainly have approached it with caution. A freak skid. Yes, that seemed to say it all.

32

Only one photograph of the crash was made available to the Press and television. A whole series were taken by agency cameraman George Green but only one was ever released. It showed part of the wreckage - and a blanket - covered shape on a stretcher.

We asked Green what was in the other pictures. Why had they been confiscated?

"I've been ordered to keep my trap shut," he said. "But I'll tell you this...you ought to ask that Professor Radwell why he lied at the inquest. Now I'm saying any more...it'd be more than my job's worth. He's the boy you want to talk to."

Professor Hubert Radwell was the pathologist who gave evidence at the Ballantine inquest. He had reported that the body had been "extensively burned". That in itself was puzzling for there had been no fire - and Radwell had not been pressed for an explanation.

We checked back on Trojan's transcript of the Policy Committee meeting - the one held only three days before Ballantine's death. And we studied the words used about Ballantine and Harry Carmell:

R SEVEN: As you say then, there is no room for question
...both of them have got to be expediciencies.

A EIGHT: All agreed?...Good...I suggest a couple of hot jobs...coroners always play them quiet...

"Hot jobs" and "extensive" burns...and coroners "always playing them quiet." And now this cryptic statement from cameraman George Green. It all had to add up to more than mere coincidence.

Professor Radwell, at first, refused to make any comment. "The Ballantine business is in the past," he said. "Nothing can be gained by raking it all up."

We formed the impression that he was under some pressure, that he had been given instructions to stay silent. And that he was uneasy about those instructions.

That impression proved right. We pressed him to specify the extent of the burning. And suddenly, to our surprise, it seemed as if he wanted to unburden himself. "It was uncanny," he said. "Quite uncanny." He paused before adding: "They told me it would cause unnecessary alarm...that there was no point in people knowing...but now I'm not sure...I've always regarded the truth as sacrosanct."

Another pause. Then, obviously having taken a big decision, he talked quickly and at length. His statement, which we will be presenting later, provides an astonishing insight into what really killed sir William Ballantine. And into what the Policy Committee mean by a hot job".

33

Harry Carmell first heard the news of Ballantine's death on a radio bulletin. He heard it early in the morning on February 7 and it hardly registered.

Very little was registering with Carmell at that time. The prolonged strain of dodging out of America, of knowing he was a target for execution, had pushed him back into a habit he thought he'd kicked for ever. He was back on drugs. Hard drugs.

He was in his mid - thirties but normally looked at least ten years younger. On this particular morning, in an hotel bedroom in London's Earls Court, he was more like a sick man of sixty or more. He lay fully dressed on the covers of the unmade bed, his bleached blue eyes fixed unseeingly on a crack in the ceiling. His skin, too tight over his face, had the pallor of a shroud. And he felt as if he might once again start to vomit.

His girl, Wendy, was out getting the morning papers. He lit a cigarette, tried to will himself back to normality. But his head still seemed full of fog.

Ballantine. He could almost swear he'd heard that guy on the radio mention the name Ballantine. Or maybe it was a name very similar.

It made him remember, however, what he'd got to do. He'd got to contact Ballantine. He'd got to give him the juke - box. He checked the date on his watch and swore with quiet desperation. February 7. Jesus! That had to mean he'd been blown out of his mind for three whole days - ever since he'd said to Ballantine, he was in a panic. He'd told Ballantine, told him quite specifically, that he'd call by February 6 at the latest. And that if he didn't call by then, Ballantine could assume he was dead.

He scrambled off the bed, started fumbling through his wallet. Where the hell was that bloody number? He found it on a slip of card just as Wendy returned. He sat on his pillow to start dialling and she handed him one of the newspapers. One glance at the front page made him drop the receiver as if it was suddenly white - hot. That guy on the radio...he had heard him properly. Ballantine had already been murdered.

Fear instantly cleared his brain. "Throw your things together." He was on his feet and his tone was decisive. "We're pulling out - now."

Wendy stared at him, bewildered. "What's up?"

"I want to go on living - that's what's up." Carmell was already bundling his clothes into a leather grip. "Now come on - shift."

Twelve minutes later they'd settled their bill and were out of the hotel. And as they hurried away, he told her exactly why they were in England.

We should mention here that we are suppressing Wendy's surname at her request.

34

She fears retaliation from the Policy Committee and, although we consider those fears are not justified, we have agreed to respect her wishes.

We have interviewed her on three occasions and she has explained that she thought their furtive escape through Canada was somehow connected with Carmell having broken his contract with NASA.

She had not questioned him. And she certainly had no idea his life was in danger. Not until that morning in February. He told her everything that morning, as he hustled her along the pavements of Earls Court. He told her the lot.

"They'll start scouring the hotels now," he said. "So from here on we live rough. We find ourselves a squat somewhere and we live rough."

And later, in the derelict house where they slept for the next two nights, he told her he was determined to go ahead with his plan. He was going to expose them and their atrocities. And he wasn't going to be stopped by Ballantine's death.

"Mabey I ought to go straight to the Press," he said. That's the only way to play it now..."

"But what if they don't believe you?"

"Of course they'll believe me!" It's the truth and I'll damned well make them believe me!"

"I was watching a programme on television the other night," said Wendy. "While you were...you know...asleep. I was watching a programme called Science Report..."

"So?"

"So it strikes me that a programme like that would have scientific advisers...and those advisers, dumbhead, might understand what you're talking about..."

Carmell immediately got enthusiastic. "You're damned right they would...better than any newspaper reporter...Hey, I really think you've hit it. This Science Report...what station was it on?"

"I got the impression it goes out every week...but I can't remember which station," said Wendy. "I do know it had a plug - spot in the middle so it couldn't have been the BBC..."

"I'll find it," interrupted Carmell, "And I'll give them the most sensational science report they've ever had..."

35
SECTION FOUR

Science Report had a very successful thirteen - week trial on ITV in 1975. Ratings were good, surprisingly good for such a serious project, and Sceptre Television had little difficulty persuading the network to take a twenty - six week run in 1976.

That was tremendous for Chris Clements and his ego, for Science Today was his baby. He produced it and directed it. And he claimed, not without justification, to have originated most of its brightest ideas.

So the network's decision was a great compliment to him. It was also an enormous challenge. Keeping up that standard for twenty - six weeks in a row - it really was quite an order. Clements had no doubts, however, about his ability to meet that order. It merely got his adrenaline going.

He was a wiry little man, who looked as if he might once have been a jockey, and he had sparse dark hair which always needed combing. He always spoke fast, in urgent staccato sentences, as if his tongue were in a permanent hurry. And he generated enthusiasm like Chris Clements.

They were going to stockpile at least a dozen programmes. That was the plan. Then they'd do the last fourteen during the run.

By the middle of December, 1975, they already had seven in the can - so they were comfortably ahead of schedule - and the production team was considering which subject to tackle next.

There were eight of them that day in Clement's office which was across the corridor behind Studio B. He'd often protest that the office was too small to hold proper meetings and also that he disliked the cooking smells which drifted up from the canteen kitchen.

His protests had done no good. They'd merely brought curt little notes from Leonard Harman - Assistant Controller of Programmes (Admin) - pointing out that space was at a premium, that Science Report didn't qualify for its own Production Office. Harman, of course, had a far bigger office. One with proper air-conditioning.

So there they were, the eight of them, in the office which was really too small. Clement's production assistant, Jean Baker, was at the desk. She usually sat at the desk during these meetings because she did most of the note - taking and the referring to files and because Clements liked to think on his feet. He paced back and forth, his hands and arms dancing expressively, as they bounced ideas around.

The others included former ITN newscaster Simon Butler, the programme's anchor-man, and reporters Katherine White and Colin Benson. Opposite them were the scientific advisers, Professor David Cowie and Dr. Patrick Snow, and in the corner nearest the door was researcher Terry Dickson.

"Wave - power," suggested Benson. "energy from waves..."

"Been flogged to death, love," said Clements. "Didn't you watch BB-C2 either. And, reckoning it a good subject, he'd been quietly researching wave - power. He'd have to scrap that now. Clements, despite his habit of calling everybody "love", was tough. When he said no he meant no.

"Newsweek have got an intriguing piece on robot servants," said Cowie. "They're now being built, it seems, to polish the floors and even make beds..."

"Now that I like!" said Clements gleefully. "Mechanical maids! Yes, we could really have fun with that one. Jean love...put that down as a possible...we'll come back on it."

"I think it's time we took a really close look at the Brain Drain," said Butler.

Clements stopped his pacing, looked at him doubt - fully. I don't know, Simon...strikes me as a bit heavy." He cupped his chin in his right hand. "Is it really us?"

"Well if it isn't, I think it ought to be," said Butler. "We are a science programme and you consider the number of scientists who are leaving...and what it means to this country..."conceded Clements. "Maybe if we dressed it up with some good human stories..." He looked at Dickson. "How about it, Terry? Reckon you could dig up a lively selection of case -histories?"

Dickson could see his work-load growing fast. "It would take time," he said guardedly.

"Of course it would, love. Getting the right people...I can see that. But it doesn't have to be top priority. Say we were to think of it in terms of five programmes from now...then you could plod along with it when you're not too hectic with the first four..."

It was as simple and as casual as that. None of them at that meeting had the slightest inkling that they were about to embark on the most astonishing television documentary ever produced - the one which was to explode the secrecy of Alternative 3.

Dickson knew there was only one satisfactory way to tackle this sort of problem - dozens of telephone calls. Probably scores of them, even. It was no use hoping to rely on local stringers because they never really came up with the goods. Not on this type of job.

He'd have to call head - hunting firms and the major professional organizations...universities and research establishments. He'd get told that people didn't want to appear on the programme or he'd find that they were too damned dull to be allowed on the programme. And if he worked at it hard enough - and had a bit of luck - he'd finish up with a good varied collection. Of people who mattered and who mattered and who could talk.

He got lucky, as it happened, quite soon. One of his first telephone calls - made purely on spec - was to a complex of research laboratories. A helpful man in the Public Relations department told him that one of their solar - energy experts would soon be leaving for America. Her name was Ann Clark and she was aged 29.

The P.R. man pointed out that naturally he couldn't say if Dr. Clark would agree to take part in the programme. If she did agree, however, there would be no objection from the management. He also told Dickson that Dr. Clark was "a real cracker" but quickly added that that was background information and that he did not wish to be quoted.

Ann Clark, to Dickson's relief, said she'd be pleased to appear in Science Report. In fact, she was delighted that a television company should be planning to show the disgusting conditions in which British scientists were expected to work. She was, quite obviously, a very fluent speaker.

Clements usually liked to see a photograph and a biographical breakdown of people before committing himself to putting them on his programme. He'd made that rule, years before, after bling-booking an expert on beauty aids - only to find that she looked and sounded like the worst of the Macbeth witches. He'd had to record her, of course, and they'd junked the recording after she'd left the studio. And Harman had raised hell about the waste of valuable studio time.

Now Clements played safe. He had this rule. So Dickson arranged for a Norwich news-agency to call on Ann Clark. This agency came back with the whisper that she wasn't going to America purely because of working conditions. The conditions were bad, very bad, but she'd also had some sort of romantic bust-up...

Dickson decided to forget the whisper. It only complicated matters. Clements approved the photograph. And Colin Benson, the young coloured reporter, set off with a film unit for Norwich.

Later there were suspicions that the assignment was sabotaged by somebody at Sceptre. Those suspicions could never be proved. So we can merely record that something happened to the film after it was taken back for processing - and that only a fraction of it could be used in the transmitted programme.

At the time, however, it seemed like a routine job. Benson says: "Dr. Clark was not only extremely articulate and eager to co-operate but she had obviously also done a great deal of useful home-work on emigration. She pointed out that, apart from the frustrations facing her at the laboratory, there were many ways in which initiative and flair were being stifled in Britain.

"I remember her talking about how a man called Marcus Samuel started the Shell organization-in 1830, I think she said - as a small private company selling varnished sea-shells. Men of his caliber, she said, were now being positively discouraged in Britain - and that was another reason she was glad to be off to America.

"She was, in fact, a really good interviewee, a television natural. And I was delighted with what we'd got in the can."

His delight died abruptly when they got back to the studios and the film was processed. Most of it - sound and vision - was completely blank. It had never happened before and there was no logical explanation for it having happened now. There had been more than forty-five minutes of interview which, after editing, would have provided about twelve minutes of screen time. All they could salvage was a fifteen-second segment.

Clements, naturally, was fuming. Sending a unit all the way to Norwich was damned expensive - and he knew how Harman would squeal about him going over budget. He quizzed Benson at length. "You're really sure that she is that good? That it's really worth going there again?"

"It was a hell of a good interview," insisted Benson. "I say we should go back."

He telephoned Ann Clark, explained the situation, and fixed a new appointment. He takes up the story from there: "She was very sympathetic and she agreed quite willingly to see us again. But two days later, when we got to Norwich, it was all very different..."

"She wasn't at her flat, where we'd arranged to meet her, but after quite a lot of trouble we did find her at another address. She looked flustered and - I don't think I was imagining this - a bit frightened. It seemed quite clear that, for some reason or another, she'd been hoping to give us the slip.

"She certainly didn't want to talk, didn't want to know at all. Later we discovered she'd even told the security people at the laboratories that we were pestering her and that they shouldn't let us in. It was just a crazy-situation.

"I did manage to grab a few words with her at the gate the next morning - although she tried to duck away when she spotted us waiting there - and I asked her what was wrong.

"You know what she replied? She just looked at me sort of queer and said - 'I'm sorry...I can't finish the film...I'm going away.'"

"Then she scuttled inside and that was the last we ever saw of her."

Benson, although he did not realize it at that stage, was just starting to get enmeshed in Alternative 3...

Benson and the film team were travelling dejectedly from Norwich when Terry Dickson noticed the paragraph about Robert Patterson in the Guardian.

Dickson knew that this time he wouldn't need to worry about getting a picture and a biography for Patterson, apart from being a leading mathematician, often appeared on television as a taxation expert. He was a fluent and impressive performer.

At first Patterson seemed uncharacteristically reluctant. He had a lot to do. He wasn't sure if he could spare time for an interview. But finally Dickson persuaded him. They agreed that the unit should be at Patterson's home at 11:00 a.m. the following Tuesday.

"Let's hope we have a bit more luck than at Norwich," said Clements sourly. "I've never known such a run of disaster..."

In fact, of course, it was even worse than at Norwich. Benson got no reply when he arrived at the house in Scotland. The downstairs curtains were partially-drawn and, peeping through the gaps, he could see that the rooms were untidy. There were bits of food and dirty dishes in the kitchen and on the dining-room table...books and oddments of clothing strewn across the floors. There were six pints of milk outside the front door and the garage as empty. The whole place looked as if it had been abandoned in a hurry.

Benson checked with the neighbors. The Pattersons, he was told, had left three days earlier. They had driven off at speed on the Saturday and they had not been seen since.

Benson went to the University of St. Andrews and there he was told by the vice-chancellor that Patterson had already gone to America. He'd had to go, apparently, a little earlier than he'd originally intended.

"He told me that they wanted him more urgently than he'd realized," said the vice-chancellor. "I'm terribly sorry you've had this wasted journey...and I must say it's not like him at all...breaking an appointment like this. I can only assume that, in the rush, he completely forgot..."

They? Who were they?

The vice-chancellor shook his head apologetically. "Can't help you there either, I'm afraid. Patterson was rather mysterious about what he was going to do - and about exactly where he was going. Somewhere in America... that's as much as he ever said."

We have now checked with every university in America. Not one of them has any knowledge of any post having been offered to Robert Patterson. And no - one can suggest where he might possibly be.

We have also checked with the American company which Dr. Ann Clark was due to join - the one which was "in a hurry to have her".

They have confirmed that they did offer her a job at more than double her Norwich salary. They have also told us that they received a brief letter from her - regretting that, for personal reasons, she would not be able to go to America.

Simon Butler, you may recall, explained the next step in the mystery during that television documentary. He went with a camera-crew to the car park of Number Three Terminal, Heathrow Airport, and pointed out the car which had been hired in Norwich by Ann Clark.

We quote the exact words he used in that programme: "Whatever was going on brought Ann Clark here...she had told friends that she was flying to New York. And yet there is no record of Ann Clark leaving this airport on that or any other day. The only evidence that she was here at all is her abandoned car. Beyond that - nothing."

There was another abandoned car nearby in the same park. A blue Rover. It belonged to Robert Patterson.

It was some time, however, before the television team found those cars. Months, in fact, after Benson's return and the Alternative 3 programme might never have been produced - if it hadn't been for the bizarre business of Brian Pendlebury.

By April, 1976, the Brain Drain project had been almost completed. Dickson had found another batch of interviewees and work had progressed in double-harness with work on other subjects - including a revolutionary new method for "stretching" petrol consumption and the Mechanical Maids.

Butler merely had to do a couple of final studio links and the Brain Drain would be ready for transmission.

They were, of course, baffled by the strange behaviour of Ann Clark and Robert Patterson - and there'd been some caustic memoranda from Harman about the "reckless waste of film facilities" - but they were a science programme. And runaway people were hardly their concern.

So that's how it would have been...if Chris Clements, in his local one evening, hadn't heard and oddly disturbing story from one of his neighbors...

This neighbor had relatives called Pendlebury who lived in Manchester. And it appeared that the Pendleburys' son - an electronics expert - had completely vanished in Australia.

41

And, even stranger, it seemed that he's been writing to his parents for months - from an address where he was not even known.

"Brian always was a selfish little sod, only interested in what was in something for himself, but this is just plain daft, isn't it," said the neighbor. "You know, he even sent them pictures and everything but now it seems he wasn't even there..."

It certainly didn't make sense to Clements. He mulled it over that night and mentioned it the next day to Colin Benson. "Seems to be the season for disappearing boffins," he said. "Or, on the other hand, maybe he's just playing some prank on his folks."

"What if he isn't?" Benson asked suddenly.

"Well what else could it be?"

"What if there's some pattern here? What if Clark and Patterson and now this Pendlebury...what if they're all connected in some way?"

"I fail to see how they could be..."

"Let me go up to Manchester and see the parents..."

"Look, love, please...we're already a week behind schedule and we can't afford to go bouncing off at tangents..."

"Chris, I've got a feeling...don't ask me why...but I've got a feeling we're on the edge of something big here."

Clements shook his head. "We've got a show to do. I know you're still sore, Colin, over what happened in Norwich and Scotland...but nobody blamed you for those cock-ups...so do me a favor and relax."

"Harman blamed me..."

"Harman blames everybody for everything. That's the way Harman's made. And, anyway, it was me that got the kicking - not you."

"I'll go on my day off," said Benson. "And I'll pay my own damned expenses."

"Waste of time, love," said Clements. "And don't imagine I'm having the train fare swung on to my budget."

"Couldn't I put it down as entertaining contacts?"

Clements grinned. "I don't think I've ever met anybody quite as persistent as you. All right - go ahead and do a bit of entertaining."

We have presented that conversation exactly as it took place, with the help of the two men, because it emphasizes how there was nearly no further investigation...how Sceptre Television almost veered away from Alternative 3.

Benson's decision to go to Manchester was the turning-point. It culminated in Sceptre Television abandoning a thoughtfully-balanced but unspectacular programme on the Brain Drain - and replacing it with one which was to startle the world.

42

Dennis Pendlebury was a milkman until his retirement in 1976. He and his wife Alice live in a terraced house in one of the shabby suburbs of Manchester. They are, as they say themselves, a very ordinary couple. They have never had much money and they made many sacrifices to get their son Brian through university.

Mrs. Pendlebury, in fact, worked as a charwoman - to help pay for extras - until Brian joined the RAF.

Benson was in their front room, the one reserved for visitors and special occasions, looking through the colored photographs which appeared to show their son in Australia.

He recorded the entire conversation, with the Pendlebury's permission, and they have agreed to us making use of the transcript in this book.

The Pendleburys were together on the sofa, facing him over the tea-cups and cakes. "So we were a bit disappointed, of course, when he stopped writing but we didn't give it too much thought at first," said Mr. Pendlebury. He re-lit his pipe, took a couple of reflective puffs. "Our Brian, he never was much of a one for writing."

"So how did you find out?" asked Benson. "I mean, about him not being there..."

"It was Mrs. Prescott over at number nine," said Pendlebury. "She was the one who found out. Her daughter Beryl emigrated out there...what would it be...five years ago now?"

"Six years," said Mrs. Pendlebury. "Seven come September."

"Well, anyway, five or six...makes no odds. Her daughter's living out there...that's what I'm saying...and Mrs. Prescott was going to visit her, see. So we said to her...why don't you look up out Brian? We thought it would be a nice surprise for him. You know...someone from home. She'd known him, you see, since he was knee-high to that table..."

"Tell the man what she said..."

"That's what I'm doing, woman...I am telling him." There was a trace of irritation in Pendlebury's tone. His pipe had gone out again and there was a pause while he struck another match. "So she went to the address - the one on the letters and that - but the man there reckoned he'd never heard of him."

"Who was this man?" asked Benson.

"What beats me is that we wrote to him there," said Pendlebury. "And we know he had the letters because we got replies."

"This man," persisted Benson. "What did Mrs. Prescott say about him?"

"He was an American, I think she said," said Pendlebury. "I don't think she said any more than that."

43

"Perhaps he was the new tenant? Perhaps your son had just moved out?"

"No, I don't think so. He'd been there for years, judging by what he said to Mrs. Prescott."

"Well, that was it, wasn't it. They said exactly the same...that they'd never heard of him."

Mrs. Pendlebury prodded him with her elbow. "Show the man the letter," she said.

"Oh yes, you've got to see the letter," said Pendlebury. "It's in the other room, mother - behind the clock on the mantelpiece." He leaned forward and lowered his voice confidentially as his wife left the room. "It's getting her down something awful," he said. "The worry of not knowing."

He offered Benson another cup of tea, which Benson refused, and poured one for himself. "We wrote to this firm to try finding out what was going on and...ah, here's their reply. You just take a look at that."

Benson accepted the letter from Mrs. Pendlebury and say from the letter - heading that it was from the Sydney office of an internationally - known electronics company. It was signed by the Personnel Director and it was addressed to Mr.

Pendlebury. It read:

Thank you for your letter which has been passed to me by the Managing Director. I am afraid that you have been misinformed for I have checked our personnel records for the past five years and I have established that at no time has the company employed, nor offered employment to, anyone by the name of B. D. Pendlebury.

I can only suggest that you are confusing us with some other organization and I regret that I cannot help you further in this matter.

Benson read the letter twice and frowned thoughtfully. "And you're sure you're not confusing them with another outfit?"

"Positive," said Pendlebury. "Pass me that wallet, mother..." From the wallet he took a slip of paper bearing the name and address of the firm in Sydney. "See...there it is...in Brian's own writing."

Mrs. Prescott from number nine, a widow with a shrewd and agile mind, confirmed their story but had little to add. She picked her words carefully, obviously not wishing to hurt the Pendleburys, but she gave Benson the impression that she'd never really approved of Brian. It was all in her tone rather than in what she actually said. Benson remembered what Clements had been told by his neighbour...about Brian Pendlebury having been a "selfish little sod"...and he wondered if Brian might be playing some cruel trick on his parents. Then he dismissed the thought. It was too ridiculous.

44

Benson borrowed the letter from the electronics company, together with the photographs, and Mrs. Prescott offered to show him a short - cut to the stop<for the station bus.

As they turned the corner she suddenly spoke with quiet vehemence: "You see...that's the thanks they get for spoiling him."

He glanced at her in surprise. "How do you mean?"

"He looks down on them, does Brian. Bit ashamed of them, if you ask me. Going to university...it gave him big ideas..."

"You surely don't think he's disappeared on purpose?"

She pursed her lips. "Not my place to say, she said. "Look...there's your bus coming...you'll have to run if you're going to catch it."

He didn't take her implied opinion at all seriously - not until months later. It seemed to him then, as the bus trundled through Manchester, that she'd merely been trying to squeeze the last ounce of drama from the situation.

He spent a long time on the train studying the photographs, particularly those taken in the open. There was one detail in them which intrigued him, which didn't seem quite right. And yet he could not be sure...

Back at the studios he sought the help of a stills photographer who was attached to the graphics department. This man made copy - negatives of the outdoor photographs and then re-printed them as large blow-ups.

Benson was not concerned with the one which appeared to have been taken in a nightclub for that, he reasoned, could have been posed almost anywhere. In London. In Manchester even. And, anyway, it didn't contain that one off-key detail...

He waited impatiently until the blow-ups were ready. Then he saw, quite clearly, that he'd been right. In every picture - including the one of Brian Pendlebury surfing and the one of him by the Sydney Harbor Bridge - there were three birds in the sky. Those birds were identical in every picture - and so were their positions.

There was also something else, something which had not struck him before: the pattern-formations of the wispy clouds were exactly the same in each picture.

The explanation was startlingly obvious: The "Australian" snaps of Brian Pendlebury had been taken against a painted backdrop. They were, without question, "studio jobs:."

He scooped them up, raced along to Clement's office behind Studio B. "We've stumbled on one hell of a Brain Drain story here," he said. "I can't start to understand it yet but...Chris...we've just got to do some digging..."

45

SECTION FIVE

This digging, as Simon Butler said on television, soon revealed an astonishing fact:

Twenty-one other people, mainly scientists and academics, had vanished in the same mysterious circumstances. They were among the 400 researched - ostensibly for an extended version of the Brain Drain program - by the Science Report team.

Some, as Butler explained, had disappeared entirely on their own. Others, like Patterson, had gone with their families. All had told neighbors or colleagues that they were going to work abroad.

However, as we have already indicated, only part of the story was presented on television. Many facts were still not known at the time of transmission. And much material which was known was censored from the program.

The principal censor was Leonard Harman, Assistant Controller of Programs (Admin), who also tried to neuter this book.

Letter dated August 9, 1977, from Leonard Harman to Messrs. Ambrose and Watkins:

I have been given to understand that you propose writing a book based on one of the Science Report programs produced by this company and that you plan to publish certain confidential memoranda concerning this program which I originated or received.

You should know that I am not prepared to sanction such publication and that I would consider it a gross invasion of my privacy.

I suggest that the book you are apparently preparing would savour of irresponsibility for, as you are undoubtedly aware, my company has now formally denied the authenticity of much of the material presented in that program.

It is to be hoped that you do not proceed with this project but, in any event, I look forward to receiving a written undertaking that no reference will be made to myself or the memoranda.

Letter dated August 12, 1977, from lawyer Edwin Greer to Leonard Harman:

I have been instructed by Mr. David Ambrose and Mr. Leslie Watkins and I refer to your letter of the 9th inst.

46

My clients are cognizant of the statement made by your company following the transmission of the Alternative 3 program and, in conducting their own inquiries, they are mindful of the background to that statement.

They point out that any copies of memoranda now in their possession were supplied willingly by the persons who either received them or sent them and that they therefore feel under no obligation to give the undertaking you seek.

One of the first batches of memoranda we received related to a curious discovery made by researcher Terry Dickson in the middle of May, 1976. By that time, despite objections from Harman, the Science Report team had been enlarged and allocated its own production office. The Brain Drain program had by then been withdrawn from the series - with the intention of the investigation being presented, as it eventually was, as a one-off special.

Memo dated May 17, 1976, from Terry Dickson to Chris Clements - c.c.(for info only) to Fergus Godwin. Controller of Programs:

We have now established that relatives of at least two more of our missing people, Dr. Penelope Mortimer and Professor Michael Parsons, received letters which appeared to have come from them in Australia. In both cases the letters, which ceased after four or five months, bore the address used in the Pendlebury case.

Photographs of Dr. Mortimer and Professor Parsons, allegedly taken in Australia, show the backdrop used in the Pendlebury shots. The birds and clouds are all identical.

As you requested, I arranged for a Sydney freelance to check the address given in the letters. He reports that it is a two-bedroomed ground-floor flat near the waterfront which has now been empty for nearly a year. It was occupied, apparently, by a middle-aged American called Denton of Danton (he has been unable to verify spelling).

Neighbors say that Denton or Danton was remote and secretive. He was never known to have visitors. Our man says there are local rumors that he had connections with the CIA. Do you want him to pursue the Denton/Danton trail and do you want me to arrange still pix of the flat?

47

Memo dated May 13, 1976, from Leonard Harman to Mr. Chris Clements:

A copy of Dickson's note concerning inquiries made in Australia, without my authorization, has been passed to me in the absence of the Controller of Programs.

I have already issued specific instructions that I am to be kept fully informed on all aspects of this project. Please repeat those instructions to Dickson and all other members of the Science Report team - and ensure that they are fully understood.

I am surprised to learn that, despite my earlier warnings, you are apparently still determined to waste company time and money. Let me remind you that Science Report is regarded by the Network as a serious program and that its credibility can only be damaged by this wild - goose course on which you are set.

The more I learn of this affair, the more obvious it becomes that you are losing your objectivity as an editor. Many people do disappear quite deliberately because, for personal reasons, they wish to break all contact with their pasts and make completely fresh starts. I will not tolerate this station turning that sort of situation in an excuse for silly sensationalism.

I had assumed that you were experienced enough to recognize that you are clearly being hoaxed over this business of the photographic backgrounds. Now, I gather from Dickson's note (which, I repeat, should also have been sent to me), that you are apparently getting involved in "local rumors" - supplied by a freelance journalist we have never before used - about some man whose name you don't even know having "connections with the CIA".

Have you considered that some of your so-called mysteries might have been caused by incompetence on the part of your staff?

Did Dr. Ann Clark, for example, refuse to grant Benson a second interview because she found his manner offensive during the first one?

Did Dickson confuse the date fixed for the interview with Robert Patterson and so send an expensive unit on a fool's errand to Scotland?

These are the questions which should be occupying your attention, not some nonsense at the other end of the world. I am not prepared to sanction any further expenditure in Australia and I recommend, once again, that you resume the duties prescribed in your contract.

48

Memo dated May 19, 1976, from Chris Clements to Terry Dickson:

CONFIDENTIAL. I attach a copy of a rollicking I've just had from Harman. It's self-explanatory and, for the moment, I'd like you to keep it to yourself. In future don't send carbons to anyone before checking with me.

We'd better soft-pedal for the moment on Australia.

Will you line up Mortimer and Parsons parents to be interviewed by Simon or Colin?

Please ignore that snide comment about Robert Patterson. Not worth getting upset over. And please don't mention that about Ann Clark to Colin. He sometimes gets a color-chip on his shoulder, as you know, and it isn't like that. This is just Harman being Harman.

Six days later, on May 25, Terry Dickson gave Clements the bad news. "We're not going to get any interviews with the Mortimers or the Parsons," he said. "They've changed their minds and are refusing to have anything to do with the program."

"But why?" demanded Clements. "They surely gave you a reason."

"None at all," said Dickson. "They just say they'd sooner not."

"You think they've been got at?"

Dickson shrugged, pulled a face. "That's the impression I got but proving it...that's another matter."

"They're important, love...have another go at them."

Dickson did. But Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer were adamant. So were Mr. and Mrs. Parsons. Not one of them, despite having agreed earlier, would have anything further to do with Science Report. We tried to contact them in September, 1977, but we were too late. Neighbors said they had gone to live abroad. And they had left no forwarding addresses.

This whole question of the staged photographs - and of the forged letters - was deliberately omitted from the television program. Clements admits that he now regrets havng left them out for, as he now realises, they were an intriguing feature of the Alternative 3 operation. He explains that he didn't see what significance they could possibly have - and because of pressure from Harman.

He told us: "At the time I thought Harman was nit-picking. They didn't seem important enough to merit all the aggro I was getting from him. Of course, if I'd known then what I know now...

49

We were equally baffled by those photographs and letters. We intended to mention them, just as we have, simply so that you would know all the circumstances. But as for offering any explanation...we were prepared to recognize that would not be possible. That was how it seemed until January 3, 1978, when we received an envelope from Trojan. The contents provided an unexpected insight into what they call The Smoother Plan.

Trojan's covering note explained that he had discovered the attached document - an early directive to Alternative 3 cells in various parts of the world - in an otherwise empty archives file.

In fact, he had sent a Photostat copy of the document. It was dated November 24, 1971, and it had been issued by "The Chairman, Policy Committee." It was addressed to "National Chief Executive Officers" and it read:

The recent publicity which followed the movement of Professor William Braishfield was unfortunate and potentially damaging. In order to avert and repetition, it has been agreed to adopt a new procedure in all cases where families or others are likely to provoke questions.

The procedure, to be known as The Smoother, is designed to allay fears or suspicions in the immediate post - movement period.

Department Seven will arrange for letters to be sent, in appropriate handwriting, to reassure those whose anxiety might constitute a security risk. It is usual for people to send home photographs of themselves in their new surroundings. Arrangements will therefore also be made for the dispatch of suitable photographs. These photographs will be taken immediately before embarkation.

A list of manned cover addresses will be circulated to National Chief Executive Officers by Department Seven. Officers will then allocate addresses to individual movers.

At least four addresses will be provided in each "country of destination" - so enabling Officers to "separate" any movers who may originate from the same area. There is, however, no limit to the number of movers who can be allocated to any of the addresses.

It may prove necessary to change the addresses from time to time and Department Seven will notify Officers of such changes.

The Smoother Plan will operate for a maximum of six months in respect of each individual, unless circumstances are exceptional, for that is considered long enough to provide a reasonable "break - off period".

50

It is emphasized that, because of the administration involved, The Smoother Plan is to be activated in selected cases only. The sole criterion will be if, in the opinion of the Officer responsible, there could be a publicity risk. Most movers, certainly all those taking families, will not merit this treatment. Components of Batch Consignments, obviously, will not be considered.

Suddenly it made sense. It was clinical and cruel. But it still made sense.

The Pendleburys idolized their son. That was why they got those cheerful and gossipy letters - written by a stranger they would never meet.

Ann Clark had left no-one who would have expected letters. Friends might have been offended, perhaps, if they'd written but got no reply. But they would not have been sufficiently offended to have turned it into a great public issue.

As for Robert Patterson...well, he took his family with him.

But these people, and others like them, had apparently all gone willingly. Where had they gone? And why?

It is now clear that Brian Pendlebury deliberately took part in the conspiracy to fool his own parents. Such behavior might seem beyond any logical explanation. But we must point out, in fairness to Brian Pendlebury, that his actions must be measured against the nightmare background to Alternative 3. That background, you might feel, excuses them all. Well...almost.

Thursday, March 3, 1977. Another submarine meeting of Policy Committee. Chairman: R EIGHT.
Transcript section supplied by Trojan starts:

A TWO: Sure, Ballantine was neat enough...nobody's bitching about Ballantine...but what about Carmell?

A EIGHT: We'll find him...he's still on the loose somewhere in London...but we'll damned well find him...

R SEVEN: A man like him being allowed out of America... it was a bad, bad mistake...
A EIGHT: For Chrissake...please...don't let's start that crap again...I told you last month that our people goofed...now didn't I tell you that?
R SEVEN: Yes, but it is particularly serious when...
A EIGHT: Listen...there's no need to turn this into a Federal case. He hasn't got the tape and, as long as he hasn't got it, there's no great panic...

51

R THREE: Do we have any idea at all where the tape might be?
A EIGHT: No...that's just one hell of a mystery... we've turned Ballantine's place over but there's no sign...
R EIGHT: And it was not with him in the car when he died?
A EIGHT: No...definitely not. Our man was right there with him...
A TWO: So, we don't know where Carmell is and we don't know where the tape is...what's to say they aren't already together?
A EIGHT: Because he wouldn't have waited, that's what...he'd have blown it already.
R ONE: Has there been any sighting of Carmell? Or are we merely assuming that he is in London?
A EIGHT: He was in an hotel in Earls Court...he was there with a girl...our people missed him by about an hour...
R TWO: And now?
A EIGHT: Our information is that they're probably living rough and keeping on the jump...couple nights here, couple of nights there...but it's only a matter of time...
R EIGHT: Time is important...particularly with that tape still missing...perhaps we should put more operators into London...
A TWO: The guy's right...we ought to saturate the town...Jeez! With a character like Carmell at large...
A EIGHT: Okay, okay...so we'll step it up...
A THREE: We've got muscle to spare in Paris and...
A EIGHT: I said we'll step it up - all right?... so just let me handle the details...we'll get Carmell and that damned tape.
R EIGHT: I look forward to hearing of both achievements at our next meeting...Now, you have all seen the expediency report on Peterson?
R TWO: Entirely satisfactory...
A FIVE: I'm still not sure he deserved a hot job...
R FOUR: Very few men deserve to die but for some it is necessary...and Peterson was one of them...
A ONE: That's right...and, remember, people don't suffer long with a hot job...it is instantaneous...
R EIGHT: Dr. Carl Gerstein...the old man...it was agreed at the last meeting that he should be kept under surveillance...what is the news on him?

A EIGHT: No news...he's been laid up with bronchitis and, apart from his housekeeper, he's seen no - one for weeks.

52

R EIGHT: So the situation, then, is unchanged...I recommend that we maintain observation on the old man...are we all agreed?...Good...Now, we have had a request from Geneva for more Batch Consignments of animals...

A SEVEN: Yeah...I,ve already got things shifting on that one...we'll be taking cattle from Kansas and Texas and ponies from Dartmoor...had a bit of a snarl-up over transport but lifts are now scheduled for the second week in July...

R EIGHT: How many beasts will be in each Batch?

We never learned the reply to that last question. That was where the transcript section ended. We have no concrete evidence of cattle disappearing in significant numbers from either Kansas or Texas during the second week of July, 1977, although there were complaints of an increase in rustling at that time.

However, we do know - because it was published in the Daily Mail on July 15 - that the pony-lift from Dartmoor ended in disaster.

That section of transcript also emphasises how close Dr. Carl Gerstein - the person mentioned merely as "the old man" in the February transcript - was unwittingly hovering near sudden death. If an Expediency order had been agreed by the Policy Committee - at either the February or the March meeting in 1977 - Simon Butler would never have been able to interview Gerstein at Cambridge. And Alternative 3 might never have been exposed.

How would Gerstein have died? Probably, like Ballantine and Professor Peterson, the aerospace expert, in what the Policy Committee call a "hot job". And, as was pointed out by the anonymous A ONE, a hot-job death is instantaneous. We have had that confirmed by pathologist Professor Hubert Radwell who gave evidence at the Ballantine inquest.

Professor Radwell, when pressed about the "extensive" burns on Ballantine's body, eventually made this statement:

It was technically accurate to describe Ballantine's body as having been extensively burned although those words embrace only part of the truth. They represented an understatement. I was requested to make that understatement in order not to promote any unnecessary public alarm.

I was conscious, of course, that there had been some degree of public hysteria following earlier reported instances of spontaneous combustion and I agreed that it would be of no benefit for all the details to be described at that hearing.

53

I now regret having made that decision and I welcome this opportunity to correct the record.

Ballantine's body was not merely burned. It was reduced to little more than cinders and scorched bones. His skull had shrunk because of the intense heat to which he had been subjected and yet his clothing was hardly damaged.

There were small scorch marks on the leather cover of the steering wheel, obviously where Ballantine's hands had been gripping it at the time of the incident, but the rest of the vehicle showed no evidence of burning.

However, extensive damage was suffered by the vehicle, as the police stated at the inquest, and Ballantine's spine was severed by the engine which had been hurled backwards after breaking free.

This is the first occasion on which I have personally encountered spontaneous combustion in a human being but I have studied papers relating to twenty-three similar occurrences. The effect can be likened to that seen during the micro-wave cooking of a chicken, except, of course, that it is far more severe. The chicken flesh is roasted within seconds although the covering skin is not charred and any receptacle containing the chicken remains cold enough to be handled.

There is still no known explanation for this phenomenon.

We asked Professor Radwell if it were conceivable that spontaneous combustion could be deliberately induced. He replied: "The Americans and the Russians have certainly been experimenting along those lines, with a view to developing spontaneous combustion as a remote-controlled weapon, but the results of those experiments have been kept secret. I would consider that the possibility of them having been successful is highly unlikely..."

Highly unlikely! Almost everything connected with Alternative 3 is highly unlikely. The super-powers actively pooling scientific information - that is highly unlikely. So is the conspiracy of silence about the real achievements in space. But the terrifying truth is that it has been happening. And that it continues to happen.

On Wednesday, February 10, 1977 - three days after hearing of Ballantine's - the American, Harry Carmell, telephoned the Science Report office at Sceptre Television. Colin Benson took the call and he thought, at first, that he'd got another crank on the line. The man was being so guarded and mysterious - refusing even to give his name.

And, particularly since the transmission of the Mechanical Maids program, there'd been a spate of crank callers.

It was strange, really, the way some viewers had reacted to the robot servants. One man had angrily accused anchor-man Simon Butler of having stolen his invention - claiming that he'd been working on an identical model for five years in his attic. Two women had wanted to know if there was a domestic agency where they could hire these maids. And an ardent trades-unionist had given a heated tirade about Sceptre encouraging "cheap, scab labour".

This peculiar American, it seemed to Benson, fitted right in the crank category - until he mentioned knowing about scientists who had disappeared. That was when Benson switched on the tape-recorder attached to the telephone. Here is the transcript of the rest of that conversation:

BENSON: Would you repeat that, please...what you said about scientists...

CARMELL: I said I know why they're vanishing...and who's behind it...

BENSON: So tell me then...why and who?

CARMELL: Not on the telephone...I can't talk on the telephone...

BENSON: Well, really, this is a bit...

CARMELL: Listen, I'm not bulling...you know what they did to Ballantine...

BENSON: Ballantine?

CARMELL: Sir William Ballantine the astronomer...

BENSON: Oh yes, I read...the car crash...

CARMELL: I met him when he came to NASA HQ in Huston... that's why he died...

BENSON: I'm sorry...this doesn't seem to be making much sense...

CARMELL: Can we meet?

BENSON: What do you mean that's why Ballantine died?

CARMELL: No more on the wire...either we meet or I go someplace else...

BENSON: Where are you calling from?

CARMELL: Public box...about a mile north of your studios...

BENSON: Then why not come here?

CARMELL: Too risky...you know somewhere less obvious?

BENSON: Look...Mister...er...

CARMELL: Harry. Just call me Harry.

BENSON: Fine. Now, Harry, you're not having me on, are you?...I mean, you really were with NASA?

CARMELL: A busy street would be best...

BENSON: All right...we'll do it your way...There's a big street market just around the corner from the studios...you can't possibly miss it...how's that sound?

CARMELL: Give me a spot in this market...and how will I know you?

BENSON: There's a post-box outside a fruiterer's called Drages...and you won't have any trouble identifying me. I'm wearing a dark-blue suit and I'll be carrying a red book...and I happen to have been born in Jamaica...

The appointment was fixed for one hour later. And if you saw that special edition of Science Report you will already know exactly what happened next. Simon Butler told viewers:

What you are about to see may be considered by many of you as unethical. However, we believe that in the light of subsequent developments our action was justified. A hidden camera was positioned near the market. (Authors' Note: The camera was actually installed in a Tourist Information Kiosk). Benson was equipped with a miniaturized transmitter so that we could record the conversation between them.

We should point out that we have challenged Sceptre Television on the ethics of filming in that manner - particularly in view of Carmell's obvious anxiety for secrecy. Clements has defended his decision by claiming that the film would not have been transmitted if events had developed differently. It is a matter of record, however, that Clements and the company were subsequently reprimanded by the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Here, verbatim from the transcript of that controversial piece of TV film, is the conversation which took place in the market:

BENSON: I think you're looking for me - Colin Benson.

CARMELL: Yes...hello...thanks for coming...listen, something I have to know: how far are you willing to go with this thing? I mean, all the way?

BENSON: That's what I'm here for. Can you help?

CARMELL: I can help...and if you want confirmation you'd better talk to Dr. Carl Gerstein.

BENSON: Gerstein?

CARMELL: Carl Gerstein...he's at Cambridge. Ask him about Alternative 3.

BENSON: You're talking in riddles, Harry...what's Alternative 3?
CARMELL: Later...we do this my way - okay?
BENSON: Okay.
CARMELL: Let's...walk on a little, hm?
BENSON: Fine.

Viewers will recall that the sound quality was poor during this interview, particularly during the section when they were discussing Carl Gerstein and Alternative 3. There was a great deal of static interference and Benson's radio microphone was also picking up the voices of passers-by and the sounds of traffic. Most of the words, however, were quite discernible.

CARMELL: I'm sorry if I seem a little nervous - it's mainly because I am.
BENSON: Nervous of what?
CARMELL: (Brief laugh) Of contracting a fatal case of measles...you know what I mean? Like Ballantine?
BENSON: But surely that was an accident...I remember reading in the papers that there was some sort of freak skid...
CARMELL: Crap! There was no way for that to be an accident...it was what they call an Expediency and I know why it happened...and I've got to get it on record before they get to me...
BENSON: They?
CARMELL: Listen, let's just stick to me telling you what I have to tell you - okay?
BENSON: If that's how you want it...
CARMELL: Right! That's how I want it...this address, tomorrow morning, ten-thirty. Bring everything you've got - camera, tape machines, witnesses - that's the kind of protection I need. I'll have all the answers for you there...
BENSON: Hey! Hold on a minute...come back...

He grabbed at Carmell's sleeve, tried to stop him, but Carmell was too fast. He jerked his arm free, dashed through the narrow gap between two fruit stalls, and disappeared in the crowd thronging the centre of the road. Benson was disappointed. The whole elaborate set-up, it seemed to him then, had been a ridiculous waste of time. He looked at the scrap of paper which Carmell had pushed into his hand. On it was scrawled an address in Lambeth.

"Well, what do you think?" he said later to Clements.

"Follow through, love, of course. I'll fix for you to have a film-crew tomorrow morning."

"And what about this Gerstein character?"

"I'll talk to Simon...see if he fancies a trip to Cambridge."

So that's how it was left on the evening of February 10, 1977. Simon Butler, who had interviewed Dr. Carl Gerstein years before for Independent Television News, was to go to the university. Colin Benson was to keep the Lambeth appointment.

Both were due for surprises. Particularly Colin Benson.

Benson arrived at the Lambeth address with a full camera crew shortly before 10:30 a.m. on February 11. It was a three-storeyed terraced house - dingy and claustrophobically gaunt - with rubbish mouldering in the narrow patch of front garden. Most of its windows, like those of its neighbors, had been boarded up but one on the first floor appeared to be screened with a dirty sheet. The garden gate had been ripped away and there were broken roof-tiles on the path leading to the front door.

Benson hurried up the steps, followed by the technicians, and rapped on the door. No reply. He tried again, harder. Still no response. The house appeared to be deserted. He shouted and started pummelling with both fists. Then there was a girl's voice from inside: Who is it?

"My name's Benson. Colin Benson."

On the other side of the shabby door, in the darkness of the hall, Wendy was frightened. She still didn't know exactly who they were or what they wanted but she did know that they could arrive at any time. And that they were likely to hurt Harry. She bit her bottom lip, regretting now that she'd betrayed her presence. "Who?" he asked.

Benson shook his head in frustration. There was no number on the house. He stepped back along the path to double-check the numbers on either side, returned to the door. "This is 88, isn't it?"

"Who did you say you are?" Wendy's American accent, now more obvious, was the confirmation Benson needed.

"Colin Benson," he repeated. "I'm here with a television film unit."

Wendy, as she has since told us, was still suspicious. Still fearful. And, with the way things were that morning, she wasn't thinking too clearly. Maybe this was a trick. Harry had said they used all sorts of tricks. "How ca I be sure of that?" There was a tremble in her voice. "What program are you with?"

"Science Report...we were asked to come by a man called Harry."

A short. silence. Then the sound of heavy bolts being drawn back. The door was opened just a couple of inches.

Wendy, her hair unkept and her eyes wide with anxiety, stared at Benson and then at the camera and the sound equipment. She seemed to be having difficulty making up her mind. "So you really are the telly," she said.

This, Benson decided, was getting stupid. "Can we come in and see him?" he said. "He did invite us."

Wendy shrugged with indifference. "If you really want to." She pulled the door wide open. "But you won't get much out of him," she said. "Not this morning."

They followed her through the mildewed hall and up a flight of naked stairs. Ancient paper decorated with roses was peeling away from the walls and the whole place smelled of dirt and of damp. Wendy stopped, suddenly remembering, at the landing and she shouted down to the soundman who was the last in: "Bolt the door after you...we've got to keep it bolted." And she waited, watching, while he did so.

"You know, this really is a waste of time," she said quietly to Benson ... "Maybe it would be better, after all, if you just turned around right now and left."

"He asked me to be here - so I'm here."

She shrugged again. "As you like."

There were three doors leading off the landing. She opened the one at the front of the house. And there, in the room with the sheet-covered window, Benson saw Harry Carmell.

He didn't recognize Carmell, not at first, for what he saw was a haggard and vacant-eyed creature. It was shivering convulsively and its teeth were chattering and it was clutching a matted blanket to its naked shoulders - and it seemed impossible that this could be the man he'd met, only the day before, in the market.

But it was Carmell. It really was. He was hunched defensively, with his knees up to his chest, on an old sofa - the only bit of furniture in the room - and he was blinking rapidly as if trying to see more clearly.

Benson stepped forward tentatively. "Harry?"

Carmell pressed himself back harder against the sofa. He'd stopped blinking now and was staring with mistrust and bewilderment. "Who are you?" Even his voice was different. Like that of an old, old man.

"You remember me...Colin Benson."

Wendy tried to help. "It's all right, Harry...he's with the telly..."

Suddenly, horrifyingly, Carmell gave a howl of despairing terror. "It's them!" he yelled. "They've bloody tricked you and now they've found me..."

"What's he talking about?" demanded Benson. "What is the matter with him?"

Wendy ignored him and hurried across to kneel by the sofa and cradle Carmell. "Now, Harry..." she said soothingly. "It's quite all right...and there's nothing to be frightened of." She glanced up at Benson, jerked her head towards the door. "You'd better go."

"Is he on acid or something?"

"Just get out of here, will you!"

"But maybe we should get a doctor..."

That was when Carmell, in an unexpected burst of mystical violence, flung Wendy aside and came hurtling off the sofa. "So come on then, you bastards!" he yelled. "Come and kill me!" He waved his arms wildly and the blanket slipped to the bare boards. Now they could see that he was wearing no clothes apart from his socks.

Suddenly he was very still - half-crouched like an ape just a few feet in front of Benson. His fingers, rigid as metal rods, were spread wide and his hands were raised to the level of his hips. Now there was defiance smouldering in his eyes. "But Harry Carmell don't die that easy." His voice - contrasting disconcertingly with his grotesque appearance - now sounded normal. Just as Benson had heard it in the market. "Harry Carmell's a fighter...and he'll bloody take you too." As he spoke, he took one pace backwards to steady his balance and then, with an horrendous battle-scream, he sprang at Benson. Benson ducked, tried to dodge, but Carmell's nails raked down his face - narrowly missing his eyes - to make deep and symmetric furrows in the flesh of both cheeks.

The film technicians, wedged behind Benson in the doorway, were unable to help and Benson, now as terrified as Carmell had been, was lashing out wildly in an attempt to beat off the attack. One of his blows crunched sickeningly in Carmell's nose and suddenly the fight was over.

Blood spouted from Carmell's nose. He moaned, clutched his face with both hands and collapsed in surrender to the floor. He lay there with his face pressed hard against the dirty boards. And suddenly his puny naked body was racked with great juddering sobs.

Benson moved backwards, unsteadily, to the landing where the cameraman grabbed his arm to support him. "I'm sorry," he said to Wendy. "I didn't expect..."

"I told you to go." She was now again kneeling by Carmell, gently wiping his face with a handkerchief. "Now for God's sake just leave us!"

They reported to Clements as soon as they got back to the studios and it was Clements who decided to notify the police. "We can't possibly leave him there like that", he said. "Sounds to me as if he needs hospital treatment."

There was, however, no sign of Carmell or Wendy by the time the police got to the house. Wendy had gone out almost immediately after the TV team had left. We know that because she has told us.

She had gone out to buy antiseptic and a bandage from a nearby shop. When she returned, there was no Harry. There are reasons to suspect that he became a hot-job victim but we have been unable to find any proof. So we can merely record that Harry Carmell has never been seen since.

There were three of them - Clements, Benson and Dickson - clustered around one of the little editing machines in the Film Department. They were watching, yet again, the uncut film shot in the market.

61

"That's the spot!" said Clements. "Go back on that!"

The technician sitting in front of them touched the rewind key and there were high-pitched Donald Duck noises from the sound-track as the film raced in reverse.

A flip on another key and the pictures stopped whirling in a backwards blur. Now there was silence and on the midget screen there was a frozen show of Benson and Carmell.

"Right, love, shift it."

The tiny black-and-white figures immediately became animated, walking away from the postbox in the background, and their voices could be heard. Benson was talking about Ballantine:

BENSON: But surely that was an accident...I remember reading in the papers that there was some sort of freak skid...

CARMELL: Crap! There was no way for that to be an accident...it was that the call an Expediency and I know why it happened...and I've got to get it on record before they get to me...

"Okay...kill it there," said Clements. The technician stopped the film, switched off the machine. "Well?" asked Clements. "What do you reckon?"

Dickson shook his head doubtfully. "Acid-head," he said. "Obviously he'd read about Ballantine in the papers and he was living out some fantasy..."

"I'm inclined to agree," said Clements. "I'm not sure we should waste any more time on him. Colin?"

The marks on Bensons cheeks were now scarring over. He rubbed them thoughtfully. "Remember what he said about vanishing scientists. So maybe you're right...maybe he is an acid-head...but it's a hell of a coincidence, isn't it...the way his fantasies spilled over into our work. Did Ballantine go to America like Harry said?"

"Yes, he did visit NASA but that was also in the papers," said Dickson. "I checked the cutts."

Benson looked at him sharply. "There! Aren't you missing the obvious? You know because you checked the cutts. What're you saying? That this acid-head also checked the cutts? Or was it that he really knew?"

Clements stood up, glancing at his watch. "So what do you want to do, Colin?"

"Maybe talk to Lady Ballantine?"

"You can't go troubling her, man. It's the funeral today."

"So I'll be discreet," said Benson. "And I'll wait till tomorrow."

62

Friday, February 12, 1977. Lady Ballantine was composed and hospitable when Benson arrived by appointment at 3:30 p.m. She told him virtually what she later told us on July 27. And he was particularly interested in the large envelope which Ballantine had insisted on her posting. Did she know what it contained?

"I just can't imagine," she said. "I know it was a package that he took out of his desk but I have no idea what was in the package."

Did he give any explanation for having it posted to London - although he was driving to London that same evening?

"That's what puzzled me most of all," said Lady Ballantine. "Particularly when I discovered later it was addressed to the man he was planning to meet."

"I'm sorry," said Benson. "I don't follow..."

"The envelope...it was addressed to a journalist called John Hendry. He and William - they'd been friends for years. Well...late, very late, on Friday I got a call from Mr. Hendry. He was still in his office waiting for William and, well, you know the rest..."

"Have you spoken to Hendry since? Asked him about the package?"

"He rang again on Saturday...with his condolences...but I was far too upset to think about packages or anything like that..."

Four hours later Benson was in Hendry's office in Fleet Street.

"A premonition - that's the word he used," said Hendry. "Events were starting to move fast and he had a premonition - that's exactly what he said. Extra-ordinary, isn't it...when you think what happened."

"The package," persisted Benson. "What was in the package?"

Hendry got up from his desk, crossed to a table by the window, took a spool of tape from a drawer. "Just this," he said. "No message, no nothing."

"But what's on it?"

"That's the oddest part of all. Not a damned thing as far as we can make out."

"You've played it right through?"

"Sure...we tried everything but there's nothing there. You know what I think? I think he sent the wrong one by mistake."

"That hardly sounds likely, does it," said Benson. "A man like Ballantine - surely he'd be meticulously careful."

Hendry went back to his desk, threw the tape on the desk, lit a cigar. "Normally, yes...but, as I told you, he wasn't himself on Friday. His voice on the telephone - I hardly recognized it. He was all strung-up and excited and -

63

I hate to say this because he was a friend of mine - but he was talking the most incredible rubbish. Maybe he'd been over-working or something - who knows - but I got the impression that he'd really flipped. And you know something? That could explain the accident. If his driving was half as wild as his words...well, it's hardly surprising, is it?"

Benson picked up the tape. "Could I borrow this?"

Hendry drew deeply on his cigar, making the end glow fiercely. "Don't want to be personal," he said. "But those marks on your face...how did you get them?"

Benson fingered his cheeks, grinned ruefully. "It's all right, they're not tribal marking," he said jokingly. "I had to interview rather a rough character. I don't think he liked my questions."

Hendry returned the grin. He'd been a reporter in Fleet Street during the "heavy-mob" days - before the place had got so sedately respectable - and his nose was slightly lop-sided. "It happens," he said laconically. "Why do you want the tape?"

"We've got some pretty sophisticated equipment at the studios. Maybe we can trace something on it."

"No harm in you trying," said Hendry. "But I'll want it back afterwards and if you find anything interesting I'll expect to be told right away."

There was nothing on the tape. Or, at least, there seemed to be nothing.

It was played in its virgin state, you may recall, in that television documentary. And, as Simon Butler pointed out then, it apparently held only "the ceaseless noise of space - not much different from countless other tapes in the archives of radio astronomy."

At that stage in the program Butler told viewers: "What it meant...what the vital information was that Sir William Ballantine had deciphered out of this apparently random cacophony...was something we would have to wait much longer to find out."

They discovered later that the waiting time would have been far shorter if Harry Carmell had not been drugged out of his mind on that February morning in Lambeth. For Carmell, of course, had he de-coder - the one he'd stolen from NASA.

But they were steadily making progress. While Benson was in that derelict house, being attacked by the crazed Carmell, Butler was trying to fix an appointment with an old man at Cambridge - an old man who would eventually steer them closer to the astonishing truth about Alternative 3.

64

Dr. Carl Gerstein's housekeeper was possessively protective over him. She'd been bullying him for years over his pipe-smoking. It was a filthy and disgusting habit, in her opinion, and it was certainly bad for him with his weak chest.

There'd been a told-you-so tone in her voice when he developed a severe bout of bronchitis at the end of January, 1977. All she'd said about that pipe, she felt, was now vindicated. Maybe this time he'd listen and throw the dirty thing away. But Gerstein, of course, had no intention of throwing away his pipe. It was part of him.

She had her way, however, about visitors. There were to be none, absolutely none, until he was completely fit. He needed absolute rest - that's what the doctor had said - and she was going to make sure he got it. She refused to even allow him downstairs to speak on the telephone. "It's draughty in that hall and if you need to speak on the phone you can do it through me," she said. "You're staying up here in the warm."

That was why, on February 11, Butler found himself having to deal with her. She'd seen Butler often on television and she had a soft spot for him. But it wasn't soft enough for her to relax the rules.

"Not this month," she said. "Out of the question."

"How about next month?" asked Butler. "Isn't he expected to be better by then?"

We should mention here that Butler was later horrified when we showed him the relevant part of Trojan's transcript - dealing with Gerstein - of the Policy Committee meeting held on March 3, 1977:

A EIGHT: No news...he's been laid up with bronchitis housekeeper, he's seen no-one for weeks...

R EIGHT: So the situation, then, is unchanged...I recommend that we maintain observation on the old man...

Butler would have acted very differently if he had known that Gerstein was under surveillance. But he did not know and he persisted: "It really is very important...I wouldn't dream of troubling him if it were not..."

She relented, said she would go upstairs and check with the doctor. Soon she was back on the line. "I can only make a provisional arrangement, Mr. Butler," she said. "It'll have to depend on how he's feeling."

"What date do you suggest?"

"It's not me suggesting - it's Dr. Gerstein. He says he's quite looking forward to meeting you again." She was determined to keep things in proper perspective. "March the fourth, about two o'clock - would that be suitable?"

65

Butler checked his desk diary. Tuesday, March 4, was completely clear. "Thank you," he said. "Unless I hear to the contrary, I'll be there then."

The investigation, although they still did not realize it, was soon to take an astonishing turn.

SECTION SEVEN

That interview, which was filmed, took place as planned on March 4, 1977, and it was an important feature of the program transmitted on June 20. Here is how Simon Butler, in a voice-over link, introduced it to viewers:

Gerstein's theories, when he first put them forward over twenty years ago, had been almost universally dismissed. He was called an alarmist and a pessimist. Events proved him, on the contrary, to be something of an optimist.

By the late Sixties the earth was already so trapped within an envelope of its own pollution that heat was having increasing difficulty in escaping.

Ten years earlier than Gerstein's prediction, the notorious "greenhouse" effect - due to the eight-fold increase in the carbon dioxide levels last summer - had become a reality, threatening to double the average global temperature.

Gerstein's chest was still not clear at the time of that interview. He was still wheezing. And he was still smoking his pipe. "This mysterious Harry of yours..."he said. "I don't think I can place him."

"he was very specific about you," said Butler. "He told us to ask you about something called Alternative 3."

Gerstein stared down at his desk, pulled thoughtfully on his pipe. "Did he now..."he said slowly. "That was a rather curious thing for him to do."

"This Alternative 3 - you know what it means?"

"Let me show you something," said Gerstein. He rummaged through the bottom drawer of the desk, pulled out a buff folder, turned over half a dozen pages of typescript. "The Americans, when it comes to public statements, have a remarkable talent for soft-peddalling the truth," he said. "Read that...it's a CIA report."

Butler took the folder, read the passage which had been ringed around in red:

In the poor and powerless areas, population would have to drop to levels that could be supported. Food subsidies and external aid, however generous the donors might be, would be inadequate. Unless or until the climate improved and agricultural techniques changed sufficiently, population levels now projected for the Less Developed Countries could not be reached. The population "problem" would have solved itself in the most unpleasant fashion.

67

"What does this mean?" asked Butler. "unless or until the climate improved..."

"That's it! said Gerstein. "That's the key phrase! And that report, let me tell you, is about four years old. What it means is that at that time the Americans were prepared to reveal just a smidgeon of the truth. Not all the truth, of course, for that would be too frightening. But you can take it from me that they knew the whole truth. I told them. Back in 1957 - at the conference in Huntsville, Alabama - I explained it all to them. That's why they started gibing serious thought to the three alternatives."

"And what exactly did you tell them?" asked Butler.

"I told them that we were killing this planet."

Gerstein was stopped by a fit of coughing which shook his whole body, made his eyes water. He apologized. "Through all the centuries man thought of the atmosphere surrounding us as being so vast that it could never possibly be damaged," he said. "So we've gone on abusing it and polluting it...and now it's too late."

He shook his head sadly. "We've created a greenhouse around this world of ours...a greenhouse made of carbon dioxide. Short-wave radiation from the sun passes straight through it, just as in any garden greenhouse, but it absorbs and holds the heat emitted from the surface of the earth.

"You know how much carbon dioxide we've thrown up there in the last hundred years? More than 360 billion tons! And once it's up there it stays there - and it's being added to every year.

"Human lemmings! That's what we are! Do you realize that we're even helping to destroy our world by trying to smell nice? No...I assure you...I'm perfectly serious. Those aerosol sprays that people use - they alone are still squirting nearly half a million metric tons of fluorocarbons into the atmosphere every year."

He delved in the desk again, produced another folder. "A British Royal Commission on environmental pollution was shocked by the sheer volume of this filth. Listen to what they said in their report." He opened the folder, thumbed over a few pages and began reading:

"If the worst fears about the extent of damage by fluorocarbons to the ozone layer were realised, and if no means of combating this threat could be devised, the consequences to mankind and, indeed, to most of life on Earth could be calamitous."

68

He snapped the folder shut, dropped it contemptuously on the desk. "There!" he said. "That's their word -calamitous! And that report, I should point out, was written by people who probably weren't aware of the full seriousness of the situation. They almost certainly still don't know of the need for one of the three alternatives.

"Yet people go on using these things...to clean their ovens and spray their hair...to kill flies and smells and pains in the back. Good God, we've even got spray-on instant snack food! We're conveniencing ourselves to death, Mr. Butler, that's what we're doing - and now it's all become irretrievably lethal.

"Some belated attempts have been made, of course, to scratch at the problem. Last year, for example, the United States Food and Drug Administration banned fluorocarbons from American aerosol sprays - and that, I can tell you,, was a devil of a jolt for an industry with a $9,000 million turnover in America alone.

"But other countries, including Britain - which, by the way, is Europe's principal producer of aerosols - decided not to follow the American initiative. Close your eyes to the dangers and pretend they don't exist - that seems to be the line. You see...there are jobs at stake...about 10,000 in Britain alone...and there's also big money. still, not that it makes any difference any longer. It's so late now that it's all become completely academic."

Gerstein was seized by another bout of coughing. He looked accusingly at his pipe which had gone out. And he relit it. "You hear people talking glibly about the concrete jungle, Mr. Butler. What they should be talking about is the concrete storage heater. That's what we're turning this world into - a gigantic storage heater. Concrete...asphalt roads...brick buildings...they're all retaining the heat and they're helping to ferment the disaster.

"Then there's all that waste heat from industry, power stations, cars and central-heating systems. Do you realise that New York city generates seven times more heat than it gets from the rays of the sun? That, Mr. Butler, is a fact. And you just imagine that sort of heat - from all over the world - being trapped in our great atmospheric greenhouse!"

"Yes," said Butler. "But this Alternative 3..."

Gerstein ignored the interruption, got up from the desk, walked to the study window. He stood there, hands clasped behind his back, contemplating the wide expanse of neat lawn. "I'll tell you what's going to happen," he said. "This world's going to get hootter and hotter until it gets like Venus. I can't tell you when this will finally happen...not to the nearest hundred years...but I can assure you that it will happen.

"When that time comes the North Pole and the South Pole will be as hot as the tropics are today. And as for the rest of the world...well, it won't be able to support any life apart from insects and cold-blooded creatures like lizards."

69

He turned to face Butler, gestured over his shoulder. "All that out there, all that greenery and beauty, will be a burnt wilderness.

"There won't be any people at all then, not in countries like this. There'll probably still be survivors at the Poles but then it won't be long before they're also killed by the heat - and that will be that."

He sat down, looked somberly at Butler. "So, as you can see, that CIA report you're holding - with that stuff about the climate possibly improving - is just so much public - relations twaddle."

He sighed resignedly, took the file from Butler, replaced it in the drawer. "That, I suppose, is the technique. They make a big display of showing part of the truth - which is precisely what they did in that report - to make people believe they're being shown the whole truth."

"But you mentioned three alternatives," said Butler. "You said they considered them at the Huntsville conference..."

"That was a long time ago," said Gerstein evasively. "Twenty years ago. And it was all very theoretical..."

"I realize that some of the discussions at Huntsville were held in secret and so, naturally, I can understand your reluctance," said Butler. "But this is clearly a matter of immense public concern and, as you say, Huntsville was a long time ago. So wouldn't it be possible for you to say..."

Gerstein held up a hand to stop him. "Alternative 1 and Alternative 2 were quite crazy," he said. "They're not worth even talking about..."

"I'd still like to know about them," said Butler. "Couldn't you give me just a brief outline?"

Gerstein was silent, thinking, for a while. Eventually he shrugged. "Well...they were abandoned so I suppose it can do no harm," he said. "The basic idea of Alternative 1 was rather like throwing a few stones at a conventional greenhouse - making holes in the glass to let the heat escape. The suggestion was that a series of strategically - positioned nuclear devices should be detonated high in the atmosphere - to punch holes in that envelope of carbon dioxide. Then we'd have chimneys in the sky, if you like. That would have eased the immediate problem and then, as a follow-up program, there would have had to be a dramatic reappraisal of the way life is lived on this earth.

"Men would have had to start living more primitively to prevent another build-up. For example, there'd have had to be international agreements, stringently enforced, to make all motor vehicles illegal - except for the most essential purposed.

"You could almost draw up your own list of things which would have to be sacrificed to stop carbon dioxide being pumped into the air in such quantities.

70

"Then there would have to be a great co-ordinated effort to give the world back its lungs - by getting rid of every unnecessary bit of concrete and by seeding vast tracts with plants and trees which could absorb the gas.

"That, in essence, was Alternative 1..."

"Well, I can see it would be an incredibly complex project..." said Butler. "But it would seem to make sense...if the situation is as desperate as you say..."

"It was crazy," said Gerstein curtly. "Knocking holes in a garden greenhouse is one thing. Doing the same with Earth's atmosphere is a very different proposition. Oh, they could do it all right...they've got the technology to do it, all right...they've got the technology to do it, but what they haven't got is the technology to patch up the holes after they've made them..."

"I'm sorry...I don't quite follow..."

"The ozone layer!" said Gerstein impatiently. "Don't you see? It would mean punching great gaps in the ozone layer and it's that layer, as you must know, which screens us from the full effects of the ultra-violet rays from the sun.

"Without the protection of that ozone layer, Mr. Butler, we'd be bombarded with far more radiation and that would immediately bring all sorts of horrors - such as an increase in the incidence of skin cancers.

"No, there were too many hazards involved. alternative 1 was rightly rejected."

"And Alternative 2?"

Gerstein was having more trouble with his pipe. Re-lighting it was a major job which required all his attention. It made him cough and splutter but, after using three matches, he won. And, once again, he was contentedly wreathed in smoke. "Can you imagine yourself living like a troglodyte, Mr. Butler?"

It was obviously a rhetorical question. Butler waited, knowing he was not expected to reply.

"Alternative 2, in my view, was even crazier than Alternative 1," continued Gerstein. "I recognize, of course, that there is enough atmosphere locked in the soil to support life but...no, this was the most unrealistic of all the alternatives."

"Troglodyte," prompted Butler. "Why troglodyte?"

"There is good reason to believe that this world was once more civilized and far more scientifically advanced than it is today," said Gerstein. "Our really distant ancestors, living millennia before what we call Pre-historic Man, had progressed far beyond our present stage of knowledge.

"Then, it is argued, there was some cataclysmic disaster - maybe one comparable with that facing us now - and these highly-sophisticated people built completely new civilizations deep beneath the surface of the earth..."

71

"But," said Butler, "I don't see how..."

"Please!" Gerstein was in no mood to be interrupted.

"There is evidence, quite considerable evidence, to suggest that there were once whole cities - linked by an elaborate complex of tunnels - far below the surface. Remains of them have been found under many parts of the world. Under South America...China...Russia...oh, all over the place. And in this subterranean world, so it is said, there is a green luminescence which replaces the sun as a source of energy - and which makes it possible for crops to be grown.

"So they evacuated down there and very likely thrived for some time..."

"Then what?" asked Butler.

Gerstein shrugged. "After all this time...who can tell? Maybe there's historical truth in the Biblical story of the great Flood. Maybe the disaster which drove them there in the first place was followed by the Flood - and they were all trapped and drowned down there. Maybe that's how their civilization ended..."

He paused, sucked reflectively on his pipe. "And it could follow that the people we think of as Prehistoric Men were merely the descendants of a handful of survivors - the real children of Noah, if you accept the Bible version - who had to start from scratch in a world which had been utterly devastated. Is that why they took so naturally - instinctively, if you like - to living in caves? Then the agonizingly slow process of rebuilding the world started all over again until now we find ourselves in a similar position..."

"So Alternative 2, then, would involve transporting everybody down into the bowels of the earth?"

"Not everybody," said Gerstein. "That would be hopelessly impracticable. There'd be selected people, people chosen for their special skills or talents, people who'd be regarded as vital to the future of the human race.

"There were, I have to tell you, many people at Huntsville in favor of Alternative 2. They pointed out that there would never be another flood, not with the entire planer drying up, so it would not all end as it apparently did once before."

He took the pipe from his mouth and pointed its stem at Butler. "You know...there was one very prominent man - died a couple of years ago now - who even put forward a plan for using ordinary people...superfluous people, he called them...as slave labor.

"It was quite startling, the way he had it all worked out. These gangs of slaves, who'd do all the heavy work down there, would be treated - either surgically or chemically - so that they would just complacently accept their new roles. They'd be rounded up, as he put it, in Batch Consignments. Yes, that was the expression he used - Batch Consignments..."

72

Butler shook his head in disbelief . "But that's unthinkable...quite inhuman. And, anyway, as operation on that scale...it could be mounted only with the closest co-operation between the super-powers. America and Russia would have to pool their resources and scientific know-how and that in itself, surely, would be out of the question..."

"Allies are united by the need to fight a common enemy or to combat a universal danger," said Gerstein. "Think of the Second World War. Britain, America, Russia - they were all partners in the mutual struggle for survival. It didn't seem so strange then, did it, that they should co-operate. And this present threat, Mr. Butler, is far greater than the world was facing then..."

"Is the technology available to do all this?" asked Butler.

"Technology, yes. Cash would obviously be the problem. Countless billions of pounds would be needed but, in extremity, it could be raised."

"In that case, why did you consider Alternative 2 to be the most unrealistic of them all?"

"Because, at best, it would be no more than a stop-gap solution. As I told you...the carbon dioxide, once it's up there, stays there. We're trapped inside the great greenhouse and it will be only a matter of time before the effects permeate down into the earth. Things down there, really deep down, will eventually wither and start to smoulder."

He paused, gave a brief humorless laugh. "Maybe our legends and superstitions about Hades - with the demonic stoker down there in the bowels of blackness - are merely unconscious visions of the future. How about that for a thought?"

He stared hard at Butler and, getting no reply, he continued: "The situation, you see, isn't just irretrievable - it has now reached the stage where it can do nothing but deteriorate. That was why Alternative 2, in my opinion, was ridiculous."

Outside the study window there were the bird noises of early Spring. Butler looked over Gerstein's shoulder and saw an old woman sedately walking her dog around the perimeter of the lawn.

Out there it was so peaceful, so normal. And that made their conversation all the more bizarre. Here, in this book-lined and sunlit room, they were talking about Armageddon. They were talking about it in measured and cultivated tones as if it were no more than a matter of academic interest. It was hard, very hard, to grasp that the subject really was the approaching end of the world.

This was the strangest interview Butler had ever conducted. But, as a professional, he pushed ahead with his questions.

"And Alternative 3?"

Gerstein shook his head. "I don't know..."he said.

"Maybe I've been too indiscreet already. I've been out of touch with things for rather a long time now and it's hardly my place to talk about Alternative 3. They may have abandoned it for all I know...decided that it simply couldn't be done. You'd have to talk to someone connected with the Space Program because the truth is that I just don't know..."

"Well, give me a pointer..."persisted Butler.

"I'll give you a sherry," said Gerstein. And that was where the interview ended.

During the following months public fear continued to mount over the weather - and over the effect it was likely to have on the future of the world. On August 28, 1977, the Sunday Telegraph carried a major article headlined: WEATHER MEN AT A LOSS. It was written by a member of the newspaper's "Close-Up" investigative team and it said;

What is happening to the British weather? That seemingly innocuous question has suddenly become a major subject for research.

Even the meteorologists are cautiously echoing the man in the street's opinion that something distinctly odd has been affecting our climate to give us the extremes of the past two years...Many countries have experienced strange weather phenomena over the same period. Mr. Edwin P. Weigel of the United States Weather Bureau in Washington told me:

"We don't know what's hit us. California and other western states have had two years of drought which have smashed all-time records. Water is being rationed in some parts..."

There are several shades of opinion on how ominous it all is and there is only a very shaky consensus on how unusual such extremities really are...

The official attitude, however, was still guarded. Experts who knew the real truth were anxious not to provoke mass panic. Kevin Miles of the Meteorological Office's 40-strong climatic research team at Bracknell, Berkshire, was quoted in this Sunday Telegraph article as saying: "We must agree that what we have been experiencing is unusual. Reports from all over the world have confirmed our own picture of increased variability. But we have learned not to over-react to what might be seen as odd in several small parts of the globe."

Mr. Miles went on to admit that he and his team would "dearly love to understand what has been going on recently".

So, on orders from the highest level, the charade was maintained - with weathermen on both sides of the Atlantic insisting that they still did not know the truth, that they were still investigating the disturbing mystery.

The Sunday Telegraph article continued:

The Bracknell meteorologists are enlarging their research program to investigate every hypotheses that might give a correlation with the fluctuating weather. Oceans, clouds, land forms and the Earth's surface are all being scanned with the help of one of the world's fastest computers.

While such sophistication is being perfected, the American experts are flying as many scientific kites as their British counterparts. The Washington bureau is currently looking at possible effects of volcanic eruptions and changes in the movements of the sun. "Some of it comes excitingly close, some is clutching at straws," said Mr. Weigel.

Amateur weather-watchers, who blame everything from Concorde to the atom bomb for the climatic unrest, will not be appeased by the promise of more and better research.

Those "amateurs" certainly would not have been appeased if they had been told the full story. They would have been terrified.

"Talk to someone connected with the Space Program." That's what Gerstein had suggested. But it wasn't easy to follow his advice. Not when real information was needed.

Of course, there were people at NASA who were prepared to talk to Sceptre Television. But they were the public-relations specialists, the glib front-men, who could be charming and convincing. And who could say a great deal without saying anything.

Clements knew that he had to get more. Far more. The project, by this time, had become almost an obsession with him. He was determined, somehow, to find someone who really knew about this Alternative 3 - and who would be prepared to explain it.

"We'll obviously bet nothing out of anybody still with NASA," he said to Terry Dickson. "They'd be too scared of losing their jobs and I can't say I blame them. So see if you can track down someone who's already quit. One of the moon-walkers, perhaps. They may know something or they may have seen something.

"One or two of them, from what I gather, are rather bitter about the way they've been treated. I was reading - in the Daily Express, I believe it was - about Buzz Aldrin complaining that he'd been used as a travelling salesman. Try to get hold of him or one of the others. At the very least, they might point us in the right direction..."

Dickson rubbed his chin, pulled a rueful face. "And how do I start doing that?" he demanded. "I don't know where any of them are these days..."

"I don't ask you how to point the cameras, love...you're the researcher..."

"Yes, but..."

"And make it a priority job, Terry."

"It'll cost," persisted Dickson. "I'll have to hire someone in America and that could cost real money. Harman's not going to like it. Remember what he said about Australia..."

"Never mind about Harman." Clements was being crisply executive. "You do your job and leave Harman to me." He grinned suddenly and added: "Anyway, he's a busy man and I don't think we ought to trouble him with such small details."

A freelance journalist in America was commissioned by Dickson. Three former astronauts refused to co-operate. A fourth said he would need time to consider his position. That fourth man was Bob Grodin.

The American freelance also supplied Dickson with a tape containing a conversation which had taken place between Grodin - during his first moon walk - and Mission Control. Here is the transcript of the relevant section:

GRODIN: Hey, Houston...d'you hear; this constant bleep we have here now?

MISSION CONTROL: Affirmative. We have it.

GRODIN: What is it? D'you have some explanation for that?

MISSION CONTROL: We have none. can you see anything? Can you tell us what you see?

GRODIN: Oh boy, it's really...really something super-fantastic here. You couldn't ever imagine this...

MISSION CONTROL: O.K....could you take a look out over that flat area there? Do you see anything beyond?

GRODIN: There's a kind of a ridge with a pretty spectacular...oh my God! What is that there? That's all I want to know! What the hell is that?

MISSION CONTROL: Roger. Interesting. Go Tango...immediately...go Tango...

GRODIN: There's a kind of a light now...

MISSION CONTROL: (hurriedly): Roger. We got it, we've marked it. Lose a little communication, huh? Bravo Tango...Bravo Tango...select Jezebel, Jezebel...

76

No more speech could be heard. Grodin, at that point, had switched to another frequency. On the tape there was only static...

Simon Butler, you may recall, underlined that point when the television documentary was transmitted. He said: "Bravo Jezebel? A form of code? Almost certainly. But what did it mean? Absolutely nothing to the estimated six hundred million people listening in on earth..."

Remember the allegations, which we outlined in section one of this book, made by former NASA man Otto Binder?

"Certain sources with their own VHF receiving facilities that by-passed NASA broadcast outlets claim there was a portion of Earth-Moon dialogue that was quickly cut off by the NASA monitoring staff."

That censored portion, according to Binder, included these words from Apollo 11: "These babies were huge, sir...enormous...Oh, God you wouldn't believe it!...I'm telling you there are other space-craft out there...lined up on the far side of the crater edge..."

Could that have a direct link with the exchange heard on the Grodin tape? Had Grodin, like the men of the Apollo 11 mission, seen something too startling to be revealed to ordinary people?

Or were these moon-explorers all mistaken? Was there something in outer space which induced hallucinations?

The idea of unknown and unidentified space-craft being "lined up" on the moon - to the astonishment of human astronauts - has surely too ridiculous. And YET...

Grodin agreed to be interviewed by Sceptre Television, via Satellite, from a studio in Boston, Massachusetts. The plan was to tape the entire interview and edit it later. In fact, as viewers will probably remember, the interview ended abruptly and in the oddest possible way. And it place an even bigger question mark on the whole subject of Alternative 3.

There was, right from the start, something slightly manic in Grodin's expression and he showed a tendency to laugh nervously for no apparent reason. But he talked fluently and he displayed no reluctance about discussing the breakdown he had suffered after his final return from space. Nothing remarkable happened, or seemed likely to happen, until Simon Butler asked a question which we present verbatim from the program which was transmitted:

Now it has been suggested, among others, by some very responsible people that you - that all of you on the Apollo program - saw far more out there than you have been allowed to admit publicly. What comment do you have to make on that suggestion?

77

The immediate effect on Grodin was electrifying. His face suffused with anger and he shouted: "What are you trying to do, man? Just tell me that! What are you trying to do."

Butler apologized. "I was only..."

"You trying to screw me? demanded Grodin. He leaned forward in his chair, glowering into the Boston camera. "That what you want? You want to screw me real good?"

"Of course not," said Butler quickly. "And I'm sorry if..."

"Like that dumb bastard Ballantine? Is that what you want to..."

He got no further. His voice was chopped in midsentence, his picture on the monitor screen vanished in a haze of white static.

"What is going on? asked Butler. "Hell's teeth...what's the matter with this..."

He was interrupted by Clement's voice. "We don't know where he's gone."

Like that dumb bastard Ballantine! That's the line which grabbed their attention. It had to fit in, somehow, with the mystery of the meaningless tape received by Hendry - and with the strange circumstances leading up to Ballantine's death. It just had to be connected with what the man Harry had said: "There was no way for that to be an accident...it was what they called and Expediency and I know why it happened."

"We've got to find him and talk to him face-to-face. Terry, love...see what your lad in America can come up with." He turned to Colin Benson. "I'll probably be sending you over there," he said.

Benson beamed. "Great!" he said. "But isn't Harman going to raise stink?"

"Probably," said Clements. "But leave that to me."

Harman did "raise stink". He raised it more vehemently than Clements anticipated. We have the memoranda which reveal the strength of Harman's feelings. In our view they show a strength bordering on fanaticism...

Wednesday, July 13, 1977. Another submarine meeting of Policy Committee. Chairman: A EIGHT. Transcript section supplied by Trojan starts:

R TWO: This Princeton man... Dr. Gerard O'Neill... appears to have a disturbing lack of discretion...

(Author's note: This meeting, being held a littler later in the month than was customary, was exactly two days after the Los Angeles Times published the controversial interview -- detailed in Section One of this book - in which Dr. O'Neill outlined the solution he called "Island 3". He said in that interview - "There's really no debate about the technology involved in doing it. That's been confirmed by NASA's top people.")

78

The Trojan transcript continued:

A FOUR: Sure...he shouldn't have shot his mouth off in that way...but I don't see there's any real harm done...people will assume he's just talking theory...

A EIGHT: It is just theory, for Chrissakes, as far as he is concerned. He knows the technology but beyond that he knows nothing...

R FIVE: He is a respected man...a man whose words mould public opinion...and he should be discouraged from making such stupid statements...

A EIGHT: That's already been done...for him and for others like him...

R TWO: What is this you are saying? An unauthorized Expediency?

A EIGHT: Hell, no! That's not necessary. Like I said ...Gerard O'Neill doesn't know enough, not about the politics...he doesn't even have any idea that we meet this way...

R SIX: Then what has been done?

A EIGHT: Let's keep this in perspective, shall we... Washington doesn't want publicly to pinpoint the O'Neill thing because that would make it seem too important...best to ignore it..that's the official attitude and I'm damned sure that attitude is right...

R SEVEN: But when O'Neill talked about Island 3...

A EIGHT: Hold on...let me finish. Something is being done but it's being done as a blanket operation... Right now there's a secrecy Bill being scrambled on to the Statute Book and I promise you that'll close every worrying mouth...

Fourteen days after this meeting of the Policy Committee, as we mentioned earlier, columnist Jeremy Campbell broke the news of the "suppression" Bill in the London Evening Standard. Campbell is a highly experienced journalist with a deserved reputation for knowing the background to the published news. Here, we are confident, is one of the rare instances where he did not know the real background.

The rest of the transcript supplied by Trojan was brief:

R SEVEN: That may well be but I have to tell you that our people in Moscow are becoming increasingly worried about the level of security in America...there was that bad business of Carmell...

79

A EIGHT: Oh no!...not Carmell again! Carmell's settled ...that's all over, okay?

R SEVEN: And Carl Gerstein?

There was no reply to that question. The meeting had obviously continued but that was the end of the transcript.

The end of August and the beginning of September, 1977 - only days before the "Suppression" Bill reached the Statute Book - brought more curious evidence of the treatment which had been given to Batch Consignment victims. It gave a deeper insight into the work which had been continuing in America and Russia. And in Britain.

This evidence is now public knowledge for, as library files show, it has appeared in reputable newspapers. But, because of its special significance, we consider it worth repeating here.

On August 27, William Lowther, the distinguished Washington correspondent of the Daily Mail, wrote an article which was headlined THE SPY WHO CAME IN FROM THE BATHROOM.

It said:

Morgan Hall was a spy. He always kept a jug of martinis in the refrigerator. He had a two-way mirror in the bathroom.

But Morgan's life was full of woe. His masters were slow in sending money. His assignment was awful sleazy. The code name for his project was "Operation Midnight Climax". It was meant to be a perpetual secret And no wonder.

For two full years Morgan spent his working hours sitting on a portable toilet watching through his mirror drinking his martinis while a prostitute entertained men in the adjoining bedroom.

Her job was to persuade clients to drink cocktails. What they didn't know was that the drinks had been mixed by the mysterious Morgan. They were more chemical than alcohol.

Morgan had to record the results. We still don't know just what they were or how they worked. But some of the drinks gave instant headaches, others made you silly or drunk or forgetful or just plain frantic. The effects were only temporary and nobody was harmed, much.

Morgan was employed by the Central Intelligence Agency and it was America's top spy bosses who sent him out from headquarters near Washington to set up the "laboratory" in a luxury apartment overlooking San Francisco Bay.

Now, 1,647 pages of financial records dealing with the operation have been made public as part of a Congressional investigation.

80

(Author's note: That was the Congressional investigation provoked by the information supplied to us by Trojan.) Lowther's article continued:

It was all part of the agency's MK-ultra mind control experimental program...it was reasoned that a prostitute's clients wouldn't complain.

The financial records released yesterday show that Morgan was always writing to headquarters. Says a typical letter - "Money urgently needed to pay September rent."

His bills for the flat include Toulouse -Lautrec posters, a picture of a French can - can dancer and one marked: "Portable toilet for observation post."

Says the CIA: "Morgan Hall died two years ago. We have no idea where he is buried."

Here we must ignore suspicions and accept the official word of the CIA. Our own inquiries in America have yielded nothing further about Morgan Hall and we must state, quite categorically, that we have found no evidence to support any suggestion of his having been an expediency victim.

Lowther's story was quickly followed by two more reports which confirmed something we had already been told by Trojan - a series of secret experiments in behavior control had also been conducted in Russia and in Britain.

On September 2 The Times gave front-page prominence to a report supplied from Honolulu by Reuter and UPI. It was headlined "PSYCHIATRISTS CONDEMN SOVIET UNION" and it said:

The general assembly of the World Psychiatric Association, meeting behind closed doors, has adopted a resolution condemning the Soviet Union for abusing psychiatry for "political purposes" in the Soviet Union..."

The international code of ethics, called the "Declaration of Hawaii", adopted by the congress follows years of criticism against the WPA for not taking action on ethical standards.

Other newspapers claimed that "scores of mentally healthy Soviet citizens are forcibly interned in mental hospitals'. This is unquestionably true but the facts need to be seen in their proper perspective. The vast majority are detained because of their stand on human rights. They are sane people who are considered enemies of the State. Only a small percentage are there purely because they are needed as guinea-pigs. These are the ones who have been detained because of Alternative 3.

81

in Britain - appeared on August 28 in the Sunday Telegraph:

Hospitals for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped have been instructed by the Health Department to collect statistics on operations being carried out to change personality.

For the first time, ministers have acknowledged that there is growing concern. The operations, known as psychosurgery, are carried out to remove or destroy portions of brain tissue to change the behavior of severely depressed or exceptionally aggressive patients who do not respond to drugs or electric shock treatment.

The Sunday Telegraph said that "the change was irreversible" and quoted a prominent consultant psychiatrist as saying: "My hospital is littered with the wrecks of humanity who have undergone psychosurgery.

However, the newspaper did not point out that these operations can also be performed to control the behavior pattern of men and women who are completely sane. Or that, in fact, they have been performed on such people.

Dr. Randolph Crepsen-White spoke to us about these operations when we met him in the Somerset village to which he retired in 1975. He talked frankly on the strict understanding that we would not divulge his name. However, as he died of natural causes on October 19, 1977, we do not consider ourselves to be now bound by our undertaking.

Dr. Crepsen-White told us: "I performed five of these operations on people - four young men and one young woman - who appeared to be completely sane. There were two objects. The patients had to be completely de-sexed, to have their natural biological urges taken away, and they also had to have their individuality removed. They would, after being discharged, obey any order without question. In fact, they would virtually be thinking robots.

"I recognized that what I was doing was most unethical, and I did protest that very strongly, but I was told that the operations were vital to the security of the country.

"Nobody actually told me that those patients had been involved in espionage but that was the impression I was given. I was ordered to sign the Official Secrets form and that is why you must not mention my name - apart from the fact that I'm frightened, there'd be repercussions of a violent nature if certain people realized I'd been talking to you."

We should point out that, in order to protect Dr. Crepsen-White's anonymity, we had agreed not to be so specific about the number of operations he had performed. That agreement, of course, is now unnecessary.

82

He continued: "I still had distinct reservations about this aspect of my work. Soon it became apparent that I would be required to do more operations involving sane people...possibly many more...and that was when I decided to get right out."

"I had not intended to retire for another three years but, under the circumstances, I considered it impossible to go on."

Dr. Crepsen-White, we are certain, knew nothing about people being collected into Batch Consignments. He knew nothing about Alternative 3. But a complete insight into the use being made of his work was eventually supplied to us by Trojan. It was supplied in an astounding document which we will be presenting later.

SECTION EIGHT

Leonard Harman was far from happy with the letter sent to him on August 12, 1977, by our lawyer Edwin Greer.

Letter dated August 15, 1977, from Harman to lawyer Greer:

I am surprised by the contents of your letter and I must insist on receiving undertaking from Messrs. Ambrose and Watkins to the effect that I will not be mentioned in their projected book. I note that your clients are aware that Sceptre Television has admitted that the Alternative 3 program was an unfortunate hoax and I am puzzled by the apparent evasiveness of your second paragraph.

You state that your clients are 'mindful of the background to that statement." What, if anything, does that mean?

I repeat that it would be extremely wrong to perpetuate in book form what has already become a public misconception. There is absolutely no truth in the suggestion of any East-West covert action such as that described in the program and your clients apparently intend to compound what has already been admitted as a serious error of judgement.

If your clients persist in their attitude, particularly in respect to my privacy, I will have to seek legal advice and/or redress.

Letter dated August 13 from Edwin Greer to Leonard Harman:

There was no evasiveness in my letter of the 12th inst.

I merely pointed out that my clients have conducted their own investigations in Britain and America into the subject of their projected book. Indeed, that investigation is still continuing. Any decisions taken by Mr. Ambrose and Mr. Watkins, in consultation with their publishers, will depend on their eventual findings and I am instructed to inform you that it is not possible for them to give you any undertaking.

Six days later Greer received a letter from a well known Member of Parliament who had been lobbied for support by Harman. We included the name of the MP - and of one other who tried to suppress this book - in our original manuscript but, because of Britain's restrictive libel laws, we have been advised to delete those names from the published version.

84

This particular MP was taking the same line as Harman. His letter said:

In common with a number of my colleagues in the House of Commons, I have already deplored the misguided motives which resulted in the television program about the so-called Alternative 3.

Letters from many of my constituents demonstrate the alarm which was engendered and which, despite the subsequent statement by the television company, still lingers.

The fact that your clients should apparently be determined to capitalize on that alarm is, to my mind, quite scandalous. I intend to seek an injunction to prevent the publication of this book...

He did try for that injunction. The fact that you are reading this book at this moment is the proof that it was refused to him - and to one of his colleagues in the House of Commons. As we will explain later, however, these MPs did force us into a reluctant compromise.

However, they did not succeed in preventing us from using more of the memoranda which circulated inside Sceptre Television.

Memo dated April 92, 1977, from Chris Clements to Fergus Godwin, Controller of Programs - c.c. to Leonard Harman, Colin Benson, Terry Dickson:

Through contacts in America we have now traced former astronaut Bob Grodin to a new address. He is living with a girl and is not aware he has been located. I have instructed the American freelance to make no direct approach for, in view of the way Grodin went into hiding after the break-down of that Boston interview, he would almost certainly try to dodge us again.

I want to send Benson to America to quiz Grodin in greater depth for, particularly considering his reference to Ballantine, I am certain he holds the key to an immensely important story.

It would be essential, of course, for Benson to arrive without prior warning. May I have your authorization to make the necessary arrangements?

85

Memo dated April 12, 1977, from Leonard Harman to Mr. Fergus Godwin, Controller of Programs:

CONFIDENTIAL. The note from Clements, bearing today's date and relating to his interest in America, is clear confirmation of what I have already indicated to you and the Managing Director.

Clements has become unprofessionally obsessed with this ridiculous investigation with which he is persisting and I recommend that he be replaced immediately as producer of Science Report. I have studied his contract and we would be within our rights to transfer him to some area of our output where he would not be such an expensive liability - possibly the gardening series or the God Spot.

I have on several occasions had to warn him about squandering company time, money and resources -- remember those abortive film unit journeys to Norwich and Scotland? - but he has defiantly persisted in doing so.

I was told nothing of the inquiries which have apparently been commissioned on our behalf in America although, as I mentioned again at the Senior Executives' Meeting on Friday, it is company policy for matters of that nature to be channelled through me. It would be utterly wrong to sanction Benson's going to America. Nothing can possibly be gained by talking to this man Grodin - even allowing for what Clements admits is the unlikely chance of him agreeing to talk. I have formed the impression from newspaper accounts that Grodin is unstable and probably unbalanced and it is no part of our function as a reputable television company to hound such a man - particularly for such a ridiculous reason.

We should, I suggest, instruct Clements to abandon this fool-hardy exercise and we should also give priority consideration to replacing him.

Memo dated April 13, 1977, from Fergus Godwin to Leonard Harman:

CONFIDENTIAL. Let us not forget that Science Report is a Network success purely because of Clements. However, I note your objections and I must confess that I have also been concerned about the amount of money which has gone into this particular project. I have arranged for Clements to see me today and, naturally, I will keep you informed.

86

The meeting between Clements and Godwin - on Tuesday, April 13 - did not go well. Godwin had seen the unedited version of the interview filmed at Cambridge with Gerstein and he had not been impressed. The way the old man had veered away from any discussion of Alternative 3 had made him suspect that there was no Alternative 3 - that the dangers and the solutions were probably all theoretical. Science Report was already well over budget and Godwin knew how that would incense certain men on the Board. One of the Board members was an accountant, with the creative imagination of a retarded Polar Bear, and he was an apoplectic little man. Godwin didn't fancy another row with him - not on an issue where his own ground was so uncertain.

"Let me think it over," he said to Clements. "I'll let you know."

Memo dated April 14, 1977, from Fergus Godwin to Chris Clements - c.c. to Leonard Harman:

Further to our talk yesterday, I feel we would not be justified in sending Benson to America. If the situation should change as a result of any further information you may g-t, I will be prepared to discuss the matter with you again. For the moment, however, it's not on.

Clements read the note, pushed it across his desk to Dickson. "That bloody Harman!" he said. "This is his doing."

"Now what?" asked Dickson.

"We are going to do it. Terry. We are definitely going to do it. What we need now is some further information."

"Like what?"

"I don't know, love...you're the researcher...the sort of information that'll swing it with Fergus." He frowned, got up, started pacing the room. "What was it Gerstein said about co-operation between the super-powers?"

"He seemed to have the idea that they were working together on the Alternative 3 thing..."

"That could be it!" said Clements excitedly. "Do we know anyone who might develop that thought for us? It's have to be somebody with real prestige..."

"Broadbent?"

"Who's Broadbent?"

"Great expert on East-West diplomacy...runs the Institute of International Political Studies in St. James's..."

"Hm...well there's no harm in trying. Is Colin around?"

87

Dickson shook his head. "His day off."

"It's always his day off when I need him," said Clements unfairly. "Ask Kate to pop in and see me, will you? She can start sounding out Broadbent..."

At 5:15 p.m. that day reporter Katherine White started her interview with Professor G. Gordon Broadbent - parts of which, as you may recall, were eventually used in the transmitted program.

It took her some time to get Broadbent really talking. He was cautious, suspicious of her motives, anxious not to become involved in any sensationalism.

That was understandable for, after all, he is a man who is internationally respected. After a while, however, he was more forthcoming and we now print the significant part of that interview - verbatim from the transcript - as it was presented in the televised documentary:

BROADBENT: On the broader issue of Soviet-US relations I must admit there is an element of mystery which troubles many people in my field. To put it at its simplest, none of us can understand how it is that the peace has been kept over these past twenty-five years.

WHITE: You mean the experts are baffled?

BROADBENT: (with a smile): But also, for once, in agreement. The popular myth that it's been proof of the balance of nuclear power frankly doesn't entirely stand up. And the more you look at it, the less sense it makes. There are too many imbalances - especially when you put it in the perspective of history.

WHITE: So what is your explanation?

BROADBENT: Essentially what we're suggesting is that, at the very highest levels of East-West diplomacy, there has been operating a factor of which we know nothing. Now it could just be - and I stress the word "could" - that this unknown factor is some kind of massive but covert operation in space. But as for the reasons behind it...we are not in the business of speculation.

Clements went barging into the Controller's office without waiting for any response to his token tap. "You read the Broadbent transcript?" he asked.

Godwin, busy at his desk, sat back and smiled resignedly. "Yes - and your covering note."
"Well?"

88

"Well, what?"

Clements groaned, exasperated. "Surely that clinches it."

Godwin slowly shook his head. "No, Chris, not as far as I'm concerned. It's just more theory...that's all it is."

"But Fergus, it all fits! Gerstein and Broadbent -- each a top man in his own field - both suggesting some sort of secret co-operation in space between the super-powers."

"That man Harry, the American who claimed to know why scientists keep disappearing, and the links he seemed to have with Ballantine and with NASA. Then there was Grodin who, without any shadow of doubt, saw something really incredible up there on the moon...we can't just leave the whole damned thing now and forget it!"

"Stop bouncing around, Chris, and sit down." Godwin gestured to a chair. "Go on...sit down." He waited until Clements had done so. "Now, for the last time, let's get this clear. I realize that something odd may be going on but I don't consider it's any of our concern..."

Clements started to jerk angrily out of the chair, bursting to interrupt, but Godwin stopped him: "You've done a tremendous job with Science Report, Chris. Everybody thinks so and the ratings have proved it. So I want you to get back just to doing what you do so well..."

"That means you're still saying 'no' to America?"

"That's exactly what it does mean."

"If it's on grounds of cost, can I point out how much profit this company made last year..."

Godwin has since told us ruefully that he dislikes only one aspect of his job - that of being the chief buffer between his editors and the money men above him. One lot inevitably think he's mean and the others suspect him of being a spendthrift. Being wedged in the middle...it's not much fun. That's why his reply to Clements was uncharacteristically sharp:

"It's hardly your place to point that out but, as you've done so, let me tell you something. The company does make profits and it makes good ones but it does not do so by sending teams gallivanting around the world on fool's errands...so, please, let it rest..."

"Clements got up, prepared to leave. "How about if I fixed a facility trip?"

"Airlines aren't throwing many free flights around these days - not across the Atlantic."

"Benson could do a piece for the holiday series while he's over there. I've spoken to Simon Shaw who's taken over the holiday programs and he's quite keen...and I know an airline who'll play ball."

"God...you don't give up, do you!" Godwin grinned.
"All right...tell Benson to go to America."

"Why did you disappear that night?" asked Benson. "That night of the interview...why did you run out like that?"

"Have another beer," said Grodin. He pushed a fresh can across the low table and poured another for himself. "The bastard was trying to screw me. Did I see more than I've been allowed to admit publicly! Jesus...what sort of fool question was that?"

Benson forced a grin, tried to relieve the tension. He felt like an angler playing a difficult fish. Gently...gently...that was the only way. He took a long drink, sighing with satisfaction, as he put down the empty glass. "I needed that beer," he said. "Had myself a real thirst."

'You planning on doing the same?" Grodin was glowering suspiciously. "You aiming to screw me as well?"

He was frightened. That was quite obvious. And he was trying to hide his fears under aggressiveness. Benson felt a twinge of pity. The man seemed so pathetically vulnerable and Benson was reminded of what Harman had said in that memo:

"Grodin is unstable and probably unbalanced and it is no part of our function as a reputable television company to hound such a man."

Maybe, after all, there'd been something in what Harman had said. Grodin clearly wasn't normal. It was all very well to be ruthlessly professional but would anything really be gained by pushing Grodin any further? Wouldn't it be fairer to drop the whole thing, to get back into the car and forget about Grodin? Benson hesitated. It would be so easy to tell Clements that Grodin had simply refused to talk, that there was no way for him to be persuaded. Clements wouldn't like it - in fact, he'd be bloody furious - but he'd have to accept it, particularly after the fiasco of that chopped-off interview.

Then he remembered the man called Harry. He remembered him at Lambeth - naked and terrified in that crumbling house. And he wondered how many more there were like him. And how many there would be in the future if the truth were not revealed.

"Camera, tape machines, witnesses - that's the kind of protection I need." That's what Harry had said. And they had failed him. They had arrived too late.

Protection from what? That was still a mystery. But it tied in somehow with the disappearance of Ann Clark. And with those of at least twenty other people including Brian Pendlebury and Robert Patterson.

Grodin had the key to at least part of the answer and Benson knew there was no choice. He had to get answers. Somehow he had to squeeze every bit of information out of this man...

"Well?" persisted Grodin. "You aiming to screw me as well?"

Benson shook his head, opened his next can of beer. "I,m just hoping for a few answers," he said.

They were in canvas chairs, just the two of them, on the green-slabbed patio behind the ranch-style bungalow which Grodin was renting in a lonely corner of New England. It was peaceful there. No neighbors. No town or community of any sort for fifteen miles. Far in the distance, beyond the vast spread of scrub, they could see the tow-like sprawl of the smoke-blue mountains. And the top of those mountains seemed to dissolve into the sky. Tranquillity. Only them and the drowsy-soft sound of insects.

There were no noises from the bungalow behind them but Benson knew that the girl called Annie was probably busy in the kitchen. Grodin had said they'd soon be having a nice meal so that's where Annie had to be. Benson had been introduced to her, very briefly, when he'd arrived and then she'd scuttled shyly out of sight. Annie, he felt, wasn't at all happy about this intrusion. She looked young, far too young for Grodin, with straight hair, no make-up and gold-rimmed granny-glasses. The soft of earnest girl who should be reading psychology somewhere. It wasn't hard to guess her main function. Benson hoped she was also a good cook.

On the far side of the bungalow, at the top of the winding drive, Benson's technician-partner, Jack Dale, was still in the car checking and preparing his equipment. He had a small sound-camera but he knew better than to produce it until he got the nod. It had to be kept out of sight until Benson got Grodin into the right mood...

Grodin drained his glass. "Owned a place lie this myself once," he said. "Not just rented it like this one but really owned it. Thought I was putting down roots, y'know? Used to go up there in the summer with the family. Ah, it was all different then. We had a few horses and..." He stopped, pulled a face, smiled ironically. "Guess you can say I'm not much into planning for the future any more."

He studied his glass as if trying to puzzle why it was suddenly empty. He held the can upside-down over it and one small glob of beer fell out. "I swear they only half-fill the cans these days," he said bitterly. "That's how they make their money - y'know that? - by half-filling the cans." He threw the can away disgustedly and it clattered to the edge of the patio.

"That's how it is these days. Everybody screwing everybody else for all they can get. No ethics left, not nowhere." His speech was slightly slurred and Benson wondered how much drinking he'd done before their arrival.

"Cheap-jack booze-peddlers!" shouted Grodin. "Short changing bastards!" He turned in his chair, called over his shoulder. "Annie! We've right out of beer! Bring a couple more, will you..."

91

He glanced at Benson. "Or you want a real drink?"

"Beer's fine," said Benson.

Grodin grunted and shrugged. "Annie!" he shouted again.

"There are two men out here dying of thirst..."

She came out with two more cans of beer and shook her head smilingly, her expression implying that she say him as an adorably mischievous small boy. As someone who needed mothering. Grodin squeezed her hand. "Thanks baby." He seemed to feel some explanation was necessary. "They don't fill them like they used to..."

She smiled again. "They never did," she returned to the bungalow. "And she ain't my daughter! Right? I want that on record!"

"How about getting something else on record?" suggested Benson quietly.

"Like what?"

"Like what you know about Ballantine..."

The guarded expression was back on Grodin's face. "I never knew the guy."

"That time he went to NASA HQ...didn't you meet him then?"

"Drop it, kid, will you! I told you, for Chrissake. I never knew him...I never met him..."

'But you know what happened to him - and why."

Grodin stood up. "Time to eat," he said. "Let's give your pal a shout."

Towards the end of the meal Grodin switched to drinking bourbon on the rocks. He tried to persuade the others to join him but Benson and Jack Dale stuck with beer. So did Annie. And later, while she was sorting out the dirty dishes, Grodin agreed to be interviewed. By that time he was a little bleary but he was still thinking coherently. That interview, filmed by Dale, was presented in the famous Science Report program on June 20, 1977. We now quote direct from the transcript:

GRODIN: All I know about Ballantine is that he showed up at NASA with some tape he'd made, and got pretty damn excited when he played it back on their juke box.

BENSON: Juke box?

GRODIN: De-coder. You can pick up a signal if you have the right equipment, but you can't unscramble it...

BENSON: without NASA's equipment?

GRODIN: Right. Some young guy helped him do it. Say, now he should've known better.

BENSON: This man?

Benson then showed Grodin a postcard-sized photograph of Harry Carmell - blown-up from a frame of the film taken in the street. Grodin frowned, trying to remember.

GRODIN: Could be. Yeah, that looks like him. Sure you don't want a bourbon?

BENSON: Beer's fine.

GRODIN: Bourbon's better for you.

BENSON: No, thanks...are you saying Ballantine was killed because of what he discovered on the tape?

GRODIN: I'm saying nothing. I just saw the way those guys were looking at him. But I knew those looks ...I've seen them looking at me that way.

BENSON: "Them?"

GRODIN: Oh, c'mon...! Have a proper drink, for God's sake.

At that stage there was a break in the interview. Viewers say Grodin empty his glass and shamle across the room to refill it at the bar in the corner. They did not see Annie come back from the kitchen. Nor did they hear the argument between her and Grodin. She was, as Benson has told us, frightened that Grodin was saying too much, that he was being dangerously indiscreet. But by then Grodin had enough drink in him to make him reckless - and to make him resent getting orders from a girl. He yelled at her, cruelly and crudely, telling her that she didn't have "no nagging rights" because she wasn't his goddamned wife and so would she start minding her own goddamned business. She went on arguing, trying to persuade him, and he got still madder. He threw a tumbler of bourbon at the wall and the glass exploded all over the place. Then she left in tears and he apologized for her behavior. "Women!" he said. "Think they goddamn own you!"

For the next hour he drank. He drank heavily. And Benson was starting to worry that he would soon be unable to speak but, surprisingly, Grodin was still making sense. At one time he seemed to hover on the edge of being hopelessly drunk, of collapsing across the bar, but then he had another drink and, in some strange way, that seemed to pull him through. It was, in Benson's words, as if he was "starting to drink himself sober".

Grodin was having problems forming certain words - "as if his tongue was slipping out of gear" - but his mind seemed clear enough. And eventually he agreed to continue with the interview:

BENSON: Bob...what did happen out there...the moon landing?
GRODIN: Well...I don't know how best to put this... but we had kind of a big disappointment...the truth is we didn't get there first.
BENSON: What d'you mean?
GRODIN: The later Apollos were a smoke-screen...to cover up what's really going on out there...and the bastards didn't even tell us...not a damned thing!

Here, as viewers will recall, there was another break. It lasted only a split second on the screen but, in fact, filming stopped for more than half-an-hour. When they resumed Grodin was sweating heavily. He was sweating because of the alcohol and because of his excitement over what he was saying.

They'd said he wasn't to talk about it. That's what the bastards had said. Well, he'd show them Bob Grodin wasn't of guy to be scared into silence. They didn't own him. He was out of the service now and, anyway, maybe it was time for someone to talk. He was holding yet another drink as he waited for Benson's first question...

BENSON: Bob, you've got to tell me...what did you see?

GRODIN: We came down in the wrong place...it was crawling...made what we were on look like a milk run...

BENSON: Are you talking about men...from Earth?

GRODIN: You think they need all that crap down in Florida just to put two guys up there on a...on a bicycle? The hell they do!...You know why they need us? So they've got a P.R. story for all that hardware they've been firing into space...We're nothing, man! Nothing! We're just there to keep you bums happy...to keep you from asking dumb questions about what's really going on!...O.K., that's it, end of story. Finish. Lots o'luck, kid.

And that was it. End of interview. Grodin finished his drink in one great gulp and then he fell. Tight there on the carpet. Annie heard the thump, came running into the room, told the pair of them to get out. They suggested helping her get Grodin into bed but she refused the offer. She just wanted them out. So there it was. They left.

In November, 1977, we visited that bungalow in the hope of getting Grodin to elaborate. We were certain there was far more he could tell. And we felt he might talk more freely without the presence of a film-camera.

The bungalow was empty. It had been empty, as far as we could tell, for weeks or possibly months. We have been unable to find the girl Annie. She appears to have completely disappeared. But we did trace Grodin. We traced him to a mental hospital on the outskirts of Philadelphia. He was allowed no visitors. At least, that's what we were told. We tried to insist on seeing him but they were emphatic. Quite out of the question, they said. His condition was too severe. And, anyway, a visit would be quite pointless. Grodin couldn't string together two consecutive words. His mind was completely gone...

Grodin's death was reported in the newspapers in January, 1978. Suicide. That's what the world was told. Grodin had knotted pajama trousers around his neck and hanged himself from a hot-water pipe fixed high on the wall of his room. We have suspicions that he may have been the victim of an Expediency but, without evidence, they can be no more than suspicions.

Another intriguing piece of the jigsaw was supplied by the American freelance hired by Dickson. It was a copy of a tape containing dialogue between NASA Mission Control at Houston and the Lunar Command Module Pilot during a 1972 moon mission. And Clements puzzled over it when he first played it at the Sceptre studios:

MISSION CONTROL: More detail, please. Can you give more detail of what you are seeing?

LUNAR MODULE PILOT: It's...something flashing. That's That's all so far. Just a light going on and off by the edge of the crater.

MISSION CONTROL: Can you give the co-ordinates?

LUNAR MODULE PILOT: There's something down there...Maybe a little further down.

MISSION CONTROL: It couldn't be a Vostok, could it?

LUNAR MODULE PILOT: I can't be sure...it's possible.

All this fitted logically with the content of the taped conversation between Mission Control and Grodin - during Grodin's first moon walk:

MISSION CONTROL: Can you see anything? Can you tell us what you see?

95

GRODIN: Oh boy, its really...really something super-fantastic here. You couldn't ever imagine this...

MISSION CONTROL: O.K....could you take a look out over that flat area there? Do you see anything beyond?

GRODIN: There's a kind of a ridge with a pretty spectacular...oh my God! What is that there?

That's all I want to know! What the hell is that?

It also fitted with the exchange - reported by former NASA man Otto Binder - between Mission Control and Apollo 11 during the Aldrin-Armstrong moon walk:

MISSION CONTROL: What's there?...malfunction...
(garble)...Mission Control calling Apollo 11...
APOLLO 11: These babies were huge, sir...enormous...
Oh, God you wouldn't believe it!...I'm telling you there are other space craft out there...lined up on the far side of the crater edge...they're on the moon watching us...

There was, however, one reference in the latest tape which made it startlingly different - the reference to a Vostok. Russia's Vostok flights took place in the early Sixties. According to the information made public, they were not designed to reach the moon but were merely Earth-orbiting spaceships.

So what could be made of the casual suggestion by Houston Mission Control - and an equally casual acceptance by the Lunar Module Pilot - that an obsolete Russian craft might be sitting on a crater on the moon flashing its lights in 1972?

We now know that, for many years, the super-powers have taken immense trouble to hide the extent of advances made in space technology. Remember, for example, how people were encouraged to believe that the first living creature to be sent into space was a dog in 1958?

Yet that dog mission was seven years after the four Albert monkeys were hurtled into the stratosphere in a V2 rocket. And there are sound reasons for doubting, that those monkeys were the first.

So was the official objective of the Vostok flights also a blind? Were they, to paraphrase the words of Bob Grodin, also a P.R. job for all the hardware that had been fired into space?

One dominant question develops automatically from all the others: Was the first publicly-announced moon walk in 1969 no more than a cynical charade - played by agreement between the super-powers - because by then men had really been on the moon for the best part of a decade?

If that was the truth, and all the evidence points to it being so, what was the purpose of that charade? And why has it been perpetuated? The answer to both those questions is Alternative 3.

The all-embracing threat to this planet, described by Dr. Carl Getstein, is horrifying enough to make America and Russia kill their comparatively petty rivalries - and their archaic concepts of pride in national achievement - in a desperate bid to snatch some sort of future for mankind.

Simon Butler put the known situation into clear perspective in that Science Report program. He told viewers:

"The drive to make the first man on the moon an American was launched by President Kennedy - in competitive terms. By the late Sixties it appeared that the race had been conclusively won. The Russians, it seemed, had simply dropped out and stopped trying. America had won.

"Yet today Cape Canaveral is a desert of reinforced concrete and steel. The most ambitious project in the history of mankind is apparently over."

"More and more, however, we hear talk of Skylab and a space shuttle. But shuttling what? And to where?"

All of us have seen on television the phenomenal amount of power required simply to pull a space-rocket clear of the earth's gravitational field. But suppose that power did not have to be consumed principally in merely getting into space. Suppose the rocket could start from space. What kind of travel would that bring within our grasp?

Technical journalist Charles Welbourne, author of three highly-acclaimed books on aerospace, was questioned on the tack by Butler. Here is a transcript of the key section of that interview:

WELBOURNE: Obviously we could go further with less power, or send a much larger craft. In fact, the only way we're going to see space travel on any scale is by this kind of extra-terrestrial launching - for instance from a space platform orbiting the Earth.

BUTLER: Or from the moon?

WELBOURNE: Sure...if we could get the material there to build the craft, it's make real good sense.

BUTLER: Could we transport the materials there?

97

WELBOURNE: It'd take one hell of a shuttle...but, sure, we have the machines now...in theory we could do it...especially with some kind of international co-operation.

"International co-operation." Welbourne's tone suggested that he considered such a likelihood rather remote. Certainly on the scale being discussed. But at the time of that interview, it must be remembered, Welbourne knew nothing about the Policy Committee and its submarine meetings. Nor did Butler.

Through the summer of 1976, while the Sceptre team continued its investigation, there was dramatic evidence to show how this planet was experiencing traumatic changes - sort of changes which later were to be explained to Butler by Dr. Gerstein.

The great drought of that year was unequalled in recorded history. And Butler eventually told viewers: "There was no panic...only a growing unease that what we were experiencing was unnatural and that the Earth's climate was moving towards a radical change.

"The earthquake barrage in China and the Far East has done more damage and killed more people than several nuclear attacks. Meanwhile, on the other side of the Pacific, it seemed as if the whole Caribbean was about to blow up.

"Also in Italy and Central Europe the Earth's crust was undergoing dramatic changes.

"For the first time scientists are beginning to see glimmerings of the workings of spaceship Earth, a huge but delicate machine buffeted by the forces of the interplanetary ocean."

At the height of the drought British government scientists contemplated trying to meddle with the weather. They decided not to do so - pointing out that Common Market countries might accuse Britain of stealing their rain. So Britain, like the rest of the world, went on suffering. Roads buckled in the intense heat. Firemen could hardly contain the infernos which raged through forests and across moors. And there was an astonishing range of unexpected casualties. Bees starved because there was not enough nectar or pollen in the parched flowers...thousands of racing pigeons, unable to sweat like humans, collapsed with heat exhaustion.

On September 27, 1976, one of the authors of this book - Leslie Watkins - wrote a major article in the Daily Mail which started:

Houses which have stood solidly for a hundred years or more - together with modern ones and impressive blocks of flats - are today unexpectedly splitting and threatening to collapse. Our long summer of drought has brought acute anxiety to the insurance companies - and the prospect of financial disaster to many families. Damage estimated at early £60 million has been caused by subsidence. Homes in many parts of the country, but particularly in London and the South East, have been slowly sinking at crazy angles into the parched and contracting ground.

Britain has, in effect, been ravaged by a slow-motion earthquake.

However, few people then suspected that the drought was merely the start of a cataclysmic change in the world's weather. But soon it became apparent that the pattern was beginning to go berserk - lurching from one disastrous extreme to the other - like the frantic flailings of some gigantic, doomed creature.

On June 15, 1977, the main feature article in the Daily Mail - also written by Watkins - said:

No man in the world gambles more heavily on dry weather than 54-year-old Peter Chase.

That was why, early yesterday, every flash of lightning showed the misery etched on his face.

His wife Phobe was urging him to get back into bed, to ignore the torrential rain and forget about business. But he stayed at the window, trying to calculate the cost.

Mr. Chase has good cause to be horrified by the violent electric storm which brought such devastation to many parts of Britain. He is the pluvius under-writer for Eagle Star - the leaders in rain insurance.

This has been a bad year for Mr. Chase. Jubilee celebrations, with street parties and other festivities almost drowned by deluges, were particularly disastrous...

We have, in fact, been experiencing the second heaviest spell of sustained wet weather since records were first kept in 1727. And the outlook for the rest of the week is "showery"...

Most people have assumed that this sequence of drought followed by heavy rain was, in some mysterious and providential way, Nature trying to compensate and restore the balance - that the downpours have nullified the facts which have now been outlined by Gerstein.

99

That assumption, unfortunately, is incorrect. Meteorologist Adrian Lerman explains that the excessive rains were produced by the excessive heat, that they are not a pointer to long-term cooler weather.

He says: "There is far more evaporation during periods of intense heat, with water vapor being drawn in great quantities from oceans, lakes, reservoirs and rivers, because warm air absorbs that vapor more efficiently than cold air."

"This inevitably results in an eventual increase in precipitation.

"Gerstein is undeniably right in anticipating that the greenhouse syndrome will continue to produce a great increase in global temperatures but I consider he has not laid sufficient stress on the most immediate threat to humanity - the threat of world - wide flooding."

"I am certain that Gerstein is wrong when he predicts that countries like England and America will become scorched wildernesses. They'll be destroyed all right...and they won't support life...but they'll be drowned rather than burned."

"Extreme heat, such as that which is now inevitable, will melt land glaciers. That will result in a marked rise in sea level and then there'll be the start of the extensive flooding - with London and New York among the first cities to be affected."

So Lerman, having studied the situation with scientific precision, expects a replay of the global disaster described in the Bible.

"Genesis" 6-17: "And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and everything that is in the earth shall die."

So there is a conflict of opinion between those experts who agree with Gerstein and those who agree with Lerman. They are, however, in total and terrible agreement on the key issue - that this world, because of man's stupidity, is now irrevocably doomed. Flame or flood...one of them, in the comparatively near future, will bring the agonizing end.

And what of the men behind Alternative 3?

They, presumably, have also studied the Bible version of the horrendous mass-death. "Genesis" 7-21, 22, 23: "And all flesh that moved upon the earth died, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark."

100

There can now be no doubt that those men, the ones who have supervised the mechanics of Alternative 3, have cast themselves jointly in the role of God - taking their cue from other verses in that chapter of Genesis.

The Lord instructed Noah to collect the people and the creatures destined to board the ark, the ones to be lifted clear of the global devastation.

Technology has made space-craft the modern equivalent of that ark. Who, then, decides which people shall be evacuated in the arks of the twentieth century?

These anonymous men have assumed the right to decide who shall live and who shall die. Their decisions are based, in the main, on information supplied by an elaborate international network of computers - an aspect of the operation which we will later examine in more detail.

They have also assumed a prerogative which many will consider far more obscene: that of deciding which people should be plucked away from their homes - to be mutilated and moulded into slaves. These people, these tragic victims, are those who - together with disappearing cattle and horses and other creatures - become part of Batch Consignments.

Tuesday, January 10, 1978. Another envelope from Trojan. This one, arriving exactly a week after that Photostat copy of The Smoother Plan, contained the most serious indictment yet of the men behind Alternative 3. Trojan had again been scouring the archives and, as a result, had secured two documents - one dated Wednesday, August 27, 1958, and the other dated Friday, October 1, 1971. Both had been issued by "The Chairman, Policy Committee". Both here addressed to "National Chief Executive Officers" and both were headed "Batch Consignments".

The covering note from Trojan was tersely triumphant. It said:

"Maybe now you'll really believe me! This is what made me decide I wanted out - and it's the only reason I'm working with you."

The 1958 document said:

Each designated mover will, it is estimated, require back-up labor support of five bodies. These bodies, which will be transported in cargo batch consignments, will be programed to obey legitimate orders without question and their principal initial duties will be in construction.

Priority will naturally be given to the building of accommodation for the designated movers.

101

However, it is stressed that, in the interests of good husbandry, accommodation will also be provided for the human components of batch consignments - as well as for relocated animals - as a matter of urgency. The completion of this accommodation, which will be of a more basic and utilitarian nature than that allocated to designated movers, will in normal circumstances take precedence over the creation of laboratories, offices, other places of work, and recreational centers. All exceptions to this rule will require written authorization from the Chairman of the Committee in Residence.

It is estimated that the average working life-span of human batch-consignment components will be fifteen years and, in view of high transportation costs, every effort will be made to prolong that period of usefulness.

At the end of that life-span they are to be considered disposable for, although this is recognized as regrettable, there will be no place for low-grade passengers in the new territory. They would merely consume resources required to sustain the continuing influx of designated movers and would so undermine the success potential of the operation.

Preliminary work is now progressing to adapt batch-consignment components, mentally and physically, for their projected roles and the scope of this experimental work is to be widened. Further details will be provided, when appropriate, by Department Seven.

Pre-transportation collection of batch-consignment components will be organized by National Chief Executive Officers who will be supplied with details of categories and quantities required. No collection is to be arranged without specific instructions from Department Seven.

The 1971 document said:

Experimental processing of batch-consignment components is now producing a 96 per cent success rate. This is considered not unsatisfactory.

The Policy Committee briefing circulated on September 7, 1965, explained the necessity for all components to be de-sexed: 1) To eliminate the possibility of them forming traditional mating relationships which could detract from the efficiency of their sole-function performance. 2) To ensure components do not procreate and so haphazardly perpetuate a substandard species. This second consideration is of particular importance for the products of such procreation, during their initial years of growth and development, would have no operational value and would merely be a liability on the resources of the new territory.

102

The permanent elimination of self-will and self-interest has presented great difficulties. Long-term laboratory tests have revealed that an unaccountably high percentage of components eventually regress towards their pre-processing attitudes, so rendering themselves unreliable and unsuitable for the envisaged role.

Advanced work, conducted principally in America, Britain, Japan and Russia, has now resulted in a substantial reduction of the "Component-personality" failure ratio. However, this branch of research is now to be intensified.

The Policy Committee has given careful consideration to suitable means of jettisoning rejected potential components. It has been agreed that they are not to be considered responsible for their unsuitability and that there is nothing to be gained by killing them. Such a solution, although simple enough to implement, would be unnecessarily harsh. They are therefore to have their memories destroyed - a process for so doing has now been perfected at Dnepropetrovsk and details are being circulated to all A-3 laboratories - and then they will be permitted to resume their lives.

In future no de-sexing will be done until after the personality-adjustment of the projected component, male or female, has been assessed and approved. This will ensure that those which eventually return to their homes as rejects will betray no evidence of laboratory work.

On August 22, 1977, this story appeared in the London Evening News:

A mystery girl who baffled Scotland Yard for two weeks has discharged herself from the hospital.

And the Yard said today it still does not know who she was or where she has gone.

The girl, aged between sixteen and twenty, was admitted to Whittington Hospital, Holloway, after wandering into a hospital building late one night.

She appeared to have lost her memory and, despite intensive efforts by doctors and detectives, her background remains a mystery.

103

One week before that story appeared, Hertfordshire police were appealing for help in identifying another amnesia victim - a man in his mid-thirties - found wandering on a golf-course near Harpenden. So were police in Manchester. Their memory-blank case was a man aged about twenty.

That particular section of August, 1977, produced a great rash of people with the same problem. They turned up in Germany and in France, in Italy and in Canada. They were all physically fit and apparently normal - apart from having no idea who they were or where they had been.

What produced that extraordinary epidemic of amnesia? Far too many cases were reported for the global outbreak to be dismissed as coincidence. Had something gone dramatically wrong with a complete batch of "projected components"...something so severe that it had been necessary to return them to their old surroundings?

For instance, that man found wandering on the golf-course near Harpenden...was he there simply because the Alternative 3 planners had rejected him as a slave?

We do not claim to know. And although we have interviewed him - in addition to twenty-three other amnesia victims who appeared at about the same time - we see little hope of conclusively establishing that these people had been part of a "Pre-transportation collection". However, in view of the 1971 document supplied by Trojan, we do consider that to be a distinct possibility.

Monday, May 2, 1977. Clements was now spending as little time as possible in his own office. The smells from the canteen below, he swore, were getting stronger every month. Nothing could be worse than a floating reminder of yesterday's unwanted cabbage...

He operated, most days, from a desk in the big open-plan office which had been allocated to Science Report. At times, however, it tended to be too noisy - with too many telephones and too many people - and occasionally he was forced to retreat to his own tiny room behind Studio B. This Monday morning was one of those occasions. Clements and Benson were closeted there together - studying a transcript of the final interview with Grodin.

Clements marked a section with a red pencil. "There, love," he said. "That's the bit that really intrigues me. What exactly did he mean?"

Benson read the lines again: "We're just there to keep you bums happy...to keep you from asking dumb questions about what's really going on!"

"I just don't know," he said. "That's where he dried up. I couldn't get another damned thing out of him."

"Well that still leaves us with a load of questions, doesn't it?" said Clements. "And what I need now, Colin, is answers."

"Yes, but..."

"No "buts", love, please. I'm getting all of those I need from Harman. He's raising hell, y'know, about this American trip of yours..."

"Chris, I promise you, no-one could have got more out of Grodin..."

"He's put in a complaint about you to Fergus Godwin...says it was unethical of you to persist in questioning a man when he was drunk - particularly, as he puts it, when that man has a history of instability...He's even suggested that we should junk the film because Grodin was talking nonsense..."

"It wasn't nonsense, Chris. All right, so he was a bit smashed, particularly towards the end...I'm prepared to admit that...but I'm certain that he knew what he was saying and that he was telling the truth..."

"I know - and then he fell flat on his face." Clements chuckled. "You stick with your version, love, because the Controller wants to see both of us this afternoon."

"You're serious, then? Harman really is trying to kill it?"

"Believe me, I was never more serious. Let's face it. Colin...we've put two fingers up at him all along the line on this investigation and he's out to make all the trouble he can. You might like to know, by the way, that he's complaining you didn't bother to do the other job in America..."

105

"What other job?"

Clements grinned. "The piece you were meant to do for the holiday series, the one we promised Simon Shaw he'd get for his next run. The airline are going to be narked when they find they've thrown away a facility - and young Master Shaw's not too happy either..."

"Oh, come on..."

Clements stopped him. "He can fill in with the Isle of Man - that's the least of our troubles," he said. "We still need answers."

"Then maybe we should be searching harder for Harry."

"That crazy American! The one who attacked you!"

"He's got answers," said Benson. "Remember what he said on the telephone...about knowing why scientist keep disappearing and about knowing who's behind it..."

Clements sniffed, frowned with disgust, got up to close the window. "So where do you start searching?"

"Could try the police again."

"Be back by mid-afternoon," said Clements. "We've got that session with the Controller."

The desk sergeant was polite but unhelpful. "You any idea how many people get reported missing in Britain every year?" he asked. "About five thousand. And they're the ones officially reported. God only knows how many more never get reported..."

Benson handed him the photograph he had shown Grodin. "That's him," he said. "Last seen on February 11 at that address in Lambeth."

The sergeant glanced casually at the picture. "And you don't even know his surname." He snorted. "Gives us plenty to go on, doesn't it? Anyway...what makes you think he is missing? Maybe he just doesn't want to see you any more..."

"He was frightened, very frightened, and he got me confused with somebody else," said Benson. "He seemed to think that somebody was planning to kill him."

"You think that he's been killed? That he's been murdered? Is that what you're trying to say?"

"I don't know," said Benson miserably. "I don't think so but I don't know."

"Why should he confuse you with somebody else?"

"Because he wasn't normal that morning. He was...well...bombed out of his mind."

"Drugs?"

"That's right."

They were short-handed at the police station and it was a busy morning. The sergeant decided he'd already wasted too much time. He pressed the picture back into

106

Benson's hand, made a big play of putting his pen down firmly on the counter, sighed patiently. "So what have we got, sir? An alien of uncertain age and of unknown name who uses drugs and who was last seen by you, briefly, nearly three months ago in a condemned house where he was apparently squatting.

"He imagined you were somebody who, for a reason we can't establish, wanted to murder him. Now, although he may have gone back to America for all you know, you want us to find him for you.

"Would you say that was a fair summing-up of the situation?"

Benson shuffled his feet and looked sheepish. "Sounds a bit daft, doesn't it?"

"I've got your name and address," said the sergeant politely. "If Mr. Anonymous does turn up, I'll mention you were asking after him."

The afternoon meeting with Fergus Godwin was also a rough one. The Controller had already been worked on vigorously by Harman and he was in a foul mood. He saw trouble looming with the Board over this particular Science Report project, especially with that apoplectic accountant, and he bitterly regretted having authorized Benson's trip to America.

Harman's words kept niggling at the back of his mind. Maybe Harman was right. Maybe Clements was becoming "unprofessionally obsessed". Godwin certainly had doubts about allowing the transmission of such a curious interview with a man who was patently drunk. There could be all sorts of repercussions...

"But Fergus...it could prove to be an invaluable part of the program," argued Clements. "It's just that, at the moment, there are still some missing links."

"Come back to me when and if you find those links." Godwin glowered balefully at the pair of them. "Until then that film gets locked away - and I can't see much chance of us ever using it."

They returned to the small office. Clements sat at the desk and sniffed. "Thank God there's no fish on Mondays," he said. "Fish days are always the worst."

"Now what?" asked Benson.

"Gerstein - he's all we've got left. If only we could get him to open up on this Alternative 3..."

"You want me to try him?"

Clements shook his head, picked up the grey internal telephone, dialed a number in the main Science Report office. "Is Simon Butler there?"

In May, 1971, the authoritative publication Computers and Automation carried an article by Edward Yourdon which said:

107

tremendous improvement in various phases of Government...if one has faith: faith, that the computers will work properly...men had lost faith in their human leaders, and now...things will be better if they have faith in a cold-blooded mechanical computing machine."

Only a few months earlier, at the end of 1970, the staff magazine of Barclays Bank, Spread Eagle, had contained an article which read:

Computers have given birth to the Technological Era, have ushered in the Space Age, have begun to play such a dominating role in fields as diverse as military science, weather forecasting, medicine, industrial design and production, communications, commerce, business and banking that the question is seriously being asked whether they are beginning to dominate man himself.

Some even hold the view that in the foreseeable future we shall be stripped of our individual privacy and reduced to a string of meaningless dots stored in the magnetic bowels of some giant Government computer - a sort of Big Brother whose prying gaze will have us constantly under his attentive scrutiny.

Neither of those writers realized he was anticipating a situation which was by then firmly established. "Individual privacy" had been scrapped years earlier because of covert decisions made within governments and between governments.

Some of this background, just occasionally, spills into the open.

On September 9, 1977, The Times published a front-page story, by Home Affairs Reporter Stewart Tandler, which had a headline reading: NATIONAL SECURITY CITED BY POLICE AS REASON FOR MAINTAINING SILENCE ON USE OF RECORDS.

Tandler's story said:

The names and personal details of tens of thousands of people scrutinized by the Special Branch for reasons of national security are to be fed into a new criminal intelligence computer bought by Scotland Yard and shrouded in mystery.

Note those last three words. "Shrouded in mystery." The Times is not a newspaper which would lightly use a phrase of that nature. The story continued:

When plans for the computer were drawn up two years ago it is understood that the Special Branch was allocated space on it for up to 600,000 names out of the system's total capacity of 1,300,000 names by 1985...

Census projections have indicated that Britain's population will not increase in the next decade. So that figure of 600,000 means that the Special Branch was preparing to feed details of one person out of every ninety-five in the entire population into that computer. But that is merely the start...

Discount from the total population all geriatrics, young children, and those who have been judged incurably insane...and the ratio under surveillance comes down to about one person in fifty.

Take that one step further and the implications are startling...

If the average household comprises two adults - and that is pitching it at its most conservative - the ratio is reduced to one household in twenty-five.

That means there can hardly be a street or road in Britain where at least one household - and probably far more - is not considered to merit computer-monitoring by the Special Branch.

Can you now be confident that you or your immediate neighbors are not being studied by the Special Branch? You can be absolutely certain that people you know, probably people very close to you, are getting this particular treatment.

And the figures we have given, astonishing as they may seem, do not allow for those people programed into other Special Branch computers - computers which so far have remained hidden on the classified list.

109

Does all this savour of normal Special Branch work? Or does it indicate an operation on a far bigger scale? One, possibly, as enormous as Alternative 3?

The Home Office was clearly embarrassed by Tendler's discovery and sought to "play it down". His story went on:

Yesterday a police source said that the Special Branch had yet to decide how many names would be placed on the computer and denied that anything like 600,000 would eventually be filed.

Scotland Yard said last night: "The question of the involvement of the Special Branch in the project to computerize sections of the records of C Department (the department covering CID and specialist detective squads) is not one we are prepared to discuss, since most of the work of the Special Branch is in the field of national security.

"The publication of any figures purporting to indicate the total number of records in any part of the project would amount to speculation"...

It (the Special Branch) is still surrounded by a certain amount of mystique and the same is true of the new computer. The Metropolitan Police and the Home Office have made few public statements about the nature of its use.

Tendler also said in that story that the activities of the Special Branch were "a closely guarded secret" and he added: "It is not known whose names and details have been gathered by the officers."

We cannot prove that this particular computer has been used to sift "Designated movers" for Alternative 3. However, because of information from Trojan, we are able to state categorically that similar computers are used for this purpose. We know of six - apart from the master one at the operation-control centre in Geneva. They are located in America, Britain, Germany, Japan, Poland and Russia.

There may be others. In fact, there almost certainly are. However, we have no information about them and, as we have already said, we have no intention of making statements which cannot be substantiated.

Britain's principal Alternative 3 computer is officially used exclusively by a local authority in the north-east and, as a cover, a small percentage of routine local-authority work is processed by it. The main one in America, installed and maintained at the expense of the Federal Government, is officially owned by a manufacturing company in Detroit. The Polish one is in the Academy of Sciences in Warsaw's Plac Defilad.

110

Comparatively little trouble is taken over the selection of "components" for Batch Consignments. They need to be strong, to have years of physical labor left in them. That is the prime criterion. Their personalities, back-grounds, mental agilities...these are of secondary importance, for they will be scientifically moulded into the approved pattern. And, after all, they are expendable.

But what of the "designated movers?" How is their value measured? And this mysterious "new territory" in which they are apparently destined to live -- what sort of society is being created there?

Trojan has supplied partial answers. He found them in a 1972 document - addressed to National Chief Executive Officers - from the Chairman of the Policy Committee:

Standing Instructions relating to the recruitment of designated movers have already been circulated by this Committee. However, recent reports from the Chairman of the Committee in Residence indicate that there have been certain failures in the execution of those instructions.

These failures have produced unwarranted problems in the new territory and have resulted in an unacceptably high wastage of post-transportation designated movers.

This situation cannot be tolerated and the Policy Committee therefore requires me, once again, to specify the aims and the requirements of the Committee in Residence.

Every effort is to be made to eliminate the problems which men have become conditioned into accepting as inevitable in the old territory.

Alternative 3 participants have evolved, or must be taught to evolve, away from the concepts of national or tribal interests which have traditionally resulted in warfare. This will become of increasing importance when the new territory becomes more intensively populated. National Chief Executive Officers will therefore give priority attention to this aspect of the operation and ensure it is fully understood by their regional subordinates.

No person is to be nominated as a potential designated mover if there is any doubt about him or her having the potential to evolve in this manner.

This requirement over-rides all other considerations of skills and training.

As this particular personality trait still cannot be assessed from a computer print-out, it is imperative that judgements be based on individual interviews. This puts the onus on regional officials for, in view of the size of the operation, it is not possible for this aspect to be handled centrally or even nationally.

There was more in this vein. Much more. This was by far the most comprehensive document obtained by Trojan. It stressed the need for an even mix of nationalities and colors among the designated movers for, although they were to be "integrated into a new conception of a family community," it was considered that all ethnic groups should be represented in the new territory. That was emphasized in one particular sentence: "The object of Alternative 3 is to ensure the survival of all strains of the human race and not merely those from the more advanced and privileged back-grounds."

That sounds fine and noble -- until one considers the nightmare treatment of those regarded contemptuously as "components." They have been pitilessly shanghaied from their families and reduced to sub-humans. They now labor as mindless beasts of burden. And their only escape from degradation lies in death. That is the true and unforgivable obscenity of Alternative 3.

The document continued:

Representatives of all aspects of human culture will eventually be transported to the new territory. Therefore, in time, designated movers will also be recruited from the arts. They will include writers, painters, sculptors and musicians.

In the early stages, however, only those with skills essential to the foundation of the new society are required. Approved category lists have already been circulated.

Explorations in the new territory have revealed certain factors which had not been entirely anticipated and, principally for this reason, amendments have been necessitated to category quotas.

The Committee in Residence particularly requests more intensive recruitment of doctors, chemists, neurologists and bacteriologists.

The new territory, for the moment, has a satisfactory complement of computer specialists, mining technicians, and agricultural overseers. Recruitment of these categories is to cease until further instructions.

Expansions and wastages will inevitably result in changes and monthly lists of personnel requirements will in future be circulated to National Chief Executive Officers by Department Seven.

The document then detailed the Alternative 3 attitude to children. They were to be introduced into the new territory for it was considered that their presence would have "the beneficial effect of adding an additional dimension of social-structure familiarity". That, when the jargon is stripped away, means that the emigrants would appreciate having them there, that children would help them feel more "at home".

However, children were not considered productive - not in the way required in the new territory - and so the quota was to be severely restricted. Only those with "key parents" were to be transported - and then only if the parents could not be persuaded to make other custodial arrangements for them in the old territory:

There may be instances in which vital personnel can be persuaded that their children can be left with relatives in the knowledge that they will be reunited with them at a reasonably early date and, where applicable, every reasonable effort should be made to secure the success of such persuasion.

No figures or percentages were given in that document but it would appear that mathematician Robert Patterson's children - sixteen-year-old Julian and fourteen-year-old Kate - are part of a very small minority. Unless, of course, there was a change of attitude towards "the child quota" between 1972 and the time of their disappearance from Scotland in February, 1976.

Ann Clark, on the evidence of that document, is also part of a minority. All women are, in Alternative 3. The ratio among designated movers is apparently three males to each female. Unless, again, there has been a policy change since the document was circulated in 1972.

No facilities can yet be spared for maternity care, although naturally there are plans for the future, and so pregnancies are outlawed in the new territory. The Committee in residence will provide notification of when this ruling is rescinded.

Accidental pregnancies will be automatically aborted and parties to the offence will be arraigned before the Committee in Residence.

The rest of the document dealt mainly with the provision of recreational and entertainment facilities. There is, apparently, a cinema. There are also a number of communal television-viewing rooms into which flow programs transmitted from many parts of the world.

It is intriguing to realize that designated movers, including men like Brian Pendlebury from Manchester, were very likely watching that sensational edition of Science Report.

We have already mentioned how, in the course of that program in June, 1977, Simon Butler told viewers that twenty-four people were then known to have vanished in mysterious circumstances - circumstances which pointed to their having been recruited into Alternative 3.

Three of those people, of course, were Ann Clark, Robert Patterson and Brian Pendlebury. Here we intended to give details of the other twenty-one - based on information collated for Sceptre Television by Terry Dickson. In eighteen of those cases, however, we have received family requests for anonymity and, in deference to those requests, we are restricting ourselves to three examples:

Richard Tuffley, 27, endocrinologist. Born in Sidmouth, Devon, but living and working in Swansea, South Wales. Orphaned when young and brought up by mother's sister, now deceased. Unmarried and no known relatives. Lived alone in small rented flat near university. Disappeared Monday, January 5, 1976. Last seen driving light-blue mini-van in direction of Cardiff. Van has still not been located.

Statement from his departmental chief: "He was a first-class and highly-conscientious colleague - certainly not the sort one would expect to let the team down as it now seems he did.

"He was rather introverted and made few friends but, I had no indication that he was in any way unhappy here."

Gordon Balcombe, 36, senior administrator with multi - national manufacturing conglomerate. Living in Bromley, Kent, and working in central London. Divorced in 1969. Father of three children, living with ex-wife, whom he did not see after divorce. Lived alone in former family home - detached house backing on to park - but said to have many women visitors. Some, according to neighbors, often stayed overnight. Disappeared Thursday, February 5, 1976. Last seen leaving his office in a taxi. Taxi-driver never traced.

Statement from his managing director: "We were completely bewildered by his disappearance for he was a man with a tremendous future in this organization.

Plans were being mooted for him to move to a more senior position in our base at Chicago and he seemed genuinely excited by the prospect.

"We regard his disappearance as a great loss."

Statement from Mrs. Marjorie Balcombe:

"Gordon, for all I know, could be anywhere. I suspect that he is probably somewhere in America."

"He is the sort of man that executive head-hunters do try to entice to new posts and it is quite possible that he would not bother to tell his old firm if he decided to accept a better offer. He would just go if it suited his purpose. That's the sort of person Gordon is. Self-centered. "And I shouldn't be in the slightest surprised to learn that he has some woman in tow. Women are his great weakness."

"The only thing that really puzzles me is the way he left so many of his clothes and other personal possessions in the house. That does strike me as being out-of-character."

Sidney Dilworth, 32, meteorologist. Living and working in Reading, Berkshire. Widower. Wife died in car crash in October, 1975. No Children, lived alone in terraced house being bought on mortgage. Disappeared Friday, April 16, 1976.

Last seen driving hired car in direction of London. Vehicle later found in car-park at Number Three Terminal, Heathrow Airport.

Statement from his father, Wilfred Dilworth: "I keep telling the police that something really bad has happened to our Sidney but, although they're very sympathetic, they don't seem to be doing much about it. I've got a nasty feeling he's been murdered or something. He was always a very considerate lad and he'd never want me and his mother to have this sort of worry hanging over us."

"He was very upset after his wife was killed and he talked about trying to start a new life in Canada. In fact, in the January before he disappeared he said he thought he had a job lined up there but, as far as I could gather, that just fizzled out. At the research station they say he never mentioned anything about leaving but I suppose he wouldn't want to tell them until it was all settled."

"Now we've reached the stage where I dread opening the newspaper in the morning for I'm sure that one day I'll be reading that they've found his body."

115

Now we know that this pattern has been repeated in country after country. Right across the world.

Andrew Nisbett, 39, aerospace technician, born Tulsa, Oklahoma. Disappeared on Tuesday, October 5, 1976, from Houston, Texas - together with his wife, Rita, and their only son.

Pavel Garmanas, 42, physicist, born in Usachevka, USSR. Disappeared on Thursday, July 14, 1977, from his new home in Jerusalem, Israel.

Marcel Rouffanche, 35, nutrition specialist, born in the suburb of Saint-Rugg near Avignon. Disappeared on Wednesday, November 16, 1977, from his apartment in Paris.

Eric Hillier, 27, constructional engineer, born Melbourne, Australia. Disappeared on Thursday, December 29, 1977.

Intensive investigation has shown that the figures given by Butler in that television program represented only a fraction of the true total. And that total is still mounting.

The explosion of fear provoked by the Science Report program resulted, as we said earlier, in the company's being required to deny formally the truth of the material which had been presented.

The wording of that statement had been prepared by Leonard Harman and, despite violent opposition from Clements, it was released by the Press Office. Most newspapers accepted the denial - apparently making no attempt to verify the curious background stories of people like Robert Patterson.

The Daily Express, to Harman's relief, devoted most of its front page the following day to a splash story headlined: STORM OVER TV'S SPOOF.

The Express story started:

Thousands of viewers all over the country protested in shock and anger over a science fiction "documentary" put out by ITV last night.

From the moment that "Alternative 3" ended at 10 p.m., irate watchers jammed the switchboards of the Daily Express and ITV companies to complain.

This story made no mention of the evidence which had been given on screen by Dr. Carl Gerstein or by other respected authorities such as Professor G. Gordon Broadbent. Grodin's important contribution was also ignored. However, the story did indicate that the "hour-long spoof" -- transmitted at peak viewing time - "purported" to show a version of the scientific brain - drain. It continued:

116

The program was introduced by former newscaster Simon Butler as a serious investigation into a disturbing trend of scientific discovery.

American and Russian spacemen were seen collaborating to set up the "new colony"...while viewers were left to suppose that the reason for the exploration was the end of life on Earth.

TV advertised the show by saying: "What this program shows may be considered unethical..."

Viewers taken unawares protested their shock immediately. Others, realizing the program was a spoof, complained of ITV's "irresponsibility".

Early today, a spokesman for the Independent Broadcasting Authority said it had thought long and hard before allowing the documentary to be shown.

But Mrs. Denise Ball of Camberley, Surrey, said: "I was scared out of my wits. It was all so real."

Mrs. Mary Whitehouse, the renowned clean-Up-TV campaigner, was another who completely believed the "Harman denial". She was quoted in another newspaper as saying: "I had hundreds of calls. The film was brilliantly done to deceive."

So that was the immediate reaction. And that was entirely understandable. The facts assembled by Clements and his team were so stupefyingly frightening that people were eager to believe they were not true.

People were delighted to accept Harman's denial because it drew a comforting veil over the unacceptable.

All this put men like Terry Dickson in a most invidious position. Over Robert Patterson, for example. Had Patterson ever really existed? That question, together with others like it, was implicit in the attitude of most newspapers. And, for some unfathomable reason, officials at the University of St. Andrews refused to make any comment. The vice-chancellor there who had explained about Patterson going prematurely to America, who had apologized so courteously for the resulting waste of time...he was on protracted leave somewhere in Europe and could not be contacted.

So was Patterson merely a figment of Dickson's imagination? Was that why Benson had been unable to interview him?

The questions were piling up. And they were getting crazier and crazier.

During the following few days, however, Fleet Street had time to make inquiries and certain journalists began to consider the television investigation in a rather different perspective.

117

Terry Dickson has told us that the biggest moment of relief for him came on June 26 when he opened his copy of the Sunday Telegraph. Columnist Philip Purser, respected as one of the most perceptive commentators in Britain, pointed out that "a number of mysteries within the mystery posed by Alternative 3 remain unsolved."

The first of those "Mysteries" detailed by Purser related to "Dr. Robert Paterson (sic), one of the savants whose disappearance prompted this disturbing investigation".

Purser had a special reason for being interested in Patterson for, as he told his readers, he had indirect knowledge of the man:

The son of a friend of mine who lectures in the same department at St. Andrews tells me that Patterson, though an able mathematician and specialist in Boolean geometry, was also a true Scot, notoriously careful with his bawbees.

Those final five words are clearly a reference to the Patterson characteristic we described in Section Two - that of resenting having so much of his money taken in taxation. He tended to be such a bombastic bore on the subject that, as we said, many of his university colleagues were relieved when he announced he was leaving. Purser's contact at St. Andrews was probably one of those colleagues.

Philip Purser made it abundantly clear that he was too shrewd to be fooled by the Harman denial. He concluded his Sunday Telegraph article with these thoughts:

It would be a mistake to file "Alternative 3" away too cozily with Panorama's spaghetti harvest and other hoaxes. Suppose it were fiendish double bluff inspired by the very agencies identified in the program and that the super-powers really are setting up an extra-terrestrial colony of outstanding human beings to safeguard the species?

Letters flowing into the studios showed there was also a significant proportion of thinking viewers who recognized the truth. One of the first received by Simon Butler was from the President of the European Space Association who wrote: "I must congratulate you and Colin Benson on your assiduous research."

Here are extracts from other typical letters:

I am a recently-retired aerospace technician and your investigation explained certain factors which I discovered in the course of my duties and which have been puzzling me for some years. Thank God someone has at last had the initiative and the tenacity to present the unpalatable truth - E.M., Filton, Bristol.

118

Congratulations on not allowing the politicians to muzzle you! Your Science Report was absolutely terrifying but, of course, the truth so often is and surely we have a right to know what is really happening. The subsequent back-peddling by official spokesmen for your company, which appears to have been blandly accepted by most newspapers, does not surprise me. Most of my professional life has been spent in the Civil Service and I am only too aware of how pressures can be applied, particularly when it comes to so-called Official Secrets. Please maintain your vigilance - J.N., London NW1.

Yet newspapers still showed an extraordinary reluctance to pursue the subject of Alternative 3.

Why? Why did they not question people like Wilfred Dilworth and Marjorie Balcombe? Why did they not contact Dennis Pendlebury in Manchester...or Richard Tuffley's former colleagues in Swansea? These people were available for interview. They still are available.

Many attempts have been made, as we explained earlier, to prevent the publication of this book - and, because of action by those two MPs, we have been forced into a reluctant compromise. So is it possible that newspapers, have been subjected to similar pressures? And that they, in "the interests of national security", have yielded to those pressures? That, in a free society, may seem incredible. But the world has never before known anything as incredible as Alternative 3.

A key to the truth was provided by Kenneth Hughes in the Daily Mirror on June 20, 1977 - the day the program was actually transmitted. He had secured advance access to some of the material gathered by Clements and his team and his article was headlined: WHAT ON EARTH IS GOING ON? He wrote:

A science program is likely to keep millions of Britons glued to their armchairs.

Alternative 3 (ITV 9.0) is an investigation into the disappearance of several scientists.

They seem simply to have vanished from the face of the Earth.

119

Chilling news is read by former ITV newscaster Simon Butler who gives a gloomy report on the future.

Then came the truly telling paragraph:

"The program will be screened in several other countries - but not America. Network bosses there want to assess its effect on British viewers.

That is what columnist Hughes had been told. That is what he believed. The truth was, however, that television network bosses in America were permitted no discretion in the matter. Any screening of that Science Report program was forbidden in that country by higher authority.

It was no mere coincidence that two of the countries where the documentary was banned were America and Russia -the two principal partners in this amazing conspiracy. Security forces in each of those countries were particularly alert to the nuances of public reaction...

The backlash of embarrassment which followed the transmission produced an immediate clamp-down of information in Britain. Even Professor G. Gordon Broadbent, a man noted for his independent attitudes, was reluctant to become more deeply involved. We wanted him to enlarge on the theories he had outlined in the program, to elaborate on the theme of covert co-operation between the super-powers, and so Watkins visited him at the Institute of International Political Studies in London. Here is a transcript from the tape of that interview which took place on July 7, 1977:

WATKINS: You are naturally aware of the statement which claimed that the Alternative 3 program was a hoax. What is your reaction to that statement?

BROADBENT: It would be wrong, in the present political climate, for me to make any comment.

WATKINS: You suggested that co-operation between East and West could involve some "massive but covert operation in space". Would you give your reasons for that suggestion?

BROADBENT: You may recall that I stressed that this could be the situation but I did not state categorically that it was. In fact, as I remember, I explained that I was not in the business of speculation and I see nothing to be gained by enlarging on what I have already said.

WATKINS: You took part in that program as an expert commentator. What are your feelings about this entire exercise now being dismissed as a hoax?

120

BROADBENT: Shall we say that the program was of a more sensational nature than I had anticipated when I agreed to participate? I was surprised by some of its findings.

WATKINS: But do you feel those findings accurately reflected what is really happening?

BROADBENT: I'm sorry...I'd prefer to say no more.

The interview was extremely unsatisfactory. However, only a few weeks later, we received more information which provided a deeper insight into the workings of Alternative 3...

Thursday, August 4, 1977. Another submarine meeting of Policy Committee. Chairman: R EIGHT. Transcript section supplied by Trojan starts:

A TWO: But losing a whole Batch Consignment just like that!

A EIGHT: We had bum luck...that's all there is to it...

A TWO: Three hundred bodies smashed to bits...a complete write-off and that's all you can say! We had bum luck! Look, I'm not a technical man and I tend to get lost with some of this technical talk...so will someone please explain just how a thing like this can happen...because, I tell you, I've got a gut feeling there's been carelessness.

R FIVE: It is not possible to legislate against accidents of this nature...they are part of the hazards of transportation to the new territory...

A TWO: Yes, but...

R FIVE: Please...I will explain. Meteors are very common, far more common than people realize, and about a million of them enter the earth's atmosphere every day. Nearly all are very tiny, not more than about a gram in weight, but some are considerably bigger...

A EIGHT: That's right...some are too big to evaporate completely on their journey through the earth's atmosphere so they land as solid lumps. We reckon that about 500 kilograms arrive this way from outer space every year...

R FIVE: Sometimes these lumps are gigantic. There was one in 1919, for example, which landed in Siberia. It devastated about 100 square miles of countryside...

A EIGHT: Then there's that classic meteor crater in Arizona...

121

R FIVE: It is the same in and around the new territory...millions of meteors are bombarding its atmosphere and our craft have to travel through that bombardment...

A TWO: But our pilots...don't they take avoiding action?

A EIGHT: Imagine yourself on a bicycle...trying to dodge an avalanche that's rolling right on top of you...that's how it was with this lot...

A TWO: And you're saying this one which hit the Batch Consignment craft was maybe as big as that Siberian one?

R FIVE: Possibly...but we have no means of telling... anyway, it wouldn't be necessary for it to be that big...one a hundredth that size would have completely destroyed the craft...

R EIGHT: This discussion, I feel, is leading us nowhere. Our scientific people at Archimedes Base have assured us that this disaster-our first, I must emphasize - could not possibly have been avoided. And that has been confirmed by the Committee in Residence. It is hardly our function to hold another post-mortem.

A ONE: That's right. We ought to be thankful there were no designated movers on board. So we lost 300 components...is that so desperately serious? All we've got to do is fix for another collection.

(Authors' note: The following month, you may recall, brought reports of mass disappearances in Australia. By the end of September many of those who had disappeared were found by chance in what was apparently a slave-labor camp-possibly in readiness for clinical processing and transportation. Many others have never been seen since. The discovery of those "slave-labor" men, coming so soon after that meeting of the Policy Committee, might, of course, have been merely a coincidence. However, we consider that to be highly unlikely).

R EIGHT: The legacy of that unfortunate television program is of far more immediate importance...

A FIVE: Listen...that program has been completely discredited. People have accepted it wasn't meant to be taken seriously, that it was no more than an elaborate joke...we don't need to sweat blood over it...

122

R EIGHT: Most people have accepted the official statements but there are those who cannot be so easily convinced. We must not under-estimate the damage that has been done by the program. It has made certain people think and wonder and that can be dangerous. We must make certain that its credibility is completely eradicated.

A TWO: I told you we should have killed that guy Gerstein...way back in February...I said then he was dangerous...

R FOUR: My friend is right...he did say that. And I pointed out then that Gerstein's talk could start a panic among the masses...

A FIVE: So what are you saying? An Expediency?

R ONE: What value would that be now? He has said all he can add...and now people are laughing at him. They say he is a crank. so what would be gained by an Expediency?

A TWO: He should never have co-operated with those television guys...he deserves to die and...

A EIGHT: I told you all before...we don't use Expediencies for punishment purposes...we use them only in the furtherance of the operation. So maybe we were wrong before...maybe we should have had Gerstein killed...but, now, I see no point...

R EIGHT: We will vote. Those in favor of an Expediency?...thank you...And against?...Good... I entirely agree. Gerstein did behave in a most foolhardy manner but we have nothing to gain by his death...

A TWO: But what about the regional officer concerned?

A EIGHT: You're right there. He should have stopped that television crap. He's proved himself to be utterly unreliable. He failed and failed badly and, what's worse, he could let us down again. The man, without any question, is a liability and I propose an Expediency.

R TWO: Seconded.

R EIGHT: Those in favor?...Then that is unanimous. The method?

A THREE: How about a telepathic sleep-job...maybe with a gun...

R EIGHT: That seems sensible...it's too soon after Ballantine for another hot-job.

That was where the transcript section ended. What had Gerstein said to cause such consternation? Those who saw the television program will already know. In the next section, for the benefit of others, we will be giving full details of his interview with Simon Butler.

123

But what of the final part of that transcript: "telepathic sleep-job with a gun". That was gibberish to us -- at that stage. It was not until later that we got a possible explanation from Dr. Hugo Danningham. We were accustomed by that stage to surprises. But Dr. Danningham's explanation came as one of the most startling surprises yet.

124
SECTION TEN

Dr. Hugo Danningham lectures regularly on parapsychology at three British universities and is a committee member of the European Institute for Brain Research. He was interviewed on our behalf by Colin Benson in Brussels on September 23, 1977. That interview, which Benson taped, provided an insight into the possible meaning of the phrase "telepathic sleep-job".

In the early 19602, he explained, significant advances were made in the study of parapsychology at the University of Kharkov and at the University of Leningrad - advances which many experts feared were to be adapted for use in any future conflict between East and West.

They involved telepathy and, more specifically, the long-distance invasion and manipulation of minds. The potential military advantages were patently obvious. Enemies could be attacked and suborned literally from within. If the telepathic power were strong enough, they could be compelled to ignore the orders of their commanders in preference to those being beamed directly into their minds. They would, in fact, respond like remote-controlled puppets.

Military authorities in the West, fearful of the advantages this could yield to the Russians, initiated intensive research into this new style of weapon. And, as a result, it had been perfected by both super-powers.

"Experiments have proved that children, like birds and beasts and people in primitive tribes, are usually more receptive to telepathic messages and instructions than most adults in a civilized society," said Dr. Danningham. "This is because once intelligence has been fully developed, and once a tremendous amount of education has been absorbed, information received on a major scale directly from other minds could easily result in mental confusion."

"As a result, the mind of civilized man has developed a protective barrier against telepathy. This barrier can be penetrated most easily when the defenses are down - such as when a person is extremely fatigued or is going through a period of great emotional stress. And the defenses of the mind, of course, are never more relaxed than during sleep. That is when a person is most vulnerable to telepathic invasion - particularly if such an invasion was being controlled by experienced professionals.

"That, I suspect, is the explanation behind that "sleep-job" expression."

Benson frowned, shook his head in perplexity. I'm sorry...I don't quite follow..."

"A sleeping man can be given instructions and, if the circumstances are propitious, he will obey those instructions - even if they are that he should kill himself..."

125

"Good God!" said Benson. "You're suggesting, then, a sort of somnambulistic suicide! But this is quite fantastic! These circumstances you mention...what exactly would they be?"

For any action as dramatic as self-destruction there could almost certainly have to be a synchronization of many factors, : said Dr. Danningham. "For example, it would be easier if the intended victim were at precisely the right period of his biorhythmic psi sensitivity cycle and..."

"But surely the instinct for self-preservation would countermand any instructions calculated to result in suicide...unless the sleeper wanted to kill himself anyway..."

"Not if the telepathic instructions were cleverly presented, : said Danningham. "Let me give you an illustration:

"Imagine you want to kill a man who, let's say, lives high up in a skyscraper block. Now you're not going to tell that man to kill himself by jumping out of his bedroom window because - as you so rightly say - his instinct for survival would very likely intervene and reject the order.

"So what you do is feed him false information. You tell him telepathically that there is some wild beast rampaging around his room or that the building has caught fire. You tell him there is a safety net spread under the window and that, to save himself, he must jump. So, in a desperate bid to stay alive, he jumps - and breaks his neck.

"It is possible, of course, to play all sorts of permutations on this tack. You might persuade your sleeping victim, for instance, into believing there is some venomous spider attached to his chest, that he must stab it and kill it before it kills him. And so, in his sleep, he stabs himself."

"The variations, my dear Mr. Benson, are almost limitless. If the telepathic messages convinced your sleeper that he had accidentally drunk some corrosive poison and that the only antidote was in a bottle marked cyanide...well, I'm sure you see what I mean.:

"And you're saying that this sort of thing actually happens?"

Danningham shook his head. "No, I'm not saying that at all. I'm merely telling you what is possible. Men in my field have the knowledge required to make those things happen but I cannot visualize anyone actually using that knowledge..."

Maybe Dr. Danningham was right. Maybe, at that time, the men behind Alternative 3 had not used somnambulistic suicide as a method of murder. However, we spent weeks researching newspaper archives in America and Britain and we discovered three cases which, to say the least, appear to merit a question mark.

126

Monday, February 2, 1976. James Riggerford, 42, happily married with three children, walked from his beachside home south-west of Houston, Texas, sometime shortly after 3:00 a.m. - two days after resigning as the Operations Administrator with NASA. His body, found clad in pajamas, was later recovered from the Gulf of Mexico.

Tuesday, September 7, 1976. Roger Marshall-Smith, a 31-year-old physicist who had recently returned from temporary attachment to NASA in America, was living with his parents in Winchester, Hampshire. They found him just after 1:00 a.m. - two hours after they had all gone to sleep - in flames at the bottom of the stairs. He had apparently, while still asleep, doused his clothing with turpentine and then set fire to himself. The agony of burning had awakened him but it was then too late to save his life.

Saturday, January 15, 1977. James Arthur Carmichael, 35, aerospace technician, hurtled inexplicably to his death at 4:35 a.m. from a sixteenth-floor hotel bedroom window in Washington. Friends said that he had seemed happy and in normal spirits the previous evening and had gone to bed alone at about midnight. He, too, was wearing pajamas.

Were these three men victims of "telepathic sleep-jobs"? We do not claim to know but we consider it reasonable to suggest that the possibility cannot now be discounted. And what of the "regional officer" mentioned in the transcript? The answer to that question was to come, eventually, in the most unexpected way.

Benson returned to the production office and Simon Butler joined Clements in the little room behind Studio B. "How were things with Fergus?" he asked.

"Not good," said Clements miserably. "He wants to junk Colin's interview with Grodin. Quite frankly, Simon, the whole thing looks like it's getting screwed up...unless, maybe, you can squeeze more out of Gerstein."

"You mean Alternative 3?"

Clements nodded. "That's what it all seems to hinge on," he said. "Gerstein obviously knows about it. Or, at least, he knows the theory..."

"There's a big difference between knowing and talking." Butler was remembering how he's been given a sherry when what he's really wanted was an answer. "When I say him in March he was quite definite. He simply didn't want to know..."

"Try him again," urged Clements. "Tell him everything you know ... what we've got from Grodin and Broadbent ... tell him the lot ... and then see if you can't persuade him."

"Well," said Butler. "I'm prepared to try..."

Two days later he was back in that book-lined study in Cambridge. And, to his surprise, Gerstein eventually agreed to talk about Alternative 3. At first Gerstein was very much on his guard, very reluctant to be drawn, but he listened courteously to all Butler had to say.

127

"You people have done your homework pretty thoroughly," he acknowledged. He re-lit his dead pipe and stared thoughtfully at the desk. "There doesn't seem any point now in me not telling you what I know..."

Here is a transcript of the interview which followed -- as it was presented on television:

GERSTEIN: You already know about Alternatives 1 and 2 - and why they were rejected. Well ... Alternative 3 offered a more limited option -- an attempt to ensure the survival of at least a small proportion of the human race. We were theorists, remember, not technicians ... but we realized we were talking about the kind of space travel that - twenty years ago - seemed no more than science fiction.

BUTLER: You mean...go to some other planet?

GERSTEIN: I mean get the hell off this one - while there was still time! I had no idea whether it would, or could, be done. And I still don't.

BUTLER: Did you have any ideas about who might go?

GERSTEIN: I remember we discussed the kind of cross-section we'd like to see get away ... a balance of the sciences and the arts, of course, and, indeed, all aspects, as far as possible, of human culture ... The list would never be complete - but it would be better than nothing.

BUTLER: And these people ... where was it visualized they might go?

GERSTEIN: Ah, now that was the big question. There are about 100,000 million stars in the Milky Way -about equal to the number of people who have ever walked this earth - and as long ago as 1950 Fred Hoyle was estimating that more than a million of those stars had planets which could support human life...

BUTLER: So it really was as vague and theoretical as that?

GERSTEIN: In 1957 ... at the time of the Huntsville Conference ... yes. But the situation has changed quite considerably since then. Now the most distinct possibility seems to be Mars..."

BUTLER: Mars!

GERSTEIN: Yes, I can imagine your viewers raising their eyebrows because most people think of Mars in terms of little green men with aerials sticking out of their heads ... but, scientifically, our attitude to Mars has had to be amended more than once.

128

In the early days of astronomy, Mars was believed to have artificially-constructed canals - which was taken as evidence of intelligent life on the planet. Later this theory was discredited. In its place we had a picture of a barren, inhospitable planet, inimical to the survival of any form of life.

Then, more recently, an interesting idea was put forward: Suppose life did at one time exist on Mars...

As the climate and conditions worsened, any surviving life may have evolved into a state of hibernation, awaiting the return of more favorable conditions. It has even been suggested that the actual atmosphere which used to support life may have become locked up in the planet's surface soil.

There was an occurrence several years ago which made this theory very persuasive. Mars has always had a covering of cloud, varying in density at different times, until the time of which I speak, when the cloud thickened to a degree never previously observed. This happened, and was scientifically recorded, in 1961.

It was obvious that storms of colossal proportions were taking place on Mars. Now...this is the really interesting bit ... when the clouds eventually cleared, some remarkable changes were seen. The polar ice caps had substantially decreased in size, and around the equatorial regions a broad band of darker coloring had appeared. This, it has been suggested, was vegetation.

BUTLER: Has anyone explained this happening?

GERSTEIN: At a conference shortly before it happened, I put forward a theoretical suggestion. I said that if the atmosphere of Mars was in fact locked into the surface soil, then a controlled nuclear explosion might be able to release it - and, of course, revive whatever life was in hibernation... the only problem was about how to deliver the explosion well in advance of arriving there ourselves. That same year the Russians had a great space disaster. Yes, that was in 1959. Only the barest facts are recorded, the rest was kept secret. A rocket blew up at its launching. Numbers of people were killed and the area was devastated ... what were they trying to launch?

And did they finally succeed?

Was that rocket carrying a nuclear device which accounted for the devastation it caused? A nuclear device which, on a second attempt, could have reached the surface of Mars to cause the dynamic changes recorded in 1961? The sudden outbreaks of storms on Mars, the dwindling of the ice caps, the growth of what appears to be vegetation in the tropical zone ... all that is recorded scientific fact.

129

The interview, as transmitted, ended at that point. The original version, before being edited, contained this additional exchange:

BUTLER: But I don't understand ... the pictures relayed from Viking 2 on Mars ... they showed little more than a plateau of red rock ... the sort of terrain that seemed to offer little prospect of survival...

GERSTEIN: I don't pretend to understand that either. But, as you've already told me, there does seem to be some sort of cover-up going on. Maybe you should take that up with someone more up-to-date in these matters ... someone who is abreast of modern developments in aerospace ...

BUTLER: Yes...maybe Charles Welbourne can help us there. But there's one other aspect I'd like to discuss with you, Dr. Gerstein, and that's to do with animals, birds, insects and so on. It's all very well talking about transporting man off to a new life on a different planet but how much of his environment could he, or should he, take with him?

GERSTEIN: That's one you ought to put to a biologist. Stephen Manderson ... Professor Stephen Manderson ...was also at Huntsville and he's a singularly pleasant man...very approachable.

Butler telephoned Clements from Cambridge and Clements instructed Terry Dickson to make the necessary arrangements with Manderson. Kate White interviewed him the following day at his home in Reigate, Surrey. The interview went well but, as you may remember, it was not included in the transmitted program. Clements has explained that he was forced to omit it because, despite his pleas, his screen time was severely limited. ITN's News at Ten, scheduled to follow that edition of Science Report, could not be delayed. And, Harman had told him, he could not continue after the news because the rest of the evening had been allocated to programs from other companies.

We consider that, in this instance, an exception should have been made to the rigid pattern of ITV's program-planning. Manderson's views were fascinating. They were also extremely pertinent.

130

"The Bible concept of taking two of every type of creature into the ark ... that, in this context, would be impossible and quite irrational," he said. "Man, basically, is a selfish creature. There's nothing much wrong in that because a certain degree of selfishness is necessary for survival.

"We wear other creatures and make cloths and cosmetics out of them and, in fact, we use them in all sorts of ways. So in this Alternative 3 operation - if, indeed, there is such an operation - it would surely be logical to select only those we wanted to take with us.

"Would we want to take rats and mosquitoes, for instance? Of course not! We'd be given the opportunity to create the ideal environment for ourselves and, for the very first time, we'd be able to choose which creatures should share that environment. It would be a most marvellous opportunity.

"But think of the species we could happily do without. Starlings ... rooks ... pea-moths ... eelworms which do such damage to crops like potatoes and sugar-beet ... what possible use are any of them to us?

"Do you realize that three million species of insects have already been taxonomically classified and that, because of the present rate of insect evolution, the total classification will never be completed!

"And consider the damage they do! In India alone insects consume more food every year than nine million human beings - and that's in a country where there's widespread starvation.

"No ... leave them here and let them perish. Man doesn't need them ..."

Kate White interrupted: "But surely some of the most humble creatures are useful to man. Earthworms, for instance, aerate the soil and ..."

"Earthworms, like every other species, would have to be properly assessed for usefulness," said Manderson briskly. "Gophers, for example, might prove to be more efficient. In the Canadian plains they perform exactly the same function as earthworms. Vast tracts there have no worms and it's the gopher which turns vegetable mould into rich loam ... no, as I said, each case would have to be scientifically assessed."

"But what about the sort of creatures we now keep in zoos? Creatures like lions and giraffes and elephants?"

Manderson seemed surprised by her naivety. "Well, what about them? It wouldn't be good economics to shuttle them off to another planet - even if sufficient transport were available. They'd have to die and, quite frankly, it wouldn't make one iota of difference.

I beg you, Miss White, not to get bogged down in sentimentality. It's fashionable but it really is quite pointless.

"The dinosaurs lasted on this earth for a hundred million years - fifty times as long as man has been around -- but the world goes on very well without them. And it's been the same with so many other creatures. How many people, would you say, have ever been in mourning for the dinomys?"

"Dinomys? I'm sorry...I don't quite follow..."

"Precisely! You're an educated young lady but you've never even heard of them, have you? Dinomys ... rat-like creatures which grew as big as calves ... used to flourish in South America. Polar bears and ostriches ... they'll be the same one day ... people will look blank, just as you did a moment ago, when their names are mentioned."

He smiled, and ruffled his finger through his hair. "I could give you example after example - just to show how narrow the conventional view-point really is..."

"But creatures like bears ... they seem so, well, so permanent..."

"So did the onactornis."

"Onactornis?"

"Carnivorous bird...eight feet tall...couldn't fly but terrorized smaller creatures for millions of years."

Kate White was anxious to divert the interview into more positive channels. Clements, she knew, would hardly thank her for wasting so much film footage on a philosophical discussion about prehistoric monsters. That, in her experience, was one of the troubles with experts. They often got carried away with their own cleverness. They liked, in fact, to show off. "But if on assumes that the basic premise is correct, that men are colonizing Mars, wouldn't they have to start from scratch with stocking an entire new world? And wouldn't that be a almost unsuperable task?"

"Not when you understand the facts or life," said Manderson. "You've heard, of course, about the experiments which have resulted in the creation of test-tube babies..."

"Yes, but..."

"But do you realize that enough female eggs to produce the entire next generation of the human race could be packed into the shell of a single chicken's egg?"

"Goodness! I' no idea."

"And the same convenient compactness, Miss White, applies to other creatures. A mother cod, for example, can lay up to six million eggs at a single spawning. Fortunately most of those eggs are destroyed before they develop into fish...or else there'd be no room for people to paddle off our beaches. If they all survived the seas of our world would be solid masses of cod by now - and they could all survive if nurtured in the right conditions."

"There was a ling caught, not so long ago, which was carrying more than 28 million eggs! So you can see right away how easy it would be to stock any seas there may be on Mars..."

"That's assuming there's nothing already in those seas."

"Granted - and there may well be for all we know."

"But what if tiny things in the Martian seas - or on the Martian land for that matter - were harmful to man or were a nuisance to man?"

"Then we'd have to use our initiative to balance the ecology in our favor. It's been done often enough before, y'know. Sparrows, for instance, were first imported into New York in the middle of the nineteenth century - simply to attack tree-worms..."

"But wouldn't that automatically bring other problems? What about the creatures that live on the creatures you'd have to introduce to strike this ecological balance?" She paused, trying to grasp for a good example. Manderson, she'd decided by this time, was a cold and unlikeable man. He seemed to lack soul and she couldn't resist the temptation to bait him just a little. "Like hedgehogs?" she said triumphantly.

"I beg your pardon?"

"Hedgehogs," she repeated. "I heard somewhere that they get withdrawal symptoms and become quite neurotic if they are deprived of their fleas..."

Manderson smiled indulgently. "I'm sorry," he said. "I don't pretend to be an authority on neurotic hedgehogs and I do feel we're starting to get in rather deep. Can I help you in any other way?"

"Just on last question. In this new world - as you see it, Professor Manderson - is there any room for creatures that people simply enjoy ... creatures like squirrels and nightingales?"

"Not unless their productivity value were proved," said Manderson. "No room at all."

"You know something," said Kate. "I find that very, very sad."

Charles Welbourne, interviewed on screen by Colin Benson, agreed that there was an obvious conflict between the description of Mars offered by Gerstein and the pictures which had been released by NASA.

"Many people have also wondered why NASA should apparently have been so stingy on its photographic budget," he said. "Particularly when you consider how important the pictures are supposed to be."

"Why should people wonder in that way?" prompted Benson.

Welbourne pointed to a blow-up photograph of "familiar" Martian terrain which was mounted on a board in the studio. "That picture there almost says it for me," he said. "We're told that they spent all that money putting that probe on Mars and then what do they do? They equip it, if you please, with a camera which can focus only up to one hundred meters. And that, as somebody observed, is about the size of a large film studio.

"It doesn't start to add up. If they'd really wanted good pictures of Mars they would have fitted a vastly superior camera system. Better cameras are available - make no mistake about that - but the one they used ... well, it was almost as if they'd deliberately fitted blinkers to the whole mission."

"You mean they were determined that we should see only what they wanted us to see?"

"That could well be. You've got to remember that all these pictures we get come in through NASA - they're simply passed on to the rest of us. So if they tell us it's Mars ... well, we have to believe them."

"It's exactly the same soundwise, of course. I mean, we don't hear everything that's said between Mission Control and the spacecraft. There's a second channel. They call it the biological channel ... "

"We did learn a little about that from Otto Binder," said Benson.

"Sure, Binder the former NASA man ... I remember he did blow the gaff on that after Apollo 13 ... well, this biological channel is officially just for reporting on medical details. In fact, though, they switch to it whenever they have something to say they don't want the whole world listening in on ..."

Welbourne paused, looked thoughtfully at the Martian picture. "I've just had a crazy thought," he said. "How about if that picture wasn't taken on Mars? Look at it closely ... don't you agree that could have been shot in some studio in Burbank?"

We should stress that Welbourne had been told nothing of the other pictures which we know were "dummied-up" in a studio - the ones of people like Brian Pendlebury which were an integral part of The Smoother Plan.

He had no idea then how near the mark he was with his "crazy thought".

The proof came unexpectedly. It came from Harry Carmell's girlfriend Wendy - the one who had ordered Benson and his crew out of that derelict house in Lambeth.

And Wendy was very frightened.

Wendy had not gone back to that house in Lambeth - not since the day Harry had disappeared. She had returned on that morning with the bandage and antiseptic and, realizing that Harry had gone, she had panicked and fled. He couldn't have managed to get out on his own, not in the state he was in, so someone must have taken him.

Obviously he had been found by them - those mysterious men he'd sworn were determined to kill him - and she knew then, deep down, that she'd never see him again.

She had to get away. Far away. She had to hide. Or they might find her and kill her too. An hour later she was thumbing a lift to Birmingham. There was no special attraction in Birmingham. It just so happened that that's where the lorry was going. And it seemed a long way from London. They would not find her in Birmingham.

However, she had taken no chances there. She had kept on the move, rarely staying in one place for more than a couple of nights, for she had a frightening feeling that, somehow< they might catch her just as they had caught Harry. She also, as she has since told us, felt guilty. She felt she had let Harry down. For she kept remembering that small box which he had considered so important, the one he had hidden under floorboards in the derelict house, and she knew that she should have retrieved it. She'd forgotten all about it in the flurry of leaving but Harry had wanted so desperately to get it to the television people. It held the key, he'd told her, to something important ... to some tape which had been made by the dead man Ballantine. She felt she ought to get that box to that colored chap Benson. She ought to do that because Harry had been good to her and she owed him that much. But now it would mean going back to the house. And she dreaded stepping back into danger ...

She finally made up her mind on Thursday, June 9. She took a train to London and travelled by bus across the city. And by 3:30 p.m. she was at number 88 - walking between the posts where the front gate had once been.

Now there was no rubbish in the front garden and the boarding at the windows had been replaced by glass. Other attempts had been made to brighten and improve the terraced house. The steps at the end of the cleared path were freshly scrubbed and the door, slightly ajar, had recently been painted in bright canary yellow.

All the neighboring houses looked just as she remember them but number 88 had been dramatically transformed. It was a building which had been snatched back from decay.

Through the windows of the front ground-floor room she could see a group of young people - all in their late teens or early twenties - who were kneeling silently, with their eyes shut, in a circle.

Wendy hesitated, anxious and disappointed. She had expected the house to be empty, just as it had been when she and Harry had first found it in February. She had anticipated merely walking in, of going quietly to the first-floor room where the floorboards were loose, of hurrying away, unseen, with the box. Now it couldn't be like that at all... The youngsters were still kneeling, trance-like, apparently lost in some communal meditation. They might not notice her, she thought, if she were stealthy enough and fast enough. But, on the other hand, there might be more of them in other rooms. There might be some in the room where Harry had hidden the box...

She tapped with her knuckles at the door - tentatively, at first, and then harder.

Footsteps approached across the bare boards of the hall. Then the door was opened wide by a tall and immensely scrawny man with long hair and an unkempt ginger beard. His feet were bare and he was wearing tattered blue jeans patched with bits of floral curtaining. His eyes - dark and deep-set and staring with fierce intensity - were oddly disconcerting and he was older than the people in the front room. In his mid-thirties, maybe, or even nudging forty.

"Good afternoon sister," he said. "Jesus loves you." His voice was deeply resonant and his accent was strongly east London.

"Who are you?" asked Wendy.

"Eliphaz," he replied solemnly. "Eliphaz the Temanite."

"Look ... I used to live here ... a few months ago I was living here and I left something important behind ..."

"The only thing that is truly important is Jesus. Has He entered your heart? He is waiting - waiting for you to invite Him in ..."

"So I was wondering if I could just pop in and collect it ..."

The man stepped back, gestured for her to follow, and Wendy noticed for the first time that he was holding a small Bible. "Here in the Temple everyone is welcome," he said.

Could this, Wendy wondered, be a trap? Harry had never told her what they looked like. Could this bizarre character - this Eliphaz or whatever he called himself - be one of them? Questions raced through her mind. Would she, if she went inside, disappear like Harry?

She had a great urge to run away, to forget the whole thing. Why should she go further into danger ... it really wasn't her responsibility ...

"Come on in ... Jesus is here," said the man encouragingly. "And you need Jesus."

136

Wendy pointed to the youngsters who were still kneeling in their silent circle. "What are they doing in there?" she asked. "All you people ... who exactly are you?"

"We are the Children of Heavenly Love," said the man.

"We were sinners and we lived in the bondage of the flesh but Jesus Christ, the greatest revolutionary of them all, has entered our hearts and saved us from sin." He closed his eyes, screwed up his face in apparent anguish, held his Bible high. "Thank you, oh thank you, Lord Jesus," he said. He opened his eyes, smiled, extended a hand in invitation.

"Eliphaz ..." said Wendy. "Is that your real name?"

"It became my name when I entered into the love of Christ," he said. "Before I found the Lord I was called Jack - Jack Perkins. But now I am saved and the old me, the wicked me, has gone for ever ..."

No, she decided, he wasn't acting. No-one could act like that. Not unless he was someone like Michael Caine. This one just had to be a genuine Jesus freak ...

"That thing I mentioned," she said. "I left it upstairs ...under the floorboards for safety..."

"You are more than welcome to come in," said the man. "Here in the Temple we do not wish to keep things which are the possessions of others."

She followed him through the hall and up the stairs. And she was amazed by the transformation. The place had been cleaned and the walls had been painted. And the entire building had a curious atmosphere of tranquillity.

All three doors on the landing were open. Wendy indicated the front room. "In there," she said.

The man stopped, put a hand on her arm. "I forgot to ask your name."

Instant suspicion. "Why do you need to know it?"

He smiled, shook his head sadly. "There is fear in you, sister. You should accept the Lord and let Him help you..."

"Why is my name important?" persisted Wendy.

Another smile. "So that I can introduce you to my brothers," he said. "They will expect me to introduce you."

Then Wendy noticed there were two young men in the room. Both, she would have guessed, were about eighteen and both were dressed in the style of the man called Eliphaz. There was no furniture, not even the old sofa which had been there, and the two of them were seated on the bare boards. They were studying Bibles, mouthing words silently as if trying to memorize them.

"Wendy," she said quietly. "My name is Wendy."

Both youngsters immediately looked up and scrambled to their feet. They were smiling broadly and welcomingly.

"This is Wendy," said Eliphaz.

He took Wendy's elbow, eased her firmly into the room.

"This here is Lazarus, one of our brothers from America," he said. "And our friend over here used to be called Arthur. But now he's filled with the Spirit and he's become Canaan. Canaan the Rechabite."

"Jesus loves you, Wendy," said Lazarus politely.

"Praise the Lord!" He spoke with the warm and homely drawl of the Deep South. On the knuckles of his right hand was tattooed the word "love". A matching tattoo on his left knuckles said "hate".

"Yes, Jesus surely loves you," said Arthur who had become Canaan. Wendy could immediately identify his Birmingham origins.

They stared at her, now waiting for her to take the initiative, and their solemn sincerity made her feel oddly uncomfortable. "Thank you," she said. It sounded ridiculously inadequate and there was an awkward silence. She indicated the section of the floor where the sofa had been and turned to Eliphaz the Temanite. "It should be just there," she said. "Under the loose boards."

He nodded. "You need help?"

"No...no, thank you...I can manage."

They watched while she went down on her knees and started trying to prise up one of the boards.

"Wendy...do you know Jesus?" Lazarus put the question casually. He might almost have been asking about the weather.

"Sure." She has pre-occupied with her work and she did not look up. "Sure I know Him." The board was fixed more firmly than she'd expected.

"I mean really know Him." said Lazarus more vehemently. "There's a whole heap of dudes out there in the systemite world, in all them fine churches an' all, who reckon they know Jesus but they wouldn't even recognize Him if He stopped them in the street..."

The board was now rising from the floor. Wendy wormed her fingers under it and started to tug.

"I tell ya...He was an unwashed hairy hippy from the slums of Galilee...but, ya gotta believe me, that cat was for real," said Lazarus. "And he still is today..."

Loud creaks as the bit of wood bent and finally burst away from the retaining nails. Wendy peered down into the darkness, put a hand down to grope around. Nothing. She must have picked the wrong board.

"...yes, He's here with us today...He's right here in this room...and, I tell ya, He's here with us today...He's right here in this room...and, I tell ya, He's a mind blower.

Maybe it was a bit nearer the window. Yes, now she came to think of it, the board had been just behind the sofa. She moved across, started again.

138

"He's the ultimate trip, Wendy...and you wanna get right there with Him because there ain't much time left..."

This board was much looser. She jiggled it a little to get a better grip and then lifted it.

"...it's all right here in the Bible...how the seven vials of the wrath of God will be poured over the nations..."

There it was! She snatched up the box, got to her feet. "Thank you," she said. "I'm sorry to have interrupted you."

Eliphaz, she now realized, had placed himself squarely between her and the door. His face was coldly resolute and his arms were folded across his chest. "That box is yours and whatever is in it is yours...but I have to ask you one question," he said. "Does it contain drugs?"

Suddenly he seemed bigger than before. Bigger and more powerful. And her old fears about them came flooding back. She had been a fool to return to this house...

Lazarus and Canaan the Rechabite seemed to be closing in on her, one on either side, and her stomach was churning with panic. "I've got to go now." She was struggling to control her voice, to stop it going all squeaky. "Please let me go."

"It's all here in the Book of Revelation." Lazarus appeared to be unaware of what was happening in the room. He was preoccupied entirely with his own thoughts, with his convictions about the imminent End of Time. "Listen to this...the Bible gives facts and details...it don't mess about..."and the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun...and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire..." "

Eliphaz held out his hand. "Give the box to me," and blasphemed the name of God..."

"No!" she shouted. "It's nothing like that!"

He stood aside to let her pass. "Please forgive me for being suspicious." Now his manner was contritely apologetic. "We would have taken them if they had been drugs. We would have taken them and destroyed them. You have to realize that many of our brothers and sisters here were damaged by drugs...in their days of fleshly bondage."

"Then you're letting me go?"

"Of course - but please come back to see us again," said Eliphaz. "All God's children are welcome here in the Temple."

"Let Jesus into your heart, Wendy," said Lazarus as she walked to the landing. "He loves you real good."

"Hallelujah!" added Canaan the Birmingham Rechabite.

Eliphaz escorted her to the front door. "Don't forget, sister, that you do need Jesus," he said. "God be with you."

She ran from the house, along the street around a corner to a telephone box. She dialled the number for Sceptre Television. "Please may I speak with Colin Benson?"

"Hold on," said the operator. "I'm just putting you through..."

139

Terry Dickson had prepared a background-information sheet about Mars for Clements so that some of the details could be fed into the program's links. It said:

Mars has a diameter about half that of Earth and is officially classified, together with Mercury and Venus, as one of the inferior planets in our sun's family of planets.

It is our nearest neighbor among the planets - being 12.6 light minutes away from the sun, compared with our 8.3 light minutes. You will see this in perspective when I point out that Neptune and Pluto are 250 and 327 light minutes from the sun respectively.

The principal significance of this is that Neptune and Pluto, together with the other giant planets, Saturn and Uranus, would be far too cold to support life as we understand it.

Conversely, Mercury and Venus - 3.2 and 6 light minutes from the sun respectively - would be too hot.

Mars is appreciably cooler than Earth, of course, but scientists have long been agreed that temperatures there could be endured by man: the problems, while serious, should not prove insurmountable.

The actual distance between Earth and Mars varies considerably - being anything from 35 million miles to 60 million miles. This is because Earth moves in an almost circular orbit while the orbit of Mars is much more eccentric.

The predominant red color which has given Mars its popular name comes from regions very similar to many of the deserts known on Earth. Like, for instance, the Painted Desert of Arizona.

Green patches which vary in size and shape from season to season are believed to be caused by the growth of plants similar to rock lichens. I am advised that lichens can survive at lower temperatures than most terrestrial plants and require very little moisture. However, pioneering work in the deserts of the Middle East has proved that more valuable crops can be grown if a region is properly irrigated and tended. That could apply equally well to the desert regions of Mars so making it possible, at least in theory, for man to become self-supporting there.

There is no shortage of water or potential water. It has been known for thirty years, as a result of work done at Yerkes Observatory near Chicago, that the polar caps of Mars are composed of snow. This snow could be converted into water which could then be channelled as required.

140

The one question which has apparently still not been satisfactorily resolved is that of atmosphere.

Does Mars have air which we could breathe? The answer, quite frankly, is that no-one really seems to know. I've now spoken to a number of scientists who are confident that appreciable quantities of free oxygen probably did exist there at one time. It may well be that, as Gerstein has suggested, life supporting atmosphere has been locked in the surface soil but I have been unable to find any other expert who is prepared to publicly endorse that suggestion.

Obviously the whole question of the possible colonization of Mars, the central question you asked me to investigate, depends on the certainty that the planet has an atmosphere similar to Earth's. There appears to be no such certainty. Gerstein is being decried by most of his contemporaries in Britain and abroad and, without wishing to be rude about the man, I wouldn't fancy sticking my neck out professionally on his say-so.

In short, Chris, it's a fascinating theory but it doesn't quite add up.

Clements read the last few paragraphs through for the second time and snorted impatiently. "Well, Terry love, it's my neck that'll be sticking out - not your," he said.

"Gerstein's got me convinced and I'm prepared to gamble on him."

But he didn't need to gamble, not as it turned out. For, at that moment, Wendy was waiting to talk to Colin Benson...

Memo dated June 13, 1977, from Leonard Harman to Mr. Fergus Godwin, Controller of Programs:

I have returned to the studios today after a week's sick leave and I am astonished to learn that it is apparently your intention to allow the screening of that interview with the former astronaut Grodin.

We have already discussed at length the unethical circumstances under which the interview was conducted and which resulted in Grodin expressing extravagant views. We agreed, I thought, that Grodin's statements could not possibly be substantiated and that, if dignified by being included in a program purporting to be serious, they could do considerable harm.

The whole of this particular Science Report program, as I have told you on numerous occasions, is a blatant example of irresponsible sensationalism which will reflect adversely on the company's image.

141

Are companies in the rest of the ITV network and those abroad aware of the troublesome and, indeed, unsavory background to this production? I can only assume not for, otherwise, I am certain they would not be prepared to buy it.

Once again, I urge you most strongly to withdraw this program from the schedules.

Memo dated June 14, 1977, from Fergus Godwin to Leonard Harman:

I can no longer agree with you over the remarkable "brain-drain" investigation which has been mounted by Clements and his team.

I grant that it is highly controversial and even frightening. It will also cause embarrassment in certain high places.

However, I have assessed the evidence which is now in the program - the product, I might add, of diligent research and impressive dedication - and I feel we would be failing in our public duty if we were to suppress what appears to be the unpalatable truth.

Since we last spoke I have had the opportunity of studying Simon Butler's interview with Dr. Gerstein. Gerstein is a man for whom I have the greatest respect and no-one of his stature would lend his name to anything which, in your words, savoured of "irresponsible sensationalism".

Three have been times, as you know, when I have been perturbed by the unexpected directions in which this investigation has moved. I now feel able to set all my reservations aside. Clements has my unqualified support.

I do not propose to reply in more detail to your query relating to networking and overseas sales for I consider that to be irrelevant in light of my present feelings.

Memo dated June 15, 1977, from Leonard Harman to Mr. Anthony Derwent-Smith, Managing Director.

You are already aware of my severe misgivings in relation to the Science Report program, scheduled for network transmission on June 20, in which it is suggested that there is an international conspiracy to transport intellectuals and others to life on another planet.

I have made my opinions known on many occasions and I commend your attention, in particular, to the minutes of the Senior Executives' Meeting held on April 8. I warned then against what I recognized as a policy of expensive folly.

142

I am taking the unusual step of enclosing herewith copies of all correspondence between the Controller of Programs and myself on the subject for I feel that, in view of the damage this production could do to the reputation of the company, this is a matter in which you might see fit to intervene.

I cannot urge too strongly that under no circumstances should this program be screened.

Memo dated June 15, 1977, from Anthony Derwent-Smith to Fergus Godwin:

See the attached note and pile of bumph which reached me by hand today from Mr. Harman.

It is not my practice to become entangled in differences of opinion between my Controller of Programs and any of his subordinates - particularly when I am approached in what I consider to be an underhand manner, with no copy of the note having apparently been sent to you. Nor did I intend to start intervening on this aspect of program policy which I consider to be entirely your territory.

Please deal.

Godwin re-read the note and the one sent to Derwent-Smith by Harman.. "Cheeky bastard!" he said. He dialled on his internal telephone. "Harman...be in my office within two minutes. I'm going to mark your bloody card!"

Katherine White took the call in the Science Report office. "No...Colin Benson's popped out for a coffee...who's this calling, please"

"I must speak to him quickly," said Wendy. "It's urgent."

"Can I take a message? Ask him to call you back?" All Wendy wanted now was to get rid of the box. She anxiously scanned the faces of people loitering near the telephone box. Every wasted minute, she felt, put her in greater danger. If only she knew what they looked like..."Could you find him? It is desperately important."

"I'll see if I can catch him in the canteen. Can I give him a name?"

"Tell him it's the girl who was with Harry," said Wendy. "Tell him I've got what Harry wanted to give him."

"Hold on..."

"Look...I'm in a pay-box and I'm right out of change..."

"Give me the number of the box and then replace the receiver," said Kate. "I'll call you right back."

143

Wendy obeyed. She waited, her back to the door of the booth. And she was unaware of the man until he jerked the door open. He looked angry and beefily pugnacious. She gave a small scream, cowering away from him. He glowered at her with distaste. "You planning on spending the day in here?"

"I won't be more than a minute...I'm waiting for a call."

"Yeah?" He grabbed her arm, started to pull her.

"Well, I'm waiting to make one. So come on...out of it." ...Please, this won't take long, really..."

"Lady, this is a public box and I'm not hanging around all day while..."

"At that moment the bell rang. Wendy shook away the man's hand, snatched up the receiver, heard Benson's voice. "Yes, that's right...I was the girl with Harry," she said. The man muttered aggressively, stepped out of the box and positioned himself immediately outside. Wendy spoke quietly, convinced that the man was trying to eavesdrop. "I must meet you," she said. "Harry had something he wanted to give you and now I've got it. But I've got to be careful in case they are looking for me..."

They met an hour later at the spot where Benson had first seen Harry Carmell - outside the fruiterer's in the street market near the studios.

"You said they might be looking for you," said Benson. "Who are they?"

Wendy shrugged, pulled a face. "Who knows?" she said. "Goons, heavies ... Russians, Americans, Germans, Outer Bloody Mongolians ... what difference does it make?" She discreetly gave him the box. "That's what Harry wanted you to have - he said something about it helping you see what was on some tape made by Ballantine. That make sense to you?"

"Not much," said Benson. "Wait here ... I'll have a shufti inside the box." He hurried to the nearby men's lavatory, locked himself in a cubicle and opened the box. It contained a square printed circuit and he gave a low whistle of surprise. "Well, I'll be..."He put it back in the box, re-joined Wendy.

"I've just remembered," she said. "Harry said you fit it to an IC40 of something and then you get a juke-box. Does that mean anything to you?"

"I must get back to the studios right away," said Benson. "See what sort of tune we can get out of the juke-box."

"You don't need me any more?"

"Where'll you be?"

"Not sure - but not in London. There's too much heat in London."

Benson tapped the box. "Surely you'll want to know what all this adds up to...where can I contact you?"

144

"I'll contact you," she said. And, as Harry Carmell had done months earlier, she hurried away and disappeared in the crowds.

Technicians at the studios had never before been presented with such a problem. They puzzled and experimented for the best part of an hour before finally getting it right. And then, in the darkness of the preview theater, Clements and Benson watched in amazement as the pictures suddenly started spilling across the large screen.

"I don't believe it! said Clements. "Good God...I simply don't believe it!"

145
SECTION TWELVE

Every seat in the preview theater was filled. All members of the Science Report team had been summoned there - to see what Clements and Benson had been watching only a little earlier. Fergus Godwin was also there, sitting next to Clements, and so were many other executives of the company.

Clement's eyes were sparkling with excitement when the house lights eventually came up. "Well, Fergus?" he asked. "What d'you think?"

Godwin frowned and nibbled at his bottom lip, baffled and reluctant to commit himself. "What the hell can I possibly think?" he countered. "If what we've just seen is authentic, if it isn't just an elaborate fake, then the human race has been conned rotten and we've got the most incredible television scoop ever. But...I mean...that can't have happened - it can't possibly be true!"

"But it fits in, doesn't it?" persisted Clements. "It fits with everything else we've got..."

"Have you checked with Jodrell Bank? With people who worked with Ballantine?"

"Well, no..."

"Then do it. Do it now. And put the whole thing to NASA as well. If we used that in the program and it turned out to be a stumer ... there'd be the most God-awful blow-back. And, I give you fair warning, Chris, I'm not prepared to carry the can."

"But NASA are certain to deny it," protested Clements. "That stands to reason..."

"Let me know when you've spoken to them." Godwin got up, started to leave the theater. "And I also want to hear what Jodrell Bank have to say."

Hendlemann, the man at Jodrell Bank, was friendly and eager to be helpful. But, when he heard Benson's description of what was on the tape, he was utterly sceptical. "Sir William never mentioned a word about it," he said. "And something of that magnitude ... he'd never have kept it to himself."

Benson tried to smother his disappointment. "But did he ever say anything to you, or to anyone else, about meeting a man called Harry something-or-other when he was at NASA last year?"

Hendlemann was apologetic. "Not a thing. I'm afraid I'm not being much use to you, Mr. Benson..."

"Would you ask around? Maybe he did mention this Harry to someone else at Jodrell Bank. I assure you, Mr. Hendlemann, it really is important."

"You said earlier you thought it might throw some fresh light on Sir William's death..."

146

"It's just possible."

"Hm, in that case I'll do all I can. There was something about that crash which didn't quite add up, as far as I was concerned. Now I'm not promising anything, mark you, but I will ask around."

"And if you do discover anything..."

"I'll call you back either way. That is a promise."

The NASA official, who refused to give his name, took a very different attitude. "I heard some freaky notions in my time but this one sure caps the lot," he said. "You better face it, son...someone's been pulling your leg."

"Then you are stating categorically that the tape must be a forgery?"

"How could it be anything else? That must be the most stupid question I've heard this year."

"And the information on it is not accurate?"

"Son, do me a favor, will you? I've been very patient but I'm a busy man and I really think this joke's gone on long enough..."

"I'm taping this conversation and I want you on record as saying that the information is inaccurate - if it really is."

"I'm sorry...I've wasted more than enough time on this already. There's absolutely nothing more to say."

Benson was left with the dialling tone. The anonymous man in Houston had replaced his receiver.

"Blast!" said Benson. He was tempted to dial again, to try speaking to someone different at NASA. Not that it would be likely to make any difference. All the official spokesmen had presumably been briefed to trot out the same sort of line. Laugh the idea right out of court - that seemed to be the tactic. And Benson was sure it was no more than a tactic.

He felt he had detected some hint of uncertainty under the man's brash derision. And he felt, more strongly than ever, that the tape was genuine. But proving it - or, at least, proving it enough to satisfy Goodwin - that was another matter.

He put the receiver back in its rest and was contemplating going for a canteen coffee when the bell rang. Hendlemann again. And this time with excitement in his voice.

"I've discovered something quite astonishing, Mr. Benson," he said. "Sir William did meet somebody called Harry at NASA. He made a note about it in his diary while he was in America. I've been checking through that diary and it really is quite remarkable. He doesn't mention this Harry's surname but, listen, I'll read you the extract:

147

" "Harry gave promised help but is now frightened. Told me today - These bastards would kill us if they knew what we've just seen. Take a word of advice, friend, and destroy that damned tape." "

"There! added Hendlemann. "Now what are we to make of that?"

"Anything else in the diary?"

"Nothing that appears to be relevant."

Benson thought fast. "The tapes you use at Jodrell Bank...is there anything distinctive about them?"

"In what way?"

"Could you, by studying this tape, establish if it belonged to Jodrell Bank?"

"No...but I might well be able to establish that it did not belong to us."

"And if you couldn't do that ... it would, at least, reduce the chances of it being a fake..."

"Most certainly."

"Is it possible, Mr. Hendlemann, for you to come to London?"

"I'll leave immediately," said Hendlemann. "I'm very anxious to see exactly what is on that tape."

Benson met Hendlemann at reception and took him to the preview theater where Clements was waiting. The tape was laced-up ready for viewing once again. They sat in silence, watching and listening.

"Incredible!" said Hendlemann eventually. "Absolutely incredible!"

"You think that might have originated at Jodrell Bank?" asked Clements.

"Let me examine the actual tape," said Hendlemann.

Clements led the way to the projection box and Hendlemann produced an eye-glass through which he minutely studied the tape. He became so absorbed in his examination that he appeared to be oblivious of the men with him. "Why?" he asked. "Why didn't he tell me?"

Clements signalled to Benson not to interrupt. They waited while Hendlemann checked frame after frame. Then he closely scrutinized the leader section of the tape and finally he nodded his head emphatically and put his eye-glass back in his waistcoat pocket.

"Well?" asked Clements. "What do you think?"

"I'm almost afraid to tell you this - but I have to," said Hendlemann. "I do believe, Mr. Clements, that this is the genuine article."

They hurried him across to Godwin's office where he repeated his belief - and the reasons for it.

"Give me just one minute," said Godwin. "I'd like to have the Managing Director in on this one." He dialled Derwent-Smith's internal number, briefly explained the situation, replaced the receiver. "He's joining us," he said.

148

Derwent-Smith listened while Hendlemann again repeated all he had said. "Fascinating," he said. "And this diary of Sir William's - may we see it?"

Hendlemann nodded. "It's outside in my car."

"Well, Fergus," said Derwent-Smith. "You're Controller of Programs..."

"Yes, but this is different," protested Godwin. "This is one where I want your help - because if we put one foot wrong here there's going to be such a stink..."

"You mean you might want me to share the blame."

"No, I just..."

Derwent-Smith stopped him. "I think we should talk a little more to this mysterious girl," he said. "The one who so conveniently supplied us with the printed circuit."

"But we don't know where she's gone," said Benson.

"She refused to tell me."

"And you just let her walk away. That doesn't sound too clever, does it?" Derwent-Smith turned to Clements. "And what's your opinion?"

"Well, the girl...the tape. Are you still keen on using it?"

"Absolutely," said Clements.

"Good," said Derwent-Smith. "Fergus?"

"In view of what Mr. Hendlemann says, I'm for going ahead."

"Fine," said Derwent-Smith. "I'm with you all the way."

That particular week, although the Sceptre Television team did not then realize it, was an extraordinary one for disappearances - the sort of disappearances which might have been linked with Batch Consignments.

New Zealand - Monday, June 13, 1977. At 10:30 a.m. accountant Miles Thornton drove into the caravan-park near Tauranga in the North Island's Bay of Plenty. With him were his wife and two young sons - all looking forward to a break of a few days. This was one of their favorite spots, a place where they'd spent many holidays.

Thornton found, to his surprise, that there was no-one on duty in the prefabricated building which served as a reception center. And, even more surprising, there was no sign of anyone in the park. There were cars there. Plenty of cars. But the whole place was completely deserted. Normally there'd have been people sprawled out on loungers, children playing ball-games between the rows of caravans. "But the only living thing to be seen was a dog," he said later. "It was weird."

More weird, in fact, than he realized at the time. Records later found in the abandoned reception center shower that more than 200 people should have been there that morning, including twelve employees of the caravan park. There were no signs of violence, no signs of any struggle. But not one of those people has been seen since.

America - Tuesday, June 14. At 3:00 p.m. two coach-loads of young trippers - average age 19 - set off on a sightseeing tour from Casper, Wyoming. They were last seen heading in the direction of Cheyenne. Seven hours later the vehicles were found empty by the side of a lonely road.

In the sand around the coaches there was a confusion of footprints. But they seemed to lead nowhere. A camera, a pair of binoculars and a girl's handkerchief were found. But, like the people in New Zealand's Bay of Plenty, those seventy-six youngsters were never seen again.

At 4:30 p.m. that same day a small passenger-cargo vessel, the Amelio, left Barcelona with 165 people on board. Intended destination: Tunis. The Amelio was last seen steaming into a light sea mist south of the Balearic Islands. There was virtually no wind and the water was calm.

The mist was a comparatively small patch, covering little more than about two square miles, but there is no record of the Amelio ever having come out of it. And of the area resulted in a complete blank. Not even a bit of wreckage has ever been found. As one coastguard official put it: "This is on of the absolute mysteries. It is just as if the sea had opened up its mouth and swallowed her."

So there it was. More than 440 people disappeared in the oddest combination of circumstances during those two days in June.

It would be irresponsible for us to state that those people have now become "Batch Consignment Components" for we have no absolute proof. We do suggest that, however, as a distinct possibility.

The Ballantine tape was, of course, the most astounding feature of that television production. It was authentic. Absolutely and startlingly authentic. But, as Godwin had feared, it did bring the most "God-awful blow-back."

Simon Butler introduced it and, as viewers will recall, all that could be seen at first was a haze of colors and uncertain shapes. There was a whirling blur of confusion - multi-colored dust dervishes glimpsed crazily through a tumbling kaleidoscope-and nothing, nothing more.

Then the picture cleared and the camera seemed to be skimming low over a wild and barren landscape. No vegetation, no suggestion of life. Just mile after mile of wilderness and brown-red desolation.

Sounds of static. Then, faintly, of men cheering. And finally there were the American voices - from the Space Control Room at NASA:

FIRST VOICE: Okay...try to scan.

SECOND VOICE: Scanning now.

FIRST VOICE: The readings...where are the readings?

At that moment, superimposed over the scanning of the alien landscape, viewers saw the computer-printed word "temperature." And, almost instantaneously, that word was duplicated in Russian. Now there was a great outburst of Russian voices. Excited, jubilant. And then, once again, the second American voice came through with great clarity: "Wait for it...w-a-i-t for it...Come on, baby, don't fail us now...not after all this way..."

Computer figures appeared alongside the words on the screen. The temperature, they showed, was four degrees Centigrade. More printed words - "Wind Speed" - in American and then Russian. And the first American voice was shouting triumphantly: "It's okay...it's good, it's good." A Russian voice, equally ecstatic, carried the same message.

Then the computer print-out started giving the most vital information of all - information, in English and Russian, about the atmosphere of that strange and distant territory.

The words and letters were appearing with agonizing, nerve-shredding slowness. As though they were being formed, uncertainly, by some retarded, mechanical child. There was a great silence of anticipation and of dread. Then from the screen came the shrieks and whoops of joy. The first American voice could be heard shouting over the din: "On the nose! Hallelujah! We got air, boys...we're home! Jesus...we've done it...we got air!"

His yells of excitement, and similar ones from his Russian counterpart, were drowned by the crescendo of cheering. And, during a lull in that cheering, the second American voice could be heard saying: "That's it! We got it...we got it! Boy, if they ever take the wraps off this thing, it's going to be the biggest date in history! May 22, 1962. We're on the planet Mars - and we have air!"

That was it. The end of the Ballantine tape. And millions of viewers, in many parts of the world, briefly wondered if they had misheard. Man on Mars in 1962? No, surely, that was not possible...

Simon Butler, his face sombre, assured them that it was more than possible. Here, from a transcript of the program, are his actual words:

We believe that to be an authentic record of the first - and secret - landing on Mars by an unmanned space probe from Earth. We also believe the date given - May 22, 1962 - to be accurate.

Clearly, the blanket of total security by which this information has been covered could have been maintained only through the active participation of governments at a very high level.

Equally clearly, there must have been some powerful reason why the true conditions on Mars< suitable as they appear to be for human habitation, have been kept secret. Indeed, the effort which has gone into persuading the world at large that the opposite is true argues that some operation of supreme importance has been going on beneath this security cover.

We believe that operation to be Dr. Carl Gerstein's Alternative 3.

Whether a human survival colony has by now been established on Mars, or whether preparations are still in hand for its transportation from the Moon to Mars, we do not know. But we put out this program tonight as a challenge to those who do know to tell us the truth.

He paused after spelling out that challenge, one hand resting on a model of the Earth and the other on a model of Mars, to underline its significance. The program was over and the gauntlet had been thrown down. The next move was up to the government. And the governments of other countries - particularly those of the super powers.

Butler knew, of course, about the behind-the-screen doubts and anxieties. He knew how Harman had tried to neuter the program and, indeed, how he had come close to succeeding. He was only too aware that the company had taken a calculated risk in persisting with this program, that what had been revealed would very likely be emphatically denied, that there could be ugly repercussions for Clements and Fergus Godwin. And, of course, for himself.

He was the anchorman, the man who - as far as the public was concerned - was right at the center of the entire investigation. He was well-known and well-respected and that, from the official viewpoint, made him doubly dangerous. It would be remarkable if attempts were not made to discredit him, to prove that, far from being a responsible commentator, he had been party to an ill-conceived hoax.

At no time, however, had he considered opting out. He has always believed in the truth. He had always presented it professionally. And this particular truth was far too important to be suppressed.

He concluded with these words:

We regret if the implications of what you have seen are less than optimistic for the future of life on this planet. It has been our task, however, merely to bring you the facts as we understand them - and await the response.

The response started almost before he finished speaking. Switchboards at newspaper offices and regional television stations were flooded with calls from frightened people, from people desperate for reassurance.

Those people got their reassurance. They got it because of the statement drafted by Harman. But that statement was a lie.

There is nothing new, of course, in the concept of men using the moon as a launch-pad for a new life on Mars. H.G. Wells, who correctly anticipated so many technical triumphs which seemed ludicrous to most people in his day - was expounding it back in 1901.

Here, from his classic The First Men In The Moon, is a segment of dialogue between two space travellers:

"It isn't as though we were confined to the moon."

"You mean -?"

"There's Mars - clear atmosphere, novel surroundings, exhilarating sense of lightness. It might be pleasant to go there."

"Is there air on Mars?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Seems as though you might run it as a sanatorium..."

So Wells, once again, has been proved right. A number of leading journalists, maybe remembering Wells and his track-record as a prophet, did not automatically believe the Harman denial. They were puzzled by it, and were possibly thrown a little by it, for it had the ring of authenticity. And after all, they reasoned, what possible motive could a reputable television company have for claiming they had just presented a tissue of untruths? And yet...Alan Coren, writing in The Times of June 21, was one of the first to throw doubts on the validity of the Harman statement:

The seeming preposterousness of the story, on the other hand, was totally acceptable. The preposterousness of the times have seen to that. Why should the madness of the NASA program not be linked to the madness of Watergate, to create a Nasagate in which life is discovered on Mars, but the information is suppressed for governmental ends?

That was a shot in the dark by Coren - a shot guided by instinct as much as by insight. But, as he will realize today, it was uncannily on target.

But, in the final analysis, it was all to make little difference to Harman. Remember what was said at the meeting of the Policy Committee on August 4, 1977:

154

A TWO: But what about the regional officer concerned?

A Eight: You're right there. He should have stopped that television crap. He's proved himself to be utterly unreliable. He failed and failed badly and, what's worse, he could let us down again. The man, without any question, is a liability and I propose an Expediency.

R TWO: Seconded.

R EIGHT: Those in favor? ... Then that is unanimous. The method?

A THREE: How about a telepathic sleep-job ... maybe with a gun...
R EIGHT: That seems sensible ... it's too soon after Ballantine for another hot-job...

Harman, on that day in August, was being sentenced to death. The date of his death, however, was not so easily settled. That, as Dr. Hugo Danningham has now explained, would depend on Harman's biorhythmic sensitivity cycle-on the unseen assault being synchronized with his moments of extreme vulnerability.

James Murray of the Daily Express is another level-headed and highly-experienced writer who does not readily accept the obvious - particularly when it is given to him in the form of an official Press statement. He has a reputation for seeking the facts behind the statement. And so, despite the "Knock-down" treatment being given to the program on the front page of his own newspaper, he courageously stuck to his assessment of Butler, Benson and the others:

They plausibly linked natural phenomena and real events in space to come to the inevitable conclusion that there was a monumental international conspiracy to save the best human minds by establishing a new colony on Mars...So all these scientists and intellectuals slipping abroad to the "Brain Drain" were really being shipped to Mars on rockets via the dark side of the moon.

Murray, in other words, recognized the truth even though he did not have the facts completely to substantiate that truth.

Men like Coren and Murray worried Harman. They were helping to perpetuate the doubts and suspicions he had tried to smother. And he was frightened that they might start digging deeper, that they might eventually be able to present the full and horrendous truth. Just as we are now doing in this book.

155

The men of the Policy Committee had put no great priority on this particular murder. Alternative 3's chief executive officer in Britain had already been instructed to suspend Harman from his secret regional duties - and to recruit his successor. Harman would die. They knew that with certainty. He would die without revealing what he knew. And that was all that really mattered.

Other men, for other reasons, were disturbed by the realization that the Alternative 3 sensation was not to be swiftly buried. They were particularly unhappy about Philip Purser's Sunday Telegraph suggestion that the investigation might have been a Fiendish double bluff inspired by the very agencies identified in the program".

They were among the Members of Parliament, the overwhelming majority, who were not privy to the facts about Alternative 3. Some have since claimed that they suspected the truth but they certainly did not know it. Yet they had the task of coping with much of the terror which spread so insidiously after that television transmission.

Most people, as we have said, were only too eager to believe Harman's denial. But a sizable minority appreciated the full significance of what had been revealed. These were people, in the main, who had already been uncomfortably aware of the sort of people who were only too aware of the mammoth cover-up which the 1968 Condon report had provided for so-called Flying Saucers.

There were those who vaguely remembered what the Evening Standard had said about the $500,000 Condon study:

It is losing some of its outstanding members, under circumstances which are mysterious to say the least. Sinister rumors are circulating...at least four key people have vanished from the Condon team without offering a satisfactory reason for their departure. The complete story behind the strange events in Colorado is hard to decipher...

The validity of the suspicions in that Evening Standard article suddenly seemed to be confirmed by other statements later made public - quite apart from President Carter's apparently remarkable about-turn on the subject of Flying Saucers.

Professor G. Gordon Broadbent: "At the very highest levels of East-West diplomacy there has been operating a factor of which we know nothing."

Would a man of Broadbent's caliber make a statement of that nature lightly?

Apollo veteran Bob Grodin: "The later Apollos were a smoke-screen...to cover up what's really going on out there...and the bastards didn't even tell us!"

Why, if there was nothing to hide, should he make such a curious statement?

156

More and more snippets of information started being remembered and re-quoted - some from old newspaper files, some from records leaked from NASA.

Here, for instance, is a verbatim transcript from a taped conversation which Scott and Irwin had with Mission Control during their moon-walk in August, 1971:

SCOTT: Arrowhead really runs east to west.

MISSION CONTROL: Roger, we copy.

IRWIN: Right...we're (garble)...we know that's a fairly good run. We're bearing 320, hitting range for 413...I can't get over those lineations, that layering on Mount Hadley.

SCOTT: I can't either. That's really spectacular.

IRWIN: They sure look beautiful.

SCOTT: Talk about organization!

IRWIN: That's the most organized structure I've ever seen!

SCOTT: It's (garble)...so uniform in width...

IRWIN: Nothing we've seen before this has shown such uniform thickness from the top of the tracks to the bottom.

NASA has never explained those tracks - or who made them - although there are now grounds for the belief that they were left by a giant Moon-Rover vehicle of American-Russian design.

That is just one more example of how information about real space progress is being kept strictly secret. Dr. James E. McDonald, professor of meteorology at the University of Arizona and senior physicist at its Institute of Atmospheric Physics, has been a vociferous critic of this secrecy.

In The Enquirer on February 19, 1967, he said: "The U.S. Air Force has been scandalously blinding the public as to what is really going on in the skies. The Air Force investigations have been absurd, superficial and incompetent...and scientists all over the world had better stop accepting the ridiculous Air Force reports and start investigating the problem themselves at once...it's a problem demanding truly international investigation."

So, with that sort of background to this latest television investigation, is it surprising that there were people not impressed by the denial? Or that those people should start demanding information from their Members of Parliament?

Michael Harrington-Brice is typical of those M.P.s. He says: "I was put in an impossible position. For weeks after that program went out I was getting deputations at the House, demanding that the government should issue a formal denial.

157

I tried to bring pressure for that to be done, for a government denial would have helped alleviate the understandable anxieties of my constituents. However, it was not possible to pin down anyone in authority.

"I tried to put down questions about Alternative 3 but they were invariably blocked and what is particularly odd is that there now appears to be no official record of those questions.

"I also tried to raise the matter privately with Ministers but I was invariably told that Alternative 3 was a subject they were not prepared to discuss."

What, at that stage, was Harrington-Brice's personal opinion?

"I formed the distinct impression that something really unusual was happening behind the scenes, that we in Britain were on the periphery of some secret venture being controlled by the super-powers.

"Nothing specific was said, you understand, but hints were dropped. I was obliquely given the message that it would be sensible for me to stop probing.

"It would be quite wrong, however, for me to pretend that, at that time, I had any information to confirm the accuracy of otherwise of the allegations made in that program."

Another Member of Parliament, Bruce Kinslade, was also seeking an official investigation into the statements made during the television program - according to his private secretary.

On Wednesday, July 6, Mr. Kinslade, as you may recall, was hit by a lorry while crossing a side street near his home in Kensington. The lorry did not stop and has never been traced. And Mr. Kinslade died almost instantaneously. The inquest verdict was "Accidental death". That verdict, for all we know, may have been accurate...

Letters continued to arrive at Television Center. Letters which confirmed that more people, having had time to reflect, had reservations about the denial - or flatly refused to accept it.

The President of the prestigious Hampstead H.G. Wells Society wrote: "In my experience I would estimate that there was a lot more truth in your program than the majority of the public realize."

A woman living in Southcroft Road, London S.W.16, summed up the attitude of many in her thoughtful letter:

With reference to your "Alternative 3" program which was shown on Monday, 20th June, several newspapers the following day declared the program to be a hoax, and your spokesman was quoted as saying, "Everything was based on what could happen."

158

I and many other people feel strongly that this was is ridiculous claim is just another attempt by the government to hush things up (as seems to be the case with UFOs and the Bermuda Triangle). Everyone has a right to know what is going on; we all have to live on this planet, and space exploration should benefit us all.

It greatly incenses me to be continually kept in the dark when any discovery is made. Pressure was obviously put on you, but it does you no credit to show up the production team as charlatans. No, I cannot believe it was a hoax for the following reasons:

1. Would you really have included references to Ballantine's death as a hoax - at the expense of his family's feelings?
2. The ex-astronaut was obviously a highly intelligent man and well-educated. He had seen something that caused the dreadful deterioration we had to witness.

Please realize that the majority of your viewers are discriminating adults who can think for themselves. Let us have the truth of the matter.

That July also brought evidence of other aspects of the disaster looming inevitably nearer for this world. The Times, July 26:

A frightening picture of the accelerating world population is given in the 1977 World Population Report, published this week by Population Concern.

The report points out that if the present rate of population growth had existed since the birth of Christ there would now be 900 people for every square yard of Earth.

Half the fuel ever used by man has been burnt in the past 50 years.

The world's population is now more than 4,000 million and increasing by 200,000 every day.

Two hundred thousand extra people on this crowded planet every single day! That is 73,000,000 a year. And that will result, in only three years, in more additional people than the entire present population of America!

Those figures emphasize the magnitude of just one of the survival problems facing mankind - with this planet's water and other natural resources becoming progressively more scarce.

159

And that is in addition to the inevitable "Greenhouse Armageddon" described by Gerstein.

Is it, then, any wonder that the men behind Alternative 3 were anxious to accelerate their operation? Was it not obvious to them that time was running out - possibly even faster than they had earlier anticipated?

During the autumn of 1977 the subject of Alternative 3 began to drop out of the headlines. We know from Trojan that there was mounting activity behind the scenes - and that there was talk of attempts being made to sabotage the Alternative 3 operation. But the public, for a while, was allowed to forget.

Then, on Thursday, September 29, Dr. Gerard O'Neill - the Princeton professor who had given that astonishing interview to the Los Angeles Times in July - again came boldly into public prominence. This time he had been interviewed by Angus Macpherson, space correspondent of the Daily Mail, and the headline said: THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF 2001 IS OUT THERE WAITING.

Macpherson, respected as one of the world's most authoritative science-fact specialists, wrote:

Flying to London today is another scientist who is perfectly serious about his prediction of what faces the human race as we approach the start of the 21st century. But American physicist Dr. Gerard O'Neill holds out the promise of a totally different future...a brave new world in space. The choice, as he sees it, is between George Orwell's 1984 and Arthur Clarke's 2001.

"Tell humanity there's no hope and everyone applauds you. But tell them there is a way out and they get furious," say Dr. O'Neill, who has worked for seven years on a mind-stretching scheme for the emigration of most of us into artificial colonies in outer space.

He has been brusquely dismissed as a pedlar of nonsense by Jacques Cousteau, whom he greatly admires, and there was hurt as well as humor on the lean face under its trendy Roman fringe as he told me: "Jaques is terribly worried about the pollution of the ocean and the destruction of its life.

"He thinks we ought to be doing more about it. So do I. Environmentalists are really very negative. They're so obsessed with Earth's problems they don't want to hear about answers."

O'Neill's own answers are that we not only can colonize the solar system - but must, if human life a few generations from now is to remain civilized or even bearable.

O'Neill's colonists would get away from the start from the space suits and cell-like space stations of science fiction...

160

O'Neill is coming to London to present his prediction of space colonization to the British Interplanetary Society.

The BIS is a legendary forum for glimpses of the future. Its members have seen a Moon-landing ship unveiled, looking eerily like the Apollo LEM, but some thirty years before it.

And they were the first to hear Arthur Clarke outline a visionary scheme for a global chain of communication satellites.

This could be a similar bit of history making...

For most of the generation that gaped at the first Moon landings it has become a madly expensive confidence trick - a game of golf on a useless rockpile that only two could play and that cost £500 a second.

All this is desperately myopic, declares O'Neill, for the denizens of a planet whose 4,000 million inhabitants face the prospect of being two to three times as crowded by the early years of the next century.

"In fact, we found in space precisely the things we are most in need of - unlimited solar energy, rocks containing high concentrations of metals and, above all, room for Man to continue his growth and expansion...

"A static society, which is what Earth would have to become, would need to regulate not only the bodies but the minds of its people," he told me. "I refuse to believe man has come to the end of change and experiment and I want to preserve his freedom to live in different ways.

"I see no hope of saving it if we remain imprisoned on the Earth."

Macpherson pointed out that O'Neill is "consulted respectfully - if a shade warily - by Government officials, Senate committees and State governors."

The article showed that O'Neill was visualizing the future along slightly different lines to those approved by the men of Alternative 3. It also indicated that O'Neill was not aware - and possibly is still not aware - that the Alternative 3 "future" had already arrived.

Macpherson wrote:

His colonies are planned as vast cylindrical metal islands drifting in orbit, holding inside a natural atmosphere, trees, grass, rivers and animals - a capsule of a warm Earthlike environment.

He sees them reaching half the size of Switzerland, ultimately, housing 20 to 30 million people and sustained by the inexhaustible energy of space sunshine.

161

Yet their construction, he insists, would need only the technology we already have...

The article finished with these thoughts:

For most people of the pre-space generation, probably, the moment when the magic finally went out of the adventure came a year ago when the dream of life on Mars was dispelled by the Viking spacecraft.

But for O'Neill that was another plus for space. The best thing we could have found was nobody there.

The colonization of the new frontier can take place without repeating the shaming history of the Indian nation - or even the bison.

"Perhaps nobody's there, anywhere, after all. Perhaps there isn't a Daddy to show us how to do things.

"It's a bit frightening...but it gives us a lot of scope."

We discussed the content of that article with M.P. Michael Harrington-Brice. What, in view of his own researches, was his opinion?

He said: "Dr. O'Neill is arguably the most brilliant man in his own line in the Western world and I am certain he is right in saying the technology is already available for a project such as he envisages.

"However, he is apparently working on the assumption that the information officially released about conditions on Mars is true and I would certainly hesitate before making that assumption.

"If what was shown on the Ballantine tape was the real truth - and I have seen no evidence which convinces me it was not - then the whole situation changes dramatically.

"Obviously it would be far easier and cheaper to colonize a suitable and empty planet, to which we have got comparatively ready access, than to build gigantic, artificial islands in the sky.

"It would be grossly impertinent of me to say that Dr. O'Neill is wrong for he is a Pan of immense international stature. However, I can't help wondering if the political facts, the facts of East-West co-operation, have not been kept from him. There is certainly nothing in what he says which convinces me that Mars is not the venue for Alternative 3."

162

Harman, we learned later, read that article in the Daily Mail. He read it on the morning of publication - on September 29. He did not know then, of course, that he had exactly 48 days left to live.

A cryptic message from Trojan. Brief, typed, unsigned: "Surprise development rumored. Sabotage possible. Will send details if and when available."

We puzzled over the message but we did not try to contact Trojan. That was the arrangement. He always took the initiative. It was safer that way.

They call it Archimedes Base. And that's where the trouble, the really big trouble, flared so violently.

Archimedes is a walled crater-plain on the western border of the Mare Imbrium, the Moon's "Sea of Shadows". It has a diameter of about 50 miles and, unlike the nearby Aristillus crater, it has a relatively smooth ground surface. That is why, according to information from Trojan, it was developed as the principal transit camp on the Moon - the place from where people were normally lifted for the final leg of their journey to Mars.

Man cannot survive in the natural atmosphere of the Moon. NASA said so years ago and NASA, in that instance, was telling the truth. So most of Archimedes Base was hermetically sealed under a transparent bubble inside which air and temperature was controlled to the levels usual on Earth. The construction had taken two years and had been a fantastic triumph of space engineering.

Conditions under the bubble were similar to those visualized by Dr. O'Neill for his artificial worlds of the future. Men and women could live there comfortably for indefinite periods - secure inside a domed and gigantic greenhouse.

There were two huge airlocks in the southern section of the bubble. Shuttle craft arriving from Earth and from Mars entered through these locks before taxiing to the centrally-sited Arrival Terminal. A series of roads the centrally-sited Arrival Terminal. A series of roads ran from the terminal to the stores and service areas and to the three separate "living-quarter villages" - one for pilots and resident personnel, one for "designated movers", and one for "batch-consignment components". And over it all was a spread of camouflage, reminiscent of that used during World War Two, to ensure that Archimedes Base could never be seen by unauthorized observers on Earth.

There was another transit camp, the original one on the Moon, in the crater known as Cassini but that was now considered too small. Most of its equipment and furnishings had been moved to Archimedes. For Archimedes was the bustling center of activity...

Trojan's cryptic message about possible sabotage was soon followed by this report:

Stringent security ensures the complete segregation of Designated Movers from Batch-Consignment Components until after disembarkation in the new territory.

They are transported in separate craft and, while awaiting transportation, they are quartered in different areas of Archimedes Base. This is as a result of an order from the Policy Committee.

164

It is felt that among the Designated Movers there may be those who initially harbor reservations about the morality of the mental and physical processing considered necessary for Components.

"Components"! Let us not be confused by the jargon euphemisms. Trojan uses them. Trojan, like most others in Alternative 3, has been brain-washed into accepting such words as normal. He is revolted by what has been done, by what is being done, but he has unwittingly absorbed the obscene distortion of language. So, just for a moment, forget "components". Trojan means people. He is writing about slaves, about men and women who have been mutilated mentally and physically, who have been programmed to obey orders. And who have been condemned to a life of sub-human degradation.

His report continued:

These Designated Movers can have their doubts put into "proper perspective", after they have become acclimatized to life in the new territory, by representatives of the Committee in Residence. They can, according to official reasoning, be persuaded to recognize that the ultimate survival of the human race must take precedence over the fate of a limited number of low-grade individuals.

Consider the appalling significance of that paragraph! It means, if "official reasoning" is right, that Ann Clark and Brian Pendelebury and others like them can be taught to regard fellow humans as expendable beasts of burden. It means, surely, that natural compassion must be systematically eradicated, that the minds of "designated movers" are also moulded to match the needs of Alternative 3. Orwell's vision of 1984, it seems, has already come to fruition - millions of miles from Earth.

Trojans report then went on to detail the curious circumstances which resulted in Earthly efforts to undermine Alternative 3. And which eventually culminated in carnage at Archimedes Base ...

Bacteria are far more tenacious than humans when it comes to clinging to life. They survive the seemingly impossible. They can apparently retreat into a form of hibernation for centuries. For millennia even. Then, when conditions are right, they wake up, as it were, and they flourish. That is apparently what happened on Mars.

The "dynamic changes" recorded in 1961 and described by Gerstein provided the ideal conditions. And across the silent wastes of the empty planet there was a great awakening of the minute unicellular living organisms. They developed and they spread. they were too small to be seen but they were there, waiting, when Man first arrived...

165

These were alien strains of bacteria, pernicious and voracious strains never before encountered by humans, but they were not numerous enough noticeably to damage the imported and carefully-cultivated crops. Not until late 1976. That, as we now know, was the time of the great blight...

Attempts were made to fight them with bactericides and even by bacteriophages which involved the introduction of ultra-microscopic organisms normally parasitic to bacteria. But the Committee in Residence realized it was a losing battle. And that was when the super-powers decided they needed The German.

The German, whose name we have agreed to withhold, is possibly the most imaginatively successful bacteriologist in the world. That is accepted by his contemporaries in the East and the West. He has probably achieved more than any other man in his sphere - not only in combating bacteria but in harnessing them into the service of man. That was why he was needed so urgently in the new territory...

But he refused to go. He was seen by the Alternative 3 regional officer and, eventually, by the West German Chief Executive Officer. They argued with him, offered him every possible inducement, but he remained adamant. Certainly he would respect the confidences he had entrusted to him but he had work to do, work on Earth, and he had absolutely no inclination to become involved in Alternative 3.

They did recruit his principal assistant, an American in his mid-thirties, who travelled as a designated mover in February, 1977. He went willingly, enthusiastically even. But he is another man whose identity it would be unfair to reveal for, if he is still alive, he is today being hunted. He is being hunted by agents of the East and the West.

He will certainly have changed his name by now, and probably his appearance as well, but he must know that for him there can be no permanent hiding place. He is the man chiefly responsible for founding the guerilla group known as Anti-Alternative. He was also responsible for the eventual disaster at Archimedes Base. We call his The Instigator.

It soon became apparent to the Committee in Residence that The Instigator, although competent and experienced, lacked the intuitive flair needed for the new-territory task.

they still needed The German. But The German was still refusing...

Urgent meetings were convened in the Hall of the Committee in Residence. there were consultations with the Policy Committee on Earth, with key men in Department Seven. And eventually a decision was reached. The German liked and respected The Instigator. He had confidence in his judgement. And if any man could persuade The German to become a designated mover it was The Instigator. He should go back to Earth, they decided. He should go back to talk to The German. That, as it turned out, was their biggest and most disastrous mistake...

166

They had made one serious miscalculation over The Instigator. they had failed to realize that he still had not got the plight of the Components into "proper perspective". Maybe that would have changed if he had been allowed more time for there had been others, many others, who had needed months to become completely accustomed to living with an enslaved sub-species. All of them had eventually accepted that this was part of the essential balance. But The Instigator had not been allowed time, not enough time, and he was tormented with secret guilt. What right, he wondered, did he have to be one of the Chosen, on of the Superior Select? He was racked with disgust and with doubts and he knew then that, somehow, he had to shatter the component system...

And then they told him they were returning him to Earth.

There was a stop-over at Archimedes Base on his return journey and he was temporarily housed with a new group of designated movers awaiting transportation to the new territory. They knew nothing, these people, about the components - quartered, as usual, in a different "village" -who were being condemned to spend the rest of their lives as slaves. He told them. He told them exactly what was happening and exactly what to expect. He described the kidnappings and the mutilations being carried out on Earth-for their benefit and comfort. And they were not ready for such horrendous information. They were normal people, highly intelligent and sensitive, and they had not yet been exposed to the skilled and persuasive arguments of the Committee in Residence. They were uncertain about whether to believe him. It all sounded so lunatically outrageous. Yet this man was strangely convincing...

the truth. They decided surreptitiously to visit the village he'd described. And that is what sparked the holocaust at Archimedes Base...

The Instigator did not contact The German when he returned to Earth. He fled into hiding. And then, with a small group of trusted collaborators, he founded his action group, Anti-Alternative. This group, unlike organizations such as the IRA or the PLO, could make no public statements for such statements could lead to them being rooted out and destroyed. They dedicated themselves to disrupting, by guerilla tactics, all work connected with the exploration and exploitation of space. Their actions, they felt, might force an eventual re-think on Alternative 3.

On October 1, 1977, the Daily Telegraph carried a story, written by Ian Ball in New York, which was headlined: SATELLITE ROCKET No.2 BLOWS UP. It said:

167

A second communications satellite was reduced to debris over the Atlantic yesterday after another spectacular rocket failure at the Cape Canaveral space center in Florida.

Within two and a half weeks, the failures have destroyed communications satellite projects, one European, the other American, worth a total of $91.4 million (about £54 million).

An Atlas Centaur rocket, carrying a $49.4 million Intelsat 1V-A satellite built by Hughes Aircraft, was destroyed minutes after its launching late on Thursday. The failure was similar to the September 13 explosion of a Delta rocket carrying a $42 million European Space Agency orbital test satellite.

"We had indications of trouble in the engine area within seconds after lift-off," said the Atlas Centaur launch director, Mr. Andrew Stofan. "At 55 seconds the Atlas lost control and broke up. It flipped, broke apart, and then the Atlas blew up."

The remainder of the Centaur stage was destroyed by an Air Force range safety officer, ending the mission four miles high and four miles down the range. The debris from rocket and satellite fell into the ocean.

The next Intelsat 1V - a launch scheduled for November 10 - and other Atlas Centaur launches have been postponed until an investigation into the latest failure is completed.

Similar problems were being experienced by Russian space-teams. On October 11, 1977, the Guardian carried this Reuter report from Moscow:

Two Soviet Cosmonauts failed yesterday to dock their Soyuz-25 craft with the Salyut-6 orbiting laboratory.

Mission commander Vladimir Kovalyonok and flight engineer Valery Ryumin, thought to be planning a long stay aboard the new space station, were ordered back to Earth after abandoning the link-up.

Tass, announcing the latest in a series of troubles to affect the Salyut series, said there had been "deviations from a planned docking regime" during the approach while the Cosmonauts' Soyuz-25 capsule was 120 yards from the station. The Soyuz-25 failure has come as a blow to Soviet space chiefs...

So that is what happened. Did it happen because of The Instigator? That is a question we cannot answer. We simply do not know. We do know, however, that the catastrophe at Archimedes Base can be traced back directly to The Instigator. And that was incomparably more devastating.

Leonard Harman died at ten minutes past two in the morning on Wednesday, November 16, 1977. He died, wearing his pyjamas, in the dining-room at his home.

His widow, Mrs. Sarah Harman, gave this evidence at the inquest:

My husband had been depressed and rather withdrawn for some time, possibly for six months or more, but he never confided any reason to me.

I knew there had been some friction between him and Mr. Godwin, Mr. Fergus Godwin, at the studios and at first I thought that was possibly making him feel the way he did. But the trouble at the studios, whatever it was, seemed to pass over and still my husband was no better. I urged him on several occasions to see a doctor but he told me that it was nothing serious and that I was not to fuss.

I never, at any time, thought he might be likely to take his own life.

On the Tuesday evening, I mean the evening of the 15th of November, we watched television and then went to bed as usual just before midnight. I didn't notice anything particularly unusual about him. He behaved just as he normally did.

We read in bed for a while and it must have been nearly one o'clock before we settled down for sleep.

Just before two o'clock I was disturbed by him getting out of bed. I assumed he was going to the bathroom. But then he seemed to be gone a long time and I can't really explain why but I began to get rather worried. I had a feeling that something wasn't quite right.

I called out to him but there was no reply so I got out of bed. The bathroom door was open and, because of the street lights outside, I could see that he was not in there.

Then I heard a movement from downstairs. I called out to him again but still there was no reply. By this time I thought that he must be feeling unwell and that he'd probably gone down to the kitchen to make himself a hot drink. He'd done this once or twice before and it had always soothed his stomach.

I decided then to go down and make the drink for him. But he wasn't in the kitchen. The house was completely silent. I called out to him again but there was still no reply. I was a bit frightened by this time because I couldn't possibly imagine what he could be doing.

There weren't any lights on, not until I switched on the one in the hall, and my husband had never done anything like this before. He'd never walked in his sleep or anything.

Then there was a sort of scuffling noise from the dining-room. I went in and he was standing there in the darkness in the middle of the room. I switched the light on and spoke to him but he didn't seem to hear. His eyes were open - they were staring straight at me - but he didn't seem to be aware of me or of anything else. It was as if he was in a trance.

He had a gun in his hand, a little pistol, and he put the barrel to his head and pulled the trigger. And that's all that happened. The next second he was dead.

Mrs. Harman also told the coroner that her husband had not owned a gun, that he'd never had one in the house. But the coroner reached his own conclusion. Wives, in his experience, didn't necessarily know everything about their husbands.

The verdict was "suicide".

Disaster hit Archimedes Base on a cataclysmic scale. The Arrival Terminal ... the service centres ... the buildings of the three villages ... they were all ravaged and wrenched from their foundations by the sudden and cyclopean clash of uncountable tornados. They crumbled and disintegrated, these buildings, as they juddered and somersaulted high in the air. And people spilled from them. The living and 'he dead - they all looked the same in that great spasm of destruction. They were all flailing limbs and buckled, distorted bodies. Many of them exploded far above the ground and bits of them whirled around in the dust and the debris before being sucked out into the eternal blackness of space.

And all of it, we now know, had been sparked by a gentle and compassionate marine biologist called Matt Anderson. He had meant well. He had been inspired by the highest motives. By consideration and humanity, by raw and spontaneous pity. And he had unleashed a nightmare.

That is clear from documents analyzed by Trojan. Very little else, however, is certain. there were few survivors and their accounts were so disjointed and confused. The full facts, now, will probably never be known.

Here, however, is what we have been able to piece together:

Anderson, a thirty-three-year-old single man from Miami, Florida, was one of the designated movers at Archimedes Base who listened to The Instigator. He was one of the small group who secretly visited the segregated Components Village. He talked to the people there, heard enough to realize that The Instigator had been telling the truth. It was grotesque and barbaric but it was, unquestionably, the truth.

That whole party of designated movers was scheduled for transportation to the new territory that night. And everything would have been different if they had all gone. There would have been no disaster.

They would certainly have posed a bigger "conscience problem" to the Committee in Residence but, in time, the Committee would have converted them into accepting the necessary realities of Alternative 3.

But Anderson did not travel with the others. He stumbled on the return journey from the village of the slaves. He stumbled and hurt his spine. And it was decided that he was not fit to travel, that he should stay for a while at Archimedes Base.

Ten days later he slipped unseen from his room and again visited that village. It was not difficult for there were no guards. There was no need for guards around the village. The people temporarily there had been instructed to remain their quarters. And they had been programmed to obey, unquestioningly, every order they received.

Anderson wanted to talk to them at length, to understand them, to see if he could possibly help. And that was when he got his great shock. By then there was a new Batch consignment in the village and in that Batch was a man he knew, a man who, years earlier, had been a colleague at school.

The man recognized him, could obviously think fluently and intelligently, but all the vital personality had been gouged out of him. His bearing and his attitude showed that he knew and accepted his position. He was a slave. That was when Anderson knew he had to take action...

Trojan's report says:

Two of the Components who did survive have revealed under interrogation that they heard Anderson talking to the man on two occasions, on that first day and later when he returned with details of the plan for the intended evacuation. This is principally how Department Seven has been able to establish much of what did happen before the disaster...

There was an aerospace technician in the latest group of designated movers, a highly-qualified man who had been trained by NASA, and Anderson, it seems, sought him out and explained the whole situation. He told this man of the atrocities to which they were all, unwittingly, a party.

He elaborated on how they had been lured towards a debased and de-humanized future, on how they would be battenning for the rest of their lives on the misery of the mutilated slaves. He convinced him it was their duty to rescue the people from the village, to return them to their families on Earth - and to ensure that this traffic in human life was stopped for ever.

Trojan's report continues:

The main depot for craft on the Earth-run was south of Archimedes Base on the far side of the mountain range known as Spitzbergen. Most long range vehicles were maintained and parked there and smaller craft were used to convey passengers to and from Archimedes, rather in the style of airport buses on Earth.

There were invariably a number of these smaller craft on the tarmac at the Archimedes Arrival Terminal and the plan was for Anderson and Gowers, the aerospace technician, to steal one of these craft and use it to evacuate as many of the Components as possible.

Another sympathetic designated mover, briefed on the technicalities by Gowers, would operate one of the airlocks in the southern section of the bubble to allow them through. They would then travel to the main depot where by force if necessary, they would commandeer a vessel in which to make the journey back to Earth.

So that, apparently, was what was meant to happen. But it all went wrong. Horribly and hideously wrong. Gowers found a suitable craft and he checked it, established that it was fuelled and ready for flight. And Anderson was in charge of discreetly marshalling the people in the village of slaves, of supervising their march to the Terminal.

Everything went well at first. There were a hundred and fifty-five slaves in the village at that time and the small craft could accommodate only eighty-four of them, so Anderson selected the youngest, including his former schoolmate, for in his opinion they ought to have priority. When he returned to Earth and publicly exposed this sick side of Alternative 3 there would be such an international outcry that the other slaves would also be returned to their homes. Yes, and those who had already been taken to the new territory. The vast majority of human beings would never tolerate the obscenities being committed in their name. That, according to the evidence from Trojan, is what Anderson really thought.

172

There was no problem in sifting aside those who were not to immediately saved, although all the people in the village now knew exactly what was being planned, for, of course, the slaves had been programed into automatic obedience.

Trojan's report went on:

One of the surviving Components later interrogated said that Anderson told them: "There are few guards and so it is unlikely that any serious attempt will be made to prevent us leaving this Base or, indeed, this planet.

"However, those of you chosen for repatriation must remember that, in these circumstances, it is better to kill than be captured. The lives and freedom of many people depend on us getting back to Earth and so you must be prepared to kill anyone who tries to stop you. that is an order."

In fact, six of Alternative 3's resident personnel were soon killed. They were trampled down and kicked to death by the slaves, near or in the Terminal, when they tried to stop the party reaching the craft. They were left broken and bleeding on the ground and the slaves, with no show of emotion, walked over them and climbed on board. Then the engines fired into life and Gowers, seeing the opening-lights winking around the airlock on the left, eased them upwards.

The craft hovered briefly in the still air, thirty or forty feet above the tarmac, and then the inner lip of the airlock rolled aside like a transparent stage curtain. their path was now clear and Gowers depressed a switch to start the forward thrust. the horror, at that moment, was just seven seconds away...

Trojan's report picks up the story:

A senior technician at Archimedes Central Control, one of the permanent staff who did survive, has made a statement in which he describes how he was alerted by shouting and screaming from the direction of the Terminal. the angle of his view prevented him from observing what was happening there but then he did notice the unexpected opening of the airlock door. He knew that if the outer door were also to open, possibly because of some malfunction in the equipment, the Base would be subjected immediately to acute decompression.

He saw no traffic and no traffic was scheduled for departure. So, assuming there was a serious fault and that the shouts were probably ones of warning, he pressed a master-control button. This was on a board designed to activate a fail-safe system, over-riding all other, and his action resulted in the airlock door snapping instantly back into position.

173

An experienced pilot could have coped with the problem by taking avoiding action and returning his craft to the Terminal but Gowers was not an experienced pilot...

Gowers, in fact, was almost at the door when it closed.

Suddenly, straight ahead of him and all around him, there was a transparent domed wall. He felt trapped like a fly under an upturned tumbler, and he panicked. He swerved the craft violently upwards to the left and then, in desperation, he over-compensated and jerked it into a fast and erratic zig-zag course. the craft, now bucking viciously, surged towards the roof. Gowers, hopelessly out of control, snatched wildly at the control stick, sending the craft into a lethal whiplash dive. It exploded into one of the walls of the dome, spewing fire and wreckage and blazing bodies, and it smashed a devastating hole in the transparent surface.

The entire base, where the air was artificially maintained at Earth pressure, immediately decompressed. It was as if some mammoth and malignant vacuum-cleaner was greedily sucking everything into its mouth. Litter-cans and small vehicles and the six men who'd been trampled to death. And the savagery of the maelstrom shattered heavy objects against the dome, rattling them and bouncing them until they too punched their way through and were swirled out into the outer blackness. And the new holes brought new snatching whirlwinds. And the buildings groaned and surrendered and shot up, disintegrating, in that monstrous cannonade of havoc. That day brought death to every Designated Mover at Archimedes Base. There were twenty-nine of them -scientists, technicians and medical specialists - mainly from America and Russia. And not one survived. They were brilliant men. Carefully selected men. Today they are mere particles of dust. Drifting through the uncharted wastes of eternity.

However, as we have indicated, there were survivors. Two of the people known as components lived through the holocaust and so did five of the resident staff. If they had perished the events of that terrible day at Archimedes would probably have remained a mystery for ever. There would possibly have been reports from observatories of a strange and momentary flare of activity on the moon - activity which might have been presumed to be the result of some unknown natural phenomena. And that would have been all. But because of these seven survivors, because of the information they gave to Department Seven and which Trojan has passed to us, the truth can be recognized.

174

These seven lived because at the time of the devastation they happened to be insulated in rooms where the atmosphere was independently maintained - and they escaped to the obsolete base at Cassini.

Cassini Base, we understand, is now being redeveloped. It will once again become the principal transit camp on the moon. The Alternative 3 operation suffered a serious setback at Archimedes but it has certainly not been abandoned.

No voyages are being made from Earth at the moment for there is much work to be done at Cassini but people are still being watched and assessed as potential Designated Movers. And, according to Trojan, plans are being made for the imminent round-up of more Components.

Maybe there are men and women in your town, possibly on your street, who will disappear, suddenly and inexplicably, in the near future...men and women already ear-marked for an astonishingly different existence on that far-distant planet.

They would already have gone, those people, if it had not been for the obstinacy of The German. And for the concerned compassion of The Instigator. They would already have joined those who, if biologist Stephen Manderson is right, are now on a planet where no squirrel will ever scamper. And where no nightingale will ever sing.

There is just one final point for us to make. On the back cover of this book you will note one word which you may consider puzzling: "speculation".

Why "Speculation"? That is a valid question ... especially in view of the fact that so much of our evidence, particularly that quoted from newspapers, was already a matter of public record. Well ... we did mention that politicians tried to suppress this book, that two in Britain sought injunctions to prevent its publication. And we did explain that we were forced into a "reluctant compromise".

Need we say more?

E N D

LESLIE WATKINS

ALTERNATIVE 3

EDITED AND WITH A NEW FOREWORD BY ANONYMOUS

ARCHIMEDES PRESS

NANTWICH, BURROUGH OF CHESHIRE EAST, UNITED KINGDOM
FREIE HANSESTADT BREMEN, GERMANY

COPYLEFT 2010
ARCHIMEDES PRESS

ALTERNATIVE 3 – 33RD ANNIVERSARY EDITION

To the extent possible under law, all copyright and related or neighboring rights to the aforementioned text have been waived.

EDITOR'S NOTE

Members of Parliament Bruce Kinslade and Michael Harrington-Brice are works of the author's imagination, and any similarity to persons living or dead is coincidental. John Hendry, Dr. James E. McDonald, Sir William Ballantine, Hank McDermott, Dr. Ann Clark, Robert Patterson and Brian Pendlebury are likewise works of the author's imagination. Similarly, "Trojan" and the A3 Policy Committee are fabrications. In short, if not untrue, everything is wrong.

LICENSE NOTES

The editor has made the digital version of this work available under a Creative Commons License. You are welcome to share it with your friends until served with an injunction. The digital version may be reproduced, copied and distributed for noncommercial purposes.

FOR

MAJOR AUBREY LELAND OAKES,
BARON BUXTON OF ALSA
15 JULY 1918 – 1 SEPTEMBER 2009

&

GEORGE JOHN PATRICK DOMINIC TOWNSHEND,
7TH MARQUESS TOWNSHEND
13 MAY 1916 – 23 APRIL 2010

FOREWORD

LIKE Milton William Cooper's Behold a Pale Horse, Leslie Watkins'¹ Alternative 3, inspired by the Anglia Television hoax of the same name, is a repository for memetic cues designed to disinform and confuse. Like Cooper's cult-classic, Watkins' novella is printed and reprinted without editing. All typos and factual inaccuracies are preserved. It is not meant to emulate a work of serious scholarship and it would be difficult to argue that it aims to entertain, as it fails spectacularly as an engaging work of fiction. Nevertheless, it found publishers, first with Sphere Books (1978)² and subsequently with Avon Publishers

¹ 'Leslie Watkins' is a pseudonym employed by British novelist and screenwriter David Ambrose.

² Sphere Books was sold to Pearson PLC in 1985. The current Sphere is an imprint of Little, Brown.

(1979) in the United States, now an imprint of HarperCollins. Miracles do happen, or concerted disinformation campaigns are sanctioned regularly by establishment stalwarts.

Grave structural flaws aside, Alternative 3 is not entirely without merits. Firstly, it employs intuition in the service of inquiry, and so is of immediate appeal to the gullible, which is not to condemn the gullible in the form of a would-be reader. The gullible are typically neither jaded nor militantly skeptical; they are receptive to that which is at once incredible and improbable, both conditions which do not necessarily make a piece of data or a collection of data-pieces untrue. Nevertheless, there is much contained within this so-called work of “fiction based on fact” that is flagrantly untrue, unnecessarily defamatory and reliably misleading (that many dates attributed by Watkins to events-of-note are shifted backward or forward by a handful of years is confounding). Furthermore, Watkins’ “facts” possess a peculiar speculative quality unique to disinformation projects; that data which can be verified is sandwiched between and undermined by episodes that are contrived and information that is artlessly fabricated. Secondly, it is not entirely implausible that Watkins’, like popular disinformers by whom he was succeeded, stumbled upon, inadvertently or surreptitiously, information that possessed real-world gravity, in which case, no amount of bad writing is entirely in vain. So the reader is presented with a question: away from WHAT is he being misdirected? And if misdirection is employed purposefully, are there not clues with which salient information may be filtered from erroneous information? The answer is an unqualified ‘yes.’

A little due-diligence enables one to systematically strip from the text most information that is blatantly fanciful and without substance, with one caveat: it is the nature of misdirection to steer one away from information on which one's attention might better be trained. The reader is forced to exercise his own judgment in such a situation; to ask questions of a text—to shake the tree...all in an effort to determine not the veracity of the text-as-edifice, but as an amalgam of distinct component parts, each to be analyzed individually. It is important to emphasize that the author stresses that he “is not in the business of speculation,” which doesn't rule out his function as an amateur agency of speculation. One does not have to be in “the business” to mount a successful disinformation/misdirection campaign; it is an art that by its nature lends itself to the innately curious and appeals to that same sense in the reader, hence the aura that surrounds Alternative 3—the book and the Anglia Television investigative report from which it was adapted.

Speculation thrives on a substrate furnished by the imagination...

...and it is the nature of speculation to anticipate; to make assumptions based solely upon intuition. It is also the nature of speculation to issue suppositions and to pass into realms from which travelers under the yoke of facts are barred. Knowledge does not always treat supposition kindly, but there are instances when so uncannily pointed is an assumption leveled by speculation that knowledge is surrendered by force majeure. It is this editor's belief that Watkins was employed in an effort to at once simulate the appearance of a classic disinformant while affecting naïveté in the service of misdirection. In the process, the hand of the knowledge-keeper may have been overplayed and speculation-as-exercise may have been revealed as speculation-as-device, which is to concede that Watkins did not reveal a tightly-orchestrated conspiracy explicitly, but revealed what amounts to the shadow cast by a conspiracy that can only be delineated by the practice of controlled-omission.

Watkins' Alternative 3 is a bona-fide diversion, as is the original Anglia Television hoax. Its aims are suspect as it has been permitted a life that better books have been denied; it has assumed an undeserved aura, especially as so many calculated deceptions lurk in the details. So how is one to read Alternative 3? Carefully! The heavy employment of misinformation should be dealt with expeditiously. Herein you will find a unique edition of Alternative 3 that has been edited of overt misinformation, while a large percentage of disinformation has been preserved, albeit in a form that aims to reconstitute the little truths that had previously been undermined by contrivance.

We cannot ascertain that the Moon or Mars have been covertly colonized by human assets; there is too little data in the public domain with which to substantiate such an assumption, but that does not make it untrue. On another level, we can ascertain that fear and distrust may be sewn into a population efficiently, cheaply and in a sustained way with constructed threats (global warming, the hole in the ozone layer, acid rain, the zebra mussel, etc.) which in and of themselves possess no substance beyond that afforded by faith. A threat must be nebulous, extant and it must always loom on the horizon and in Leslie Watkins' Alternative 3, it does. Threats thrive on a substrate furnished by the imagination, and like speculation, many modern-day threats require a stay-of-logic. Moreover, critical-thinking must be suspended, if only temporarily, but herein lies the danger: if data is not considered, always, in a critical light, knowledge undergoes degradation as by slow erosion and history grows increasingly malleable...

And by history, I imply the sum-total of knowledge on which informed decisions, opinions and policy-making depend. The recreational distortion of facts should be taken into account when considering information and should likewise be taken into account when reading this book. Watkins refers to not a few compromises on which the publication of Alternative 3 depended. If the truth was Watkins' objective, as opposed to obfuscation or mere entertainment, he might have self-published, but that he honored these so-called compromises suggests that Alternative 3 is but one more scantily-clad exercise in disinformation, or perhaps was written with no little contempt for the would-be reader's gullibility.

This still does not answer the most glaring question of all: Why was Alternative 3 written? Why does it remain a staple text among conspiracy buffs? Why, when it seems to revel in the disembowelment of the English language, does it have "staying-power?" This humble editor concedes that Alternative 3 survives chiefly as it cursorily addresses the overarching mystery in which we all participate: SPACE. An exclusive club has reserved the right to hold dominion over that mystery which belongs to all men and beasts—equally. Watkins implies a conspiracy to misdirect the human population away from the spectacular prospect of space exploration which is his natural inheritance. Alternative 3 may have contempt for its readers, but it also has contempt (maybe mock-contempt) for officialdom and therein lays its saving-grace. Nevertheless, I venture that Alternative 3 was a haphazardly-contrived and opportunistic disinformation exercise with one primary objective: misdirection.

Only those perceived threats over which the individual has no control are able to short-circuit man's ability to think critically. Consequently, Watkins employed the time-tested threat of environmental catastrophe. The threat of environmental catastrophe reliably galvanizes the public and appeals to its sense of institutionalized boredom and repressed desire for sudden and violent change. This alone softens man to the concessions he regularly makes to an elite that would have the public believe that it had its welfare at heart. No elite should have exclusive dominion over the mysteries from which all creatures are descended, but Watkins would have you accept after an oblique fashion the notion that the species does, indeed, require husbandry from on-high. In effect, Alternative 3 induces cognitive dissonance: it would have the reader at once decry the establishment and embrace those movements from which the establishment derives its power...

There is nothing admirable about “state-secrets.” They are kept in an effort to conceal professional failures and more often in an effort to armor the impotent. Witting or not, disinformers are the tools of those that would keep and reinforce secrets; that would divide by virtue of confusion. Leslie Watkins is one such tool.

—ANONYMOUS, 29.7° N 4.0° W, 2010

SECTION ONE: PREAMBLE

“It is intriguing to note the subsequently altered characters of former Moon-walkers occupationally exposed to some of the surprises presented by Alternative 3. A number, undermined by the strain of such a secret, suffered nervous breakdowns. A high percentage sought sanctuary in alcoholism and in extra-marital affairs. These were ‘chosen men;’ their training and experience, intelligence and physical fitness, all were prime considerations in their selection, but the supremely important quality was their equanimity. Only something unprecedented could so alter the natural dispositions of these men. That something was Alternative 3.”

—LESLIE WATKINS

No newspaper has secured the truth behind the initiative known as Alternative 3. Investigations by journalists have been blocked. America, Russia, Britain and Japan obsessively guard their shared secret and this obsession, as we will illustrate, has made them partners in murder.

However, despite this state-level secrecy, fragments of information have been made public; fragments released inadvertently or surreptitiously—sometimes by experts who do not appreciate their significance and sometimes by witting disinformants—and these fragments, when assembled, form a pattern; a pattern which emphasizes the enormity of the conspiracy in question. On MAY 3, 1977, The Daily Mirror published the following:

President Jimmy Carter has joined the ranks of UFO spotters. He sent in two written reports stating he had seen a flying saucer when he was the Governor of Georgia. The President has shrugged off the incident since then, perhaps fearing that electors might be wary of a flying saucer freak. But he was reported as saying after the sighting: "I don't laugh at people anymore when they say they've seen UFOs because I've seen one myself." Carter described his UFO like this: "Luminous, not solid, at first bluish, then reddish; it seemed to move towards us from a distance, stopped, and then moved partially away."

Carter filed two reports on the sighting in 1973: one to the International UFO Bureau (2932 NW 36th Street, Oklahoma City, OK 73112) and the other to the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. Hayden Hewes, who directs the International UFO Bureau from his home in Oklahoma City, has praised the President's "open-mindedness." But during his presidential campaign last year, Carter was cautious. He admitted he had seen a light in the sky but declined to call it a UFO. He joked: “I think it was a light beckoning me to run in the California primary election.”

Why this change in Carter’s attitude? Had he been briefed on Alternative 3? A 1966 Gallup Poll showed that five million Americans—including several highly-experienced airline pilots—claimed to have seen flying saucers. Air National Guard pilot Thomas Mantell had already died while chasing one over Kentucky on JANUARY 7, 1948—his P-51 Mustang disintegrated in the wash of his quarry’s engines. On AUGUST 31, 1966, Colonel Ivan C. Atkinson, Deputy Executive Director of the Air Force Office of Scientific Research, commissioned Dr. Edward U. Condon, Professor of Physics and Fellow of the Joint Institute for Laboratory Astrophysics, to head an investigation team at Colorado University. Condon’s budget was $500,000. Shortly before his report appeared in 1968, this story appeared in the London Evening Standard:

The Condon study is making headlines—but for the wrong reasons. It is losing some of its outstanding members under circumstances which are mysterious. Rumors are circulating. At least four key people have vanished from the Condon team without offering a satisfactory reason for their departure.

The complete story behind the events in Colorado is hard to decipher, but a clue may be found in recent statements by Dr. James E. McDonald, senior physicist at the Institute of Atmospheric Physics at the University of Arizona. In a telephone conversation this week, Dr. McDonald told this author that he is “most distressed.”

Condon’s 1,485-page report denied the existence of flying saucers and a panel of the American National Academy of Sciences endorsed the conclusion that “further extensive study cannot be justified.” Curiously, Condon’s joint principal investigator, Dr. Stuart Cook, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Psychology, had not contributed a word to that report. And on JANUARY 11, 1969, The Daily Telegraph quoted Dr. Cook: "It is inconceivable that it can be anything but a cold stew. No matter how long it is, what it includes, how it is said, or what it recommends, it will lack the essential element of credibility." Already there were wide-spread suspicions that the Condon investigation had been part of an official cover-up; that the government knew the truth but was determined to keep it from the public. We now know that those suspicions were accurate, and that the secrecy involved Alternative 3. A few months after Dr. Cook made his "cold stew" statement, a journalist with the Columbus, Ohio Dispatch embarrassed NASA by photographing a strange craft at the White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

No one at NASA would talk about the mysterious circular craft, 15-feet in diameter, discovered in the "missile graveyard," a section of the range where experimental vehicles were left to rot. But the Martin Marietta Company of Denver, where it was allegedly built, acknowledged designing several models, some with ten and twelve engines. According to gravimetry expert Dr. Garry C. Henderson³ of the Applied Research Group, General Dynamics, "all of our astronauts have seen these objects and all of our astronauts have been ordered to remain tight-lipped."

Maurice Chatelain⁴ has stated that NASA "killed" significant segments of conversation between Mission

³ Garry C. Henderson was born in Brownwood, Texas, on October 23, 1935. He received the B.S. degree in mathematics from Sul Ross State College, Alpine, Texas in 1960, the M.S. degree from Texas A&M University, College Station, in geophysical oceanography in 1962, and the Ph.D. degree in geophysics from Texas A&M University in 1965.

⁴ Apollo communication and data-processing system designer with North American Aviation, now part of Boeing.

Control and Apollo 11 and that those segments were deleted from the official record: “Sources with their own VHF receivers that bypassed NASA broadcast outlets claim there was a portion of Earth-Moon dialogue that was censored by the NASA monitoring staff.” Chatelain added that “it was presumably when Aldrin and Armstrong were making the rounds some distance from the LEM (Lunar Excursion Module) that Armstrong clutched Aldrin’s arm excitedly and exclaimed: “What was it? What the hell was it? That’s all I want to know.”

MISSION CONTROL: What’s there? Malfunction (garble)... Mission Control calling Apollo 11...

APOLLO 11: Theses babies were huge, sir—enormous. Oh, God, you wouldn’t believe it! I’m telling you, there are other space-craft out there lined up on the far side of the crater-edge; they’re on the Moon watching us.

Two years after his historic Moon mission, Colonel Edwin Eugene Aldrin Jr. was admitted to Wilford Hall Medical Center, Brooks Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas. According to award-winning journalist for The New York Times, John Noble Wilford, “Mr. Aldrin’s problems began almost immediately as he struggled to adjust to life in the limelight. This made him increasingly uncomfortable, which led to erratic behavior and eventually depression and alcoholism. In any event, he was hospitalized for severe depression.”

All men who have traveled to the Moon have indicated knowledge about Alternative 3. In MAY 1972, James Irwin—officially the sixth man to walk on the Moon—resigned to become a Baptist missionary. He said: “The flight made me a deeply religious person and more keenly aware of the fragile nature of our planet.” Edgar Mitchell, who landed on the Moon with the Apollo 14 mission in FEBRUARY 1971, also resigned in MAY 1972 to devote himself to parapsychology. Later, at the headquarters of his Institute for Noetic Sciences near San Francisco, he described looking at this world from the Moon: "I went into a very deep pathos, a kind of anguish. That incredibly beautiful planet that was Earth, a place no bigger than my thumb, a blue and white jewel against a velvet black sky, was being killed off." And on MARCH 23, 1974, he was quoted in The Daily Express as saying that society had only three alternatives and that the third was "the most viable but most difficult alternative." Another Apollo Moon-walker, Hank McDermott, was equally specific when interviewed by Anglia Television on JUNE 20, 1977: "Nothing's the way you think it is. We were a dog and pony show—a PR stunt. A sideshow! As early as Gemini III, every launch was accompanied by synchronized launches of Agena or Soyuz rockets—at Baikonur, Plesetsk and Kapustin Yar; at Jiuquan, Kagoshima and Woomera; at Kourou and Alcantara. One small, badly-designed tin-can was publicized, driven by a band of broken men. We were a diversion!" On JULY 11, 1977, the Los Angeles Times came close to the heart of the matter when it published a remarkable interview with Dr. Gerard K. O'Neill. Dr. O'Neill, professor of physics at Princeton University and author of The High Frontier: Human Colonies in Space (William Morrow and Company, 1977) is quoted:

The United Nations has conservatively estimated that the world's population, now more than 4 billion people, will grow to 6.5 billion by the year 2000. Today about 30% of the world's population is in developed nations. But, because most of the projected population growth will be in underdeveloped countries, that will drop to 22% by the end of the century. The world of 2000 will be poorer and hungrier than the world today, he says.

Dr. O'Neill described a space habitat design called Island Three, or "The O'Neill Cylinder": "There is really no debate about the technology involved; it has been confirmed by NASA's top people." (APPENDIX C) Confirmed, proven, deployed and in an unlikely partnership with America's publically-sworn enemy: The Soviet Union. Andrew Shonfield, director of the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House—Director of Studies, Ian Smart, 1975) in London emphasized that fact on JUNE 20, 1977: "On the broader issue of US-Soviet relations, I must admit that there is an element of mystery which troubles many people in my field; and what we are suggesting is that—at the very highest levels of East-West diplomacy—there could be operating a factor of which we know nothing: a massive but covert operation in space. However, we are not in the business of speculation..."

Washington's acute discomfort over O'Neill's revelations through The Los Angeles Times can be assessed by the urgency with which SLAPP suits were leveled against journalists. We subsequently discovered that Anglia executive Aubrey Buxton (15 JULY 1918 – 1 SEPTEMBER 2009) was familiar with the O'Neill piece and later expressed regret that similar SLAPP suits were not regularly leveled against British journalists. He reflected wistfully that "chilling effects"⁵ would have no uncertain impact upon the networks; that when it came to Alternative 3, he would be spared the repercussions of a meddlesome free press. Buxton, it is of value to note, interfered directly with the publication of this book; a book that has suffered a host of structural indignities and professional compromises.

⁵ "Chilling effects" refers to the suppression of conduct by the fear of penalization.

SECTION TWO: BACKGROUND

IN order to avoid executive culpability, the day-to-day activities associated with Alternative 3 fall under the purview of appointed professionals. These professionals, we have established, classify Alternative 3 candidates into two categories: “individuals” and “batch consignment components.” There have been several “batch consignments” and it is the treatment meted out to so-called “components” which engenders outrage. No matter how desperate the circumstances may be—and we reluctantly recognize that they may indeed be desperate—no humane society should tolerate the practices that will be herein outlined.

That opinion, fortunately, was also assumed by one man who was recruited into Alternative 3 three years ago. Initially an enthusiastic participant, he was soon revolted by the atrocities of which he was a witness. He did not consider, even in light of the circumstances, that they could be justified. Three days after the transmission of Alternative 3 on Anglia Television's Science Report he contacted television reporter Colin Weston and offered to provide him with evidence of an astounding nature. They met two days later.

The man explained to Weston that copies of most orders and memoranda, together with transcripts prepared from tapes of A3 Policy Committee meetings, were filed in triplicate in Washington, Moscow and Geneva, Switzerland (alleged Alternative 3 Headquarters). The contact had access to some of that material and he was willing to furnish what he could to Weston. He wanted no money. Weston, in light of this new development, thought Anglia should mount a follow-up program—one which would describe Alternative 3 in greater depth. He argued bitterly with his superiors but they would not relent; the company was already in trouble with the Independent Broadcasting Authority. They refused to consider the possibility of another program; the Alternative 3 documentary had been officially condemned as a hoax.

Weston is a stubborn man. Friends confirm that although obstinate, he is a first-class investigative journalist. So, angry about Anglia's attempt to suppress the truth, he agreed to cooperate in the preparation of this book. That cooperation has been invaluable. Through Weston we met his Alternative 3 insider, hereinafter referred to as "Trojan." The meeting with Trojan resulted in the acquisition of sensitive documents and transcripts. For obvious reasons, neither can we reveal the identity of Trojan, nor reveal hints about his function or status within the A3 initiative. We are completely satisfied, however, that his credentials are authentic and that, in breaking his oath of silence, he is prompted by the most honorable of motives: disclosure. From Trojan we learned about the aforementioned “batch consignments:” mass disappearances herein alluded to in the news...

OCTOBER 6, 1975, The Daily Telegraph:

The disappearance in bizarre circumstances in the past two weeks of 20 people from small coastal communities in Oregon (Eugene, Waldport and Tillamook) was being intensively investigated over the weekend amid reports of an imaginative fraud scheme involving a flying saucer and hints of mass murder. Sheriff's officers at Newport, Oregon, said that the 20 individuals had vanished without a trace after being told to give away all their possessions, including their children, so that they could be transported in a flying saucer to a better life.”

Deputies under Mr. Ron Sutton, chief criminal investigator in surrounding Lincoln County, have traced the story back to a meeting on SEPTEMBER 14 in a resort hotel, the Bayshore Inn at Waldport, Oregon.

Local police have received conflicting reports as to what occurred. But while it is clear that the speaker did not pretend to be from outer space, he told the audience how their souls could be “saved through a UFO.” The hall had been reserved for a fee of $50 by a man and a woman who gave false names (Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Simon). Mr. Sutton said witnesses had described them as “fortyish, well-groomed, straight types.”

The Telegraph said that “selected people would be prepared at a special camp in Colorado for life on another planet” and quoted Investigator Sutton as adding:

“They were told they would have to give away everything, even their children. I’m checking a report of one family who supposedly gave away a 150-acre farm and three children. We don’t know if it’s a fraud or whether these people might be killed. There are all sorts of rumors, including some about human sacrifice and that this is sponsored by the Manson family.”

Most of the missing 20 were described as being “hippy types” although there were some older people among them. People of this caliber, we have now discovered, have been “scientifically adjusted” for a new role in Alternative 3. There have been reports of animals—particularly farm animals—disappearing in large numbers, although failures associated with “batch consignments” appear to have occurred...

JULY 15, 1977, The Daily Mail

Men in face masks, using metal detectors and a Geiger counter, yesterday scoured a remote Dartmoor valley in a bid to solve a macabre mystery. All appeared to have died at about the same time, and many of the bones have been inexplicably shattered. To add to the riddle, their bodies decomposed within 48 hours. Animal experts confess they are baffled by the deaths at Cherry Brook Valley near Postbridge. Yesterday’s search was carried out by members of the Devon Unidentified Flying Objects center at Torquay who are trying to prove a link with outer space. They believe that flying saucers may have flown low over the area and created a vortex which hurled the ponies to their death.

Mr. John Wyse, head of the four-man team, said: “If a spacecraft has been in the vicinity, there may still be detectable evidence. We wanted to see if there was any sign that the ponies had been shot but we have found nothing.”

The Daily Mail report concluded with a statement from an official representing The Dartmoor Livestock Protection Society: “Whatever happened was violent. We are keeping an open mind. I am fascinated by the UFO theory. There is no reason to reject that possibility as there is no other rational explanation.” These were typical of the threads which inspired the original television investigation. It needed one person, however, to show how they could be embroidered into a coherent whole. Without the guidance of that person, the Anglia television documentary could not have been produced and Trojan would not have contacted Colin Weston. That person was Sir Bernard Lovell, Director of Jodrell Bank Observatory.

SECTION THREE

“In order to misdirect, you must do one of two things: omit or embellish.”

—ANONYMOUS

IT is not called murder. It is an Act of Expediency. Many Acts of Expediency have been sanctioned by the A3 Policy Committee, a cabal of sixteen representatives dispatched from the Pentagon and the Kremlin. An unknown number of people—including distinguished radio astronomer Sir William Ballantine—have fallen victim to Acts of Expediency, revealed here, in print, for the first time. Consequently, prominent political plants with connections to A3, including two in Britain, numbered among those that attempted to prevent the publication of this book. They argued that the events of the future are inevitable; that there is nothing to be gained by the dissemination of facts. Attempts were also made to neuter the televised investigative report of the same name. Those attempts were partially successful; information vital to the story was withheld. The censored information is now in our possession, and as we have indicated, there was a great deal that Weston's team did not discover. They did not know, for example, that Sir William Ballantine's death was soon followed by that of Emeritus Professor of Aeronautics and Aerospace at Stanford University, Howard Stanley Seifert (Appendix A). Nor did they know about the A3 Policy Committee meetings.

Alternative 3 appears preposterous until one analyzes the history of the so-called space-race. From the start, the public have been slow-dripped information, much of which is erroneous. Many advanced research initiatives have been kept classified. In 1949, four monkeys—Alberts I, II, III & IV—participated in experimental V2 rocket tests. They all died either in-flight, from heat-exhaustion or upon impact following parachute failure. In 1951, two more monkeys, Alberts V & VI, perished in Aerobee rocket tests. When news of the tests leaked, it was explained that Monkeys in Space had been kept secret for one reason: to avert protest. Most people accepted the official story—that the Alberts had been the first flesh-and-blood space-travelers. Was it the truth? By 1951, the V2 rocket, a World War II relic, had been superseded by far more sophisticated rockets. Were “Monkeys in Space” a carefully-crafted experiment in misdirection? There is evidence that suggests that by 1951, the superpowers were in possession of far more advanced space technology than was publically admitted. Much of that evidence has been supplied by experienced pilots.

At 8:30 PM on JANUARY 20, 1951, Captain Lawrence W. Vinther—then with Mid-Continent Airlines—was ordered by the controller at Sioux City Airport to investigate a “very bright light” above the field. He and his co-pilot, James F. Bachmeier, took off in a DC3 in order to intercept the “bogey.”

The light dove towards them, passed 200 feet above them, then reversed direction. Soon it was flying parallel to the DC3. Light emanated from a cigar-shaped object bigger than a B-29. The craft lost altitude, passed under the DC3 and disappeared. Two months later, on MARCH 15, thousands of people in New Delhi were startled by a strange object, high in the sky, which appeared to be circling the city. One witness was George Franklin Floate, chief engineer with the Delhi Flying Club, who described “a bullet-nosed, cigar-shaped object about 100 feet long with a ring of flames at the end.” Two Indian Air Force jets were scrambled, but the object surged upward and vanished. If the witnessed craft are of human provenance, then despite official denials, it is evident that sufficient advances had been made by 1951 to provide the basis for Alternative 3.

By the mid-Seventies there were so many rumors about covert information-swapping between the East and West that the alleged “rivals” promulgated a masterpiece of deception: The Apollo-Soyuz Test Project (ASTP), JULY 1975. Leonid Brezhnev sent this message to the astronauts: “Your successful docking confirms the correctness of technical solutions that were worked out and realized in cooperation by Soviet and American scientists, designers and cosmonauts. One can say that Apollo-Soyuz is a prototype of future international orbital stations.” Gerald Ford expressed the hope that this “tremendous demonstration of cooperation” would set the pattern for “what we have to do in the future to make it a better world.”

POLICY COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN: A-EIGHT

TRANSCRIPT FURNISHED BY "TROJAN"

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1977

THE PLAYERS:

EIGHT RUSSIANS: R-ONE THROUGH R-EIGHT

EIGHT AMERICANS: A-ONE THROUGH A-EIGHT

Transcript:

A-FIVE: You're crazy—

A-TWO: No, he's right—Lovell is a liability.

R-SIX: It was agreed that expediciencies would be kept to a minimum.

A-TWO: The way he talks—

R-ONE: Who listens to him? Nobody; he knows nothing. Theories, that's all...

R-FOUR: The theories are still valid—

A-FIVE: He's senile!

A-EIGHT: He's not senile. I heard him lecture at Cambridge. What has he been saying?

A-TWO: Oxygen extraction, cap-melt analysis. People are listening...

A-FIVE: He said the same thing at Huntsville.

R-FOUR: What was said at Huntsville was supposed to stay at Huntsville.

A-FIVE: No one took him seriously.

R-FOUR: It's still a breach; Lovell is an unknown quantity.

A-FIVE: Then kill him.

A-EIGHT: Anything else?

A-TWO: He has mentioned the breach in the magnetosphere—prospective remedial action, etc., but nothing concrete—not yet, at least. (APPENDIX G)

R-SIX: How could he know? The technology required for remedial action is at least three decades away.

A-TWO: Maybe he doesn't know, not for sure, but has made some startling insights—

A-EIGHT: Enough, let's vote. Those for expediency... Those against expediency... Fine, he lives. What about Ballantine and Rosa?

R-SEVEN: Rosa has an Ampex?

A-EIGHT: There is no question...

R-SEVEN: Okay, both go.

A-EIGHT: All agreed? Good. What about Seifert?

R-SEVEN: He's exhibiting paranoia—

R-FOUR: About scientific adjustments?

A-EIGHT: Yeah, adjustments; he is reconsidering things in an ethical light... He has also mentioned prestidigitators in a recent paper on jet propulsion.

A-TWO: That wasn't unexpected—a few get away...

A-EIGHT: He could be committed—

A-TWO: Too risky.

A-EIGHT: That settles that.

END TRANSCRIPT

SCIENTIFIC ADJUSTMENTS (APPENDIX B)

AUGUST 3, 1977: The London Evening News...

Human “guinea pigs” have been used by the CIA in experiments to control behavior and sexual activity. The American intelligence agency also considered hiring a magician (Sidney Gottlieb) for another secret program on mind control. The experiments over the past 20 years are revealed in documents which were thought to have been destroyed, but which have now been released after pressure from United States senate and congressional committees. The attempts to change sex patterns and other behavior involved using drugs on schizophrenics as well as on “normal” people.

AUGUST 4, 1977: Ann Morrow, former Royal Correspondent, wrote in The Daily Telegraph:

Some of the more chilling details of the way the Central Intelligence Agency tried to control individual behavior by using drugs on willing and unwilling human “guinea pigs” were disclosed yesterday by its director, Stansfield Turner. In a large wood-paneled room, Mr. Turner, who likes to be known by his rank of Admiral, told the Senate’s Intelligence Committee and Human Resources Sub-committee on Health that such tests were abhorrent to him. He admitted that the tests were carried out in “safe houses” in San Francisco and New York where unwitting sexual psychopaths were subjected to experiments and attempts were made to change sexual conduct and other forms of human behavior. At least 185 private scientists and 80 research institutions, including universities, were involved.

Senator Edward Kennedy asked some incisive questions, but like other members of the Senate Committee, found it difficult to keep a straight face when asking about the CIA’s “Operation Midnight Climax.” Questioning two former CIA employees about the experiments which began in the 1950s and ended in 1973, Senator Kennedy read out a bizarre list of accessories for the “safe houses” in San Francisco and New York where prostitutes organized. In his flat Bostonian accent he reeled off, straight-faced: “Rather elaborate dressing table, black velveteen skirt, one French Can-Can dancer’s picture, three Toulouse Lautrec etchings, two-way mirrors and recording equipment.” Then he admitted that this was the lighter side of the operation. John Gittinger, who was with the CIA for 26 years, trembled and put a handkerchief to his eyes; he nodded in agreement.

It is no coincidence that the aforementioned experiments also started—as is now openly admitted—in the Fifties—concomitant with Alternative 3. Objective: reserves of compliant laborers devoted to the construction of off-world facilities.

Dr. Ann Clark is a research scientist specializing in solar energy. An attractive woman nudging thirty, Clark made her decision towards the end of 1975. She would never have made it had her fiancé not broken their engagement. Her future had seemed determined; she intended to soldier on at the research laboratory in Norwich until they were married. Conditions and pay at the laboratory were poor but they weren’t intolerable. Then Malcolm shattered her with his news. He said their engagement was a mistake and that he had met someone else. Suddenly the laboratory seemed a squalid place. Although important, her research attracted little funding. Aging and obsolete equipment unnecessarily lengthened experimental projects, while other projects could not be started: “Maybe in the next fiscal year but at the moment there is no budget.” Dr. Clark grew frustrated. She wanted to immerse herself in pure research but there were too few resources at her disposal. It was time to start a new life.

Plenty of others were following suit; they left Britain and defected to generous offers in Greater Europe, the Middle East and America. They both doubled their salaries and were offered superior conditions in which to work: the “brain drain” was underway. (APPENDIX D) Since 1965, roughly 4 million professionals had fled the UK. A department-head at Clark’s Norwich laboratory had left for a post in America at the beginning of that year. Ann Clark wrote to him. Upon receipt of the letter he telephoned from California. His people were looking for someone with her credentials. A company recruiter was in London and he could arrange an interview.

“I’ll get in touch with him today,” she said.

“Let me call him first,” he interrupted. “I’ll put in a good word.”

“Thank you,” Clark replied.

She met the recruiter the following day and was hired on the spot. She drafted her resignation on the train back to Norwich. That was the week, as we will explain later, that she was first contacted by Anglia Television, and at first she was eager to talk to them about her plans. She felt it was important that people be told why scientists were leaving the UK. We are now confronted with a mystery for which we do not have a well-formed answer.

Shortly after the Anglia Television unit arrived at the laboratory in JANUARY 1976 for the first of a series of interviews, Clark was visited by an American with whom she had a long talk. He left and she was visibly disturbed. That same American, we have now established, visited her flat that evening. He stayed for three hours. Thereafter, Anglia Television was no longer regarded with her former warmth. Her work at the Norwich laboratory continued but she withdrew. "It was very odd; she seemed to regard us with pity," said a colleague.

Dr. Ann Clark left Norwich in a rental car on FEBRUARY 22, 1976.

In JULY 1974, thirty-three year old Brian Pendlebury, a Special Projects Officer with the Royal Air Force, left Manchester for sunnier climes and a cushy post with Lenoxx Australia. An only child, Pendlebury would be missed by his parents, although he promised to write often.

He kept that promise. He kept it for five months. Each week, his parents received a letter posted from Melbourne. They also received photographs: Brian surfing; Brian with friends at a nightclub; Brian in front of Victoria Harbour. That harbour picture was a particularly good one. They had it framed and they put it on the mantelpiece. Everything was fine, save for one disconcerting fact: Brian Pendlebury did not live in Melbourne, Australia. What is more, Lenoxx had no record of a Brian Pendlebury.

Robert Patterson hated taxation and he had formulas with which he could prove the sinister nature of that practice. Friends at the University of St. Andrews, where Patterson was a senior lecturer, had grown accustomed, albeit wary, of his fiery monologues about fiscal policy. Many at the university were relieved when he announced his resignation; he and his family were leaving for the States: "I've been asked to participate in an interesting endeavor..."

Patterson announced his resignation in FEBRUARY 1976 and a paragraph appeared in the Guardian.

Arthur Garrett read the paragraph and contacted Patterson. He offered Patterson a platform on which to air his views on taxation.

“Thank you for the invitation,” said Patterson, “but we leave within the week; there’s no time.”

“A very brief interview,” persisted Garrett. “We’ll send a unit. You can speak from home.” Buxton would squeal about the cost of sending a unit from Norwich—just for one interview—but let him bloody squeal. Anyway, John Benson could deal with Buxton. “It won’t take long, Mr. Patterson,” he promised.

Patterson hesitated, “Tuesday morning?”

“Absolutely; what time?”

“Eleven o’clock.”

“And where?”

“Right here at the house.”

Colin Weston, with whom we are now collaborating, made the trip to Patterson’s. The house had been abandoned. According to neighbors, the Pattersons had left on Saturday. The family car was later found abandoned in London.

FEBRUARY 6, 1977: Sir William Ballantine stared at the clock on the wall. Why hadn’t Rosa called? He should have telephoned by now. From his study window Ballantine observed the 76-meter Lovell Telescope. Something had gone dreadfully wrong. It had been a mistake to keep the tape a secret. He should have disclosed its contents to the public. Men had achieved the impossible and the public must know. But who would believe him? So extraordinary were the facts that in spite of his credentials, he would be met with skepticism. Moreover, NASA would deny the evidence emphatically. He and Rosa had seen something that would alter man's perception about his place in the solar system. "Don't yap about this—not to anybody. You'll end up in the Thames," so said Harry Rosa. Of a paranoid disposition, Ballantine taped his calls and Lady Ballantine has permitted the inclusion of the following transcript.

JANUARY 26, 1977

ROSA: Did you destroy the tape?

BALLANTINE: No, it's safe. I haven't said a word.

ROSA: Thank Christ! Then we can burst the whole bloody thing.

BALLANTINE: What are you talking about?

ROSA: Batch consignments, that's what I'm talking about. You wouldn't believe—

BALLANTINE: I'm not following you.

ROSA: I can't talk, not over the phone. I'm coming to you.

BALLANTINE: To Cheshire?

ROSA: You bloody bet and by the first damned flight I can. I quit, Ballantine, and I've stolen a baby jukebox.

BALLANTINE: A jukebox—

ROSA: Yeah, a jukebox—a miniaturized Ampex FR-900—a decoder like we used last year. I've got one and I'm bringing it to England.

BALLANTINE: What is going on, Harry?

ROSA: Wait till we meet; it'll blow your mind. Jesus, I knew these bastards were evil but I never imagined. I'll ring you when I get to Liverpool.

BALLANTINE: Tomorrow?

ROSA: We'll see; they know I have the jukebox. They're looking for me. I have to play it smart. Maybe through Canada, maybe not, we'll see—a week Sunday, probably before then.

BALLANTINE: Are we in danger?

ROSA: Yeah, Ballantine, me mostly, but I gotta go. A week Sunday at the outside—

BALLANTINE: February 6th.

ROSA: Maybe earlier; maybe not—maybe not at all.

BALLANTINE: What does that mean?

ROSA: That I'm dead, that's what it means.

BALLANTINE: Good Lord! Then what?

ROSA: You'll move on the tape.

FEBRUARY 6, 4:45 in the afternoon, and still no call from Rosa. Maybe he was dead. 5:30—still nothing. They knew about the tape. They knew he intended to go public. He removed the tape from the safe. Maybe John Hendry could help. He was a well-connected newspaper executive. Hendry would tell him how to break the news. Ballantine checked his watch: 6:00 PM. He dialed John Hendry. Hendry answered on the second ring:

BALLANTINE: John, this is Bill Ballantine.

HENDRY: What a surprise! How are things at Jodrell?

BALLANTINE: I've got a problem, John—a serious problem and I need your help.

HENDRY: Certainly, anything. What sort of problem?

BALLANTINE: Can we meet?

HENDRY: You in London?

BALLANTINE: I'm calling from home; I could be there this evening.

HENDRY: I was wrapping up for the night.

BALLANTINE: It's important, John. I promise it will be worth your while.

HENDRY: How can I say 'no?' Come to the office.

BALLANTINE: John, I'm putting a package in the post to you, but I'll explain that when I see you.

HENDRY: Why not bring it?

BALLANTINE: Not a good idea.

HENDRY: Bill, what is this about?

BALLANTINE: Don't worry, I'll tell you everything.

The sequence of events which immediately followed the conversation has been described by Lady Ballantine. We met her on JULY 27, 1977.

I entered the study as Bill was replacing the receiver. He was agitated—this extremely self-possessed man. He was never flustered. He had been behaving strangely for about a week. He wouldn't discuss it with me—which was also unusual. I'd never seen him look as frightened as he did then. He said he was leaving for London.

Bill had a package addressed to John Hendry; he asked me to take it to the post box. He said it was urgent and, although I pointed out that there was no collection that evening, he was adamant that I take it then. Bill left and I never saw him again.

Ballantine's death made all the papers: Freak Skid Kills Science Chief. Only one photograph of the crash was made available to the press. A series were taken by photographer George Green but only one was released. It documented the wreckage and a blanket-covered mound on a stretcher.

"Why were the photos confiscated?" we asked Green.

"I've been ordered to keep my trap shut," he said, "but I'll tell you this: ask Hibbert why he lied at the inquest." John Hibbert, Her Majesty's Cheshire coroner, reported that the body had been "extensively burned." That was puzzling as there had been no fire. Hibbert, however, had not elaborated. We wondered why.

"Ballantine's dead. Case closed." said Hibbert. Had Hibbert been gagged? We pressed him, mentioned the burning and then to our surprise...

"It was ghastly," he said. And then he did for us what he failed to do at the inquest: he elaborated.

Rosa heard about Ballantine over the radio, but it didn't register; he was stoned and slumming it in Earls Court. He lay dressed on an unmade bed, his unseeing pale blue eyes fixed on the ceiling. Wendy was out getting a paper. He tried to light a cigarette; it hung, unlit, from his dry lip. Ballantine... Harry rolled off the bed, fumbled through his wallet. Wendy returned and handed him the paper; he scanned the headlines. Ballantine had been murdered.

"Pack, Wendy!" Harry shouted. "We have to leave right now!"

"Why?"

"I need to think, Wendy, and I can't do it here. It isn't safe."

They hailed a cab from Earl's Court. Harry related to Wendy an abbreviated version of events. "I should go to the papers."

"They won't believe you. I'm not sure I believe you!"

"I'll make them believe me!"

The cab driver called over his shoulder: “You should try Anglia Television. They have a science thing that would love your story!”

“Anglia—” Wendy began.

“Right, Anglia. The show is called Science Report.”

“God, damn, you’re right! Pull over. I have to make a call!”

SECTION FOUR

SCIENCE Report had a successful thirteen-week trial on Anglia Television in 1975. Ratings were good and Anglia Television had little difficulty persuading the network to sign a twenty-six week run in 1976. Producer John Benson considered it a compliment, as Science Report was his baby. By the middle of DECEMBER 1975, seven episodes were in the can—they were ahead of schedule and the production team was brainstorming topics for the final five. There were seven of them that day in Benson's office which was nestled behind Studio B. He'd often protest that the office was too small to hold proper meetings and also that he disliked the cooking smells which drifted up from the canteen. His protests were answered by growls from Aubrey Buxton, pointing out that space was at a premium; that Science Report didn't qualify for its own production office. Buxton, of course, had a handsome office—one with a view and air-conditioning.

So there they were—the seven of them in the too-small office. Production assistant Jean Baker took notes. Benson paced back and forth. Also present were anchor-man Tim Brinton, reporters Katie Glass and Colin Weston; scientific advisers, David Cowie and Dr. Patrick Snow, and finally researcher Arthur Garrett. “Wave-power,” suggested Weston.

“Been flogged to death, love,” said Benson. Benson, despite his habit of calling everybody “love,” was tough. When he said no he meant no.

“Newsweek has an intriguing piece on robot servants—‘mechanical maids,’” said Cowie.

“I like that!” exclaimed Benson. “Mechanical maids, yes, we could have fun with that. Jean love, put that down. We’ll revisit it.”

“I think it’s time we took a look at the brain drain,” said Brinton.

Benson stopped pacing, looked at him doubtfully. “I don’t know, Tim. It seems a bit heavy.” He rubbed his pointy chin. “Is it us?”

“If it isn’t, it ought to be,” said Brinton.

“We are allegedly a science program and the brain drain has special relevance for scientists...” conceded Benson. “If we dressed it up somehow—” He looked at Garrett. “Art? Reckon you could dig up some case-histories?”

Garrett could see his work-load swelling: “It would take time,” he said guardedly.

“Of course it would, love. Getting the right people, I can see that. But it doesn’t have to be a top priority. Say...five programs from now.” It was that simple. None had the slightest inkling that they were about to embark upon the most astonishing television documentary ever produced.

Garrett knew there was only one way to tackle this task: scores of phone calls. He would call head-hunting firms, universities and research facilities. He would brace himself for rejections. But if he worked hard enough—and had a bit of luck—he'd secure a collection of case-studies willing to talk. As it happened, Garrett got very lucky; one of his first telephone calls was to a research laboratory. Human resources informed him that one of their solar-energy experts was leaving for America. Her name was Dr. Ann Clark and she agreed to an interview.

Colin Weston disembarked to Norwich with a small unit. According to Weston, "Clark was not only articulate but she had also done homework on emigration. She was a good subject and I'm glad we managed to get a few frames in the can." His delight died after the film was processed; most of it—audio and video—was blank. Benson fumed. He would have to send another unit. Buxton would be unhappy. He quizzed Weston:

"You're sure she is that good—that it's worth going back?"

"It was a good interview," insisted Weston.

Weston telephoned Ann Clark, explained the situation, and arranged a new appointment:

She was sympathetic and agreed to see us again. But when we got to Norwich, she wasn't at her flat. We found her elsewhere, back at the lab. She was flustered and appeared frightened. For some reason, she tried to give us the slip. She didn't want to talk. She asked lab security to waylay us. It didn't make sense. Morning the next, outside the lab, I managed to detain her; she said: "I can't finish the film; I'm going away." That was the last we saw of her.

They were driving toward Norwich when Arthur Garret read the Guardian piece on Robert Patterson. Back at the office, Garrett phoned Patterson.

“You better meet with more luck than in Norwich,” said Benson sourly. “That was a disaster.” We already know that Weston discovered an abandoned house. As a resource of last-resort, Weston met with the Chancellor of the University of St. Andrews, Bernard Edward Fergusson. According to Fergusson, Patterson had left earlier than he had intended: “He was summoned by his new employer; the appointment must have escaped him. I apologize on his behalf.”

“Who were his new employers?”

The Vice Chancellor apologized, said, “Patterson was mum about his next incarnation, but apparently the Yanks presented him with an enticing opportunity.” Patterson’s whereabouts remain unknown, as do the whereabouts of Dr. Ann Clark. According to the American company for which Clark was leaving the UK, she declined the appointment “for personal reasons.” Clark’s rental car was discovered in the parking lot of Number Three Terminal at Heathrow. In the documentary, anchor Tim Brinton elaborated:

Friends say Dr. Ann Clark flew to New York, but flight manifests say otherwise; Ann Clark did not leave Heathrow on a plane. Here, where she parked her rental car, Clark’s trail goes cold.

By APRIL 1976, the brain drain project was deemed lost. Witnesses on which the episode hinged were missing. Audio and video equipment had failed on several occasions. Buxton roared about the “reckless waste of resources.” Had it not been for producer John Benson, the fate of the Science Report episode would surely have been sealed. Benson, in a Hammersmith pub on APRIL 11, overheard a disturbing story. A man called Pendlebury, an engineer, had left the UK for Melbourne and vanished. Odder still, his parents had received letters regularly from an address at which Pendlebury had never lived. “Brian was a selfish sod,” one of the pub patrons said. “But daft, isn’t it?”

It didn’t make sense to Benson, but in light of the so-called brain drain and the confounding disappearances of Patterson and Clark, he was intrigued. He mentioned the episode the next day to Colin Weston. “Disappearing boffins,” Colin said matter-of-factly.

“Maybe a prank...”

“And if it isn’t?” asked Weston.

“Well what else could it be?”

“Maybe there’s a pattern: Perhaps Clark, Patterson and Pendlebury are connected,” replied Weston.

“How?”

“Let me poke around in Manchester—visit his parents.”

“Look, love, please. We’re a week behind schedule and we can’t afford tickets to Manchester.”

“John, I’ve got a feeling; I’ve got a feeling we’re on the edge of something big.”

Benson shook his head. “We’ve got a show to do. I know you’re still sore over the Clark and Patterson cock-ups, but relax.”

“Buxton blames me.”

“Buxton blames everybody for everything. That’s the way Buxton’s made. Anyway, I got the ass-kicking, not you. He’s going to pull the plug.”

“I’ll go on my day off,” said Weston. “I’ll pay my own way.”

“You’re persistent, Weston. Okay, see what you can dig up but don’t bill anything to the station”

Weston had thrown down the gauntlet and Manchester would prove the turning-point for the foredoomed Science Report episode, Alternative 3.

Dennis Pendlebury is a retired milkman. He and his wife Alice live in an Openshaw duplex. They are an ordinary couple. A couple of modest means, the Pendleburys made many sacrifices to send son Brian to university. Mrs. Pendlebury worked as a charwoman. Weston sat at the kitchen table, flipped through photographs of their son dispatched from Melbourne. The Pendleburys sat facing Weston, Dennis’ arm wrapped around Alice’s shoulders. They drank tea.

“So we were disappointed when he stopped writing, but not surprised; he wasn’t a natural letter-writer.”

“When did you learn of his...” started Weston. “When did his letters stop?”

“Five years ago now—” Mr. Pendlebury began.

“Six years,” corrected Mrs. Pendlebury, “seven in September.”

“Our neighbor’s daughter, Beryl—an old friend of Brian’s—migrated to Melbourne, found a job. We asked her to look up Brian, that way she’d have a friendly face, see? So she visited his address—the address from the letters—but the landlord had never heard of Brian Pendlebury.”

“That’s the address to which we’d been writing!” exclaimed Mrs. Pendlebury. “We know he received our letters.” Mrs. Pendlebury’s hands shook—her teacup rattled on its saucer.

Mrs. Pendlebury said to her husband: “Show Mr. Weston the letter.”

“We wrote to his firm, inquired about Brian; here’s their reply.”

Weston took the letter embossed with the Lenoxx Electronics Corporation logo. It read:

Thank you for your letter which has been passed to me by the Managing Director. I am afraid that you have been misinformed for I have checked our personnel records for the past five years and I have established that at no time has the company employed, nor offered employment to, anyone by the name of Brian D. Pendlebury. I regret that I cannot be of additional assistance.

Weston frowned, “This is the correct firm?”

“Pass me that wallet, mother.” From the wallet he took a slip of paper. “There it is—Brian’s own handwriting.”

Mrs. Prescott, the Pendlebury’s neighbor, a widow with a shrewd and agile mind, confirmed their story but had little to add. Weston borrowed the letter and photographs and left Openshaw on foot for the station. On the train he studied the photographs, particularly those on Victoria Harbour. There was something unusual about the photographs. At the studio he enlisted the help of cinematographer Ian Craig. Craig created copy-negatives from the original photographs and produced several enlargements. When the enlargements were complete, Weston could see clearly the anomaly that he had noted on the train: In the background of every shot were three identical birds flying in a triangular formation. The photographs were mock-ups—frauds. He hurried to Benson’s office: “We’ve had a breakthrough, John. This is no mere ‘brain drain’ story.”

SECTION FIVE

“Twenty-one others,” said Tim Brinton on television, “chiefly scientists and academics, have vanished under unusual circumstances.” They were among four-hundred researched—ostensibly for an extended version of the brain drain program—by Science Report staff. Some, Brinton explained, had disappeared alone and others, like Patterson, disappeared with their families; all told friends, relatives, neighbors and colleagues that they were going abroad. However, as we have already indicated, only part of the story was presented on television. Many facts were still not known when the show was taped and a portion of the material was censored by executive producer Aubrey Buxton, a principal personage also devoted to the suppression of this book.

AUGUST 9, 1977: Letter from Aubrey Buxton to Messrs. Ambrose and Watkins...

I have been given to understand that you propose a book based on one of the Science Report programs produced by this company and that you plan to publish confidential memoranda in which I was a participant. I am not prepared to sanction such publication as I would consider it a gross invasion of my privacy. As you are undoubtedly aware, my company has now formally denied the authenticity of the material presented in that program. It is to be hoped that you do not proceed with this project but, in any event, I look forward to receiving a written undertaking that no reference will be made to me or the memoranda.

AUGUST 12, 1977: Letter from Solicitor Edwin Greer to Aubrey Buxton...

I have been instructed by Mr. David Ambrose and Mr. Leslie Watkins and I refer to your letter of the 9th. My clients are cognizant of the statement made by your company following the transmission of the Alternative 3 program and, in conducting their own inquiries, they are mindful of the background to that statement. They point out that any copies of memoranda now in their possession were supplied willingly by the persons who either received them or sent them and that they therefore feel under no obligation to refrain from their publication, although they will consider your request for anonymity under advisement.

One of the first batches of memoranda we received related to a curious discovery made by researcher Arthur Garrett in May 1976. By that time, despite objections from Buxton, the Science Report team had been enlarged and allocated its own production office.

MAY 17, 1976: Memo from Arthur Garrett to John Benson—C.C. to Marquis Townshend, Chairman...

We have now established that relatives of two of our missing people, Dr. Penelope Mortimer and Professor Michael Parsons, received letters which appeared to have originated in Australia. In both cases, the letters bore the address used in the Pendlebury case. Photographs of Dr. Mortimer and Professor Parsons include the bird-formation artifacts present in the Pendlebury shots. A Melbourne PI has verified the address and he reports that it is a two-bedroom ground-floor flat near the harbour. It has been empty for a year.

MAY 13, 1976: Memo from Aubrey Buxton to Mr. John Benson...

I have been notified of Garrett's unauthorized inquiries in Australia. I have already issued specific instructions that I am to be kept fully informed on all aspects of this project. Please repeat those instructions to Garrett and all other members of the Science Report team and ensure that they are understood. I am surprised to learn that, despite my warnings, you are still determined to waste company time and money. Let me remind you that Science Report is regarded by the Network as a serious program and that its credibility can only be damaged by this wild-goose chase with which you are obsessed. The more I learn of this affair, the more obvious it becomes that you are losing your objectivity as an editor and producer. Many people disappear deliberately, sometimes for personal reasons. I will not tolerate this station turning that sort of situation into an excuse for sensationalism. I assumed that you were experienced enough to recognize that the photographic evidence is fraudulent. Have you considered that some of your so-called mysteries might have been caused by incompetence on the part of your staff? Did Dr. Ann Clark, for example, refuse to grant Weston a second interview because she found his manner offensive during the first one? Did Garrett confuse the date and send an expensive unit on a fool's errand to Scotland? These are the questions which should occupy your attention, not unsubstantiated nonsense. I am not prepared to sanction any further expenditure in Australia and I recommend, once again, that you resume the duties prescribed in your contract.

May 19, 1976: Memo from John Benson to Arthur Garrett...

CONFIDENTIAL: I attach a copy of a rollicking I received from Aubrey Buxton. It's self-explanatory and, for the moment, I'd like you to keep it to yourself. In the future, don't send carbons to anyone before checking with me. We'd better soft-pedal for the moment on Australia. Will you line up Mortimer and Parson's parents to be interviewed by Tim or Colin?

Six days later, on MAY 25, Arthur Garrett gave Benson bad news: "No interviews with Mortimer or Parsons," he said. "They changed their minds."

"But why?" demanded Benson. "Did they give you an explanation?"

"None at all," said Garrett. "They say they'd sooner not."

"You think they've been got at?"

Garrett nodded in assent. "That's the impression I got but proving it, that's another matter."

"They're important, love. Have another go at them."

Garrett did, but Mortimer and Parsons, despite their former agreement, would have nothing further to do with Science Report. We tried to contact them in SEPTEMBER 1977, but we were too late. They had gone "abroad."

This question of the staged photographs and letters was deliberately omitted from the television program. At the time, it was a question of relevance. Benson admits regret: "I thought Buxton was nit-picking, but he was adamant. Their value didn't appear worth the aggravation. If I'd known then what I know now..." On JANUARY 3, 1978, we received an envelope from Trojan containing sensitive documents which shed unexpected insight onto something called "The Smoother Plan." The Smoother Plan was an early directive addressed to A3 National Chief Executive Officers.

NOVEMBER 24, 1971:

The recent publicity which followed the movement of Professor William Braishfield was unfortunate and potentially damaging. In order to avert any repetition, it has been agreed to adopt a new procedure in all cases where families or others are likely to provoke questions. The procedure, to be known as "The Smoother Plan," is designed to allay fears or suspicions in the immediate post-movement period. Department Seven will arrange for letters, photographs and mementos to be dispatched to concerned parties. Cover addresses will be circulated to National Chief Executive Officers. Officers will then issue addresses to individual movers. At least four addresses will be provided in each "country of destination." There is, however, no limit to the number of movers allocated to a given addresses. The Smoother Plan will operate for a maximum of six months in respect to each individual, unless circumstances are exceptional.

It is emphasized that, because of the overhead involved, The Smoother Plan is to be activated in selected cases only, subject to review. Only PR risks will be considered. Most movers, (i.e., families), will not merit this treatment. Batch consignment components will not be considered.

It was clinical and cruel, but it made sense.

POLICY COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN: R-EIGHT

TRANSCRIPT FURNISHED BY "TROJAN"

THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1977

TRANSCRIPT:

A-TWO: Nobody's bitching about Ballantine, but what about Rosa?

A-EIGHT: We'll find him; he's on the loose in London.

R-THREE: Do we know where the tape is?

A-EIGHT: No; we've turned Ballantine's place over but nothing.

R-EIGHT: It wasn't in the car?

A-EIGHT: No.

A-TWO: We don't know where Rosa is and we don't know where the tape is. Maybe they're together?

A-EIGHT: He'd have blown it—the story.

R-ONE: You're positive he's in London?

A-EIGHT: He was in Earls Court—with a girl in her twenties. We missed him by an hour.

R-EIGHT: Have you seen the expediency report on Ballantine?

R-TWO: Entirely satisfactory.

A-FIVE: I'm not sure he deserved a hot job.

R-FOUR: Sure he did.

A-ONE: He didn't suffer; it was instantaneous.

R-EIGHT: Is Lovell under surveillance?

A-EIGHT: He's laid up with bronchitis. He might as well be in isolation.

R-EIGHT: Then everything's under control. Maintain surveillance on Lovell.

END TRANSCRIPT

THE "HOT JOB"

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION: a phenomenon confirmed by John Hibbert who gave evidence at the Ballantine inquest. Hibbert, when pressed about the "extensive" burns on Ballantine's body, made this statement:

It was technically accurate to describe Ballantine's body as extensively burned although those words embrace only part of the truth—an understatement. I was requested to make that understatement in order to allay public alarm. I was conscious that there had been some degree of public hysteria following reports of spontaneous combustion and I agreed that full-disclosure would be of little value at the hearing.

I regret that decision and I welcome this opportunity to atone for my failure. Ballantine's body was not merely burned; it was reduced to cinders and scorched bones. His skull had shrunk due to intense heat, but his clothing sustained little damage. There were small scorch-marks on the steering wheel, but the rest of the vehicle showed no evidence of fire-damage. Extensive damage was suffered by the vehicle, but not by fire, as the police stated at the inquest. This is the first occasion on which I have personally encountered spontaneous combustion in a human being but I have studied papers relating to twenty-three similar occurrences. There is still no known explanation for this phenomenon.

On WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1977, three days after Ballantine's death, Harry Rosa telephoned the Science Report office. Colin Weston took the call. Rosa was guarded and refused to give his name, and until he mentioned missing scientists, Weston doubted his authenticity.

TRANSCRIPT:

WESTON: Would you repeat that, what you said about scientists?

ROSA: I know why they're vanishing.

WESTON: Tell me.

ROSA: Not on the phone.

WESTON: Well, really, this is a bit—

ROSA: I'm not shitting you! Ballantine was killed.

WESTON: Ballantine?

ROSA: Ballantine, the astronomer.

WESTON: The car crash.

ROSA: I met him at NASA, in Houston—that's why he's dead.

WESTON: You aren't making sense.

ROSA: Can we meet?

WESTON: Was Ballantine murdered?

ROSA: Either we meet or I go someplace else.

WESTON: From where are you calling?

ROSA: Public box, north of the studio.

WESTON: Then come in!

ROSA: Too risky.

WESTON: Mr.—

ROSA: Just Harry...

WESTON: Harry, you having me on? Were you really with NASA?

ROSA: A busy street, maybe...

WESTON: All right, we'll do it your way. I'll meet you around the corner on Market Ave. I'll be in front of the Boer War Memorial, wearing a blue suit, holding a...red book.

Weston and Rosa were to meet in one hour. A hidden camera was positioned adjacent to Norwich Castle and Weston's "red book" was equipped with a miniaturized transmitter in order to record the conversation.

TRANSCRIPT:

WESTON: I think you're looking for me.

ROSA: How far are you willing to go with this?

WESTON: As far as it takes. Can you help?

ROSA: Yes and Bernard Lovell can confirm what I say.

WESTON: Lovell?

ROSA: Lovell, yes, at Jodrell Bank. Ask him about Alternative 3.

WESTON: Riddles, Harry. What's "Alternative 3?"

ROSA: Later; right now we do this my way.

WESTON: Fine.

ROSA: Let's walk.

Viewers will recall that the sound quality was poor during the reenactment interview, particularly during the section when they were discussing Bernard Lovell and Alternative 3. There was a great deal of static interference and Weston's radio microphone picked up passersby and traffic. In actuality, there was no such interference.

ROSA: I'm nervous.

WESTON: Why?

ROSA: I'm afraid of heart attacks and embolisms and spontaneous combustion...

WESTON: It was an accident—a freak accident.

ROSA: Not an accident; it was called an expediency. I know what happened. I have to get on record. Meet me at this address, tomorrow morning, ten-thirty. Bring everything you've got—camera, witnesses. I'll tell you everything.

Rosa dashed across the road and disappeared down Castle Meadow. Weston was disappointed. The elaborate set-up, it seemed, had been a ridiculous waste of time. He looked at the scrap of paper which Rosa had pushed into his hand. On it was scrawled an address in Lambeth.

"Well, what do you think?" he asked Benson.

"Follow through, love. I'll arrange a unit."

"What about Bernard Lovell?"

"I'll talk to Tim; see if he fancies a trip to Cheshire."

SECTION SIX

WESTON arrived at the Lambeth address with a camera crew shortly before 10:30 AM on FEBRUARY 11. It was a derelict three-story with rubbish moldering in the front garden. Most of its windows, like those of its neighbors, had been boarded up, but in one on the second floor a dirty sheet billowed. The garden gate had been ripped away and there were broken roof-tiles on the path leading to the front door. Weston hurried up the steps, followed by the technicians, and rapped on the door. No reply. He tried again, harder. He shouted and pummeled the door with both fists. A girl called from inside: “Who is it?”

“Colin Weston.” On the other side of the shabby door, in the darkness of the hall, Wendy stood shaking. She didn’t know who they were or what they wanted but she did know that they could arrive at any time, and that they would hurt Harry. She bit her bottom lip, “Who?”

Weston shook his head in frustration. There was no number on the house. He stepped back along the path to double-check the numbers on either side, returned to the door. "This is 33, isn't it?"

"Who did you say you were?" Wendy's American accent, now obvious, was the confirmation Weston needed.

"Colin Weston," he repeated. "I'm here with a film crew."

Wendy was still suspicious. Maybe it was a trick. Harry had said they used all sorts of tricks. "How can I be sure?" she called. "What program are you with?"

"Science Report—Harry invited us."

A short silence, then the sound of heavy bolts being drawn back. The door was opened inches. Wendy, her hair unkempt and her eyes wide with anxiety, stared at Weston then at the camera, sound equipment and tangle of wires. "You're really with Science Report?" she said.

"Can we come in?" Weston said. "Harry did invite us." He showed her Harry's hand-written note.

She pulled the door open. "You won't get much out of him," she said, "not this morning."

They followed her down a hallway and up a flight of stairs. Ancient flower-print paper peeled away from the walls. Wendy stopped and she shouted down to the soundman who was the last in: "Bolt the door after you; we've got to keep it bolted!" She waited, watching, while he did so. "You know, this is a waste of time," she said quietly to Weston. Maybe it would be better if you turned around and left."

"He asked me to be here, so I'm here."

She shrugged again. "Fine," she said haughtily. There were three doors leading off the landing. She opened the one at the front of the house, and there, in the room with the sheet-covered window, Weston saw Harry Rosa. He didn't recognize Rosa, not at first, for what he saw was a haggard and vacant-eyed creature. It was shivering convulsively and its teeth were chattering; it was clutching a matted blanket to its naked shoulders; it was hunched defensively with its knees up to his chest on an old sofa—the only bit of furniture in the room. Weston stepped forward tentatively.

"Harry?" Rosa pressed further into the rotting sofa cushions, his eyes wild.

"Who are you?" Harry growled.

"It's Colin Weston, Harry. Do you remember me?"

Wendy tried to help, "It's all right, Harry. He's with Science Report."

Rosa gave a howl of despair. "It's them!" he yelled, "They've bloody tricked you and now they've found me!"

"What's he talking about?" demanded Weston. "What's the matter with him?"

Wendy ignored him. She knelt by the sofa and cradled Rosa. "Now, Harry," she said, "it's alright. There's nothing to be frightened of." She glanced up at Weston, jerked her head towards the door. "You'd better go."

"Is he high?"

"Get out of here!"

"Maybe we should get a doctor." That was when Rosa, hysterical, flung Wendy aside and leapt from the sofa.

"Come on, you bastards!" he yelled. "Come and kill me!" He waved his arms wildly and the blanket slipped to the floor. Save for socks, he was naked. He sprang at Weston. Weston tried to dodge, but Rosa's nails raked down his face—narrowly missing his eyes—leaving ragged furrows in the flesh of both cheeks. The film technicians, wedged behind Weston in the doorway, were unable to help. Weston drove his elbow into Rosa's nose. The fight was over. Rosa clutched his face with both hands and collapsed to the floor. His heroin-ravaged body was racked by sobs.

"I'm sorry," Weston said to Wendy. "I didn't expect..."

"I told you to go!" She wiped Harry's face with her sweater. "Now for God's sake, leave!"

At the studio, Benson listened to Weston recount the altercation with Harry. Meanwhile, Katie Glass dabbed at Weston's raw face with cotton swabs wetted with alcohol.

"We can't leave him there like that," Benson said. "We have to call the police."

When the police arrived, Wendy and Rosa were gone. According to Wendy, she went out to buy antiseptic and bandages. When she returned, Harry was gone. He has not been seen since.

Benson, Weston, Garrett and Glass clustered around a Steenbeck flatbed editing suite and re-watched the short film shot on Market Ave.

"That's the spot!" said Benson. "Go back!" Garrett rewound the 16-mm film.

"Right, love, stop—right there!" The Boer War Memorial clung to the edge of the frame. The camera tracked Weston and Rosa as they proceeded down Market Ave.

WESTON: It was an accident—a freak accident.

ROSA: Not an accident; it was called an expediency. I know what happened. I have to get on record. Meet me at this address, tomorrow morning, ten-thirty. Bring everything you've got—camera, witnesses. I'll tell you everything.

"Okay, kill it," said Benson. Garrett froze the reel, brought up the lights. "Well," asked Benson, "what do you think?"

Glass shook her head doubtfully. "An addict," she said. "Maybe it's an elaborate fantasy."

"I'm inclined to agree," said Benson. "I'm not sure we should waste any more time on him. Colin?"

Weston rubbed his bandaged face. "Remember what he said about vanishing scientists? Maybe you're right: maybe he is an addict, but it's a hell of a coincidence, the way his fantasies reinforce our work. Did Ballantine really go to Houston?"

"Yes, as a visiting lecturer," said Glass. "But it was on the wire; it wasn't a secret."

Benson stood, glanced at his watch. "What do you want to do, Colin?"

"I want to talk to Lady Ballantine."

"You can't. Today is the funeral."

"Tomorrow, then; I'll be discreet," said Weston.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1977

Lady Ballantine was cordial when Weston arrived by appointment at 3:30 PM. She told him what she would tell us on JULY 27.

The package: Did she know what it contained?

"I can't imagine," she said.

Did she know why he posted it to London, and to whom it was posted?

“That’s what puzzled me,” said Lady Ballantine. “It was posted to the man he intended to meet.”

“I’m sorry,” said Weston. “I don’t follow.”

“The envelope—it was addressed to his old friend John Hendry. John called on Friday, late. He was waiting for Bill.”

“Have you spoken to Hendry or asked him about the package?”

“He rang on Sunday, but I was too upset to think about packages.”

At 8:00 PM, Weston met Hendry at his Fleet Street Office. “A “premonition”—that’s the word he used,” said Hendry. “Extraordinary, isn’t it?”

“The package,” persisted Weston. “What was in the package?”

Hendry crossed the room to a table by the window, took a loose spool of magnetic tape from a drawer. “This,” he said.

“What’s on it?”

“Not a thing as far as we can tell.”

“You’ve played it?”

“Sure, we tried everything but there’s nothing there. You know what I think? I think he sent the wrong one.”

“That’s not likely, is it?” said Weston. “Someone so fastidious...”

Hendry went back to his desk and lit a cigar. “Normally, yes, but he wasn’t himself on Friday. His voice on the telephone, it was manic, almost unrecognizable. He must have been under an incredible amount of stress—trouble at home perhaps, or at work. I don't know."

Weston picked up the tape. "Could I borrow this?"

"Why do you want the tape?"

"We have pretty sophisticated equipment at the studios. Maybe we can learn something."

"Why not," said Hendry, "but keep me in the loop."

On JUNE 20 1977, during the original broadcast of Alternative 3, there was nothing on the encoded tape. Tim Brinton pointed out that it held only "the cold crackle of the vacuum of space." But had Harry Rosa not been stoned on that chilly FEBRUARY Lambeth morning, that "cold crackle" would have told a very different tale, for Rosa had the Ampex decoder—the so-called "jukebox." Nevertheless, progress was being made.

Lovell's housekeeper was protective of her ward. She bullied him about his pipe-smoking: It was a filthy habit, she argued. When he developed a vicious case of bronchitis, she had felt vindicated; Lovell would relent. But Lovell would sooner murder than abandon his pipe; it was part of him. She regulated Lovell's visitors as well. The housekeeper had watched Brinton on independent television and she had a soft spot for him, but it wasn't soft enough: "Not this month," she said. "It's out of the question."

Had Brinton known that Lovell was under surveillance, he would not have persisted. "It really is very important; I wouldn't dream of troubling him if it weren't."

She relented, disappeared upstairs and consulted with the sickly Lovell. “I can make a provisional arrangement, Mr. Brinton,” she said, “but it will depend on his health.”

“What date?”

“MARCH 4, 2:00 PM. Is that suitable?”

Brinton checked his calendar. “Thank you,” he said. “I’ll be there.”

SECTION SEVEN

THE Lovell interview took place as planned on MARCH 4, 1977.

“This Harry,” he said, “I don’t think I can place him.”

“He said it was important that we talk to you,” said Brinton. “He told us to ask you about ‘Alternative 3.’” Lovell packed his pipe with fresh tobacco, lit it.

“He did?” Lovell said between puffs.

“Are familiar with Alternative 3?”

“Let me show you something,” said Lovell. He unlocked a desk drawer, withdrew a folder. “Read that; it is—was,” Lovell winked, “a confidential report issued by a consortium of intelligence agencies; a report on which I did consulting.” Brinton flipped through the jargon-laden report; scanned over heavily-footnoted passages.”

“What is this?” asked Brinton.

“That is the future, Tim. You are holding a report that prescribes remedial action.”

“For what is remedial action being taken?”

“A number of things, Tim; call it a cascade of failures.” The 64-year-old Lovell removed his tweed jacket and rolled up his shirt-sleeves. “We screwed up,” Lovell said matter-of-factly. His pipe had gone out. He did not relight it. “In fact, we screwed up collectively, for once. In what year was the last atmospheric test of a nuclear weapon conducted?”

“I’m afraid I can’t say.”

“Well, we think it was in JUNE of ‘74. There is a secret moratorium on nuclear weapon testing in the upper atmosphere and for the most part, it has been successfully enforced.”

“I don’t see what this has to do with anything,” Brinton said, tapping the report’s manila cover with his pointer finger.

“I’m getting to it. Are you familiar with the process of ionization?”

Brinton shook his head, and exasperation crept into the corners of his eyes. “I’m an anchor, not a science-guy.”

“In short, it’s the process whereby which an atom is converted into an ion. An ion is an atom with an unequal number of electrons and protons. If an electron absorbs enough energy and exceeds the so-called “ionization potential” by which it is confined, it will break free, thus creating a positively-charged ion. Conversely, if an electron is captured by an atom—if it crashes through the atom’s electric potential barrier—a negatively-charged ion is created. When atoms are bombarded with radiation, ions are formed—simple, right?”

Brinton humored him and nodded.

“I’m getting to the point: An untold number of atmospheric weapon tests resulted in an enormous amount of ionization in the upper-atmosphere. The tests were conducted before the physics and risks were understood. Plasmas—” Lovell produced a piece of paper and a pencil and began to sketch. “Okay, like this—plasmas are an electrically-conductive gas, and there’s a lot of it in the so-called “vacuum of space,” or at least we think there is. But plasmas are not native to our own upper-atmosphere, not in quantity! Not until nuclear weapon testing. Plasmas aren’t like typical solids, liquids and gases; they have very distinct properties and most importantly, they interact with magnetic fields in acute and dynamic ways. Well, Mr. Brinton, the fact of the matter is, these plasma-byproducts began to interact with the Earth’s magnetic field in unpredictable ways and several layered tunnels were burrowed through the mesosphere and into the thermosphere.”

“Again, not a science-guy... So you are saying there are holes—that the atmosphere is escaping?”

“No, things don’t escape into the vacuum of space—Earth has sufficient mass to preserve its atmosphere.”

“Then I’m not sure what you’re getting at...”

Lovell tapped the paper on which he was drawing with his pencil. It was clear that he was unaccustomed to abridging his thoughts for a layman. “Okay, think of the magnetosphere as a shield. The magnetosphere is generated when Earth’s magnetic field is charged by particles from the Sun. Well, Earth’s magnetic field has been irreversibly altered by plasmas generated by atmospheric weapon tests. Consequently, the magnetosphere is failing and the magnetosphere is the only thing that stands between you and solar radiation. There is a word for the phenomenon but we aren't using it in public: "clefting."

"Like a palate?"

"Sure; Earth's magnetic field has a harelip, or in this case, several harelips. I'm not going to mince my words: life on Earth is in dire jeopardy. We anticipate a total collapse of Earth's magnetic field." Lovell considered his pipe, left it where it lay, sat back in his chair.

"We can't go public with this," said Brinton. Beads of sweat stood out on his forehead.

"You can't go public with this."

"And Alternative 3..."

"You're a smart man, Tim; you can probably guess: small colonies on Mars, bases on the moon, orbiting way-stations. There is nothing practical about the colonization of Mars, but its magnetic field is somewhat intact and that's our chief consideration. We considered going underground and there is a large element that has done so or is in the process of doing so, but that presents its own set of problems."

"Why are you telling me this, Bernard?"

"Think about it, Tim; what will you do? You can't go public—you don't have any facts with which to substantiate your claims. Even if you managed to present your case, you would be laughed off the stage. Who would believe it? And yet, ironically, from man's most grave error, the knowledge with which to reach the stars in a laughably simple way was discovered!"

"Wait, wait, but firstly, can't these clefts be repaired?"

"Alternative 1 is devoted to the repair of our magnetic field. It has not met with success. Projects have been abandoned in the Soviet Union already. Essentially, Alternative 1 requires the construction of a handful of very large and very powerful particle accelerators. Alternative 1 will proceed in concert with Alternatives 2 and 3, but we can't bet on its success. The accelerators may even exacerbate the problem."

"I see."

"Do you? Would I really share this with you if I didn't think people should know? Do I really expect you to compromise your professional and personal ethics? Tell this story, Tim. An exclusive club shouldn't be responsible for the fate of Mankind." Lovell unrolled his sleeves, buttoned his cuffs and put on his jacket. "We have men on Mars. From outposts on the moon, they are able to reach Mars in 33 days using quantum propulsion craft." (APPENDIX H)

"Quantum propulsion!" Brinton was no longer taking notes. He did not look well.

"In the presence of a radioactive isotope, quantum leaps are observed in atoms—instantaneous changes in quantum state. Electromagnetic radiation is released which reciprocally fuels an ionic propulsion engine. It is very efficient and relatively easy to maintain. Anyway, that's the sunny side of the street."

"And..." Brinton hesitated, "the dark side?"

"Pretty much everything else; a certain amount of regularity must be perpetuated on Earth—the wheels have to keep turning, things have to be manufactured; institutionalized complacency has to be guaranteed. So Alternative 3 is also in the business of entertainment, or misdirection by another name. Threats will have to be presented to the public but they must be threats for which solutions may be devised; we can't sell futility—"

"I'm sorry, Bernard, I've made a terrible mistake coming here. This is..." Brinton stood, wiped his sweaty palms on his pants, and unfastened the top button of his oxford. "Listen, I don't think we had this talk. I'm not your man, uh, not for this. This isn't my scoop, uh, something—something terrible is happening to me, to my head, listening to this. I've made a terrible mistake!" Brinton ejected a cassette from the recorder with which he taped the conversation and handed it to Lovell. "Do what you want with it. Science Report—" Brinton balled his fists and stomped his foot. "I can't handle this!" He left and in so doing, rather than tell the truth, became a proponent of misdirection; and unwittingly, so did Science Report...

"Lovell recommended consulting someone at NASA, or maybe an ex-astronaut," Brinton lied.

"Good idea," Benson said. He paced with his hands folded behind his back.

Garrett ran his hands through his hair. "And how do I do that?" he demanded. "By the way, Tim, you look sick."

"Thank you, Garrett."

"Okay, Art, an ex-astronaut is a priority. Get on it!"

"It'll cost," persisted Garrett. "I'll have to hire someone in America and that could cost real money. Buxton's not going to like it."

"Never mind about Buxton," Benson said. "You do your job and leave Buxton to me." He grinned: "Anyway, he's a busy man and I don't think we ought to trouble him with such a small matter."

Three former astronauts refused to cooperate. A fourth agreed, but grudgingly: Hank McDermott. In preparation for the interview, Garrett reviewed relevant transcripts from McDermott's Apollo missions. Here is a poignant excerpt:

MCDERMOTT: Hey, Houston, do you hear this constant bleep we have here now?

MISSION CONTROL: Affirmative. We have it.

MCDERMOTT: What is it? Do you have some explanation for that?

MISSION CONTROL: We have none. Can you see anything? Can you tell us what you see?

MCDERMOTT: Oh boy, it's really, really something super-fantastic here. You couldn't imagine this.

MISSION CONTROL: O.K., could you take a look out over that flat area there? Do you see anything beyond?

MCDERMOTT: There's a ridge with a pretty spectacular... Oh, my God! What is that there? That's all I want to know! What the hell is that?

MISSION CONTROL: Roger, interesting. Go Tango—immediately—go Tango.

MCDERMOTT: There's a light now...

MISSION CONTROL: Roger, we got it, we've marked it. Lose a little communication, huh? Bravo-Tango, Bravo-Tango, select Jezebel.

No more speech could be heard; McDermott had switched to another frequency: Jezebel! On the tape there was only static. Tim Brinton, you may recall, underlined that point when the television documentary was transmitted. He said: "...select Jezebel—a form of code? Almost certainly, but what did it mean? Absolutely nothing to the estimated six hundred million people listening in on earth." Remember the allegations made by former NASA-man Maurice Chatelain?

"Certain sources with their own VHF receivers that bypassed NASA broadcast outlets claim there was a portion of Earth-Moon dialogue that was quickly censored by the NASA monitoring staff."

That censored portion, according to Chatelain, included these words from Apollo 11:

"These babies were huge, sir—enormous. Oh, God you wouldn't believe it! I'm telling you, there are other spacecraft out there, lined up on the far side of the crater edge."

Could that have a direct link with the exchange heard on the McDermott tape? Had McDermott, like the men of the Apollo 11 mission, seen something too startling to be revealed? Or were these astronauts mistaken? The idea of unknown and unidentified spacecraft "lined up" on the Moon—to the astonishment of human astronauts—was ridiculous. And yet, McDermott agreed to be interviewed via satellite from a studio in Boston, Massachusetts. The plan was to tape the interview and edit it later. In fact, as viewers will remember, the interview ended abruptly and in the oddest possible way and it places a bigger question mark on the subject of Alternative 3. There was, right from the start, something slightly manic in McDermott's expression and he showed a tendency to laugh nervously for no apparent reason. Nevertheless, he spoke lucidly and displayed no reluctance about discussing the breakdown he had suffered after his final return from space. Nothing remarkable happened, or seemed likely to happen, until Tim Brinton asked a question which we present verbatim:

Now it has been suggested that all of you in the Apollo program saw more than you have been allowed to admit publicly. Would you comment?

The effect on McDermott was immediate: He shouted: "What are you trying to do, man? Just tell me that! What are you trying to do?"

Brinton apologized: "I was only—"

"You trying to screw me?" demanded McDermott. He leaned forward in his chair, glowering into the Boston camera. "That what you want? You want to screw me?"

"Of course not," said Brinton quickly. "And I'm sorry if—"

"Like Ballantine? Is that what you want?" He got no further; his voice was muted in midsentence, his picture on the monitor vanished and was replaced by static.

"Hell's teeth!" Brinton exclaimed.

He was interrupted by Benson's voice. "We don't know where he's gone."

Like Ballantine?

That's the line which grabbed their attention. It had to fit in, somehow, with the mystery of the tape received by Hendry—and with the strange circumstances preceding Ballantine's death.

"We have to talk to him face-to-face. Arthur, see what you can arrange." He turned to Colin Weston. "You're our man, Weston," he said.

Weston beamed. "Great! But isn't Buxton going to raise a stink?"

"Probably," said Benson. "But leave that to me."

Buxton did "raise a stink;" he raised it more vehemently than Benson anticipated. We have the memoranda which reveal the strength of Buxton's feelings; a strength bordering on fanaticism.

POLICY COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN: A-EIGHT

TRANSCRIPT FURNISHED BY "TROJAN"

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1977

AUTHOR'S NOTE: This meeting, held later in the month than was customary, was two days after The Los Angeles Times published the controversial interview—detailed in SECTION ONE of this book—in which Dr. O'Neill outlined the solution he called "Island 3."

"There is really no debate about the technology involved; it has been confirmed by NASA's top people."

TRANSCRIPT:

R-TWO: This Princeton man, Gerard O'Neill—not discrete.

A-FOUR: Sure, but no harm done—it sounds like science fiction—highly theoretical.

A-EIGHT: It is just theoretical as far as he is concerned. He knows nothing.

R-FIVE: He is respected. People listen.

A-EIGHT: Let's keep this in perspective. Washington doesn't want to underscore the O'Neill thing. We ignore it.

R-SEVEN: Nevertheless, Moscow is worried. Rosa, for instance—

A-EIGHT: Not Rosa, again!

R-SEVEN: And Lovell...

END TRANSCRIPT

BATCH CONSIGNMENTS:

HOW TO WRANGLE A "COMPONENT" WITHOUT REALLY TRYING

THE SPY WHO CAME IN FROM THE BATHROOM

BY

WILLIAM LOWTHER

THE DAILY MAIL

AUGUST 27, 1977

Morgan Hall (a.k.a. George H. White) was a spy. He always kept a jug of martinis in the refrigerator. He had a two-way mirror in the bathroom. But Morgan's life was full of woe. His masters were slow in sending money. His assignment was sleazy. The codename for his project was "Operation Midnight Climax." It was meant to be a perpetual secret and no wonder. For two full years Morgan spent his days sitting on a portable toilet watching through his mirror drinking his martinis while a prostitute entertained men in the adjoining bedroom. Her job was to persuade clients to drink cocktails. What they didn't know was that the drinks had been mixed by the mysterious Morgan Hall. They were more chemical than alcohol. Morgan had to record the results. We still don't know just what they were or how they worked. But some of the drinks gave instant headaches, others made you silly or drunk or forgetful or just plain frantic. The effects were only temporary and nobody was harmed, much. Morgan was employed by the Central Intelligence Agency and it was America's top spy bosses who sent him out from headquarters near Washington to set up the "laboratory" in a luxury apartment overlooking San Francisco Bay. Now, 1,647 pages of financial records dealing with the operation have been made public as part of a Congressional investigation.

It was all part of the agency's MK-ULTRA mind control experimental program. It was reasoned that a prostitute's clients wouldn't complain. The financial records released yesterday show that Morgan was always writing to headquarters. Says a typical letter—"Money urgently needed to pay September rent." His bills for the flat include Toulouse Lautrec posters, a picture of a can-can dancer and one marked, "Portable toilet for observation post." Says the CIA: "Morgan Hall died two years ago. We have no idea where he is buried."

Lowther's story was followed by two more reports which lent credence to Trojan's allegations regarding secret behavior-modification experiments.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1977, The Times:

The general assembly of the World Psychiatric Association, meeting behind closed doors, has adopted a resolution condemning the Soviet Union for abusing psychiatry for "political purposes." The international code of ethics, called the "Declaration of Hawaii," follows years of criticism against the WPA for its failure to respond to "ethically ambiguous" incidents.

AUGUST 28, 1977, The Sunday Telegraph:

Hospitals for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped have been instructed by the Health Department to collect statistics on operations being carried out to alter personality. For the first time, ministers have acknowledged that there is growing concern. The operations, known as psychosurgery, are carried out to remove or destroy portions of brain tissue to alter the behavior of severely depressed or exceptionally aggressive patients who do not respond to drugs or electric shock treatment.

Neither article pointed out that these operations can also be performed to control the behavior pattern of men and women who are completely sane, or that they are performed regularly...

Dr. Randolph Crepsen-White spoke to us about these operations when we met him in the Somerset village to which he retired in 1975. He spoke frankly: "I performed five of these operations—four young men and one young woman. All subjects were perfectly sane. There were two objectives: The patients had to be completely de-sexed—to have their natural biological urges taken away—and they had to have their sense of self blunted. They would, upon discharge, obey any order without question. I recognized that what I was doing was unethical, but I was told that the operations were vital to "national security." I was ordered to sign an "Official Secrets" form. Soon it became apparent that I would be required to perform many more operations. I quit. I pled grave illness, which is true, and retired." Dr. Crepsen-White died on OCTOBER 19, 1977 of pancreatitis.

SECTION EIGHT

AUGUST 15, 1977: Aubrey Buxton responds to Solicitor Edwin Greer...

I am surprised by the contents of your letter and I must insist on receiving undertaking from Messrs. Ambrose and Watkins to the effect that I will not be mentioned in their projected book. I note that your clients are aware that Anglia Television has admitted that the Alternative 3 program was an unfortunate hoax and I am puzzled by the apparent evasiveness of your second paragraph. You state that your clients are 'mindful of the background to that statement.' What, if anything, does that mean? I repeat that it would be wrong to perpetuate in book-form what has already become a public misconception. There is absolutely no truth in the suggestion of any East-West covert action such as that described in the program and your clients apparently intend to compound what has already been admitted as a serious error of judgment. If your clients persist in their attitude, particularly in respect to my privacy, I will have to seek legal advice and/or redress.

AUGUST 13, 1977: Solicitor Edwin Greer responds to Aubrey Buxton...

There was no evasiveness in my letter of the 12th. I pointed out that my clients have conducted their own investigations in Britain and America into the subject of their projected book. Indeed, that investigation is still continuing; any decisions taken by Mr. Ambrose and Mr. Watkins, in consultation with their publishers, will depend on their eventual findings and I am instructed to inform you that it is not possible for them to give you any undertaking.

Six days later, Greer received a letter from a well-known MP that had been lobbied by Buxton. Because of Britain's restrictive libel laws, the name of the MP has been omitted:

In common with a number of my colleagues in the House of Commons, I have already deplored the misguided motives which resulted in the television program about the so-called Alternative 3. Letters from many of my constituents demonstrate the alarm which was engendered and which, despite the subsequent statement by the television company, still lingers. The fact that your clients should apparently be determined to capitalize on that alarm is, to my mind, quite scandalous. I intend to seek an injunction to prevent the publication of this book.

No such injunction was served but this author was forced to make many unseemly compromises.

APRIL 12, 1977: Memo from Aubrey Buxton to Marquis Townshend, Chairman...

CONFIDENTIAL:

The note from Benson, bearing today's date and relating to his interest in America, is clear confirmation of what I have already indicated to you and the Executive Producer. Benson has become unprofessionally obsessed with this ridiculous investigation with which he is persisting and I recommend that he be replaced immediately as producer of Science Report. I have studied his contract and we would be within our rights to transfer him. I have on several occasions warned him about squandering company time, money and resources. He has defiantly persisted in doing so. I was told nothing of the inquiries which have been commissioned on our behalf in America although, as I mentioned again at the Senior Executives' Meeting on Friday, it is company policy for matters of that nature to be channeled through me. It would be wrong to sanction Weston's fact-finding mission; nothing can possibly be gained by talking to McDermott. We should, I suggest, instruct Benson to abandon this fool-hardy exercise.

APRIL 13, 1977: Memo from Marquis Townshend to Aubrey Buxton...

CONFIDENTIAL:

Let us not forget that Science Report is a network success due in part to Benson's ingenuity. However, I note your objections and I too am concerned about the monies channeled into said project. Weston's proposed trip to the States is not justified. If the situation should change as a result of any further information you may receive, I will be prepared to discuss the matter. Until then, the episode is frozen.

Benson read the note, pushed it across his desk to Garrett. "That bloody Buxton!" he shouted.

"Now what?" asked Garrett.

“We’re going to do it, Art. We are definitely going to do it. What we need is more information.”

“Like what?”

“I don’t know, love. You’re the researcher—the sort of information that’ll swing it with George.” He got up and started pacing the room. “What was it Lovell said about cooperation between the superpowers?”

“He seemed to have the idea that they were working together on Alternative 3.”

“That could be it!” said Benson excitedly.

“Do we know anyone who might develop that thought for us? It has to be somebody with real prestige.”

“Andrew Shonfield.”

“Who’s Shonfield?”

“He’s the director of the RIIA.”

“There’s no harm in trying. Is Colin around?”

Garrett shook his head, “His day off.”

“It’s always his day off when I need him,” said Benson. “Ask Katie to pop in and see me, will you? She can start sounding out Shonfield.”

At 5:15 PM, Katherine Glass commenced her interview with Shonfield, parts of which, as you may recall, were eventually used in the transmitted program. Shonfield was cautious, suspicious of Glass’ motives; he did not want to be a party to sensationalism.

SHONFIELD: On the broader issue of US-Soviet relations, I must admit that there is an element of mystery which troubles many people in my field. To put it simply, none of us can understand how it is that the peace has been kept over these past twenty-five years.

GLASS: The experts are baffled?

SHONFIELD: Baffled and, for once, in agreement. The popular myth of mutual assured destruction does not stand up.

GLASS: What is your explanation?

SHONFIELD: What we are suggesting is that—at the very highest levels of East-West diplomacy—there could be operating a factor of which we know nothing: a massive but covert operation in space. However, we are not in the business of speculation...

Benson barged into the Chairman's office: "You read the Shonfield transcript?"

Townshend, busy at his desk, sat back and smiled resignedly. "Yes."

"Well?"

"Well, what?"

Benson groaned, exasperated. "Surely that clinches it."

Townshend shook his head. "No, John, not as far as I'm concerned. It's either speculation or disinformation—maybe both."

"But George, it all fits! Lovell and Shonfield, each a top man in his field, both suggesting cooperation in space between the superpowers. Rosa, his links to NASA and Ballantine, the disappearing scientists and McDermott! He saw something incredible on the Moon! For Pete's sake, we can't drop it, not now!"

"Stop pacing and sit down." Townshend gestured to a chair. "Go on, sit down." He waited. Benson sat. "Now, for the last time, let's get this clear. I realize that something odd may be going on but I don't think it's our business. You've done a tremendous job with Science Report, John. Everybody thinks so and the ratings reflect that. It's time to buckle down."

"That means you're still saying "no" to America?"

"That's exactly what it means."

"If it's a matter of money, can I point out how much profit this company made last year?"

"The company does make profits and good ones but it does not do so by sending teams gallivanting around the world on fool's errands. Let it rest, John."

Benson got up, prepared to leave. "I'll arrange a junket! Weston could do a piece for the holiday series while he's there. I've spoken to Tim Shaw who's taken over the holiday programs and he's quite keen, and I know an airline that'll play ball."

"God, you don't give up, do you?" Townshend grinned. "All right, give Weston the green light."

"Why did you disappear that night?" asked Weston. "The night of the interview—why did you run out like that?"

"Have another beer," said McDermott. He pushed a fresh can across the low table and opened one for himself.

"The bastard was trying to screw me. Did I see more than I've been allowed to admit publicly! Jesus, what sort of fool question was that?" Weston forced a grin, tried to relieve the tension. He felt like an angler stalking a clever fish—gently, gently. He took a long drink, sighed, put down the empty glass.

"I needed that beer," he said.

McDermott was glowering, "You aiming to screw me, too?" He was frightened. Weston felt a twinge of pity. Would anything be gained by pushing McDermott any further? It would be easy to tell Benson that McDermott had refused to talk; that he couldn't be persuaded. Benson wouldn't like it. In fact, he'd be bloody furious, but he'd have to accept it. Then he considered Harry at Lambeth, stoned, naked and terrified: "Camera, witnesses. I'll tell you everything." Perhaps McDermott had the key to a piece of the puzzle. Weston needed answers...

"Well?" persisted McDermott. They were in canvas chairs behind the ranch-style bungalow which McDermott was renting in a lonely corner of New England. It was peaceful. No neighbors. Far in the distance, beyond the vast spread of scrub, they could see the tow-like sprawl of the smoke-blue mountains. There were no noises from the bungalow behind them but Weston knew that the girl called Annie was busy in the kitchen. McDermott introduced him to her and then she scuttled out of sight. Annie, he felt, wasn't at all happy about this intrusion. She looked young, had straight hair, no makeup and gold-rimmed glasses. On the far side of the bungalow, at the top of the winding drive, Jack Dale sat in the rental car babysitting his video equipment.

McDermott drained his glass. "Owned a place like this once," he said. "Thought I was putting down roots, you know? Used to go up there in the summer with the family—ah, it was all different then; we had a few horses and—" He stopped, smiled ironically, continued, "Guess you can say I'm not much into planning for the future anymore." He studied his empty glass. "Annie, we're out of beer! Bring a couple more, will you?" He glanced at Weston. "Or you want a real drink?"

"Beer's fine," said Weston.

McDermott grunted and shrugged. "Annie! There are two men out here dying of thirst!" She appeared with two sweating cans of beer. McDermott squeezed her hand. “Thanks, baby.”

“How about getting something on the record?” suggested Weston.

“Like what?”

“Like what you know about Ballantine.”

The guarded expression was back on McDermott’s face. “I never knew the guy.”

“You didn’t go to Houston and you didn’t meet Ballantine?”

“Drop it, will you! I never knew him. I never met him.”

“But you know what happened to him.”

McDermott stood up. “Time to eat,” he said. “Let’s give your pal a shout.”

During dinner, McDermott converted to bourbon on the rocks. Their table-talk was casual, but several drinks later, McDermott agreed to a taped interview.

TRANSCRIPT:

MCDERMOTT: Ballantine and a young radar-guy—Rosa—got their hands on a roll of magnetic tape. Rosa had access to the equipment with which it could be played—NASA techs called it a “jukebox.”

WESTON: Jukebox...

MCDERMOTT: Ampex recording equipment—the data could only be deciphered by the device for which it was designed, like an FR-900, or something similar.

WESTON: Is this Rosa? Weston showed McDermott a photograph of Rosa. McDermott frowned, nodded.

MCDERMOTT: Are you sure you don’t want a real drink?

WESTON: I'm sure, thanks.

MCDERMOTT: Bourbon's better for you...

WESTON: You're saying the tape got Ballantine killed?

MCDERMOTT: I saw the way those guys looked at him. I knew those looks...

There was a break in the interview. McDermott emptied his glass and shambled to the living room bar. On JUNE 20, 1977, viewers did not see Annie return from the kitchen, nor did they hear her argument with McDermott. She thought McDermott was being indiscreet. But he was drunk, restless and resented Annie's remonstrations. He yelled at her, said she didn't have "nagging rights": "You aren't my goddamn wife!" She continued to argue—tried to persuade him; he grew madder still. He threw a tumbler of bourbon at the wall and the glass exploded. Annie left in tears. For the next hour he drank heavily. Weston worried that McDermott would lose consciousness but McDermott remained lucid—the mark of an inveterate drinker. He's drinking himself sober, Weston thought. The interview continued:

WESTON: Hank, what happened out there—on the Moon?

MCDERMOTT: I don't know how to put this, but it was a disappointment; we were late to the party.

WESTON: 'Late to the party?'

MCDERMOTT: The later Apollo Missions were smoke-screens—to cover up what was really going on out there, and the bastards didn't tell us—not a damned thing!

Here, as viewers will recall, there was another break. It lasted only a split second on the screen but, in fact, filming stopped for more than an hour. When they resumed, McDermott was sweating heavily. He was sweating because of the alcohol and because of his excitement over what he was saying. They'd said he wasn't to talk about it. That's what the bastards had said. Well, he'd show them Hank McDermott wasn't a guy to be scared into silence. They didn't own him. He was out of the service now and maybe it was time for someone to talk. He was holding yet another drink as he waited for Weston's first question.

WESTON: Hank, you've got to tell me, what did you see?

MCDERMOTT: We touched down several kilometers east of our target and it was...it was crawling with activity...

WESTON: Are you talking about men from Earth?

MCDERMOTT: Nothing's the way you think it is. We were a dog and pony show—a PR stunt. A sideshow! As early as Gemini III, every launch was accompanied by synchronized launches of Agena or Soyuz Rockets—at Baikonur, Plesetsk and Kapustin Yar; at Jiuquan, Kagoshima and Woomera; at Kourou and Alcantara. One small, badly-designed tin-can was publicized, driven by a band of broken men. We were a diversion!

END INTERVIEW

McDermott finished his drink and fell face-down on the carpet. Weston and Doyle left. The interview had been a success.

APOLLO 17

TAURUS-LITTROW

20°11'26.88"N 30°46'18.05"E

DECEMBER 11, 1972 19:54:57 UTC

MISSION CONTROL: More detail, please. Can you give more detail of what you are seeing?

HARRISON SCHMITT: It's something flashing. That's all so far. Just a light going on and off by the edge of the crater.

MISSION CONTROL: Can you give the coordinates?

HARRISON SCHMITT: There's something down there, maybe a little further down.

MISSION CONTROL: It couldn't be a Vostok, could it?

HARRISON SCHMITT: I can't be sure. It's possible.

BATCH CONSIGNMENTS

THE CHAIRMAN – A3 POLICY COMMITTEE

NATIONAL CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS – E.O.

JANUARY 10, 1978

AUGUST 27, 1958:

Each designated mover will, it is estimated, require back-up labor support of five bodies. These bodies, which will be transported in cargo batch consignments, will be programmed to obey orders without question and their principal duties will be construction and priority will be given to the construction of accommodations for the designated movers.

However, in the interests of good husbandry, accommodations will also be provided for the human components of batch consignments, as well as for “food stuffs”—as a matter of urgency. The completion of these accommodations, which will be of a basic and utilitarian nature, will in normal circumstances take precedence over the creation of laboratories, offices, and recreational centers. All exceptions to this rule will require written authorization from the Chairman of the Committee in Residence. It is estimated that the average working life-span of human batch consignment components will be fifteen years and, in view of high transportation costs, every effort will be made to prolong that period of usefulness. At the end of that life-span they are to be considered disposable. Preliminary work is now progressing to adapt batch consignment components, mentally and physically, to their projected roles and the scope of this experimental work is to be widened. Further details will be provided, when appropriate, by Department Seven. Pre-transportation collection of batch consignment components will be organized by National Chief Executive Officers who will be supplied with details of categories and quantities required. No collection is to be arranged without specific instructions from Department Seven.

OCTOBER 1, 1971:

Experimental processing of batch consignment components is now producing a 96% success rate. This is considered not unsatisfactory. The Policy Committee briefing circulated on SEPTEMBER 7, 1965, explained the necessity for all components to be de-sexed. On another note, the permanent elimination of self-will and self-interest has presented great difficulties. Long-term laboratory tests have revealed that an unaccountably high percentage of components eventually regress into pre-processing attitudes. Advanced work, conducted principally at Dnepropetrovsk has now resulted in a substantial reduction of the “component-personality” failure ratio. Finally, in the future, no de-sexing will be performed until after the personality-adjustment of the projected component, male or female, has been assessed and approved. This will ensure that those which eventually return to their homes as “rejects” will betray no evidence of laboratory work.

SECTION NINE

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1977: Benson was spending as little time as possible in his own office. He could no longer tolerate the smells from the canteen. He operated from a desk in the open-plan office which had been allocated to Science Report. At times, however, it tended to be too noisy, with too many telephones and too many people, and occasionally he was forced to retreat to his own tiny room behind Studio B. Benson and Weston were closeted there together, studying a transcript of the McDermott interview. Benson marked a section with a red pencil.

“There, love,” he said. “That’s the bit that really intrigues me. What did he mean?”

Weston read aloud: “One small, badly-designed tin-can was publicized, driven by a band of broken men. We were a diversion!”

“I don’t know,” he said. “McDermott passed out.”

"That still leaves us with questions, doesn't it?" said Benson. "And I need answers."

"Yes, but—"

"No 'buts,' love; I'm getting enough 'buts' from Buxton. He's put in a complaint about you to Townshend; he says it was unethical of you to interrogate a drunken man. He wants to kill the interview."

"All right, so he was smashed, particularly towards the end. I'm prepared to admit that, but I'm certain he was coherent and telling the truth."

"I know, and then he fell flat on his face." Benson chuckled. "You stick with your version, love, because the Chairman wants to see both of us."

"You're serious, then: Buxton is trying to kill it?"

"Yes, indeed. And you didn't do the holiday piece I promised him."

"What holiday piece?"

Benson grinned, "Yeah, for the holiday series—something for Tim Shaw. He's pissed and so is the airline; they don't like to throw away junkets."

"Oh, come on—"

Benson stopped him: "Don't worry; he's got his Isle of Man project."

"Then we should locate Harry; he's got answers," said Weston.

Benson frowned, got up to close the window. "So where do we start?"

"Could try the police again," said Weston.

"Be back by mid-afternoon," said Benson.

The desk sergeant was polite but unhelpful. “You any idea how many people get reported missing in Britain every year?” he asked. “275,000 and those are the reported disappearances. God only knows how many don’t get reported.”

Weston handed him a photograph of Rosa. “He was last seen on February 11th in Lambeth.”

The sergeant snorted, “Gives us plenty to go on, doesn’t it? What makes you think he’s missing? Maybe he doesn’t want to see you anymore.”

“He was frightened, very frightened, and he got me confused with somebody else,” said Weston. “He seemed to think that somebody was planning to kill him.”

“You think that he’s been killed—that he’s been murdered—is that what you’re trying to say?”

“I don’t know,” said Weston miserably. “I don’t think so but I don’t know.”

“Why should he confuse you with somebody else?”

“Because he wasn’t normal that morning; he was bombed out of his mind.”

“He was stoned?”

“That’s right.” They were short-handed at the police station and it was a busy morning. The sergeant decided he had already wasted too much time. He pressed the photograph back into Weston’s hand.

“So what have we got? Male, 30s, squatter, a junkie, paranoid... Anything else you want to add?”

Weston shuffled his feet, said sheepishly, “Sounds a bit daft, doesn’t it?”

“I’ve got your information,” said the sergeant. “If Rosa turns up, we’ll ring you.”

The afternoon meeting with Townshend was a rough one. The Chairman was in a foul mood. Maybe Buxton was right. Maybe Benson was becoming “unprofessionally obsessed.” Townshend had doubts about the transmission of an interview with a drunken subject. There could be repercussions.

“But George, it could prove to be an invaluable part of the program,” argued Benson. “There are just a handful of missing links.”

“Come back when you find those links.” Townshend brushed imaginary crumbs from his hound’s-tooth jacket, glowered at the pair of them. “Until then, your pet-project is dead.”

They returned to the small office behind Studio B. Benson sat at his desk, sniffed. “No fish on Mondays,” he said. “Fish-days are the worst.”

“Lovell—he’s all we’ve got left. If only we could get him to open up. You want me to try him?”

Benson shook his head, picked up the grey internal telephone, and dialed the Science Report office. “Is Brinton there?”

MAY 1971: the authoritative publication Computers and Automation carried an article by Edward Yourdon:

...tremendous improvement in various precincts of Government, if one has faith—faith that the computers will work properly. Men have lost faith in their human leaders, and now things will be better if they have faith in a cold computing machine...

NATIONAL SECURITY CITED BY POLICE AS REASON FOR MAINTAINING SILENCE ON USE OF RECORDS

STEWART TENDLER

THE TIMES

SEPTEMBER 9, 1977

The names and personal details of tens of thousands of people scrutinized by the Special Branch for reasons of national security are to be fed into a new criminal intelligence computer purchased by Scotland Yard and which remains shrouded in mystery.

When plans for the computer were drawn up two years ago it was understood that by 1985 the Special Branch would allocate space on it for up to 600,000 names out of the system's total capacity of 1,300,000.

Census projections have indicated that Britain's population will not increase in the next decade. So that figure of 600,000 means that the Special Branch was preparing to feed details of one person out of every ninety-five in the entire population into that computer. But that is merely the start. Discount from the total population all geriatrics, young children, and those who have been judged incurably insane and the ratio under surveillance comes down to about one person in fifty. Take that one step further and the implications are startling. If the average household comprises two adults, the ratio is reduced to one household in twenty-five. That means there can hardly be a street in Britain where at least one household does not merit computer-monitoring by the Special Branch. Can you now be confident that you or your immediate neighbors are not being studied by the Special Branch? You can be absolutely certain that people you know, probably people very close to you, are getting this particular treatment. And the figures we have given, astonishing as they may seem, do not allow for those people programmed into other Special Branch computers—computers which so far have remained hidden on the classified list.

Is this typical Special Branch work or does it indicate an operation on a scale required by Alternative 3?

Yesterday a police source said that the Special Branch had yet to decide how many names would be placed on the computer and denied that 600,000 would eventually be filed. Scotland Yard said last night: “The question of the involvement of the Special Branch in the project to computerize sections of the records of C Department (the department covering CID and specialist detective squads) is not one we are prepared to discuss, since most of the work of the Special Branch is in the field of national security. The publication of any figures purporting to indicate the total number of records in any part of the project would amount to speculation.

Special Branch is still surrounded by a certain amount of mystique and the same is true of the new computer. The Metropolitan Police and the Home Office have made few public statements about the nature of its use.

Tendler also stated that the activities of the Special Branch were “a closely-guarded secret” and he added: “It is not known whose names and details have been gathered by the officers.” We cannot prove that this particular computer has been used to sift “designated movers” and “batch consignment components” for Alternative 3 from the general population. However, because of information furnished by Trojan, we are able to state categorically that similar computers are used for this purpose.

LOCATIONS:

FORT GEORGE G. MEADE, MD, USA

PINE GAP, Alice Springs, Australia

GCHQ, Cheltenham, United Kingdom

BUNDESNACHRICHTENDIENST, Pullach, Germany

NAICHŌ, Japan

Little trouble is taken over the selection of “components” for batch consignments. They need to be strong. That is the prime criterion. Their backgrounds and mental capacities are of secondary importance; all “components” undergo behavioral modification. But how is the value of a “designated mover” determined?

DESIGNATED MOVERS

THE CHAIRMAN – A3 POLICY COMMITTEE

NATIONAL CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS – E.O.

1972

Standing instructions relating to the recruitment of designated movers have already been circulated by this Committee. However, recent reports from the Chairman of the Committee in Residence indicate that there have been failures in the execution of those instructions. These failures have produced unanticipated problems in the new territory and have resulted in an unacceptably high number of post-transportation asset-losses. This situation cannot be tolerated and I am once again compelled by the Policy Committee to highlight the overarching aims of the Committee-in-Residence: Every effort must be made to eliminate dissension in the new territory. Affiliative dispositions must be routed and re-entrained. National Chief Executive Officers will give priority-attention to re-enculturation initiatives undertaken by their scientific officers. Suggestibility-thresholds in all candidates must be determined prior to inculcation. Due to the scope of the initiative, the onus falls upon regional case officers.

Candidate-quotas which remain unfulfilled include general practitioners, neurologists, chemists and bacteriologist. A satisfactory complement of computer scientists, mining technicians, and agriculturalists has been achieved. Future personnel requirements will be circulated to National Chief Executive Officers.

THE MISSING

1975-1977

Richard Tuffley, 27, endocrinologist—living and working in Swansea, South Wales...

Orphaned when young and brought up his by mother's sister, now deceased...

Unmarried and with no known relatives...

Lived alone in a small rented flat near the university...

Disappeared MONDAY, JANUARY 5, 1976...

Last seen driving a light-blue mini-van in the direction of Cardiff...

The van has still not been located...

STATEMENT FROM HIS DEPARTMENT CHIEF: "He was a first-class and highly-conscientious colleague—certainly not the sort one would expect to wander off. He was introverted and made few friends but I had no indication that he was in any way unhappy here."

Gordon Balcombe, 36, senior administrator with a multinational manufacturing conglomerate...

Living in Bromley, Kent, and working in central London...

Divorced in 1969...

Father of three children, from whom he is estranged...

Lived alone in former family home; reported to have many women visitors. Some, according to neighbors, often stayed overnight...

Disappeared on THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1976...

Last seen leaving his office in a taxi...

Taxi-driver was never traced...

STATEMENT FROM HIS MANAGING DIRECTOR: "We were completely bewildered by his disappearance for he was a man with a future. Plans were being made for him to move to a senior position at our base in Chicago and he seemed excited by the prospect. We regard his disappearance as a great loss."

STATEMENT FROM MRS. MARJORIE BALCOMBE: "Gordon, for all I know, could be anywhere. I suspect that he is probably in America. He is the sort of man that executive head-hunters try to entice to new posts and it is quite possible that he would not bother to tell his old firm if he decided to accept a better offer. He would just go if it suited his purpose. That's the sort of person Gordon is: self-centered. And I shouldn't be surprised to learn that he has some woman in tow. Women are his great weakness. The only thing that really puzzles me is the way he left so many of his clothes and other personal possessions in the house. That does strike me as being out-of-character.”

Sidney Dilworth, 32, meteorologist...

Living and working in Reading, Berkshire...

Widower...

Wife died in a car crash in OCTOBER, 1975...

No Children...

Lived alone in a mortgaged duplex...

Disappeared Friday, APRIL 16, 1976...

Last seen driving a hired car in the direction of London...

Vehicle later found in a car-park at Number Three Terminal, Heathrow Airport...

STATEMENT FROM HIS FATHER, WILFRED DILWORTH: “I keep telling the police that something really bad has happened to our Sidney but, although they’re very sympathetic, they don’t seem to be doing much about it. I’ve got a nasty feeling he’s been murdered. He was always a very considerate lad and he’d never want me and his mum to have this sort of worry hanging over us. He was very upset after his wife was killed and he talked about trying to start a new life in Canada. In fact, the JANUARY before he disappeared he said he thought he had a job lined up there but, as far as I could gather, that fizzled out. At the research station they say he never mentioned anything about leaving but I suppose he wouldn’t want to tell them until it was all settled. Now we’ve reached the stage where I dread opening the newspaper in the morning for I’m sure that one day I’ll be reading that they’ve found his body.”

Also missing...

Andrew Nisbett, 39, aerospace technician, born Tulsa, Oklahoma, disappeared on TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1976, from Houston, Texas, together with his wife, Rita, and their only son.

Pavel Garmanas, 42, physicist, born in Usachevka, USSR, disappeared on THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1977, from his new home in Jerusalem, Israel.

Marcel Rouffanche, 35, nutrition specialist, born in the suburb of Saint-Rugg near Avignon, disappeared on WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1977, from his apartment in Paris.

Eric Hillier, 27, constructional engineer, born Melbourne, Australia, disappeared on THURSDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1977. Intensive investigation has shown that the figures given by Brinton in that television program represented only a fraction of the true total. And that total is still mounting.

ALTERNATIVE 3

REACTIONS AND REPERCUSSIONS: POST-DENIAL

STORM OVER TV SPOOF

THE DAILY EXPRESS

Thousands of viewers all over the country protested in shock and anger over a science fiction "documentary" broadcast by ITV last night. From the moment that Alternative 3 ended at 10 PM, irate watchers jammed the switchboards of The Daily Express and ITV companies to complain.

This story made no mention of the evidence which had been given on-screen by Bernard Lovell or by other respected authorities such as Andrew Shonfield. McDermott's important contribution was also ignored. However, the story did indicate that...

...the hour-long spoof purported to show a version of the scientific brain drain. The program was introduced by anchor Tim Brinton as a serious investigation into a disturbing trend. American and Russian spacemen were seen collaborating to set up a "new colony" while viewers were left to infer that the reason for the exploration was the projected end of life on Earth. The documentary had a disclaimer. What this program shows may be considered unethical.

Viewers protested their shock immediately. Others complained of ITV's "irresponsibility." Early today, a spokesman for the Independent Broadcasting Authority said it had thought long and hard before allowing the documentary to be aired. But Mrs. Denise Ball of Camberley, Surrey, said: "I was scared out of my wits. It was all so real."

Mrs. Mary Whitehouse, the renowned Clean-Up-TV campaigner, was another who believed the "Buxton denial." She was quoted in another newspaper as saying: "I had hundreds of calls. The film was an expert piece of deception."

That was the immediate reaction and it was understandable. The facts assembled by Benson and his team were so alarming that people were eager to believe that they were untrue. Buxton's denial, which drew a comforting veil over the affair, was readily accepted. All this put men like Arthur Garrett in an invidious position. Over Robert Patterson, for example: Had Patterson really existed? That question was implied by the attitude of most newspapers, and for some unfathomable reason, officials at the University of St. Andrews refused to make any comment. Chancellor Bernard Edward Fergusson was on a “scholar’s quest” abroad. Was Patterson a figment of Garrett’s imagination? Was that why Weston had been unable to interview him? The questions were piling up. Days later, once Alternative 3 had been properly digested, Fleet Street considered the investigative report in a different light.

Arthur Garrett told us that relief arrived on JUNE 26 when he opened the Sunday Telegraph. Esteemed columnist Philip Purser wrote: “a number of mysteries within the mystery posed by Alternative 3 remain unsolved.” Philip Purser made it abundantly clear that he was too shrewd to be fooled by the Buxton denial. He concluded his Sunday Telegraph article with these thoughts:

It would be a mistake to file Alternative 3 away too cozily with Panorama’s spaghetti harvest and other hoaxes. Suppose it was fiendish double-bluff inspired by the very agencies identified in the program and that the superpowers really are setting up an extraterrestrial colony of outstanding human beings to safeguard the species?

Many sensed the underlying truth. Tim Brinton received the following note from ESA Director General Roy Gibson: “I must congratulate you and Colin Weston on your assiduous research.”

Yet mainstream newspapers still exhibited a reluctance to pursue the subject of Alternative 3. Why didn’t they question Marjorie Balcombe? Why didn’t they contact Dennis Pendlebury in Manchester or Richard Tuffley’s former colleagues in Swansea? The authors have already revealed that publication of this book was subject to rigorous and demoralizing censorship, as well as structural compromise. Likewise, is it possible that newspapers have too been subjected to similar pressures, and that they have yielded to those pressures? A key to this presumption was provided by Kenneth Hughes in the Daily Mirror on JUNE 20, 1977, the day of the broadcast. He had secured advance-access to material gathered by Benson and his team and his article was headlined: What on Earth is going on? He wrote:

A science program is likely to keep millions of Britons glued to their armchairs. Alternative 3 is an investigation into the disappearance of several scientists. They seem simply to have vanished from the face of the Earth. Chilling news is read by former ITV newscaster Tim Brinton who gives a gloomy report on the future.

The program will be screened in several other countries, but not America. Network bosses there want to assess its effect on British viewers.

The truth was, however, that network bosses in America, as well as in Russia, were permitted no discretion: Screening of Alternative 3 was forbidden. And in the UK, the backlash which followed the transmission resulted in a media-blackout. Andrew Shonfield, already introduced, was reluctant to become deeply involved. On JULY 9, Watkins visited Shonfield at the Royal Institute for International Affairs:

WATKINS: Alternative 3 has been called a hoax. What is your reaction?

SHONFIELD: It would be wrong, in the present political climate, for me to make any comment.

WATKINS: You suggested, on record, that cooperation between East and West could involve some “massive but covert operation in space.” Would you elaborate?

SHONFIELD: I emphasized that this could be the situation but I did not state categorically that it was. In fact, as I recall, I explained that I was not in the business of speculation.

SHONFIELD: You took part in that program as an expert commentator. How do you feel about its dismissal as a hoax?

SHONFIELD: The program was of a more sensational nature than I had anticipated. I was surprised by some of its discoveries.

WATKINS: Do you think there is validity in those discoveries?

SHONFIELD: I'm sorry. I'd prefer to say no more.

The interview was unsatisfactory. However, only a few weeks later, we received information which provided deeper insight into Alternative 3.

POLICY COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN: A-EIGHT

TRANSCRIPT FURNISHED BY "TROJAN"

THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1977

TRANSCRIPT:

A-TWO: But losing a whole batch consignment like that!

A-EIGHT: We had bum luck, that's all there is to it.

A-TWO: Three hundred bodies smashed to bits—a complete write-off and that's all you can say? "We had bum luck..." Look, I'm not a technical man and I tend to get lost with some of this technical talk, so will someone please explain just how a thing like this can happen, because, I tell you, I've got a gut-feeling there's been carelessness.

R-FIVE: You can't prevent the occasional mishap—it's unrealistic and in this case, perfectly random.

A-TWO: Yes, but—

R-FIVE: Meteorites are very common; roughly 19,000 weighing over 3.5 ounces enter the Martian atmosphere every day.

A-TWO: Don't our pilots take avoiding action?

A-EIGHT: There isn't a crack fighter-pilot alive able to dodge an incoming meteorite.

R-EIGHT: This discussion, in my humble opinion, is over. Our scientific people at Archimedes Base have assured us that this disaster—our first, I must emphasize—could not have been avoided, and that has been confirmed by the Committee in Residence.

Other matters...

The ITV broadcast was a success and as a disinformation piece, it exceeded all expectations. I think we have learned—and are learning—many invaluable lessons. This is a red-letter day for asymmetric psychological warfare.

A-FIVE: And it's the first campaign of its type that has been successfully sub-contracted, and no one's the wiser.

R-EIGHT: Well, it's cannon-fodder, as you say—a new myth. With a little luck, it will assume a life of its own, run on auto-pilot, adequately misdirect...

A-TWO: And Lovell?

A-EIGHT: He has demonstrated that people sooner embrace the safety of the lie than seek the danger that accompanies the truth—Brinton will take Lovell's revelations to the grave.

R-TWO: No sleep-job?

A-EIGHT: No sleep-job.

END TRANSCRIPT

SECTION TEN

JOSEPH Banks Rhine, founder of the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man (FRNM) and frequent lecturer, was interviewed on our behalf by Colin Weston in Brussels on SEPTEMBER 23, 1977. That interview, which Weston taped, provided insight into the meaning of the phrase “sleep-job.” In the early 1960s, he explained, significant advances were made in the study of parapsychology at the universities of Kharkov and Leningrad. The advances involved telepathy and, more specifically, the long-distance invasion and manipulation of minds. The potential military advantages were obvious: Enemies could be suborned remotely—virtual marionettes. “Experiments have demonstrated that children, like birds and beasts, are more receptive to telepathic messages than are adults,” said Dr. Rhine. “The fully-developed mind erects barriers; barriers that may be penetrated when one’s defenses are compromised, either by fatigue or emotional distress. The barriers that the mind would erect in the waking world are diminished during REM sleep. This is the window during which the mind may easily be invaded...and controlled."

Weston frowned, said incredulously, "Controlled, eh?"

"Instructions can be administered and if circumstances are propitious he will obey those instructions, even an order to self-destruct."

"Good God!" said Weston.

"It's a delicate business. There are many variables to which attention must be paid: biorhythms, overall impressionability, and psi-sensitivity—"

"The instinct for self-preservation would countermand any instructions calculated to result in suicide!" interrupted a disbelieving Weston.

"Did you read that somewhere? It isn't true. The mind, regardless of its perceived waking resolve, is highly malleable."

"And this is a common practice?"

"Common? I'm not saying that; I'm telling you what is possible." Maybe Dr. Rhine was right:

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1976: James Riggerford, 42, happily married with three children, walked from his beachside home south-west of Houston, Texas, sometime shortly after 3:00 AM, two days after resigning as the Operations Administrator with NASA. His body, found clad in pajamas, was later recovered from the Gulf of Mexico.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1976: Roger Marshall-Smith, a 31 year-old physicist who had recently returned from temporary attachment to NASA in America, was living with his parents in Winchester, Hampshire. They found him just after 1:00 AM, two hours after they had all gone to sleep, in flames at the bottom of the stairs. He had apparently, while still asleep, doused his clothing with turpentine and set fire to himself. The agony of burning had awakened him but by then, it was too late.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1977: James Arthur Carmichael, 35, aerospace technician, fell to his death at 4:35 AM from a sixteenth-floor hotel bedroom window in Washington. Friends said that he had seemed happy and in normal spirits the previous evening and had gone to bed alone at midnight. He, too, was wearing pajamas.

Were these men “sleep-jobs?” We don’t claim to know but we consider it a possibility.

Tim Brinton joined Benson in the room behind Studio B. “How were things with George?” he asked.

“Not good,” said Benson miserably. “He wants to junk Colin’s interview with McDermott. Quite frankly, Tim, it looks bad unless you can squeeze more out of Lovell.”

“More!” responded Brinton, clearly exasperated. “What more could you want!”

“Relax, Tim. It seems to hinge on Lovell,” Benson nodded. “Lovell has pertinent knowledge.”

“There’s a big difference between knowing and talking.” Brinton visualized the growing clefts in the magnetosphere. He began to sweat. “He wasn’t forthcoming, John. I don’t think we should press him.”

“Try him again,” urged Benson. “Tell him everything you know; what we’ve got from McDermott and Shonfield.”

Two days later, Brinton was back in Lovell's book-lined study at Jodrell Bank. Lovell and Brinton sat opposite one another, saying nothing. Lovell shattered the silence, which had grown icy: "We can make up any old thing, Tim. It doesn't have to be the truth. I'll talk about environmental collapse, the hole in the ozone layer, pesticides—anything. You aren't culpable. It will be our little secret." For once, Lovell was without his signature tweed jacket and his sleeves were already rolled up above the elbows, as if he was prepared for a brawl.

"This is awkward. I regret our last meeting—everything about it—"

"Here is my proposal, Tim. In a minute, you'll turn on your tape-recorder. I will start talking. 50% of what I will say will be relatively true. You'll get a scoop in which John Benson will have some faith. Sound good?"

Brinton rested the tape-recorder on his lap, pressed the "record" button.

THE LOVELL TRANSCRIPT, PART DEUX:

LOVELL: You know about Alternatives 1 and 2 and why they were rejected. Alternative 3 offered a more limited option—an attempt to ensure the survival of a small cross-section of the species...in theory. We were academics, after all, not technicians; we were under the impression that the technology that the theories demanded were beyond man's grasp. We were wrong.

BRINTON: Uh, right—um, so this third option was, uh, interplanetary?

LOVELL: Right, off-world: Mars, ultimately, with intermediate staging on the Moon.

BRINTON: What about candidacy?

LOVELL: For Alternative 3? It's not a lottery, if that's what you're asking.

BRINTON: Mars was always the primary destination?

LOVELL: Not at first: 100,000 million + stars in the Milky Way and as long ago as 1950 Fred Hoyle estimated that more than a million of those stars had planets amicable to life.

BRINTON: It was that vague?

LOVELL: In '57, at Huntsville, but the situation soon changed, and by "soon" I mean twelve months. Preparations were well underway by FEBRUARY of '58. Turn the tape off.

Brinton complied.

"You are under the impression that Earth is a unique water-rich blob of mud teeming with life, alone in an otherwise desolate and lifeless solar system. This notion has been marketed very aggressively and for obvious reasons. It isn't true. Our definition of "life" has been reevaluated. We have learned that sentience isn't something that develops exclusively in a greenhouse like Earth; the kind of sentience exhibited by creatures on Earth is but one variety. That we found a great deal of life on Mars shouldn't come as a surprise, and although it was spectacular news, our imperatives precluded disclosure."

"When you say "sentience," you mean other conscious life-forms, like you and me."

"No, not like you and me—not exactly, although at first..." Lovell paused, withdrew his pipe from his pants pocket, reached for a nearby bag of tobacco, continued: "Your people will portray Alternative 3 in a negative light and that is understandable. But I'm not sure any of us has the choices he or she thinks he has. I can only say—and I know our astronauts, if they were able, would confirm this—the rules on Earth do not apply in Space."

“I don’t understand—the pictures relayed from Viking revealed an endless expanse of red rock—terrain that seemed to offer little prospect for colonization—the telemetry, everything...”

“Uh, right,” started Lovell, “Viking was equipped with several instruments, one of which was developed by a sewage engineer named Gilbert Levin. It was designed to detect microbial life. It worked; microbial life was detected in abundance...but it wasn’t corroborated.

“I don’t understand.”

“The Viking missions were designed to fail, not unlike the Gemini missions. Viking’s carbon-detector was disabled in order to discredit Levin’s results; NASA knew that Levin’s device would detect life in abundance. They did with the Viking Missions what they will do with your Alternative 3 broadcast: seed a handful of truths and then discredit them; truths that once undermined, will have a hell of a time finding a credible audience. This is the method whereby which secrecy is maintained, and you, Mr. Brinton, are an unwitting agent. I know you’ll do the right thing.”

Brinton telephoned Benson from a payphone on Nantwich Street in Cheshire. He told him the Lovell interview was a success, and then walked to The Black Lion on Welsh Row. He ordered a whisky. And then another.

George H. Leonard, interviewed by Colin Weston, agreed that there was an obvious conflict between the description of Mars offered by Lovell and the pictures which had been released by NASA: “Many people have also wondered why NASA was so stingy with its photographic budget,” he said, “particularly when you consider how important the pictures are supposed to be.” Leonard pointed to a blow-up photograph of “familiar” Martian terrain which was mounted on a board in the studio. “That picture says it for me,” he said. “We’re told that they spent all that money putting that probe on Mars and then what do they do? They equip it with a camera which can focus only up to one hundred meters. And that, as somebody observed, is about the size of a large film studio; it doesn’t add up. If they really wanted high-resolution imagery of Mars, they would equip the craft with a vastly superior camera system—better cameras are available—make no mistake about that—but the one they used, well, it was as if they’d deliberately fitted it with blinders and a broken lens.”

“They determined that we should see only what they wanted us to see?”

“That could be. Everything we see is filtered through NASA—it is second-hand. So if they tell us it’s Mars, such a pronouncement must be accepted on faith. Audio is no different; we don’t hear everything that’s said between Mission Control and the spacecraft. There’s another channel—the biological channel.”

“We learned about that from Maurice Chatelain,” said Weston.

“Sure, Chatelain; he was well-acquainted with the Apollo Unified S-Band System.

SECTION ELEVEN

“It was my job to ensure that the extraterrestrial question was considered and promoted by the type of people that would, by association, undermine the question’s salience.”

—ANONYMOUS

WENDY had not gone back to Lambeth—not since Harry disappeared. He didn’t get out on his own, not while stoned; someone must have taken him. She knew she would never see him again. She had to get away, or they might kill her, too. She went to Birmingham; they would not find her there. Had she let Harry down? She remembered the small box which he had considered so important; he had hidden it beneath a floorboard at the Lambeth house. “It held the key,” he’d told her, “to something important; to a tape made by the dead man—Ballantine.” She ought to get that box to Weston at Anglia TV. She owed Harry that much.

On Thursday, JUNE 9, Wendy took a train to London and traveled by bus across the city and by 3:30 PM she was at number 33—the formerly derelict house. It had been renovated and through the ground-floor windows she could see a group of young people sitting in a circle with their eyes closed. Wendy hesitated. She was anxious and disappointed. She had expected the house to be empty. She had anticipated walking in, marching to the second-floor, peeling away the floorboard and of hurrying away with the box. Now it couldn’t be like that at all. She tapped with her knuckles on the door—tentatively, at first, and then harder. Footsteps approached and the door was opened by a tall and scrawny man with long hair and an unkempt beard. His feet were bare and he was wearing tattered blue jeans patched with bits of floral curtaining. His eyes—dark and deeply-set—were disconcerting. He was in his mid-thirties, maybe, or even nudging forty. “Good afternoon, sister,” he said. “Jesus loves you.” His voice was deep and his accent was East London.

“Who are you?” asked Wendy.

“Eliphaz,” he replied. “Eliphaz the Temanite.”

“I used to live here. I left something important behind.”

“The only thing that is important is Jesus. Has He entered your heart? He is waiting—waiting for you to invite Him in.”

“Could I pop in and collect it?”

The man stepped back, gestured for her to follow, “Here in the Temple, everyone is welcome,” he said. “Come on in. Jesus is here,” said the man encouragingly. “And you need Jesus.”

Wendy pointed to the youngsters who were still kneeling in their silent circle. "What are they doing in there?" she asked.

"We are the Children of Heavenly Love," said the man. "We were sinners and we lived in the bondage of the flesh but Jesus Christ, the greatest revolutionary of them all, has entered our hearts and saved us from sin." He closed his eyes, screwed up his face in apparent anguish. "Thank you, oh thank you, Lord Jesus," he said. He opened his eyes, smiled, and extended a hand in invitation.

"Eliphaz," said Wendy, "Is that your real name?"

"It became my name when I entered into the love of Christ," he said. "Before I found the Lord I was called Jack. Now I am saved and Jack has exited stage-left."

"That thing I mentioned," she said. "I left it upstairs, under the floorboards."

"You are more than welcome to come in," said the man. "Here in the Temple we do not wish to keep things which are the possessions of others." She followed him through the hall and up the stairs. The place had been cleaned and the walls had been painted. All three doors on the landing were open.

Wendy indicated the front room. "In there," she said.

The man stopped, put a hand on her arm. "I forgot to ask your name."

"Why?"

He smiled, "There is fear in you, sister. You should accept the Lord and let Him help you."

"Why is my name important?"

"So that I can introduce you to my brothers," he said. Wendy noticed two young men in the room. Both were about eighteen and dressed in the style of the man called Eliphaz. There was no furniture, not even the old sofa. The young men were seated on the bare boards, studying a shared Bible, whispering.

“My name is Wendy.”

Both youngsters immediately looked up and scrambled to their feet. “This is Wendy,” said Eliphaz. He took Wendy’s elbow, eased her into the room.

“This is Lazarus, one of our brothers from America,” he said. “And our friend over here used to be called Arthur, but now he’s filled with the Spirit and he’s become Canaan. Canaan the Rechabite.”

“Jesus loves you, Wendy,” said Lazarus politely. “Praise the Lord!” He spoke with the warm and homely drawl of the Deep South. On the knuckles of his right hand was tattooed the word “love.” A tattoo on his left said “hate.”

“Yes, Jesus loves you,” said Canaan.

“Thank you,” she said. It sounded ridiculously inadequate and there was an awkward silence. She indicated the section of the floor where the sofa had been and turned to Eliphaz the Temanite. “It should be there,” she said, “under the loose boards.”

He nodded. “You need help?”

“No, thank you. I can manage.” They watched as she attempted to pry up one of the boards.

“Wendy, do you know Jesus?” Lazarus put the question casually.

“Sure.” She was preoccupied with her work and she did not look up. “Sure I know Him.” The board was fixed more firmly than she’d expected.

“I mean really know Him,” said Lazarus, vehemence in his voice.

The board was now rising from the floor. Wendy wormed her fingers under it and started to tug.

"I tell you," continued Lazarus, "He was an unwashed hairy hippy from the slums of Galilee, but, you gotta believe me, that cat was for real."

Loud creaks as bits of wood bent and finally burst away from the retaining nails. Wendy peered down into the darkness: nothing. She must have picked the wrong board. "Yes, He's here with us today. He's right here in this room, and I tell you, He's a mind-blower."

Maybe it was nearer the window. Yes, the board had been just behind the sofa.

"He's the ultimate trip, Wendy, and you want to get with Him because there ain't much time left."

This board was looser. She jiggled it a little to get a better grip and lifted.

"It's all right here in the Bible, how the seven vials of the wrath of God will be poured over the nations."

There! She snatched the box, got to her feet. "Thank you," she said. "I'm sorry to have interrupted you." Eliphaz, she now realized, had placed himself squarely between her and the door. His face was coldly resolute and his arms were folded across his chest. "That box is yours and whatever is in it is yours, but I have to ask you one question," he said. "Does it contain drugs?" Suddenly he seemed bigger than before—bigger and more powerful. She had been a fool to return to this house. Lazarus and Canaan the Rechabite seemed to be closing in on her, one on either side; her stomach was churning with panic.

"I've got to go now." She was struggling to control her voice, "please let me go."

"It's all here in the Book of Revelation." Lazarus appeared to be unaware of what was happening in the room. He was preoccupied entirely with his convictions about the imminent End of Days. “Listen to this, the Bible gives facts and details: ‘...and the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire...’”

Eliphaz held out his hand. “Give me the box.”

“No!” she shouted. “It’s nothing like that!” He stood aside to let her pass.

“Please forgive me for being suspicious,” Eliphaz apologized. “We would have taken them if they had been drugs. We would have taken them and destroyed them. You have to realize that many of our brothers and sisters here were damaged by drugs in their days of fleshly bondage.”

“You’re letting me go?”

“Of course, but please come back to see us,” said Eliphaz. “All God’s children are welcome in the Temple.”

“Let Jesus into your heart, Wendy,” said Lazarus as she walked to the landing.

“Hallelujah!” added Canaan the Birmingham Rechabite.

Eliphaz escorted her to the front door. “Don’t forget, sister, that you do need Jesus,” he said. “God be with you.”

At a nearby phone box, she dialed the number for Anglia Television. “May I speak with Colin Weston?”

“One moment,” said the operator. “I’ll put you through.”

Arthur Garrett had prepared a background-information sheet about Mars for Benson so that some of the details could be fed into the program’s links. Here is a relevant excerpt:

One question which has not been satisfactorily resolved concerns the atmosphere of Mars. Does it have air which we could breathe? The answer, quite frankly, is that no one seems to know. I've spoken to a number of scientists who are confident that quantities of free oxygen did exist there at one time. It may well be that, as Lovell has suggested, life-supporting atmosphere has been locked in the surface-soil but I have been unable to find any other expert who is prepared to publicly endorse that suggestion. Obviously the question of Mars colonization depends on an Earth-like atmosphere. Lovell has been publically denounced by his peers; I wouldn't stick my neck out professionally on his say-so. In short, John, it's a fascinating theory but it doesn't add up...

Benson read the last few lines for the second time and snorted. "Well, Arthur love, it's my neck that'll be sticking out, not yours," he said. "Lovell's got me convinced and I'm prepared to gamble on him." But he didn't need to gamble, not as it turned out. For, at that moment, Wendy was waiting to talk to Colin Weston.

JUNE 13, 1977: Memo from Aubrey Buxton to Marquis Townshend, Chairman...

I have returned to the studios today after a week's sick leave and I am astonished to learn that it is your intention to permit the McDermott interview. We have already discussed the unethical circumstances under which the interview was conducted as well as McDermott's extravagant views. We agreed, I thought, that his statements could not possibly be substantiated and that, if dignified by inclusion in a program purporting to be serious, could do considerable harm. This particular Science Report program, as I have told you on numerous occasions, is an example of irresponsible sensationalism which will reflect adversely upon the company's image. Once again, I urge you to withdraw this program from the schedule.

JUNE 14, 1977: Memo from Marquis Townshend to Aubrey Buxton...

I can no longer agree with you over the remarkable brain drain investigation which has been mounted by Benson and his team. I grant that it is controversial and even frightening. It will also cause embarrassment in high places. However, I have assessed the evidence which is now in the program—the product, I might add, of diligent research and impressive dedication—and I feel it would be a professional failure were we to suppress what appears to be the unpalatable truth. Since we last spoke I have had the opportunity to study Brinton's interview with Dr. Lovell. Lovell is a man for whom I have the greatest respect and no one of his stature would lend his name to anything which, in your words, reeked of "irresponsible sensationalism." There have been times, as you know, when I have been perturbed by the unexpected directions in which this investigation has moved. I have rescinded my reservations and Benson has my unqualified support.

JUNE 15, 1977: Memo from Aubrey Buxton to Mr. John Woolf, Executive Producer...

You are already aware of my misgivings in relation to the Science Report program, scheduled for network transmission on JUNE 20, in which it is suggested that there is an international conspiracy to transport intellectuals and others to another planet. I have made my opinions known on many occasions and I commend your attention, in particular, to the minutes of the Senior Executives' Meeting held on APRIL 8. I warned then against what I recognized now as a policy of expensive folly.

I am taking the unusual step of enclosing herewith copies of all correspondence between the Chairman and myself on the subject for I feel that, in view of the damage this production could do to the reputation of the company, this is a matter in which you might see fit to intervene. I cannot urge too strongly that under no circumstances should this program be screened.

JUNE 15, 1977: Memo from John Woolf to Marquis Townshend...

See the attached note which reached me by hand today from Mr. Buxton. It is not my practice to become entangled in differences of opinion between my Chairman and any of his subordinates, particularly when I am approached in what I consider to be an underhanded manner, with no copy of the note having apparently been sent to you. Nor did I intend to intervene on this aspect of program-policy which I consider to be entirely your territory.

Townshend reread the memos. "Cheeky bastard!" he said. He dialed Buxton. "Buxton, be in my office in two minutes!"

Katie Glass took the call in the Science Report office. "No, Colin's popped out for a coffee. Who's this calling, please?"

"I must speak to him," said Wendy. "It's urgent."

"Can I take a message?" Wendy wanted to get rid of the box. Every wasted minute, she felt, put her in greater danger. "Could you find him? It is desperately important."

"I'll see if I can catch him in the canteen. Can I give him a name?"

"Tell him it's the girl who was with Harry," said Wendy. "Tell him I've got Harry's package."

“Hold on.”

“I’m in a pay-box and I’m out of change.”

“Give me the number of the box and hang up,” said Katie.

Wendy waited with her back to the door of the booth. She was unaware of the man until he jerked the door open.

“You plan on spending the day in here?”

“I won’t be more than a minute; I’m waiting for a call.”

He grabbed her arm, started to pull her. “Well, I’m waiting to make one, so come on out.”

“This won’t take long, really.”

“Lady, this is a public box and I’m not hanging around all day while—” The phone rang.

Wendy snatched the receiver, heard Weston’s voice. “Yes, it’s Wendy. I was the girl with Harry,” she said. “I must meet you. Harry had something he wanted to give you and now I’ve got it, but I’ve got to be careful.”

They met an hour later at the spot where Weston had first seen Harry Rosa—at the Boer War Memorial. “They might be looking for you?” asked Weston. “Who are they?”

Wendy shrugged, “Who knows?” She handed Weston the box. “That’s what Harry wanted you to have; he said it was related to the Ballantine tape. Does that make sense?”

“No,” said Weston. “Wait here. I’ll have a look inside the box.” He hurried to the Norwich Castle Visitor’s Center, locked himself in a bathroom cubicle and opened the box. It contained a square printed circuit. He rejoined Wendy.

“I have to go,” said Weston. “See what sort of tune we can get out of this.”

“You don’t need me anymore?”

“Where will you be?”

“Not sure. Not in the UK.”

Weston tapped the box. “Do you want to know how this ends up?”

“I’ll contact you,” she said. She hurried across the street, and like Rosa, disappeared down Castle Meadow.

A few hours later, in the darkness of the Anglia Television preview theater, Benson and Weston watched in amazement as pictures from the decoded Ballantine tape spilled across the screen. “I don’t believe it!” exclaimed Benson. “Good God, I simply don’t believe it!”
(APPENDIX G)

SECTION TWELVE

EVERY seat in the preview theater was filled. All members of the Science Report team had been summoned to see what Benson and Weston had been watching. Marquis Townshend was also there, sitting next to Benson, and so were many other executives. Benson's eyes were sparkling with excitement when the houselights came up. "Well, George?" he asked. "What do you think?"

Townshend frowned and nibbled at his bottom lip, baffled and reluctant to commit himself. "What can I think?" he countered. "If what we've seen is authentic—if it isn't an elaborate hoax—then the human race has been conned and we've got the most incredible television scoop ever. But it can't possibly be true!"

"But it fits, doesn't it?" persisted Benson. "It fits with everything else we've got..."

“Have you checked with Jodrell Bank—with people who worked with Ballantine?”

“Yes; we’ve spoken extensively with Lovell.”

“And put the thing to NASA. If we used it in the program and it turned out to be a fraud, there would be blow-back. I give you fair warning, John, I’m not prepared to carry the can.”

“But NASA is certain to deny it,” protested Benson.

“Let me know when you’ve spoken to them.” Townshend got up, left the theater.

The NASA official, who refused to give his name, took a very different attitude. “I’ve heard some freaky notions in my time but this one caps the lot. You better face it, son, someone’s pulling your leg.”

“Then you are stating categorically that the tape is fraudulent?”

“How could it be anything else? That must be the most stupid question I’ve heard this year.”

“The information on it is inaccurate?”

“Why don’t you do me a favor: quit while you’re ahead.”

“I’m taping this conversation. Will you go on record and state, categorically, that the information conveyed on the tape is fraudulent?”

“I’m sorry. I’ve wasted enough time on this; there’s absolutely nothing more to say.”

Weston was left with a dial-tone. “Blast!” said Weston. He was tempted to dial again. All the official spokesmen had been briefed, asked to stay mum—to laugh the idea off the stage. It was a charade. Weston felt, more strongly than ever, that the tape was genuine, but proving it—that was another matter. No sooner did he return the phone to its cradle than it rang; it was Lovell.

“Ballantine did meet a ‘Harry Rosa’ at NASA. I’ve wrestled his diary from Lady Ballantine. He made a couple of hurried scratches regarding the ‘Harry’ in question:

- Harry promised help but is frightened...
- Destroy tape...

“What are we to make of that?” asked Lovell.

“Was there anything else?”

“Nothing relevant,” replied Lovell.

“The tapes you use at Jodrell Bank—is there anything distinctive about them?”

“In what sense?”

“Could you, by studying this tape, establish if it belonged to Jodrell Bank?”

“No, but I might be able to ascertain that it didn’t belong to us.”

“And that would support the tape’s authenticity.”

“Sure it would, to a degree.”

“Would you be willing to come to Norwich?”

“I’ll leave immediately,” he said. “I’m anxious to see what is on the tape.”

Weston met Lovell at reception and took him to the preview theater where Benson was waiting. They sat in silence, watching and listening. “Incredible!” exclaimed Lovell.

“You think that originated at Jodrell Bank?” asked Benson.

“Let me examine the tape,” said Lovell. Benson led the way to the projection box and Lovell produced an eye-glass through which he minutely studied the tape. They waited while he inspected each frame. Then he closely scrutinized the header and leader sections.

“Well?” asked Benson. “What do you think?”

“There are no Jodrell Signatures,” said Lovell. “This is the genuine article.”

They hurried him to Townshend’s office where he repeated his belief and the reasons for it. “Give me just one minute,” said Townshend. “I’d like to have the Executive Producer in on this one.” He dialed Woolf’s internal number, explained the situation, and replaced the receiver. “He’s joining us,” he said.

Woolf listened while Lovell spoke. “Fascinating,” he said. “And this diary—may we see it?”

Lovell nodded. “It’s in my car.”

“Well, George,” said Woolf. “You’re Chairman.”

“Yes, but this is different,” protested Townshend. “I want your help. If we make a misstep there’s going to be a stink.”

“You want me to share the blame.”

“No—”

“George, are you keen on using the tape?”

“In light of Dr. Lovell’s testimony, I’m all for it.”

“Fine,” said Woolf. “I’m with you all the way.”

The Ballantine tape was the most astounding feature of the now notorious investigative report known as Alternative 3. It was authentic, but as Townshend had feared, it did inspire blow-back. Tim Brinton introduced it and all that could be seen at first was a haze of colors and uncertain shapes. There was a whirling blur of confusion—multi-colored dust dervishes glimpsed crazily through a tumbling kaleidoscope... Then the picture resolved and the camera skimmed low over a barren landscape. No vegetation, no suggestion of life—mile after mile of red desolation. One could hear static, then men cheering, and finally American voices from the Mission Control:

FIRST VOICE: Okay, try to scan.

SECOND VOICE: Scanning now.

FIRST VOICE: The readings... Where are the readings?

At that moment, superimposed over the image of the alien landscape, beneath a timestamp which read 13:59:59 UTC, viewers saw the computer-printed word “TEMPERATURE.” And, almost instantaneously, that word was duplicated in Russian: “ТЕМПЕРАТУРА.” Then there was an outburst of Russian voices—excited, jubilant. And then, once again, the second American voice came through with great clarity: “Wait for it. Wait for it. Come on, baby, don’t fail us now, not after all this way!” Computer data appeared alongside the words on the screen. The temperature, they showed, was four degrees Centigrade. More printed words: “WIND VELOCITY,” in English and then in Russian: “СКОРОСТЬ.” And the first American voice was shouting triumphantly: “It’s okay! It’s good, it’s good.” A Russian voice, equally ecstatic, carried the same message. Then the computer readout delivered the most vital information of all—in English and Russian—about the atmosphere of the “new territory.” The words and letters were appearing with agonizing slowness. There was silence, and then there arrived whoops of joy. The first American voice could be heard shouting over the din: “On the nose! Hallelujah! We got air, boys. We’re home! Jesus, we’ve done it. We got air! His yells of excitement, and similar ones from his Russian counterpart, were drowned by the crescendo of cheering, and during a lull in that cheering the second American voice could be heard saying: "That's it! We got it. We got it! Boy, if they ever take the wraps off this thing, it's going to be the biggest date in history: FRIDAY, MAY 13, 1960. We're on the planet Mars—and we have air!"

That was it—the end of the Ballantine tape. Millions of viewers wondered if they had misheard: Man on Mars in 1960! No, that was not possible. Tim Brinton, his face somber, assured them that it was more than possible. Here, from a transcript of the program, are his actual words:

We believe that to be an authentic record of the first—and secret—landing on Mars by an unmanned space probe from Earth. We also believe the date given—FRIDAY, MAY 13, 1960—to be accurate. Clearly, the blanket of security by which this information has been covered could have been maintained only through the active participation of governments at a very high level. Clearly, there must have been some powerful reason why the true conditions on Mars, suitable as they appear to be for human habitation, have been kept secret. Indeed, the effort which has gone into persuading the world-at-large that the opposite is true argues that some operation of supreme importance has been going on beneath this veil of security. We believe that operation to be Alternative 3. Whether a human survival colony has been established on Mars, or whether preparations are still in hand for its transportation from the Moon to Mars, we do not know. But we offer this program tonight as a challenge to those who do know the truth.

He paused after spelling out that challenge, one hand resting on a model of the Earth and one shaking hand on a model of Mars. Benson watched, proud. He knew that the company had taken a calculated risk with this program; that what had been revealed would be emphatically denied; that there could be ugly repercussions for Buxton and Townshend—and especially Brinton, the episode's personality. He was the anchorman, the man who—as far as the public was concerned—was at the center of the entire investigation. He was well-known and well-respected and that, from the official viewpoint, made him doubly vulnerable. It would be remarkable if attempts were not made to discredit him; to prove that, far from being a responsible commentator, he had been party to an ill-conceived hoax. At no time, however, had he considered opting out. He believed in the truth, he presented it professionally, and this particular truth was far too important to be suppressed. He concluded with these words:

We regret if the implications of what you have seen are less than optimistic for the future of life on this planet. It has been our task, however, merely to bring you the facts as we understand them, and to await the response.

The response started before he finished speaking: Switchboards at newspaper offices and regional television stations were flooded with calls from frightened people; from people desperate for reassurance. Those people got their reassurance: Buxton issued a denial. But that denial was a lie.

SECTION THIRTEEN

THERE is nothing new, of course, in the concept of men using the moon as a launch-pad for new life on Mars. H.G. Wells, who correctly anticipated many technical triumphs perceived as ludicrous by his peers, in his classic The First Men in the Moon, wrote the following:

“It isn’t as though we were confined to the Moon.”

“You mean?”

“There’s Mars—clear atmosphere, novel surroundings, exhilarating sense of lightness. It might be pleasant to go there.”

“Is there air on Mars?”

“Oh, yes!”

“Seems as though you might run it as a sanatorium...”

Wells, once again, has been proved right. A number of leading journalists, honoring Wells' prophecies, did not embrace the Buxton denial. They were puzzled by it, for it had the ring of inauthenticity. Alan Coren, in The Times of JUNE 21, throws doubts on the validity of the Buxton statement:

The seeming preposterousness of the story, on the other hand, was totally acceptable. The preposterousness of the times has seen to that. Why should the madness of the NASA program not be linked to the madness of Watergate, to create a NASA-gate in which life is discovered on Mars, but the information is suppressed for governmental ends?

James Murray of The Daily Express is another level-headed and highly-experienced writer who does not readily accept the obvious. And so on the front page of his own newspaper, he courageously stuck to his assessment of Brinton, Weston and the others:

They plausibly linked natural phenomena and real events in space to come to the inevitable conclusion that there was a monumental international conspiracy to save the best human minds by establishing a new colony on Mars—so all these scientists and intellectuals slipping abroad were really being shipped to Mars on rockets via the dark side of the moon.

Murray, in other words, recognized the truth even though he did not have the facts to substantiate that truth. Men like Coren and Murray worried Buxton. They perpetuated the doubts and suspicions he had tried to smother, and he was frightened that they might start digging deeper; that they might be able to present the full truth, which is the chief objective of the 33rd Anniversary Edition of Alternative 3. Other men, for other reasons, were disturbed by the realization that the Alternative 3 sensation was not swiftly buried. They were particularly unhappy about Philip Purser's Sunday Telegraph suggestion that the investigation might have been a “fiendish double-bluff inspired by the very agencies identified in the program,” which, we concede, is partly true.

Many Members of Parliament, not privy to the facts about Alternative 3, have since claimed that they suspected the truth. Nevertheless, they had the task of coping with much of the terror which spread so swiftly after the broadcast. Most people, as we have said, were eager to believe Buxton’s denial, but an appreciable minority intuited the full significance of what had been revealed. These were people, in the main, who had already been cognizant of the sort of people behind the 1968 Condon Report (Scientific Study of Unidentified Flying Objects). There were those who remembered what the Evening Standard had said about the $500,000 commission:

It is losing some of its outstanding members under circumstances which are mysterious. Rumors are circulating—at least four key people have vanished from the Condon team without offering a satisfactory reason for their departure. The complete story behind the strange events in Colorado is hard to decipher.

The validity of the suspicions in that Evening Standard article suddenly seemed to be confirmed by other statements later made public—quite apart from President Carter’s remarkable about-face on the subject of flying saucers. Andrew Shonfield: “At the very highest levels of East-West diplomacy there has been operating a factor of which we know nothing...” Would a man of Shonfield’s caliber make a statement of that nature? Apollo veteran Hank McDermott: “The later Apollo Missions were smoke-screens—to cover up what’s really going on out there, and the bastards didn’t tell us—not a damned thing!” Why, if there was nothing to hide, did he make such a statement?

APOLLO 17

HADLEY RILLE

26°7'55.99" N 3°38'1.90" E

JULY 30, 1971 22:16:29 UTC

SCOTT: Arrowhead really runs east to west.

MISSION CONTROL: Roger, we copy.

IRWIN: Right, we're (garble)... ...we know that's a fairly good run. We're bearing 320; hitting range for 413. I can't get over those lineation(s)—that layering on Mount Hadley.

SCOTT: I can't either. That's really spectacular.

IRWIN: They sure look beautiful.

SCOTT: Talk about organization!

IRWIN: That's the most organized structure I've ever seen!

SCOTT: It's (garble)... ...so uniform in width.

IRWIN: Nothing we've seen before has shown such uniform thickness from the top of the tracks to the bottom.

MPs WEIGH-IN...

Michael Harrington-Brice:

"I was put in an impossible position. For weeks after that program went out I was getting depositions at the House, demanding that the government author a formal denial. I supported that demand; it would have helped alleviate the anxieties of my constituents. However, it was not possible to pin down anyone in authority. I tried to put down questions about Alternative 3 but they were invariably blocked—and odder still, the House record of my inquiries has been struck. I tried to raise the matter privately with Ministers but was invariably told that Alternative 3 was a subject that they were not at liberty to discuss.

“I soon formed the impression that something unusual was happening behind the scenes; that we in Britain were on the periphery of some secret venture choreographed by an unseen hand. Nothing specific was said, you understand, but hints were dropped. It was hinted that I had overstepped my bounds.”

According to his secretary, MP Bruce Kinslade was also making inquiries into the facts presented in the Alternative 3 investigative report of JUNE 20. On WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, Mr. Kinslade was struck by a lorry near his home in Kensington. VERDICT: “Accidental death.”

JULY 26, 1977, The Times:

A frightening picture of the accelerating world population is given in the 1977 World Population Report, published this week by Population Concern. The report points out that half the fuel ever used by man has been consumed in the past 50 years. The world's population is now more than 4,000 million and increasing by 200,000 every day (07-01-2010: 6,830,586,985).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1977: Dr. Gerard K. O'Neill was interviewed by British Aerospace Correspondent Angus Macpherson. Macpherson, respected as one of the world's most authoritative science-fact specialists, wrote:

Flying to London today is another scientist who is perfectly serious about his prediction of what faces the human race as we approach the start of the 21st century, but American physicist Dr. Gerard O'Neill holds out the promise of a totally different future—a brave new world in space. The choice, as he sees it, is between George Orwell's 1984 and Arthur Clarke's 2001. "Tell humanity there's no hope and everyone applauds you. But tell them there is a way out and they get furious," say Dr. O'Neill, who has worked for seven years on a mind-stretching scheme for the emigration of most of us into artificial colonies in outer space. He has been brusquely dismissed as a peddler of nonsense by Jacques Cousteau, whom he admires, and there was hurt as well as humor on the lean face under its trendy Roman fringe as he told me: "Jacques is terribly worried about the pollution of the ocean and the destruction of its life. He thinks we ought to be doing more about it; so do I. Environmentalists are really very negative; they're so obsessed with Earth's problems they don't want to hear about answers." O'Neill's own answers are that we not only can colonize the solar system, but must, if human life a few generations from now is to remain civilized.

O'Neill is coming to London to present his prediction of space colonization to the British Interplanetary Society. The BIS is a legendary forum for glimpses into the future. Its members have seen a Moon-landing ship unveiled, looking eerily like the Apollo LEM, but some thirty years before it. And they were the first to hear Arthur Clarke outline a visionary scheme for a global chain of communication satellites. This could be a similar bit of history-making. For most of the generation that gaped at the first Moon landings it has become a madly expensive confidence trick—a game of golf on a useless rock pile that only two could play and that cost 500 pounds a second. All this is desperately myopic, declares O'Neill, for the denizens of a planet whose 4 billion inhabitants face the prospect of being two to three times as crowded by the early years of the next century.

“In fact, we found in space precisely the things we are most in need of—unlimited solar energy, rocks containing high concentrations of metals and, above all, room for man to continue his growth and expansion. A static society, which is what Earth would have to become, would need to regulate not only the bodies but the minds of its people. I refuse to believe that man has come to the end of change and experiment and I want to preserve his freedom to live in different ways. I see no hope of saving it if we remain imprisoned on the Earth.”

Macpherson pointed out that O'Neill is “consulted respectfully—if a shade warily—by Government Officials, Senate Committees and State Governors.” The article indicated that O'Neill was not aware—and possibly is still not aware—that the future envisioned by Alternative 3 had already arrived. Macpherson wrote:

His colonies are planned as vast cylindrical metal islands drifting in orbit, holding inside a natural atmosphere, trees, grass, rivers and animals—a capsule of a warm Earthlike environment. He sees them reaching half the size of Switzerland and housing 20 to 30 million people, sustained by the inexhaustible energy of space sunshine. Yet their construction, he insists, would require only off-the-shelf materials.

The article finished with these thoughts:

For most people of the pre-space generation, the moment when the magic finally went out of the adventure came a year ago when the dream of life on Mars was dispelled by the Viking spacecraft, but for O'Neill, that was another plus for space: “The best thing we could have found was nobody there. The colonization of the new frontier can take place without repeating the shaming history of the Indian nation—or even the bison. Perhaps nobody’s there, anywhere, after all. Perhaps there isn’t a Daddy to show us how to do things. It’s a bit frightening, but it gives us a lot of scope.”

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION

HOWARD STANLEY SEIFERT

1911 – 1977

HOWARD Stanley Seifert, Emeritus Professor of Aeronautics and Astronautics, died of cancer on AUGUST 24, 1977, at his home on the campus. He was 66 years old and had served on the Stanford faculty for a period of 16 years before retiring in 1976. Professor Seifert was internationally known as a leader in the relatively new field of rocket propulsion, and his special contribution at Stanford was to develop a strong curriculum in this field, along with special research programs in related areas of space studies and astronautics.

Professor Seifert was born in Reynoldsville, Pennsylvania, and pursued studies leading to Bachelor's and Master's degrees in the physics department at Carnegie Institute of Technology. He transferred to the California Institute of Technology to complete his Ph.D. in physics. His early postdoctoral experience included a position as Associate Professor of Physics at Kalamazoo College in Michigan for a period of two years, from which he went to the Westinghouse Corporation as a research physicist for another two years. During that period of time his major research interests included infrared and x-ray spectroscopy and development problems of gaseous discharge tubes. To supplement a relatively low salary at Westinghouse, he periodically brought forth patent disclosures each of which rewarded him with an extra $25—an indication of his creative mind.

In 1942, Professor Seifert joined the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology and entered the field of rocket propulsion that was to become his specialty. During his 12 years at JPL, he rose to Chief of the Applied Physics Division and made important contributions to the basic science and technology of liquid-rocket propulsion. During World War II Seifert was a member of a small group working with Professor Theodore von Karman, that was chiefly responsible for the early advances in the field of rocketry in this country. This group provided the technical expertise for the earliest application of jet propulsion to American aircraft systems, namely the use of JATO (Jet Assisted Take Off) for launching aircraft. In 1954 Seifert left JPL to join the Ramo-Wooldridge Corporation (now Space Technology Laboratories) and spent five years there working on advanced propulsion and space systems. He came to Stanford in 1960 to accept a position as Professor in the Department of Aeronautics and Astronautics, alone, with a management consulting position at the then newly-formed Sunnyvale Research Laboratory of the United Technology Center. His active and imaginative service as the mainspring of the department's teaching and research program in propulsion and related space science is a matter of record. In particular, he introduced into the Stanford curriculum the concepts of advanced propulsion, including electric propulsion in its several forms. He always enjoyed working with students, and they invariably appreciated his interest in their progress and in themselves as individuals and as friends.

Professor Seifert published over 40 papers on rocket propulsion, heat transfer, and applied physics. He edited the important reference work Space Technology (Wiley); and was a consulting editor for the McGraw-Hill series in Missile and Space Technology. In 1965 he was elected to the International Academy of Astronautics and he served also as President of the American Rocket Society and Vice-President of the International Astronautics Federation. He received the Rocket Society's Pendray Award for his contributions to the astronautical literature, and in 1976 received the Wyld Propulsion Award from the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics "for your leadership in the field of rocket propulsion over the past three decades, and your extensive contributions to the technical literature in propulsion and space systems." Seifert was also a Fellow of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics.

Professor Seifert's more recent interests included the fields of robotics and energy. He served as principal investigator on a program called "Lunar Pogo Transporter Project," a highly original proposal for energy-efficient transport on the lunar surface by hopping instead of rolling. He was also an organizer of the first national conference on remotely manned systems held in 1972, as well as an editor of a survey film on "Remotely Operated Teleoperator Robot Systems." His interests in solar energy led to his course entitled Conversion of the Sun's Radiation for Man's Use. More recently he had been a consultant to the government of Saudi Arabia on the development of a solar and wind energy research laboratory. Communicating scientific information to the non-specialist was always a special interest of Howard's. While still at Westinghouse he and his wife Mary wrote radio scripts for a program called "Adventures in Research." They also collaborated on over 80 articles on popular science for young people. More recently they coauthored a widely distributed book called Orbital Space Flight (Holt Library of Science), dealing with the physics of satellite motion. Mary and Howard were a working team, and their relationship prospered because of it.

Music played an important role in Howard Seifert's life. He was an accomplished cellist and played regularly with local friends in string quartets and other chamber music groups. Among them was a group which included Professors Daniel Bershader and Milton Van Dyke, and which served as the resident chamber-music group of the Department of Aeronautics and Astronautics. He combined his musical interests with an interest in the life of the Lutheran Community on the Stanford campus by his special efforts in helping to acquire and install an organ for the University Lutheran Church.

Howard and Mary had two daughters and one son, all of whom are married and pursuing their own busy lives. Howard himself was active in both curricular and extracurricular pursuits until his final illness. We shall miss him as a stimulating colleague, fellow music lover, and as a human being who helped enrich our lives.

—Daniel Bershader, I-Dee Chang & Walter Vincenti

THE SPHINX AND THE SPY

THE CLANDESTINE WORLD OF JOHN MULHOLLAND

BY

MICHAEL EDWARDS

COPYRIGHT © 2001 GENII CORPORATION

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

REPRODUCED WITHOUT PERMISSION

A T mid-century The Sphinx stood as America's oldest and most prestigious magic magazine. Over its five-decade history, it had become part of the lifeblood of the conjuring world. Then, on June 29, 1953, John Mulholland wrote a letter to journal's subscribers. "This is to inform you that as of June 1, 1953, the publication of The Sphinx has been suspended. The immediate cause is that my health does not permit me to do the necessary work. My Doctor orders me to confine my efforts at this time to the shows by which I earn my living." [1]

It was true that Mulholland's health was not good. An inveterate smoker, he suffered from ulcers, stomach disorders and arthritis. Editing The Sphinx for twenty-three years had taken a physical and financial toll. But rather than limiting his activities to his live performances, Mulholland had actually embarked on a new endeavor...an endeavor far more secretive than anything in the realm of conjuring. He had entered a world of covert operations, espionage, mind control, drugs, and even death. John Mulholland had gone to work for the CIA.

At the time, John Mulholland was one of America's most highly regarded magicians. An outstanding stage as well as close-up performer, he had become a noted author, lecturer, historian, collector, editor, and world traveler. In many ways, he had helped make magic intellectually respectable.

Mulholland was born in Chicago, Illinois, on June 9, 1898. As a five-year old, he sat enthralled by a performance of Harry Kellar's. It would begin a lifelong love of conjuring. His family moved to New York when he was quite young and it was there that he began to learn the techniques of the craft. At age 13 Mulholland began taking magic lessons from John William Sargent at $5 an hour. Known as "The Merry Wizard," the gray-haired, goateed Sargent had been President of the Society of American Magicians in 1905-6 and would later serve as Harry Houdini's secretary from 1918 until 1920. He was a true mentor to young Mulholland and instilled in him not only an appreciation of the art of magic but of its theory, history, and literature.

Mulholland learned his lessons well. He made his debut as a performer when he was 15. While he would be later regarded as one of magic's great scholars, his academic achievements were somewhat limited. He took a number of courses at both Columbia University and at New York's City College, but did not attain a degree. From 1918 to 1924, he taught industrial arts at the Horace Mann School in New York. He sold books for a while and then taught at Columbia University before embarking on a career as a full time professional magician.

Over the years, Mulholland developed an enormous range of presentations. He was equally at home performing close-up magic, entertaining a society dinner, or working the mammoth stage at Radio City Music Hall. In 1927 Mulholland gave a lecture in Boston about the magicians of the world, illustrating each vignette with a trick from that nation. It added a new genre for him and for the profession: the magician as lecturer.

After the death of Dr. A. M. Wilson in April of 1930, he took over editorship of The Sphinx. For the next 23 years he would oversee magic's most influential periodical. He was a prolific writer. Aside from the vast number of articles he penned, he authored such books as Magic in the Making (with Milton M. Smith in 1925), Quicker than the Eye (1932), The Magic and Magicians of the World (1932), The Story of Magic (1935), Beware Familiar Spirits (1938), The Art of Illusion, (1944) reprinted as Magic for Entertaining, The Early Magic Shows (1945), John Mulholland's Book of Magic (1963), Magic of the World (1965) and The Magical Mind -- Key to Successful Communication (with George Gordon in 1967). He had also co-wrote a 1939 magic-detective novel, The Girl in the Cage, with Cortland Fitzsimmons.

Over the years, he amassed one of the world's finest collections of magic books and memorabilia. His library housed some 4,000 volumes related to conjuring.

His knowledge of tricks seemed inexhaustible, as was his familiarity with the performance, theory, psychology, history, and literature of magic. He served as the consultant on conjuring to the Encyclopedia Britannica and the Merriam-Webster dictionary and at one time was the only magician listed in Who's Who in America.

As America entered the 1950's, the world around John Mulholland was changing. The Cold War was at its height. US foreign policy had gone from trust to terror. In June of 1950, over one hundred thousand soldiers from Communist North Korea crossed the thirty-eighth parallel, invading the republic to the South. The previous year, Soviet Union had detonated its first atomic bomb. The stakes had become enormous. The consequences of military confrontation could well be global thermonuclear war.

American policy-makers decided that other means – covert means — would have to be instituted to stop the expansion of communism. As a secret study commission under former President Hoover put it:

“It is now clear we are facing an implacable enemy whose avowed objective is world domination by whatever means and at whatever cost. There are no rules in such a game. Hitherto acceptable longstanding concepts of ‘fair play’ must be reconsidered. We must develop effective espionage and counterespionage services and must learn to subvert, sabotage, and destroy our enemies by more clever, sophisticated, and effective methods than those used against us.”

The vehicle for this effort was the Central Intelligence Agency.

Within the Agency, there was a concern – almost a panic – that the Russians had developed a frightening new weapon: a drug or technology for controlling men's minds. A new term had entered the lexicon: “brainwashing.” At show trials in Eastern Europe, dazed defendants had admitted to crimes they hadn't committed. American prisoners of war, paraded before the press by their North Korean captors, “confessed” in Zombie-like fashion that the US was using chemical and biological warfare against them. When George Kennan, the US Ambassador to the Soviet Union, made some inexplicably undiplomatic remarks at a press conference and was declared persona non grata by the Kremlin, American intelligence officials wondered if he had been hypnotized or drugged.

The CIA leadership feared a “mind control gap.”

THE SEARCH FOR A MANCHURIAN CANDIDATE

In early April of 1953, Director of Central Intelligence Allen Dulles outlined to a Princeton audience the urgency of the situation. Describing “how sinister the battle for men’s minds has become in Soviet hands,” Dulles revealed that the Russians had developed “brain perversion techniques” which must be countered at any price.

The CIA had already begun crafting this counter. On April 3, 1953 Richard Helms, the Agency’s Acting Deputy Director, had proposed an “ULTRA-sensitive” program of research and development in clandestine chemical and biological warfare.

The goal, Helms wrote, was “to develop a capability in the covert use of biological and chemical materials. This area includes the production of various physiological conditions which could support present or future clandestine operations. Aside from the offensive potential, the development of a comprehensive capability in this field of covert chemical and biological warfare gives us a thorough knowledge of the enemies theoretical potential, thus enabling us to defend ourselves against a foe who might not be as restrained in the use of these techniques as we are. For example: we intend to investigate the development of a chemical material which causes a reversible non-toxic aberrant mental state, the specific nature of which can be reasonably well predicted for each individual. This material could potentially aid in discrediting individuals, eliciting information, implanting suggestion and other forms of mental control.” [2]

The “offensive potential” was unstated, but the aim was clear: to create what later would be known as a “Manchurian Candidate.” The term would come from the title of Richard Condon’s 1959 best seller about a plot to take an American soldier captured in Korea, condition him at a special brainwashing center in Manchuria, and create a remote-controlled assassin programmed to kill the President of the United States. Condon’s book was fiction; the Helm’s plan was not.

In fact, the CIA had already begun exploring the use of chemicals to influence thought and action as well as to incapacitate and even kill. Of particular interest to the Agency was the potential the hallucinogen LSD had in this arena.

Discovered by Dr. Albert Hoffman on April 16, 1943, d-lysergic acid diethylamide -- or LSD as it would become known -- seemed to be a drug custom-made for the intelligence community. Its intense potency in even miniscule amounts would make it easy to administer covertly. The sense of euphoria and hallucinations that accompanied it might well lead those under interrogation to drop their guard and inhibitions, enabling a free flow of information. Some believed the chemical might even be used to alter the state of a persons being -- to convert an enemy agent, to dishearten idealistic adversaries, to reprogram a person's memory or thoughts, to get an individual to do something he or she otherwise would never do.

The proposed CIA work on drugs and mind manipulation was to remain one of the Agency’s deepest secrets. “Even internally in the CIA, as few individuals as possible should be aware of our interest in these fields and of the identity of those who are working for us.” [3]

On April 13, 1953 Allen Dulles approved the project. The program was to be known as “Project MKULTRA. [4] The “ULTRA” hearkened back to the most closely guarded American-British secret of the Second World War: the breaking of Germany’s military codes. The “M-K” identified the initiative as a CIA Technical Services Staff (TSS) project. This was the division within the Agency responsible for such things as weapons, forgeries, disguises, surveillance equipment and the kindred tools of the espionage trade. Within the TSS, MKULTRA was assigned to the Chemical Division (TSS/CD), a component with functions few others – even within the Technical Services Staff – knew about. This unit was headed by Sidney Gottlieb, then a 34-year old Bronx native with a Ph.D. in chemistry from the California Institute of Technology. A brilliant biochemist, Gottlieb was a remarkable, albeit eccentric, man. A socialist in his youth and a Buddhist as an adult, he was on a constant search for meaning in his life. He found some of it in an unrelenting passion for his clandestine labors. He did not appear to be the least bit troubled by the moral ambiguities of intelligence work. He would do virtually anything if he believed it to be in the American interest. Overcoming a pronounced stutter and a clubfoot to rise through the ranks of the CIA, he would later describe himself as the Agency’s “Dr. Strangelove.” Others were less kind. Alexander Cockburn and Jeffrey St. Clair termed him America’s “official poisoner.” [5]

The very same day that Allen Dulles approved Project MKULTRA, Sidney Gottlieb went to see John Mulholland.

Gottlieb knew how to mix the potions. The question was how to deliver them secretly.

Mulholland agreed to help.

A MAGICIAN AMONG THE SPIES

Gottlieb wanted Mulholland to teach intelligence operatives how to use the tools of the magician's trade – sleight of hand and misdirection – to covertly administer drugs, chemicals and biological agents to unsuspecting victims.

Why Mulholland decided to do this is a matter of some conjecture. The world was a far different and more dangerous place in the early months of 1953 than it is today. The war raged in Korea. The bloody battles of Pork Chop Hill, Eerie and Old Baldy were headline news. Some 50,000 American servicemen had already lost their lives in the conflict and more than 7,000 were prisoners of war. Stalin's death in March raised tremendous concern about stability in the Kremlin. In the United States, Senator Joseph McCarthy's anti-Communist crusade was raging. The prevailing mood was one fear, perhaps even paranoia.

"John did not have a political agenda," says George Gordon, a close friend with whom Mulholland would later write The Magical Mind. "He said 'yes' because his government asked him to."

Mulholland had an enormous sense of public duty. He took great pride in his contributions, however small. That a special edition of his book The Art of Illusion had been printed in a format so that its 160 page text could fit into the shirtpockets of World War II servicemen gave him great satisfaction.

He was very aware of the role other magicians had played in aiding their countries in times of trouble. He had written and lectured about Robert-Houdin's 1856 mission on behalf of Napoleon III to help quell the Mirabout-led uprising in Algeria. And he was very familiar with the camouflage work Jasper Maskelyne had done for the British government during the Second World War.

Furthermore, the leaders of America's intelligence community were the kind of men Mulholland could easily like and admire. General William "Wild Bill" Donovan, the founder of the Office of Strategic Services, America's World war II spy agency liked to hire Wall Street lawyers and Ivy League academics to commit espionage. He filled the secret service with confident, intelligent, often daring young men from leading eastern colleges. By the time the CIA was established in 1947, these were the people who ran America's covert operations. Within the inner circles of American government, they were regarded as the best and the brightest. They planned and acted to keep the country out of war by their stealth and cunning – two qualities Mulholland long admired.

They were also America's elite. Steward Alsop noted they were called "the Ivy Leaguers, the Socialites, the Establishmentarians." He himself coined an alternative epithet: "the Bold Easterners." The CIA, he said, was "positively riddled with Old Grotonians." [6]

The men heading the CIA effort that Mulholland had been asked to join certainly fit this picture. The Princeton-educated Allen Dulles had been associated with the prestigious Wall Street law firm of Sullivan and Cromwell. His grandfather John W. Foster had been Secretary of State as had been his uncle-by-marriage Robert Lansing. A secret agent in both world wars, Dulles looked like an avuncular professor with his white brush moustache, his tweed suits, and his ever-present pipe. But behind the jovial exterior was a hard and determined leader. His brother John Foster Dulles became Secretary of State on January 31, 1953. Allen took up the CIA post twenty-six days later.

His deputy, Richard Helms, had a different personality but similar roots. His education had included a year at an exclusive Swiss boarding school and another year in Germany. A Williams graduate, he tried his hand at journalism before joining the OSS. He served with Dulles in Germany and stayed within the intelligence community after the war. This prudent, professional spy – the chief of operations of the clandestine services -- could be seen playing tennis at the Chevy Chase Club on Sunday mornings clad in long white flannel trousers.

It may not be surprising that John Mulholland, who spent much of his career among in New York's fashionable society, would find such men fascinating. As Jean Hugard wrote to Orville Meyer, "I believe in reality Mulholland has an inferiority complex; he doesn't mix with us poor mortals." [7]

If "The Very Best Men" who made up the CIA were to the magician's liking, the converse was also true. John Mulholland was precisely kind of person the Agency wanted and needed. Here was a man with a remarkable knowledge of the art of deception – its tools, its techniques, its psychology. And he knew how to keep a secret. Not only had Mulholland made a living from the execution of these skills, he had gained a reputation as conjuring's most accomplished teacher. By look and demeanor, the magician fit the Agency mold. While his roots were not really Eastern establishment, the tall, slender Mulholland with his prominent nose and thatch of gray hair certainly looked the part. He had entrée to a wide circle of business, governmental, social, academic, and entertainment leaders. A world traveler, he was equally at home on the New York City subway system or entertaining the Sultan of Sulu or the King of Romania.

How and when Mulholland came in first contact with the CIA remains unknown. Evidence suggests that it was in 1952, perhaps earlier. By March of 1953, he was certainly consulting for the Agency and being paid for these "professional services." Inasmuch as he was billing the government on a biweekly basis, it seems apparent that this was ongoing work with at least some of it related to development of Project MKULTRA. [8]

During their April 13 conversation, Sidney Gottlieb asked Mulholland to put together a proposal for an operations manual applying the magician's art to clandestine activities. Mulholland summed up his suggestions as to what this covert guide would have to contain in a letter that he sent to Gottlieb the following week.

"I have given the subjects we discussed considerable thought," Mulholland wrote. "Below is outlined what I believe is necessary adequately to cover instructions for the workers.

"1.) Supplying...background facts in order that a complete novice in the subject can appreciate the underlying reasons for the procedures suggested. Part of this background would clarify the erroneous opinions commonly held by those who are familiar with (magician's techniques). In this section would be given alternative procedures, or modifications, needed by different types of operators (differences in fact or assumed), as well as changes in procedure needed as situations and circumstances vary. The material is necessary in order for the operator to be able to learn how to do those things which are required...

"2.) Detailed descriptions of covert techniques in all those operations outlined to me and variations of techniques according to whether material is in a solid, liquid or gaseous form. Included would be explanations of (the skills) required and how quickly to master such skills. It is understood that no manipulation will be suggested which requires (actions) not normally used, nor any necessitating long practice. To state this positively: all (covert techniques) described would be adaptations of acts usually performed for other purposes. Descriptions also would be given of simple mechanical aids, how to make them, and how to carry them about. Where needed, application of the data given in section 1 would be supplied. The time consuming part of writing this section will be in developing the adaptations and modifications of the best existing (methods) to fit new requirements.

“3.) A variety of examples to show in detail how to make use of the (techniques) previously described. These examples would be given with varying situations and the ways to accommodate procedure to meet variations.

“If desired, I am prepared to start work on this project immediately. I believe I can complete the proposed writing in eighteen to twenty weeks. I understand, if I am given this assignment, that you, or your representative, would be willing to check my work at a conference approximately every two weeks.”

Mulholland estimated that the cost for him to do write the manual would be $3,000. [9]

THE SECRET BOOK OF SECRETS

Gottlieb was very enthusiastic about Mulholland's approach and wanted to move ahead quickly. On May 4, he drafted a Memorandum for the Record spelling out what Mulholland was to do:

1.) The scope of this subproject is the collection, in the form of a concise manual, of as much pertinent information as possible in the fields of (magic as it relates to covert activities). The information collected will be pertinent to the problem of (surreptitiously administering) liquid, solid, or gaseous substances to (unknowing) subjects.

2.) The information will be collected principally from the previous studies made by Mr. Mulholland in connection with various problems he has considered. Mr.

Mulholland seems well qualified to execute this study. He has been a successful (performer) of all forms of prestidigitation. He has made a careful and exhaustive study of the history of prestidigitation and is the possessor of an extensive library of old volumes in this field. He has further seriously studied the psychology of deception and has instructed graduate students...

3.) The period of time covered by this request covers six months from the date of commencement of work by Mr. Mulholland and the costs will not exceed $3,000."

Mulholland's proposal was approved that same day and $3,000 was set aside to cover its cost. It would become Project MKULTRA, Subproject 4. [10]

MKULTRA—and its component parts—had already become one of the Agency's most secret operations. Mulholland's work, along with that of others working on the project, was considered "ULTRA sensitive." Consequently, there would be no formal documents that would associate CIA or the Government with the work in question. Instead, the Technical Services Staff was to reach "an understanding with the individuals who will perform the work as to the conditions under which the work will be performed and reimbursement arranged. No standard contract will be signed." [11]

On May 5, Gottlieb, in accordance with this procedure, wrote the magician that "The project outlined in your letter of April 20 has been approved by us, and you are hereby authorized to spend up to $3,000 in the next six months in the execution of this work." No contract or formal agreement was enclosed or ever signed per CIA policy. However, the letter did include a check for $150 to cover Mulholland's latest work for the agency (March 18th – April 13th). In terms of when Gottlieb and Mulholland could next meet, the chemist noted "A very crowded schedule of travel makes it necessary for us to delay until June 8th our next visit with you. An effective alternative to this would be for you to come on May, 13, 14, or 15 to discuss the current status of the work. Is this possible?" [12]

Mulholland wrote Gottlieb back on May 11. "Thank you for the notification that my project has been approved. I understand the stipulations. I am resuming work today." Enclosed was a signed receipt for the check and a notation that Gottlieb's missive had taken longer than expected to reach him. "Due to the fact that your letter was addressed to (a former address), it was delayed in reaching me. That was an apartment from which I moved...years ago. The fact that the letter did reach me shows the cordial relationship I have with my local Post Office. My present address is above." [13] He made no comment on how such an error could occur on such a confidential issue.

Mulholland was keenly aware of the project's sensitivity. Among the stipulations was a commitment to total secrecy. Even the manuscript itself would have to be written in a manner that protected the Agency should it fall into the wrong hands. There would be no references to "agents" or "operatives." Instead, covert workers would be called "performers;" covert actions would simply be labeled "tricks."

Mulholland immediately set about the task of researching and writing the manual. While he continued his performance schedule, he cleared his calendar of other commitments. He stopped giving magic lessons, put off work on other writing assignments, and suspended publication of The Sphinx.

Ending The Sphinx was a major step for Mulholland and for the magi community. Begun in Chicago in March of 1902 and subsequently housed in Kansas City and finally New York, this staid yet controversial periodical had become the most influential of magic journals. Mulholland had taken over the publication with Volume 29 Number 3 in May of 1930. [14] It was a source of great joy for him. It was also a tremendous burden. “For 23 years, I have edited The Sphinx as a labor of love and without financial reward. Each of these years I have spent a great amount of time, and considerable money, to produce a magazine of service to the professional magician and to the serious student of magic. The magazine has been a professional publication and never has catered to those who look on magic as a sort of game. I realized I could not go on forever and for the past several years I have been searching for some individual, or group, qualified to take over the editing and publication of The Sphinx and maintain its standards. I found no such person, or persons, and until such is, or are, found the publication of the magazine will be suspended.

“I wish to express my appreciation to the many loyal readers, and above all to the contributors who made my editorship such a rewarding endeavor. It has been a source of deep personal gratification to know how well The Sphinx has been received during the years.” [15] The final issue, the 597th, was Volume 52, #1, dated March 1953.

For the next several months, he worked continuously on the MKULTRA project. [16] He soon found, however, that if it were to meet the CIA’s expectations, his manual would have to be far more than a hypothetical extension of existing magic tricks, principles and methods to covert activities. He was going to have to create real world solutions to real world problems. He and Gottlieb discussed the challenge.

On August 3, Gottlieb set up a new subproject (Subproject 15) in order “to expand the original provisions of subproject 4 to include an allowance for travel for Mr. Mulholland and for operational supplies used in the course of this project.” Mulholland and the Agency, Gottlieb wrote, needed to meet more frequently in order to consult on the details of the manual and the travel allowance would facilitate Mulholland's coming to Washington for some of these discussions. Furthermore, he noted, "Certain portions of subproject 4 require experimental verification by Mr. Mulholland. The item for operational supplies is intended to provide for the purchase of supplies used to test or verify ideas. The cost estimate for subproject 15 is $700.00 for a period of six months." [17]

Even with these additional resources, Mulholland found the project a greater challenge than he expected. Getting it right was imperative. The consequences of a magic trick going wrong might be embarrassment or a decline in bookings; a covert operation going bad could cost an agent his or her life. He met with Gottlieb in late summer to discuss the matter. Gottlieb agreed to consider extending the time to meet this need.

On September 18, Gottlieb filed an amendment to the MKULTRA Project Records that noted "The time period for the original proposal by Mr. Mulholland was six months, which would expire about 11 October 1953. The unusual nature of this manual demands that it be a creative project... rather than a mere compilation of already existing knowledge. For this reason the time estimates are difficult to make in advance and it is apparent at this time that the estimate was too short for the adequate preparation of this manual. It is in the best interests of the Agency to extend this time limit and obtain the best possible manual rather than hold Mr. Mulholland to the six-month period. It is requested that the original six month time period be extended an additional six months. There is no change in the original cost estimate or the original agenda." [18]

That same day, Gottlieb wrote to Mulholland: "This is at least a partial answer to the questions you asked the last time I saw you. According to my records, your initial estimate was six months, which would expire about October 11; I am initiating a six month extension of the original estimate, which should more than take care of the time factor. The original cost was $3,000.00, of which $1,500.00 is remaining as of now. [19]

Mulholland devoted his energies to the project and by November his first draft was complete. But neither the magician nor the Agency were completely satisfied with the product. As Mulholland wrote Gottlieb on November 11:

“The manual as it consists of the following five sections:

“1. Underlying bases for the successful performance of tricks and the background of the psychological principles by which they operate.

“2.) Tricks with pills...

“3.) Tricks with loose solids...

“4.) Tricks with liquids...

“5.) Tricks by which small objects may be obtained secretly. This section was not considered in my original outline and was suggested subsequently to me. I was, however, able to add it without necessitating extension of the number of weeks requested for the writing. Another completed task not noted in the outline was making models of such equipment as has been described in the manual.”

“As sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 were written solely for use by men working alone the manual needs two further sections. One section would give modified, or different, tricks and techniques of performance so that the tricks could be performed by women. The other section would describe tricks suitable for two or more people working in collaboration. In both these proposed sections the tricks would differ considerably from those which have been described.

“I believe that properly to devise the required techniques and devices and to describe them in writing would require 12 working weeks to complete the two sections. However, I cannot now work on this project every week and would hesitate to promise completion prior to the first of May, 1954.” [20]

Mulholland estimated that it would cost $1800 to finish the project. [21]

Gottlieb, whose goal was an operational guide that would be of use to agents in the real world, shared Mulholland's view that broadening its scope to include collaborative efforts by teams of operatives or by female agents was well worth the delay. On November 17, he authorized Mulholland to draft the two additional chapters and extended the timeline for completion of the book until May. This new work became MKULTRA Subproject 19. [22]

Impressed with Mulholland's range of knowledge and analysis, the CIA was beginning to extend its relationship with the magician beyond just the preparation of the covert operations manual. By now, the Agency was utilizing more and more of his expert advice. His ongoing meetings with the TSS staff accelerated. In December 9, Gottlieb expanded MKULTRA's Subproject 19 to increase the travel and operational supplies available to Mulholland and to provide for even more consultation between the conjuror and CD/TSS. At the same time, he was asked to take on yet another assignment: to work with the Agency “in connection with an investigation of claims in the general field of parapsychology...” [23]

The CIA was fascinated by the idea of mind reading and thought transmittal. If possible, such extrasensory abilities would be among the most potent weapons in their arsenal. It would revolutionize both the obtaining and the delivery of secret information. At one point, the Agency had been approached by a man claiming to be a “genuine mystic” who had developed a system for sending and receiving telepathic messages anywhere in the world. Mulholland’s task was to evaluate this and other claims of telepathy and clairvoyance.

Mulholland, a hard-nosed skeptic, was right at home investigating the paranormal. He had been lecturing on the topic since 1930, when he began exposing the means and methods of fortunetellers. He soon broadened this to debunk and denounce other forms of occultism. By 1938, he had written a book on the subject, Beware Familiar Spirits, which traced the history of modern spiritualism and described its techniques. He had no interest in letting the assertions of “mystics,” clairvoyants and mind readers go unchallenged.

With increasing frequency, someone inside the Agency would want an explanation for something they had seen or heard and Mulholland was asked to explain it. In virtually every case it would turn to have been accomplished through the stagecraft of magic. This would not stop the CIA – or other branches of the United States Government – from spending enormous resources over the next three decades to explore the possibilities of parapsychology and remote viewing.

With this additional work at hand, it was soon evident that Mulholland would not be able to have the manual finished as anticipated. “An extension of time is needed to give Mr. Mulholland more time to complete this task,” Gottlieb wrote. “The original estimated completion date was May 1, 1954. It is noted that the completion date estimate is now extended to November 1, 1954.”[24]

In the spring of 1954, Mulholland found himself facing an unforeseen problem. Much of his income for the previous year had come from the CIA for work that he knew was to be kept absolutely secret...even from other branches of the United States Government. But now it was time for him to prepare his taxes. Mulholland requested instructions from the Agency on how he was to report this income to the Internal Revenue Service and what he should do if he were audited or questioned by the IRS.

An internal CIA memo spelled out the problem: "Mr. Mulholland is a self employed magician whose normal income is derived from payment by various individuals and organizations for individual performances. Although not applying to calendar year 1953, other characteristic sources of income are from publishers of books, etc., and from individuals to whom he has given instructions in magic. When preparing his Federal Income Tax form, income is customarily listed by individual performances, etc., with the person or organization paying for the performance, the location of the performance, the amount received, and the deductions itemized for each performance or each source of funds, rather than for a standard deduction to be taken. As may or may not be characteristic with professional performers, these deductions are often questioned by the Internal Revenue people, and Mr. Mulholland is frequently called on to justify some of his deductions. For this reason, a detailed record book is kept of his income, with a separate page for each performance or source of income."

While acknowledgement of the magician receiving payments from the Agency was not felt to be a breach of security in itself, the CIA believed that it was absolutely imperative that the nature of Mulholland's work be kept from IRS scrutiny. "After several conferences with the Assistant General Counsel of the Agency, and the Security Officer for TSS, the following was recommended: Mr. Mulholland should report all funds received from CD/TSS except for funds for travel expenses, but no attempt should be made to itemize deductions based on these funds. Income tax should be paid on the entire amount reported. Mr. Mulholland should determine a conservative value for the amount of tax paid in excess of what would have been paid if reasonable deductions were made. The reason for this was the feeling that any questions by the Internal Revenue people concerning funds paid by CD/TSS would be prompted by questions on deductions made. It was recommended that the excess tax paid by Mr. Mulholland be refunded by the CD/TSS.” [25] This recommendation was immediately accepted “to protect the security of the Agency.” [26]

Mulholland followed the Agency’s instructions and was reimbursed by the CIA for the excess taxes that resulted from this approach [27] Subproject 15 was expanded to include this financial arrangement [28] and similar agreements were instituted for subsequent years in which he received remuneration from the Agency. [29]

OPERATIONAL APPLICATIONS OF THE ART OF DECEPTION

Mulholland continued work on the operational guide throughout the spring and summer. The text was completed by early fall. But the magician had one more task to do – to help prepare drawings, diagrams and photographs to illustrate the book’s proposed techniques.[30] By winter, the manuscript was finally complete. It was titled Some Operational Applications of the Art of Deception.

“The purpose of this paper,” Mulholland wrote in the introduction, “is to instruct the reader so he may learn to perform a variety of acts secretly and undetectably. In short, here are instructions in deception.” [31]

The following eight chapters – illustrated with diagrams hand-drawn by Mulholland – ran over 100 pages and outlined how to apply the magician’s art to the needs of espionage and covert activity. It covered how to administer pills, liquids, gasses and loose solids surreptitiously. It discussed means of obtaining small objects secretly. It proposed strategies and tactics to fit the needs of female agents. And it put forth techniques that could be used by teams of men working in tandem. All this was set forth in language that adhered to the original stipulations put to Mulholland in April of 1953. The language of the manual had to sound like a simple magic text without any words or examples that would connect it to its true clandestine use.

But this was not some primer for amateur magicians to learn a few tricks. No matter how gentle the language, this was to be a guide for agents in the field to perform dangerous, provocative and even lethal acts. The solids, gases and liquids were not harmless substances. What Mulholland was teaching CIA operatives to do was surreptitiously administer mind-altering chemicals, biological agents, dangerous drugs, and lethal poisons in order to disorient, discredit, injure, and even kill people.

Today – five decades after it was written – the tricks and approaches set forth in this manual are still classified “top secret.”

Mulholland’s name appears nowhere on the document, but – consciously or not -- he did leave a subtle trace: the illustrations he sketched detailing facial expressions look very much like self-portraits. This notwithstanding, Some Operational Applications of the Art of Deception, remains John Mulholland’s most secret book of secrets.

A MEMBER OF THE TEAM

While the operational manual was now complete, John Mulholland's work for the CIA was far from over. He had become part of the MKULTRA team and the Agency was already employing his knowledge and skills in a wide range of ways.

In October of 1954, Mulholland's agreement with the CIA was extended to include his assistance in the "design of devices for the covert delivery of materials" as well as provide for "such other travel and services as may be desired from Mr. Mulholland at various times." [32]

The following summer, the Agency asked the magician to undertake another assignment. The success of intelligence operations almost always rests on the ability to transmit information clandestinely. Theirs, after all, is a world of secrets. Mulholland's manual had spelled out how to administer materials – notably pills, liquids, and loose solids – to unsuspecting victims through the tricks of the magician's trade. He was also helping the Technical Services Staff design devices to carry this out. Now he was to show the intelligence community how to use the methods of magic to exchange information covertly with one another. Furthermore, he was to use his knowledge and creativity to fashion new methods that were unknown even to the conjuring community.

On August 25, Gottlieb outlined this new project "on the application of the magician's art to the covert communication of information" in a confidential CIA memo. According to Gottlieb, "this would involve the application of techniques and principles employed by 'magicians, 'mind readers' etc, to communicate information, and the development of new techniques. It is contemplated the above would provide a contribution to the general efforts in the area of non-electrical means of communication. Mr. Mulholland has agreed to undertake this task.” Mulholland’s compensation for this was raised from $150.00 per week to $200.00 per week. [33]

The Agency continued to enlarge the scope of John Mulholland’s work. On June 20, 1956, the magician’s arrangement was again expanded. “Objective: Make Mr. Mulholland available as a consultant on various problems—TSS and otherwise—as they evolve. These problems concern the application of the magician’s technique to clandestine operations, such techniques to include surreptitious delivery of materials, deceptive movements and actions to cover normally prohibited activities, influencing choices and perceptions of other persons, various forms of disguise; covert signaling systems, etc.” [34]

That August the Agency extended its financial arrangement with the magician for another year. [35] And in November of 1957 Mulholland’s projects were authorized for yet another 12 months. [36] CIA financial records show that he continued to submit vouchers and be paid through February 5, 1958 [37]

It is not clear whether John Mulholland continued to consult for the CIA after that. By then, his health had deteriorated considerably. He still smoked constantly. His arthritis had become very severe, but ulcers and other stomach problems prevented him from taking even aspirin to relieve it. He severely limited many— if not most—of his projects and activities.

While Mulholland’s work for the CIA may have ended, the Agency continued its interest in the connection between the techniques of conjuring and espionage. Indeed, in the spring of 1959, the Agency extended another MKULTRA Subproject (subproject 83) to revise and adapt some of material that Mulholland had developed on “deception techniques (magic, sleight of hand, signals) and on psychic phenomena.” [38]

MKULTRA was not merely some academic research experiment. Nor was Sidney Gottlieb, the man who oversaw Mulholland's work, just an American version of "Q," the scientific wizard who supplied James Bond with his dazzling gizmos and gadgets. Certainly Gottlieb's Technical Services Staff came up with more than their share of wristwatch radios and disappearing inks. At his core, Gottlieb was a dedicated and determined "operations" leader. His chemical division laboratory stored a vast array of poison pills and potions. And Gottlieb knew how – and was willing -- to use them.

While a clubfoot kept him from military service in World War II, it didn't stop him from engaging in some of the CIA's most covert and deadly missions. He traveled to Leopoldville (Kinshasa) with an Agency-developed bio-toxin in his diplomatic bag. Designed to mimic a disease endemic to the Congo, the virus was cultured specifically for its lethal effect. Its intended victim: Congolese leader Patrice Lumumba. Once in the Congo, the scientist carefully instructed CIA operatives in how to apply the toxin to Lumumba's toothbrush and food. [39] Gottlieb mailed a monogrammed handkerchief—doctored with brucellosis—to Iraqi colonel Abd a-Karim Qasim [40] and he developed poisoned cigarettes intended for Jamal abd an-Nasir of Egypt. [41]—Fidel Castro was an ongoing focus of Gottlieb's chemists—from the LSD the Agency hoped to spray in the Cuban leader's radio booth to the botulinum pill-laden pencil they crafted to assassinate him. [42]

Foreign leaders were not the only objects of Gottlieb's interest. Gottlieb was constantly experimenting to see the real world impact of his drugs. Such experimentation was at the heart of the MKULTRA project. The Agency conducted 149 separate projects involving drug testing, behavior modification, and secret administration of mind-altering chemicals at 80 US and Canadian universities, hospitals, research foundations, and prisons. Over the years, hundreds of individuals were guinea pigs in this research. Some were government employees, military personnel, and students who had varying degrees of knowledge about the tests. But many were unwitting subjects, particularly drug addicts, prostitutes, mental patients, and prisoners—people who were unlikely to complain and even less likely to be believed if they did. One group of men was kept on LSD for 77 days. A mental patient in Kentucky was dosed with LSD for 174 days. The CIA even set up its own brothel to monitor the effects of the hallucinogen on prostitutes and their unsuspecting clients.

Gottlieb's MKULTRA projects weren't limited to mind-altering chemicals. He explored a host of biological agents, toxins, and other drugs as well as such areas as crop and material sabotage, harassment techniques for offensive use, gas propelled sprays and aerosols, hypnosis, sensory deprivation, and electroshock. [43]

But the darkest episode may well have been one in which John Mulholland found himself personally involved during the very first year of his MKULTRA work: the death of Dr. Frank Olson. [44]

DEATH AND THE MAGICIAN

Recruited by the US Army from graduate school at the University of Wisconsin in 1943, Frank Olson was one of the pioneering scientists in America's biological warfare program. He served his active duty in the Army Chemical Corps at Camp Detrick in Frederick, Maryland, and later traded his Army job for a civilian position within the same branch. He was soon working in a new and highly secretive subgroup: the Special Operations Division (SOD). The Division had three primary functions: assessing the vulnerability of American installations to biological attack; developing techniques for offensive use of biological weapons; and biological research for the CIA. This CIA research included an MKULTRA subproject (code name MKNAOMI) in which SOD was to produce and maintain vicious mutant germ strains capable of killing or incapacitating would-be victims. An expert in biochemistry and aerobiology, Olson's specialty was delivering such deadly diseases in sprays and aerosol emulsions.

Twice each year, the MKNAOMI team from SOD held a working retreat where the Army scientists could plan and discuss future projects with their CIA counterparts. On Wednesday, November 18, 1953, Olson and five of his SOD colleagues traveled to a remote stone cabin located at Deep Creek Lake in western Maryland for such a meeting.

Sidney Gottlieb was always looking for ways to test the effects of his chemicals. This session presented just such an opportunity. His goal, he would later say, was to "ascertain the effect clandestine application of LSD would have on a meeting or conference." After dinner on the second night of the retreat, he had his assistant, Dr. Robert Lashbrook place a "very small dose" of LSD in a bottle of Cointreau. All but two of the SOD team was served the LSD-laced liqueur. As part of this "experiment," Olson unwittingly received some 70 micrograms of the hallucinogen.

Until then, Gottlieb saw nothing unusual in Olson's behavior. However the introduction of the drug had a definite effect on the entire group. Increasingly boisterous, they soon could not engage in sensible conversation. The meeting continued until about 1:00 a.m., when the participants retired for the evening. Gottlieb later recalled that Olson, among others, complained of "wakefulness" during the night. But aside from some evidence of fatigue, Gottlieb observed nothing unusual in Olson's actions, conversation, or general behavior the next morning.

By the time Olson returned home Friday evening, things had changed radically. The 43-year old biochemist was, as his wife Alice would later recount, “a totally different person”—severely depressed, anxious, highly agitated. Lapsing into silence, Olson wouldn’t tell his wife anything that had occurred. All he would say was “I’m going to have to resign; I’ve made a terrible mistake.”

The following Monday, November 23, Olson was already waiting for his boss, Lt. Col. Vincent Ruwet, when he arrived at work at 7:30 a.m. Olson told him that he wanted to quit or be fired. Ruwet reassured him that everything would be all right. Olson phoned his wife “I talked to Vin, he said I didn’t make a mistake, everything is fine and I’m not going to resign.” But Tuesday morning saw a return of his anxiety and depression. Olson again went to Ruwet and, after an hour-long conversation the two decided that Olson would benefit from medical assistance.

Col. Ruwet — keenly aware of the sensitivity of Olson’s circumstances — immediately turned to the CIA for help. He telephoned Robert Lashbrook and advised him that “Dr. Olson was in serious trouble and needed immediate professional attention.” Agreeing to make the appropriate arrangements, Lashbrook then phoned Gottlieb.

Ruwet was instructed to bring Olson to Washington, D.C. to meet with Lashbrook. A few hours later all three men were on their way to New York to see the physician that Gottlieb and Lashbrook had agreed upon: Dr. Harold Abramson.

Abramson was an unlikely doctor from whom to seek psychiatric assistance. An allergist and immunologist practicing medicine in New York City, he had no formal training or degree in psychiatry, nor did he hold himself out to be an expert in the field. He was, however, closely associated with research projects supported indirectly by the CIA and had substantial experience with LSD. Fully vetted by the Agency, he had a “top secret” security clearance, and while the CIA’s Security and Medical offices maintained a long list of other doctors, including psychiatrists, with such “top secret” approval, Abramson’s work and interest placed him well inside the Technical Services Staff’s “family.” Gottlieb was determined that his secret activities remained secret – even within the wider reaches of the CIA.

Abramson saw Olson twice that day -- first at his East 58th Street office and then later that night at Olson’s hotel. On the latter visit, the doctor gave the biochemist two bottles: one of bourbon and one of the sedative Nembutal – an unorthodox prescription for someone in Olson’s condition.

Frank Olson was slated to see Abramson again the following day. Before doing so, the three men made another stop. “We accompanied Dr. Lashbrook, at Dr. Lashbrook’s suggestion, on an official visit he had to make,” Ruwet would later disclose in a confidential CIA affidavit. That visit was to John Mulholland.

The three men arrived at Mulholland’s office around 3:00pm on November 25. Things did not go well. “During this visit, Dr. Olson became highly suspicious and mixed up. When this became apparent we tactfully cut the visit short.” [45]

Lashbrook then took Olson for another session with Abramson. The next morning, Thursday, November 26, Lashbrook, Olson and Ruwet returned to Washington so that Olson could spend Thanksgiving with his family. An SOD driver met Olson and Ruwet at National Airport. But as they were driving up Wisconsin Avenue, Olson had the car pull into a hotel parking lot. Olson told Ruwet that he was too ashamed to face his family and afraid that he might become violent with his children.

After a lengthy discussion, it was decided that Olson and Lashbrook would return to New York, and that Ruwet would go to Olson's home in Frederick, Maryland, to explain the situation to Olson's wife.

Lashbrook and Olson flew back to New York that same day for further consultations with Abramson. They spent Thursday night at a Long Island hotel not far from Abramson's Long Island clinic. The next morning the two men returned to Manhattan with Abramson. By now the biochemist was acting more and more "psychotic" with what Abramson would later say were "delusions of persecution." Olson thought the CIA was out to get him. After further discussions with Abramson, it was agreed that Olson should be placed under regular psychiatric care at Chestnut Lodge, an institution closer to his home and which had CIA-cleared psychiatrists on its Rockville, Maryland, staff.

Arrangements were made for Frank Olson's immediate admission to the hospital. In what was undoubtedly a remarkable coincidence, the doctor who served as the admitting physician for was Dr. Robert W. Gibson – the 25-year old son of Walter Gibson. [46] Walter Gibson was one of magic's most prolific writers and editors, though the general public would know him best as the author of "The Shadow." He was also a close friend and colleague to John Mulholland.

Unable to obtain air transportation for a return trip on Friday night, Lashbrook and Olson made plane reservations for Saturday morning and checked into room 1018A in the Statler Hotel. Between the time they checked in and 10:00 p.m. they watched television, visited the cocktail lounge, and then had dinner. According to Lashbrook, Olson "was cheerful and appeared to enjoy the entertainment." He "appeared no longer particularly depressed, and almost the Dr. Olson I knew prior to the experiment."

After dinner, Lashbrook and Olson watched television for about another hour, and at 11:00p.m. Olson suggested that they go to bed, saying that “he felt more relaxed and contented than he had since [they] came to New York.” Olson then left a call with the hotel operator to wake them in the morning.

At approximately 2:30 a.m. Saturday, November 28, Frank Olson crashed through the closed window blinds and the closed window of his hotel room and fell to his death on the Seventh Avenue sidewalk 10 floors below.

Lashbrook would later claim that he was awakened by the crash of glass as Olson hurtled through the closed window. But his first reaction was not to run downstairs or call the police or the hotel operator. Instead, he telephoned Gottlieb at his home and informed him that Olson was now dead. It was only then that Lashbrook dialed the front desk and reported the incident to the operator.

By that time a cover-up had already begun. The question is a cover-up of what?

Within minutes, uniformed New York City police officers and hotel employees came to Lashbrook's room. The CIA staffer was still in his underwear, on the telephone in the bathroom. He told the police that he worked for the Defense Department and he didn't know why Olson had jumped from the window, but he did know that Olson “suffered from ulcers” and might have been suffering from job-related stress. The police suspected foul play.

Two officers of the 14th Detective Squad then interviewed Lashbrook at the local police station. Getting information out of him, they noted, “was like pulling teeth.” They asked to see what was in his pockets and billfold. Among the contents of his wallet was a scrap of paper with the initials “JM” on it, an address, and a telephone number [47] . When asked by the officers who this “JM” was, “Lashbrook indicated he preferred not to identify him because of security reasons and the matter was pressed no further by the detectives.” [48]

The police had little reason to see any connection between paper and the incident. Their suspicions were in another direction. At one point, the two officers speculated to each other that the case might be a simple homicide with homosexual overtones and noted this in their written report.

In the meantime, Sidney Gottlieb had already reported up the chain of command. CIA Director Allen Dulles immediately dispatched agents of the Security Branch -- what some have termed the “CIA’s fixit men”-- to contain the situation. The Security Branch agents quickly closed the NYPD investigation. They took every necessary step to prevent Frank Olson’s death from being connected with the CIA in any way. They supplied complete cover for Lashbrook so that his association with the Agency would remain a complete secret.

With the external front under control, the Agency then turned to its own internal investigation. Lashbrook was again interviewed, but this time by an experienced agent from the CIA. Now when asked who “JM” was, Lashbrook identified him “as John Mulholland.” Interestingly he referred to him not as “John Mulholland, the magician” or “John Mulholland, a writer and lecture.” He identified him solely as “John Mulholland, an Agency employee.” [49] Moreover, among the papers in Lashbrook’s room was “a receipt on plain white paper for $115.00 dated November 25 1953 and signed by John Mulholland. The receipt indicated ‘Advance for Travel to Chicago.’” [50]

However forthcoming Lashbrook was, the Technical Services Staff still tried to keep the details of its operations from the scrutiny of others even within the Agency itself. It downplayed the connection between TSS and Olson's death and minimized any link to LSD. Internal memoranda written after the biochemist's passing questioned his emotional stability – a direct contradiction to statements evaluating his mental state prior to the Deep Creek incident. In the end, however, the full details of MKULTRA and the experiment involving Olson reached others within the CIA.

The CIA officially took the position that Olson's death was indeed a suicide, triggered by the LSD given to him by Gottlieb and Lashbrook. But of course it hid even that from the public, including the Olsons. The family had only been told that the stress of his job had led to a nervous breakdown and that Frank Olson had killed himself. What little else they knew came from a small article in their local paper: "Army Bacteriologist Dies in Plunge from NY Hotel." In order to assure his family of Civil Service benefits, the CIA had his death officially recorded as a "classified illness."

And so it remained for twenty-two years. Then in June 1975 a special commission chaired by Vice President Nelson Rockefeller released the findings of its investigation into illegal CIA domestic operations. The Washington Post's coverage of the Rockefeller Report noted that in the early 1950's an unnamed civilian employee of the Department of the Army had leaped to his death from a New York hotel window after the CIA had given him LSD without his knowledge. On reading the article, Alice Olson instantly realized the man described in the morning paper was her husband.

Vincent Ruwet confirmed her suspicion that the individual was indeed Frank Olson, but because of the still top-secret status of the project was unable to divulge any further details. On July 11, 1975, the Olson family held a press conference expressing their outrage and anguish, called for a full accounting of the incident, and filed a wrongful death suit against the United States Government. The story made national headlines.

MIND CONTROL MURDER?

Official Washington moved quickly to end the furor. President Ford invited Alice Olson and her son, Eric, to the White House where he personally apologized on behalf of the government. Congress enacted legislation providing $750,000 in compensation to the Olson family. And CIA Director William Colby met the Olsons for lunch, where he gave them what he said was the complete CIA-file on the Olson case. [51]

While the CIA was now “admitting” that Frank Olson’s death was a suicide brought on by the after-effects of CIA-administered LSD, Eric Olson was never fully convinced. This was, he felt, a classic example of sophisticated misdirection, using a skill from the magician’s toolkit to protect a clandestine operation. “I believe the key to all this,” he would later write, “lies in the connection between the heart of covert operations, which consists in creating adequate cover stories, and the heart of the magician’s art, which consists in being able to direct attention precisely to the place where the thing is not happening...All curiosity was riveted on the startling disclosure that the CIA had unwittingly drugged a top scientist, but left no curiosity available for the question of, ‘Oh yes, what about his death; you haven’t told us how he could have gotten out the window.’” [52]

After his mother died in 1993, Eric and the family decided to move Frank Olson’s remains from another cemetery so that he could be reburied beside his wife. At the same time, the son got a court order to have an autopsy performed.

Frank Olson had been buried in a sealed casket. This was supposedly to spare his family from seeing how badly mutilated his face and body were from crashing through a plate glass window and falling ten stories to the concrete below. But when the casket was opened, Olson had none of the cuts or abrasions on his face as had been expected. Instead, the forensic pathologist, Dr. James Starrs, a Professor of Law and Forensic Science at the National Law Center at The George Washington University, found a deep bruise on Olson's forehead. The bruise was severe enough to have rendered Olson unconscious, Starrs thought, but probably did not result from the fall. His conclusion was that the evidence was starkly "suggestive of homicide."

That was Eric Olson's conclusion as well. He simply couldn't imagine how his father could have run across the small, dark hotel room, gained enough velocity to vault over a radiator and crash with enough force to go through the closed blinds and the heavy glass pane of a shut hotel window...all with a CIA agent asleep in the next bed whose entire responsibility was to keep track of his father.

Despite this new evidence, federal prosecutors refused to pursue the inquiry. The terms of the $750,000 Congressional financial settlement precluded a civil suit. But Eric Olson was able to persuade New York public prosecutor Stephen Saracco to look into the case. Saracco decided there was indeed enough evidence to convene a grand jury for an investigation into the death. That investigation is continuing.

If Olson was murdered, the question is why? Did the Technical Services Staff find itself with a man who knew so much and yet was so ill that he was a threat to the MKULTRA's secrecy? Was the Olson case an experiment in mind and behavior control that went so terribly wrong it had to be terminated? Had Frank Olson said or done something that was—as he himself feared—a breach of security? Had he seen something so repugnant in the MKULTRA work that he couldn't be part of it? Did the biochemist intend to resign from an agency that could then neither let him continue nor permit him to quit? These remain questions for the grand jury to ponder.

Another unanswered question is raised by the small scrap of paper that Robert Lashbrook had in his wallet the night Frank Olson died. That was the paper with the initials “JM” on it along with John Mulholland's address and telephone number. Why was Olson in John Mulholland's office on November 25? And what made him so upset that the meeting had to be abandoned?

That Lashbrook would be meeting with Mulholland should not be surprising. Part of the original agreement between Mulholland and the CIA was that Gottlieb—or his representative—would review the work the magician was doing for the Agency at a biweekly conference. [53] As the project progressed, it was clear that “frequent consultations between Mr. Mulholland and CD/TSS” were indeed essential. In order to facilitate these conferences, Mulholland was provided an additional travel allowance. [54] Even so, meetings were not always easy to schedule and Lashbrook's being in New York on other business would certainly have made getting together simpler.

Moreover, Mulholland's work on the manual was at a critical point. His manuscript encompassing the original outline of the guide had just been completed. The magician was now turning his attention to the two new sections to be added to the first draft: one on covert activities by women and the other on applications suitable for teams of two or more people working in collaboration with each other. In fact, it had only been a week since Gottlieb authorized Mulholland to proceed on these two additional chapters. [55] Conferring with Lashbrook on the scope and substance of this material would be only natural.

At the same, the Agency had begun to rely increasingly on Mulholland for his advice and expertise. Lashbrook carried with him a check for $115.00—a travel advance for an upcoming trip that Mulholland was making to Chicago on behalf of the CIA. Why Mulholland was going to Chicago for the Agency remains uncertain, although there is some evidence that he was going to take part in secretly assessing the claims of Andrija Puharich—claims that related to electronic systems and telepathy. His subsequent handwritten travel voucher for the December 3 journey only lists meeting with a “contact.” [56] Perhaps the Lashbrook visit was scheduled for the two men to discuss this activity. In any event, Lashbrook did deliver the check during the November 25 session and received a handwritten receipt in return. [57]

With only an hour between the time Lashbrook was slated to meet with Mulholland and Frank Olson’s next appointment with Dr. Abramson, it might have been simply out of convenience that Lashbrook suggested that Olson and Col. Ruwet accompany him on this visit. Mulholland was always a gracious host and an engaging conversationalist. It may well be, as John Marks suggests, that “Lashbrook thought that the magician might amuse Olson.” [58] In fact, just the opposite occurred. Olson got so suspicious and upset that the meeting was quickly ended.

There are others who suggest that the motive behind the Mulholland visit was far less benign. “One of the things Mulholland may have been helping them do was to create a cover story for what...they were doing in New York in the first place,” notes Eric Olson. Beyond that, he says, “it fits with what they were trying to do in New York: to assess, from any direction possible, how deep...they were in with my father, and to try, again by any means possible, to fix it and save their own butts.” [59]

Frank Olson’s son is not the only one to suggest that Mulholland’s conjuring-related knowledge and skills were being put to use to interrogate and influence the biochemist. This is clearly the implication of the film documentary Mind Control Murder produced by Principal Films and presented as part of Arts & Entertainment Network’s Investigative Reports series in September of 1999. [60]

The documentary puts forward its “strong evidence” that Olson was eliminated by the CIA because he wanted to leave the government after witnessing the real world use of MKULTRA interrogation techniques, including drugs and hypnosis...techniques that have been “terminal” in nature. The activities at Deep Creek, it suggests, were designed to find out what Olson knew, what he had done, and what he was likely to do. It cites independent writer and investigator Hank Albarelli: “I think there was an experiment of some sort at Deep Creek Lodge. I think that it might have involved hypnosis and that hypnosis experiment may have been continued in New York in John Mulholland’s office and possibly in Dr. Harold Abramson’s office.”

“If Albarelli is right,” the film’s narrator Bill Kurtis concludes, “the...method of special interrogation was both the secret Olson was worried about and the technique that two of its leading practitioners— John Mulholland and Harold Abramson— then used on him.”

The problem with this theory is that there is no evidence that Mulholland was skilled as a hypnotist. To the contrary, he appears to have been extremely skeptical of its practicality, dismissing many exhibitions of hypnosis as merely “magic shows.” [61] Moreover, the Agency had access to a wide range of individuals with true expertise in the area. There were at least eight separate MKULTRA subprojects devoted to hypnosis, including two involving hypnosis and drugs in combination. [62] Five major CIA-sponsored hypnosis experiments had already been undertaken by that November. Indeed, Gottlieb had observed some of this work firsthand and was well acquainted with the hypnotists involved. [63]

"Even if Mulholland were not a skilled hypnotist they still might have gone to see him, even if hypnosis were the purpose," counters Eric Olson. "He might have been the best they had available at the moment and also the only guy with an adequate security clearance to handle what they wanted. But they might have found other ways of using Mulholland's skills, in addition to or beyond hypnosis. ..I think the overall purpose is clear: they were exploring whether and to what extent they might distract my father (certainly the essence of the magician's art) for the purpose of taking his eye off the ball, making him forget, creating amnesia. In trying to distract my father...they were taking a risk: the same techniques that ultimately might quiet him could also, if he detected what was going on, increase his anxiety and fear." [64]

Whatever happened in Mulholland's office that November afternoon, it did not curtail his work with the Central Intelligence Agency. He continued his relationship with the CIA for at least another five years. His ability to keep this part of his life secret for so long may well have been his greatest magic trick.

IN SEARCH OF SECRETS

That any evidence of John Mulholland's involvement with the CIA still exists is remarkable in itself — although it would take decades for it to come to light. The CIA's practice was to maintain no records relating to the planning and approval of MKULTRA programs.

[65] Few other files ever existed. Then, in January 1973, acting on Sidney Gottlieb's verbal directions, the Agency's Technical Services personnel sought out and destroyed every single MKULTRA record they could find. Gottlieb later testified -- and Richard Helms -- confirmed that in ordering the destruction of the papers, Gottlieb was carrying out then-CIA Director Helms' verbal orders. [66]

At some point, John Mulholland's personal files were also apparently vetted to remove any connection between him and the Agency. While Mulholland was meticulous in his personal record keeping, not a single reference to his clandestine work remains in his personal archives. Noted writer and intelligence expert Jim Hougan combed through the magician's files which are now housed in David Copperfield's secret warehouse in Nevada. "I went through each and every document page by page. Not a single line related or referred to the Agency. They were spic-and-span. It was apparent that John Mulholland's files had been gone through and sanitized by someone who knew the Agency and knew how to eradicate any hint of its presence." [67]

Despite these efforts and unbeknownst to Gottlieb and his staff, some MKULTRA documents still remained. These files—presumably routine records from the TSS's Budget and Fiscal Section—had been sent to the CIA's Retired Records Center outside of Washington in 1970. They should not have contained any MKULTRA material. The financial paper associated with sensitive projects such as this were normally kept by the branch itself under the project title, not in the files of the branch's Budget and Fiscal Section. Why these records were stored in this manner is not known, but it accounts for why the material escaped retrieval and destruction in 1973. It also explains why the Agency was unable to find these MKULTRA documents in response to a subsequent

US Senate Select Committee investigation of CIA abuses in 1975. The Agency examined both the active and the retired files of all the branches of the CIA considered likely to have had an association with the project, but never looked into the Budget and Fiscal Section retired records. [68]

Then, in 1977, two exceptionally diligent Agency researchers processing a Freedom of Information Act request for former State Department officer John Marks decided to double-check the Budget and Fiscal Section's historical archives. They uncovered seven cartons of MKULTRA material. In August, the Carter White House made the existence of these papers public, though it downplayed the significance of their contents. In accordance with the requirements of federal statute, some 16,000 pages of evidence had to be released to Marks.

All 16,000 pages were, in the CIA's own words, "heavily sanitized." Few documents had escaped redacting. Hundreds of names, places and dates were blacked out. Entire pages were blank. Working with four researchers, Marks painstakingly went through the papers, cross-referencing the material, finding clues wherever he could. In some instances, the blacked out text could be deciphered simply by holding the page to the light; others were identified by their context. His resulting 1977 book, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, did what two United States Senate Committees could not do: it assembled a detailed account of the CIA and its foray into drugs and mind control.

Marks' book ran 264 pages. Only four sentences related to John Mulholland. Those four sentences stimulated the author's own Freedom of Information Act request calling for the Central Intelligence Agency to release of any information or records relating to Mulholland's work with the CIA, including any written agreements between him and the Agency, copies of the documents he produced, or other related materials.

On June 26, 2000, the Agency responded with explicit written confirmation that John Mulholland indeed had a contractual arrangement with the CIA relating to the operational uses of the magician's skills. [69] It included over 200 pages of material directly linked to Mulholland and his involvement with the intelligence community. Like the documents released to John Marks in 1977, these files were heavily— though inconsistently— redacted. A request for a re-review of these files is still pending.

Despite the CIA's editing of the material, the documents provided a remarkably comprehensive account of John Mulholland's work for the CIA. At times, however, unveiling this information was like assembling a giant jigsaw puzzle. Each and every document had to be carefully scrutinized and then crosschecked against all of the other released papers. All of the material supplied to John Marks in 1977 as well as all of the material released to the Olson family by the CIA in 1975 was reviewed in light of this new evidence. Finally, all of this information was reassembled to form a chronological narrative. This article is a summary of those findings.

These files may be the last link we have to the clandestine world of John Mulholland. Sidney Gottlieb retired from the CIA in 1973, receiving the Agency's Distinguished Intelligence Medal for his 22 years of service. After retiring, Gottlieb and his wife worked in a leprosy hospital in India for 18 months, then moved to a farm in Rappahannock, Virginia. Gottlieb's health, however, was not good and he suffered from a long history of heart ailments. After a month-long bout with pneumonia, Sidney Gottlieb died at his home on March 7, 1999. He was 80 years old. Allen Dulles, the man who approved MKULTRA, died three decades earlier. Vincent Ruwet passed on in 1996.

John Mulholland died at age 71 on February 25, 1970 after a long illness in University Hospital, New York. His life had been dedicated to magic and the keeping of secrets. His clandestine work for the CIA was one secret he was able to maintain until the very end.

NOTES:

[1] Mulholland letter to subscribers of The Sphinx, June 29, 1953, George Daily Collection

[2] Memorandum for Director, Central Intelligence, Two Extremely Sensitive Research Programs, Central Intelligence Agency, April 3, 1953, author's files

[3] Ibid.

[4] Memorandum for Deputy Director (Administration), Project MKULTRA – Extremely Sensitive Research and Development Program, Central Intelligence Agency, April 13, 1953, author's files

[5] Alexander Cockburn and Jeffrey St. Clair, "US Official Poisoner Dies," CounterPunch, Institute for the Advancement of Journalistic Clarity, March 1999

[6] Stewart Alsop, The Center: The Anatomy of Power in Washington, London, Hodder & Stroughton, 1978

[7] John Northern Hilliard, Greater Magic, Kaufman and Greenburg, 1994, page 1095

[8] Mulholland invoice, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-30, April 13, 1953, author's files

[9] Mulholland letter to Dr. Sidney Gottlieb, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-29, April 20, 1953, author's files

[10] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 4, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-28, May 4, 1953, author's files

[11] Ibid.

[12] Letter to John Mulholland, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-28, May 5, 1953, author's files

[13] Mulholland letter to Dr. Sidney Gottlieb, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-2, May 11, 1953, author's files

[14] James B. Alfredson and George L. Daily, Jr., A Bibliography of Conjuring Periodicals in English: 1791-1983, Magicana for Collectors, York, PA, 1986

[15] Mulholland letter to subscribers of The Sphinx, June 29, 1953, op. cit.

[16] Expense Record, MKULTRA, Subproject 4, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-1, author's files

[17] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 15, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-2, August 3, 1953, author's files

[18] Memorandum for the Record, Amendment to Project MKULTRA, Subproject 4, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-17, September 18, 1953, author's files

[19] Letter to John Mulholland from Sidney Gottlieb, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-17, September 18, 1953, author's files

[20] Mulholland letter to Sidney Gottlieb, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 19-2, November 11, 1953, author's files

[21] Cost Estimate, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 19-3, November 17, 1953, author's files

[22] Memorandum for the Record, MKULTRA, Subproject 19, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 19-5, November 17, 1953, author's files

[23] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Amendment to Subproject 15, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-13, December 9, 1953, author's files

[24] Memorandum for the Record, Extension of Time for MKULTRA, Subproject 19, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 19-9, April 19, 1954, author's files

[25] Memorandum for the Record, Summary of Events Related to Reimbursement of Taxes to John Mulholland, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-18, July 9, 1954, author's files

[26] Memorandum for the Record, MKULTRA, Subproject 15, Expansion of Scope, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-19, July 9, 1954, author's files

[27] Mulholland Receipt for Bank Check No. M142064, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-23, July 31, 1954, author's files

[28] Memorandum for the Record, MKULTRA, Subproject 15, Expansion of Scope, op. cit.

[29] Memorandum for the Record, Reimbursement of Excess Federal Income Taxes to Mr. John Mulholland, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-24, February 24, 1955, author's files; Memorandum, Reimbursement for Excess Income Taxes, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-33, January 16, 1956, author's files

[30] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 34, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-46, October 1, 1954, author's files

[31] Some Operational Applications of the Art of Deception, Central Intelligence Agency, undated, p. 2, author's files

[32] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 34, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-46, October 1, 1954, author's files

[33] Memorandum for the Record, Definition of a Task under MKULTRA Subproject 34, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-39, August 25, 1955, author's files

[34] Memorandum for the Record, MKULTRA, Subproject 34, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-29, June 20, 1956, author's files

[35] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 34A, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-26, August 31, 1956, author's files

[36] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Extension of Subproject 34, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-7, November 15, 1957, author's files

[37] Invoice Check List, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 34-48, author's files

[38] Memorandum for the Record, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 83-12, March 26, 1959, author's files

[39] US Senate Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities (Church Committee) Alleged Assassination Plots Involving Foreign Leaders: An Interim Report, Government Printing Office, 1975, pp.20-21

[40] Ibid. p. 181

[41] Ibid.

[42] Central Intelligence Agency, Office of the Inspector General, Report on Plots to Assassinate Fidel Castro, CIA-IG, May 23, 1967

[43] Testimony of Admiral Stansfield Turner, Select Committee on Intelligence & the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research of the Committee on Human Resources, US Senate, 1977, pp. 10-14

[44] A detailed and documented chronology of the events surrounding the Frank Olson case can be found in Appendix A, Project MKULTRA, The CIA's Program of Research in Behavioral Modification, Joint hearing of the Select Committee on Intelligence & the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research of the Committee on Human Resources, Washington, DC 1977; the primary source documents can be found in CIA Documents Concerning the Death of Dr. Frank Olson, Center for National Security Studies documents collection, Box 8, Number C-35, National Security Archives, Washington, DC. The author's account is based on the documents contained in these two sets of materials.

[45] Affidavit of Lt. Col. Vincent L. Rewet, CIA Documents Concerning the Death of Dr. Frank Olson, CNSS, Box 8, C-35, Document 15, undated, National Security Archive, Washington, DC

[46] Robert Gibson interview with Eric Olson, December 20, 1999, Olson notes in author's files

[47] Joseph Treaster, "CIA Hired Magician in Behavior Project" New York Times, August 3, 1977

[48] Agent's Report, Case record #73317, December 3, 1953, CIA Documents Concerning the Death of Frank

Olson, CNSS, Box 8, C-35, National Security Archive, Washington, DC

[49] Ibid. Document 60

[50] Ibid.

[51] These files were released by the Olson family in 1976 and can be found in the Kennedy subcommittee hearings on Biomedical and Behavioral Research, pp. 1005-1132; see also CIA Documents Concerning the Death of Dr. Frank Olson above

[52] Eric Olsen email to author, January 26, 2001

[53] Mulholland letter to Dr. Sidney Gottlieb, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 4-29, April 20, 1953, author's files

[54] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 15, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-2, August 3, 1953, author's files

[55] Memorandum for the Record, Project MKULTRA, Subproject 19, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 19-5, November 17, 1953, author's files

[56] Mulholland invoice for Dec. 3-4, 1953 trip to Chicago, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-6, author's files

[57] Mulholland receipt for travel advance, Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 15-6, author's files

[58] John Marks The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, W.W. Norton and Company, New York, 1979, p. 87

[59] Eric Olson e-mail to author, January 25, 2001, author's files

[60] A&E Investigative Reports: Mind Control Murder, Principal Films (London) and Arts & Entertainment Network, 1999, Videotape AE-17604

[61] John Mulholland and George Gordon The Magical Mind, Hastings House, 1967, p. 77

[62] Testimony of Admiral Stansfield Turner, op. cit. page 10

[63] Memorandum for the Record, Visit to Project (deleted), Central Intelligence Agency, MKULTRA document 5-11, May 11, 1953

[64] Eric Olson email to author, January 25, 2001, author's files

[65] Testimony of Admiral Stansfield Turner, op. cit., page 9

[66] Joint hearings; Select Committee on Intelligence & the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research of the Committee on Human Resources, US Senate, Appendix A, page 69 August 3, 1977

[67] Jim Hougan interview with author, January 25, 2001

[68] Testimony of Admiral Stansfield Turner and Appendix B: Documents Referring to Discovery of Additional MKULTRA Material, Select Committee on Intelligence & the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research of the Committee on Human Resources, US Senate, 1977

[69] Letter to Michael Edwards from Kathryn Dyer, Information and Privacy Coordinator, Central Intelligence Agency, June 26, 2000

Dear Mrs. Brussell (Mae Brussell, “World Watchers International”),

Recently, while reading through an old copy of Critique, and then again in the Journal of Borderland Sciences, I came across your name in a reference to an “Update” you offer on the Alternative Three mystery. As such, I would certainly like to obtain this for my files, since I have been collecting related materials since the early 60s when my father worked as a designer for NASA. He was part of a team that designed the LEM module, and he told me some pretty hair-raising stories of the astronauts’ “close encounters” on the Moon.

Then, in the Feb/Mar 1983 issue of Mother Jones (pg. 10) I came across a very strange article entitled “Refugees on Mars: FDR’s Secret Plan,” outlining something called the “M Project.” This got me to recalling an event that had occurred to me several years earlier, something I think you might be interested in.

Back during 1978 or thereabouts I happened on a copy of a paperback book, Alternative 3, which detailed some of the things my father had told me years earlier in New York, specifically that the government had cracked the secret of anti-gravity and that the military had dis-shaped aircraft.

He had also told me that NASA had evidence of lights having been seen on the Moon for centuries and that they had been recovering coded signals from Mars and other planets, as well, at Arecibo.

Anyway, a month or so later I happened to be talking with an old Pan Am Captain friend of mine when he mentioned seeing a fantastic program on British TV. He had a home there in London at the time and he said that both he and his son had watched this NASA exposé called the Alternative 3 Project. He said many Brits believed the subject matter since it was so authoritatively presented.

A short time after that, I found myself up in Twin Falls, Idaho, on a business trip and I was introduced to a gal—about 40—who worked as a sometime DJ at a nearby radio station. After several drinks, and discussion about this and that, I thought I would impress her by mentioning that I had worked once as a Congressional liaison to the Pentagon for Nixon’s Congressman during the early years of the Watergate fiasco, and that my then-wife had worked as secretary to Donald Segretti, head of CREEP, in the Naval Annex. She was completely nonplussed at this.

Then, after another drink or two, she told me — somewhat hesitantly — that she too had worked at the Pentagon — behind the “Green Door” — as a cryptanalyst for Military Intelligence, and as personal secretary to an Admiral. This, she said, was during the late ‘50s. And she said that after having helped uncover a Soviet “mole” within her Top Secret Department, she was promoted and later offered a very interesting assignment — in California.

By this time I was so intrigued that I found and set up my tape recorder and flipped it on — covertly, of course. By now she was really getting interesting, and we had become a little more cozy. And since I had once also worked as an Investigative Reporter for four years (in Boston), covering political subversion in high places, assassinations, espionage, etc, I felt that I had here the genesis of a hell of a story. And subsequently I was able to get her story on tape.

To get back to her story, she told me that she moved out to Southern California to accept her new assignment, sometime during 1962 I believe, and started working for the Jet Propulsion Labs there in Pasadena. She was assigned to a highly classified section of the plant as a photo interpreter and eventually became head of that department, where she met her future husband. She said that while her function was to scan and interpret all incoming photographs taken of the Moon and Mars, with “high-resolution” photography techniques and equipment aboard satellites (orbiting the Moon and Mars) — her husband worked in another department as a designer. His function was to design domed, modular living facilities for “Colonies” of earth scientists to be stationed on the Moon, and then Mars! She said that the secret name of this amazing project was: “Project Adam & Eve.” Needless to say, I about fell off the couch.

She told me that her husband, who had many degrees, was designing these domed structures (and all the life-support systems inside and out) because no other type of housing would suffice. It seems that one of their rocket probes had found that due to the gale force velocity of the winds of Mars, no other structures would hold up, and underground structures were ruled out. In her photo-interpretation work she said she had enhanced the pix to such a fine degree that evidence of ancient civilizations of some kind was readily discernible on both the Moon and Mars, that there was a green vegetation belt on Mars (with “life forms”), that both pyramids and a human face carved into a huge mountain chain were observed!! She said that there was evidence of water, an atmosphere, and almost normal gravity on both the Moon and Mars, from the Pix and other data she was privy to, amazing as all that sounds.

She told me that throughout the plant where she worked there were numerous high-ranking officers, Generals and Admirals, and that each department was color-coded — so that a specific colored badge had to be worn at all times. I believe the badges were magnetic, too, and had a current photo of each worker — with his or her code number.

Sometime later on, she said, her husband and several other key assistants were chosen for an even more secret project (within this Top Secret Project) — and off he went to parts unknown. And she never saw him again. When she kept asking where he was she was consistently told that his whereabouts were on a need to know basis. For the next year or so she received letters from him of a general nature but no hint of where he was. One day, she was informed that he had been killed and that they were very sorry. But they refused to give her any more information than that, or even to [let her] see the body or have normal funeral arrangements.

Finally, due to her constant questioning, they yanked her Q clearance and she was fired. She had had to sign an oath that she would not reveal what her job had been. Sometime later, after making a lot of phone calls trying to track down some answers, there were several attempts on her life — including a near-fatal car accident. As she told me then, she ended up leaving Pasadena in the middle of the night — with her children in tow — and headed for Idaho, where her parents lived. When I asked, jokingly, if she thought maybe her husband and the others had been drafted to go to Vietnam, she stared at me for a blank moment and replied: “No, I think he was drafted to Mars!” And she was deadly serious.

Sometime shortly after this midnight “interview,” after returning to Salt Lake City, I simply had to share this incredible tale with someone — so I loaned the tape to an old friend of mine, an ex-FBI Special Agent who lived in California. And I asked him to check out the story through his connections. It was a very stupid thing to do, for (you guessed it) he then promptly “lost” the tape! There went my story.

Mae, should you wish to follow up on this, I would be happy to give you both their names. For reasons I can’t disclose, I am in no position to follow up on anything at the moment. The gal’s name was Jolly S. [full name withheld], and the last I heard, she was still working in Twin Falls selling advertising. The other’s name was Neil M. [full name withheld], and the last I heard, he was at [address withheld], West Covina, California. Neil, upon retirement, had gone to work in Las Vegas as a bodyguard for Howard Hughes.

Please, do not publish or mention their names for obvious reasons. That is, unless you get their permission. My real name is not really important. As a reporter, I had some 50 exposés published over a 4 year period, and I thought I had heard it all. Since then, I have run somewhat afoul of the powers that be and I am now writing a book, entitled The Dark Side of the Force, about my experiences over the years. Keep up the good work, and carry on the fight for a non-Soviet America. Sorry to say, I have been completely knocked out of the box after one too many exposés.

Sincerely,

Mr. MJ.

El Paso, Texas

THE MODERN BRAIN DRAIN

COMPILED BY STEVE QUAYLE

November 15, 2010: Chitra Chauhan, 33.

EXPERTISE: Chauhan, a molecular biologist, was a post-doctoral researcher in the Global Health department in the College of Public Health. She earned her doctorate from the Institute of Genomics and Integrative Biology in New Delhi, India, in 2005, then studied mosquitoes and disease transmission at the University of Notre Dame.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Chauhan was found dead in an apparent suicide by cyanide at a Temple Terrace hotel.

July 12, 2010: Franco Cerrina, 62.

EXPERTISE: Cerrina was a leading scholar in optics, lithography, and nanotechnology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Cerrina was found dead in a lab at BU's Photonics Center. The cause of death is not yet known, but have ruled out homicide

APRIL 26, 2010: Vajinder Toor, 34

EXPERTISE: Toor worked at Kingsbrook Jewish Medical Center in New York before joining the faculty at Yale.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Shot and killed outside his home in Branford, Connecticut.

APRIL 6, 2010: Joseph Morrissey, 46

EXPERTISE: Morrissey joined NSU in May 2009 as an associate professor and taught one elective class on immunopharmacology in the College of Pharmacy.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Victim of a home invasion. Although the cause of death was first identified as a gunshot wound, the autopsy revealed that the professor died from a stab wound.

FEBRUARY 13, 2010: Maria Ragland Davis, 52

EXPERTISE: Her background was in chemical engineering and biochemistry, and she specialized in plant pathology and biotechnology applications. She had a doctorate in biochemistry and had worked as a postdoctoral research fellow at the Monsanto Company in St. Louis. She was hired at the University of Alabama after a seven-year stint as a senior scientist in the plant-science department at Research Genetics Inc. (later Invitrogen), also in Huntsville.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Murdered by Amy Bishop.

FEBRUARY 13, 2010: Gopi K. Podila, 54

EXPERTISE: Indian American biologist, noted academician, and faculty member at the University of Alabama in Huntsville. He listed his research interests as engineering tree biomass for bioenergy, functional genomics of plant-microbe interactions, plant molecular biology and biotechnology. In particular, Podila studied genes that regulate growth in fast growing trees, especially poplar and aspen. He has advocated prospective use of fast growing trees and grasses as an alternative to corn sources for producing ethanol.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Murdered by Amy Bishop.

FEBRUARY 13, 2010: Adriel D. Johnson Sr. 52

EXPERTISE: His research involved aspects of gastrointestinal physiology specifically pancreatic function in vertebrates.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Murdered by Amy Bishop.

NOVEMBER 11, 2009: Keith Fagnou, 38

EXPERTISE: His research focused on improving the preparation of complex molecules for petrochemical, pharmaceutical or industrial uses. Keith's advanced and out-of-the-box thinking overturned prior ideas of what is possible in the chemistry field.

CIRCUMSTANCE: H1N1

OCTOBER 12, 2009: Stephen Lagakos, 63

EXPERTISE: Lagakos centered his efforts on several fronts in the fight against AIDS particularly how and when HIV-infected women transmitted the virus to their children. In addition, he developed sophisticated methods to improve the accuracy of estimated HIV incidence rates. He also contributed to broadening access to antiretroviral drugs to people in developing countries.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Car Crash.

SEPTEMBER 13, 2009: Malcolm Casadaban, 60

EXPERTISE: Molecular geneticist with a passion for new research, Casadaban had been developing a stronger vaccine for the plague.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Plague; the medical center says the plague bacteria he worked with was a weakened strain that isn't known to cause illness in healthy adults. The strain was approved by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention for laboratory studies.

AUGUST 6, 2009: Wallace L. Pannier, 81

EXPERTISE: Pannier was a germ warfare scientist whose top-secret projects included a mock attack on the New York subway with powdered bacteria in 1966. Mr. Pannier worked at Fort Detrick, a US Army installation in Frederick, MD that tested biological weapons during the Cold War and is now a center for biodefense research. He worked in the Special Operations Division, a secretive unit operating there from 1949 to 1969, according to family members and published reports. The unit developed and tested delivery systems for deadly agents such as anthrax and smallpox.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Natural Causes.

JUNE 9, 2009: August "Gus" Watanabe, 67

EXPERTISE: Watanabe was one of the five highest-paid officers of Indianapolis pharmaceutical giant Eli Lilly and Co. when he retired in 2003.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Friends discovered the body, a .38-caliber handgun and a three-page note at the scene. They said he had been depressed following the death last month of his daughter Nan Reiko Watanabe Lewis. She died at age 44 while recovering from elective surgery.

JUNE 3, 2009: Caroline Coffey, 28

EXPERTISE:

CIRCUMSTANCE: Hikers found the body of the Cornell University post-doctoral bio-medicine researcher along a wooded trail in Taughannock Falls State Park, about 400 yards from the home she shared with Blazej Kot, her husband and alleged killer, in Ithaca, N.Y., where the Ivy League school is located.

FEBRUARY 14, 2009: Nasser Talebzadeh Ordoubadi, 53

EXPERTISE: Dr. Noah is described in his American biography as a pioneer of Mind-Body-Quantum medicine who lectured in five countries and ran a successful health care center, General Medical Clinics Inc., in King County, Washington for 15 years after suffering a heart attack in 1989. Among his notable accomplishments was discovering an antitoxin treatment for bioweapons.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Natural Causes.

JULY 28, 2008: Bruce Edwards Ivins, 62

EXPERTISE: Ivins was a coinventor on two US patents for anthrax vaccine technology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: He committed suicide prior to formal charges being filed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for an alleged criminal connection to the 2001 anthrax attacks.

JULY 3, 2008: Laurent Bonomo and Gabriel Ferez, 23

EXPERTISE:

CIRCUMSTANCE: Laurent, a student in the proteins that cause infectious disease, had been stabbed 196, half of which were administered after death. Gabriel, who hoped to become an expert in eco-friendly fuels, suffered 47 separate injuries.

MARCH 10, 2008: Yongsheng Li, 29

EXPERTISE: Li was a doctoral student from China who studied receptor cells in Regents Professor David Puett's biochemistry and molecular biology laboratory.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Cause of death unknown. He was found in a pond between the Women's Sports Complex and State Botanical Gardens on South Milledge Avenue Sunday and had been missing 16 days.

OCTOBER, 2007: Dr. Mario Alberto Vargas Olvera, 52

EXPERTISE: He was a nationally and internationally recognized biologist.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Blunt-force trauma.

MAY 31, 2006: Yoram Kaufman, 57

EXPERTISE: Dr. Kaufman began working at the space flight center in 1979 and spent his entire career there as a research scientist. His primary fields were meteorology and climate change, with a specialty in analyzing aerosols—airborne solid and liquid particles in the atmosphere. In recent years, he was senior atmospheric scientist in the Earth-Sun Exploration Division and played a key role in the development of NASA's Terra Satellite, which collects data about the atmosphere.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Struck by an automobile while riding his bicycle near the Goddard Spaceflight Center, Greenbelt, MD.

MAY 22, 2006: Lee Jong-woo, 61

EXPERTISE: Lee was spearheading the WHO's fight against global threats from bird flu, AIDS and other infectious diseases. WHO director-general since 2003, Lee was his country's top international official. The affable South Korean, who liked to lighten his press conferences with jokes, was a keen sportsman with no history of ill-health, according to officials.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Embolism.

JUNE 8, 2005: Leonid Strachunsky

EXPERTISE: Strachunsky specialized in creating microbes resistant to biological weapons. Strachunsky was found dead in his hotel room in Moscow, where he'd come from Smolensk en route to the United States CIRCUMSTANCE: Struck on the head with a champagne bottle.

MAY 19, 2005: Robert J. Lull, 66

EXPERTISE: Despite his missing car and apparent credit card theft, homicide Inspector Holly Pera said investigators aren't convinced that robbery was the sole motive for Lull's killing. She said a robber would typically have taken more valuables from Lull's home than what the killer left with. Lull had been chief of nuclear medicine at San Francisco General Hospital since 1990 and served as a radiology professor at UCSF. He was past president of the American College of Nuclear Physicians and the San Francisco Medical Society and served as editor of the medical society's journal, San Francisco Medicine, from 1997 to 1999. Lee Lull said her former husband was a proponent of nuclear power and loved to debate his political positions with others.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Multiple stab wounds.

MAY 8, 2005: Todd Kauppila, 41

EXPERTISE: His death came two days after Kauppila publicly rejoiced over news that the lab's director was leaving. Kauppila was fired by director Pete Nanos on Sept. 23, 2004 following a security scandal. Kauppila said he was fired because he did not immediately return from a family vacation during a lab investigation into two classified computer disks that were thought to be missing. The apparent security breach forced Nanos to shut down the lab for several weeks. Kauppila claimed he was made a scapegoat over the disks, which investigators concluded never existed. The mistake was blamed on a clerical error. After he was fired, Kauppila accepted a job as a contractor at Bechtel Nevada Corp., a research company that works with Los Alamos and other national laboratories. He was also working on a new Scatter Reduction Grids in Megavolt Radiography focused on metal plates or crossed grids to act to stop the scattered radiation while allowing the un-scattered or direct rays to pass through with other scientists: Scott Watson (LANL, DX-3), Chuck Lebeda (LANL, XTA), Alan Tubb (LANL, DX-8), and Mike Appleby (Tecomet Thermo Electron Corp.)

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died of hemorrhagic pancreatitis at the Los Alamos hospital, according to the state medical examiner's office.

MAY 8, 2005: David Banks, 55

EXPERTISE: He was known as an Agro Genius inventing the mosquito trap used for cattle. Banks was the principal scientist with quarantine authority, Biosecurity Australia, and heavily involved in protecting Australians from unwanted diseases and pests. Most of Dr Banks' work involved preventing potentially devastating diseases making their way into Australia.

He had been through Indonesia looking at the potential for foot and mouth disease to spread through the archipelago and into Australia. Other diseases he had fought to keep out of Australian livestock herds and fruit orchards include classical swine fever, Nipah virus and Japanese encephalitis.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Banks, based in North Queensland, died in an airplane crash, along with 14 others.

APRIL 18, 2005: Dr. Douglas James Passaro, 43

EXPERTISE: Dr. Passaro was an epidemiologist who wanted to unlock the secrets of a spiral-shaped bacterium that causes stomach disease. He was a professor who challenged his students with real-life exercises in bioterrorism

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

FEBRUARY 8, 2005: Geetha Angara, 43

EXPERTISE: Angara was a senior chemist with a doctorate from New York University.

CIRCUMSTANCE: This formerly missing chemist was found in a Totowa, New Jersey water treatment plant's tank. Angara was last seen on the night of February 8 doing water quality tests at the Passaic Valley Water Commission plant in Totowa, where she worked for 12 years. Divers found her body in a 35-foot-deep sump opening at the bottom of one of the emptied tanks. Investigators are treating Angara's death as a possible homicide.

JANUARY 7, 2005: Jeong H. Im, 72

EXPERTISE: A retired research assistant professor at the University of Missouri, Columbia and a protein chemist.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Im died of multiple stab wounds to the chest before firefighters found in his body in the trunk of a burning car on the third level of the Maryland Avenue Garage.

APRIL 22, 2004: Darwin Kenneth Vest

EXPERTISE: Vest was an internationally renowned entomologist, expert on hobo spiders and other poisonous spiders and snakes.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Darwin disappeared in the early morning hours of June 3, 1999 while walking in downtown Idaho Falls, Idaho.

DECEMBER 29, 2004: Tom Thorne, 64; Beth Williams, 53

EXPERTISE: Experts on chronic wasting disease and brucellosis.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Husband and wife were killed in a snowy-weather crash on US 287 in northern Colorado.

DECEMBER 21, 2004: Taleb Ibrahim al-Daher

EXPERTISE:

CIRCUMSTANCE: The Iraqi nuclear scientist was shot dead north of Baghdad by unknown gunmen. He was on his way to work at Diyala University when armed men opened fire on his car as it was crossing a bridge in Baqouba, 57 km northeast of Baghdad. The vehicle swerved off the bridge and fell into the Khrisan River. Al-Daher, who was a professor at the local university, was removed from the submerged car and rushed to Baqouba hospital where he was pronounced dead.

NOVEMBER 2, 2004: John R. La Montagne, 61

EXPERTISE: Head of US Infectious Diseases unit under Tommie Thompson; was NIAID Deputy Director; expert in AIDS Program, Microbiology and Infectious Diseases.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Pulmonary embolism.

OCTOBER 13, 2004: Matthew Allison, 32

EXPERTISE: Allison had a college degree in molecular biology and biotechnology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Fatal explosion.

SEPTEMBER 5, 2004: Mohammed Toki Hussein al-Talakani, 40

EXPERTISE: He was a practicing nuclear physicist since 1984.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Shot dead in Mahmudiya, south of Baghdad

AUGUST 12, 2004: Professor John Clark, 52

EXPERTISE: An expert in animal science and biotechnology Clark developed techniques for the genetic modification of livestock. He played a crucial role in creating the transgenic sheep, Dolly, which earned the Roslin Institute worldwide fame. He was put in charge of a project to produce human proteins (which could be used in the treatment of human diseases) in sheep's milk. Clark and his team focused their study on the production of the alpha-I-antitrypsin protein, which is used for treatment of cystic fibrosis. Clark also founded three spinoffs: PPL Therapeutics, Rosgen and Roslin BioMed.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found hanged in his holiday home.

JULY 21, 2004: Dr. John Badwey, 54

EXPERTISE: Biochemist at Harvard Medical School specializing in infectious diseases.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Developed pneumonia-like symptoms; died two weeks later.

JULY 21, 2004: Dr. Bassem al-Mudares

EXPERTISE: He was a Ph.D. chemist.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Mutilated body was found in the city of Samarra, Iraq; he was tortured prior to death.

JULY 6, 2004: Professor Stephen Tabet, 42

EXPERTISE: He was an associate professor and epidemiologist at the University of Washington, and a world-renowned HIV doctor and researcher who worked with HIV patients in a vaccine clinical trial for the HIV Vaccine Trials Network.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

JULY 2, 2004: Dr. Larry Bustard, 53

EXPERTISE: He was a Sandia National Laboratories scientist in the Department of Energy who helped develop a foam spray to clean up congressional buildings and media sites during the anthrax scare in 2001. As an expert in bioterrorism, he co-developed technologies used against biological and chemical agents.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

JULY 1, 2004: Edward Hoffman, 62

EXPERTISE: He worked to develop the first human PET scanner in 1973 at Washington University in St. Louis.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

JUNE 29, 2004: John Mullen, 67

EXPERTISE: A nuclear research scientist with McDonnell Douglas. At the time of his death he was doing contract work for Boeing.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Poisoned with a large dose of arsenic. Investigators will not divulge how Mullen was exposed to the arsenic or where it came from.

JUNE 27, 2004: Dr. Paul Norman, 52

EXPERTISE: An expert in chemical and biological weapons, Norman traveled the world lecturing on defending against the scourge of weapons of mass destruction.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Killed when the single-engine Cessna 206 he was piloting crashed in Devon.

JUNE 24, 2004: Dr. Assefa Tulu, 45

EXPERTISE: Tulu designed a system for detecting a bioterrorism attack involving viruses or weaponized bacterium.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found face down, dead in his office. The Dallas County Epidemiologist died of a hemorrhagic stroke.

JUNE 22, 2004: Thomas Gold, 84

EXPERTISE: Author of “The Deep Hot Biosphere,” which challenges the accepted wisdom of how oil and natural gas are formed and, along the way, proposes a new theory of the beginnings of life on Earth and potentially on other planets. Gold's theory of the deep hot biosphere holds important ramifications for the possibility of life on other planets, including seemingly inhospitable planets within our own solar system. He was Professor Emeritus of Astronomy at Cornell University and was the founder (and for 20 years director) of Cornell Center for Radiophysics and Space Research. He was also involved in air accident investigations.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Heart failure.

MAY 25, 2004: Antonina Presnyakova, 46

EXPERTISE:

CIRCUMSTANCE: A Russian scientist at a former Soviet biological weapons laboratory in Siberia died after an accident with a needle laced with Ebola. Scientists and officials said the accident had raised concerns about safety and secrecy at the State Research Center of Virology and Biotechnology, known as Vector, which in Soviet times specialized in turning deadly viruses into biological weapons. Vector has been a leading recipient of aid in an American program.

MAY 14, 2004: Dr. Hank Mallove, 56

EXPERTISE: Cold Fusion; “New Energy Research.”

CIRCUMSTANCE: Blunt-force trauma to the head and neck.

MAY 5, 2004: William T. McGuire, 39

EXPERTISE: He was a NJ University Professor and senior programmer, analyst and adjunct professor at the New Jersey Institute of Technology in Newark. He emerged as one of the world's leading microbiologists who developed and oversaw multiple-level of bio-containment facilities.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Body found in three suitcases floating in Chesapeake Bay.

APRIL 12, 2004: Ilsley Ingram, 84

EXPERTISE: Ingram was Director of the Supraregional Haemophilia Reference Centre and the Supraregional Centre for the Diagnosis of Bleeding Disorders at the St. Thomas Hospital in London.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

APRIL 2004: Mohammed Munim al-Izmerly

EXPERTISE: Iraqi chemistry professor.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Blunt-force trauma to the head.

MARCH 13, 2004: Vadake Srinivasan

EXPERTISE: He was originally from India, was one of the most-accomplished and respected industrial microbiologists in academia, and held two doctorate degrees.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Car crash due to stroke.

JANUARY 24, 2004: Dr. Michael Patrick Kiley, 62

EXPERTISE: Ebola and Mad Cow expert.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Massive heart attack. Dr. Robert Shope and Dr. Kiley were working on a lab upgrade to Biosafety Level 4 installation at the UTMB Galveston Laboratory (Homeland Security Contract).

JANUARY 23, 2004: Robert Shope, 74

EXPERTISE: Virus expert.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Purportedly died as a result of complications incurred during a lung transplant, but was later purported to have died of Idiopathic Pulmonary Fibrosis (IPF), often caused by an environmental stimulus or a virus.

JANUARY 6, 2004: Dr. Richard Stevens, 54

EXPERTISE: Hematology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Suicide.

DECEMBER 18, 2003: Robert Aranosia, 61

EXPERTISE: Oakland County deputy medical examiner.

CIRCUMSTANCE: While driving south on I-75 his pickup truck went off the freeway near a bridge over the Kawkawlin River.

NOVEMBER 20, 2003: Robert Leslie Burghoff, 45

EXPERTISE: He was studying the virus plaguing cruise ships.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Hit-and-run.

OCTOBER 11, 2003: Michael Perich, 46

EXPERTISE: Vector-borne diseases.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Car accident; drowning.

JULY 18, 2003: David Kelly, 59

EXPERTISE: Kelly was the Ministry of Defense's chief scientific officer and senior adviser to the proliferation and arms control secretariat, and to the Foreign Office's non-proliferation department, as well as senior adviser on biological weapons to the UN biological weapons inspections teams from 1994 to 1999.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Slashed his own wrists while walking near his home.

JUNE 24, 2003: Dr. Leland Rickman, 47

EXPERTISE: Rickman, the incoming president of the Infectious Disease Association of California, was a multidisciplinary professor and practitioner with expertise in infectious diseases, internal medicine, epidemiology, microbiology and antibiotic utilization.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Unknown cause.

SUMMER 2003: Dr. Roger EXPERTISE: China Lake geneticist.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Execution.

APRIL 2003: Bernardo Urbani, 46

EXPERTISE: Epidemiology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: SARS.

MARCH 25, 2002: Steven Mostow, 63

EXPERTISE: Mostow was one of the country's leading infectious disease experts.

CIRCUMSTANCE: He died in a plane crash near Centennial Airport.

MARCH 24, 2002: Dr. David Wynn-Williams, 55

EXPERTISE: He was an astrobiologist with the Antarctic Astrobiology Project and the NASA Ames Research Center. He was studying the capability of microbes to adapt to environmental extremes, including the bombardment of ULTRAViolet rays and global warming.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Hit by a car while jogging near his home in Cambridge, England.

FEBRUARY 28, 2002: Tanya Holzmayer, 46; Guyang “Mathew” Huang, 38

EXPERTISE: Microbiology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Tanya Holzmayer was shot and killed by a colleague, Guyang “Mathew” Huang, who later shot himself.

FEBRUARY 12, 2002: Dr. Ian Langford, 40

EXPERTISE: Infectious diseases.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead at his blood-spattered home.

FEBRUARY 9, 2002: Dr. Vladamir “Victor” Korshunov, 56

EXPERTISE: Korshunov, inventor of a multi-purpose vaccine to combat weaponized biologicals, was head of the microbiology sub-facility at the Russian State Medical University.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Blunt-force trauma to the head.

JANUARY 2002: Dr. Ivan Glebov

EXPERTISE: Microbiology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: “Bandit attack.”

JANUARY 2002: Dr. Alexi Brushlinski

EXPERTISE: Microbiology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: “Bandit attack.”

DECEMBER 6, 2001: Dr. Benito Que, 52

EXPERTISE: Hematology.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Cardiac arrest.

NOVEMBER 21 OR DECEMBER 23, 2001: Dr. Vladimer Pasechnik, 64

EXPERTISE: Pasechnik was involved in the exhumation of 10 London victims of the 1919 Type “A” flu epidemic. He was also heavily involved in DNA sequencing research. Pasechnik was the boss of William C. Patrick III who holds 5 patents on the militarized anthrax used by the United States and is now a private biowarfare consultant to the military and CIA. Patrick developed the process by which anthrax spores could be concentrated at the level of one trillion spores per gram. The anthrax utilized in the mail-borne attacks in the United States was concentrated at one trillion spores per gram...

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead in Wiltshire, England, a village near his home. Two different dates have been reported: November 21 and December 23. Cause of death: stroke.

DECEMBER 16, 2001: Dr. Don Wiley, 57

EXPERTISE: Molecular Biologist with Howard Hughes Medical Institute, Harvard University; top Deadly Contagious Virus expert.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Abandoned rental car was found on the Hernando de Soto Bridge outside Memphis, TN. He was involved in research on DNA sequencing, and was last seen around midnight on November 16, leaving the St. Jude's Children's Research Advisory Dinner at The Peabody Hotel in Memphis, TN. Associates attending the dinner said he showed no signs of intoxication. Workers at a hydroelectric plant in Louisiana found the body of Don Wiley on Thursday, about 300 miles south of where the molecular biologist was last seen. On January 14, 2002, Shelby County Medical Examiner O.C. Smith announced that his department had ruled Dr. Wiley's death to be "accidental," the result of massive injuries suffered in a fall from the Hernando de Soto Bridge. Smith said there were paint marks on Wiley's rental car similar to the paint used on construction signs on the bridge, and that the car's right front hubcap was missing. There has been no report as to which construction signs Dr. Wiley hit.

DECEMBER 14, 2001: Dr. Set Van Nguyen, 44

EXPERTISE: Working on a vaccine to protect against biological weapons, or perhaps on a weapon. In January, 2001, the magazine Nature published information that two scientists, Dr. Ron Jackson and Dr. Ian Ramshaw, using genetic manipulation and DNA sequencing, had created an incredibly virulent form of mouse pox, a cousin of smallpox and Dr. Nguyen had worked for 15 years at the same Australian facility. On Friday, November 2, The Washington Post reported:

Officials are now scrambling to determine how a quiet, 61-year-old Vietnamese immigrant, riding the subway each day to and from her job in a hospital stockroom, was exposed to the deadly anthrax spores that killed her this week. They worry because there is no obvious connection to the factors common to earlier anthrax exposures and deaths: no clear link to the mail or to the media.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead in the airlock of a walk-in refrigerator in a laboratory in Victoria State, Australia. The room was full of deadly gas which had leaked from a liquid nitrogen cooling system. The room was vented.

DECEMBER 10, 2001: Dr. David Schwartz, 57

EXPERTISE: He was well-respected in biophysics, and regarded as an authority on DNA sequencing.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Murdered by stabbing with what appeared to be a sword in rural home Loudon County, Virginia. His daughter, who identifies herself as a pagan high priestess, and three of her fellow pagans have been charged. Three teens that were into the occult were charged with murder in the slashing death.

NOVEMBER 24, 2001: Avishai Berkman, 50; Amiramp Eldor, 59; Yaacov Matzner, 54

EXPERTISE: Five microbiologists in this list of the first eight people that died mysteriously in airplane crashes worked on cutting edge microbiology research; and, four of the five were doing virtually identical research; research that has global political and financial significance.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Another airplane crash kills 3 scientists. At about the time of the Black Sea crash, Israeli journalists had been sounding the alarm that two Israeli microbiologists had been murdered, allegedly by terrorists; including the head of the Hematology department at Israel's Ichilov Hospital, and directors of the Tel Aviv Public Health Department and Hebrew University School of Medicine.

NOVEMBER 6, 2001: Jeffrey Paris Wall, 41

EXPERTISE: Mr. Wall had studied at the University of California, Los Angeles. He was a biomedical expert who held a medical degree, and he also specialized in patent and intellectual property.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Body was found sprawled next to a three-story parking structure near his office.

OCTOBER 4, 2001: Five Unnamed Microbiologists

EXPERTISE: Three scientists were experts in medical research or public health. The plane is believed by many in Israel to have had as many as four or five passengers who were microbiologists. Both Israel and Novosibirsk are homes for cutting-edge microbiological research. Novosibirsk is known as the scientific capital of Siberia. There are over 50 research facilities there, and 13 full universities for a population of only 2.5 million people.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Five unnamed microbiologists on a plane that was brought down by a missile near the Black Sea. Traveling from Israel to Russia; business not disclosed.

MAY 7, 2001: Professor Janusz Jeljaszewicz

EXPERTISE: He was an expert in Staphylococci and Staphylococcal infections. His scientific interests and achievements were in the mechanism of action and biological properties of staphylococcal toxins, and included the immunomodulatory properties and experimental treatment of tumors by Propionibacterium.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Cause of death not disclosed.

DECEMBER 25, 2000: Linda Reese, 52

EXPERTISE: Dr. Reese was a Microbiologist working with victims of meningitis.

Circumstance: Died three days after she studied a sample from Tricia Zailo, 19, a Fairfield, N.J., resident and sophomore at Michigan State University. Zailo died December 18.

JULY 16, 2000: Mike Thomas, 35

EXPERTISE: He was a microbiologist at the Crestwood Medical Center in Huntsville.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died a few days after examining a sample taken from a 12-year-old girl who was diagnosed with meningitis and survived.

APRIL 15, 2000: Walter W. Shervington, M.D., 62

EXPERTISE: He was an extensive writer, lecturer and researcher about mental health and AIDS in the African-American community.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died of cancer at Tulane Medical Hospital.

SEPTEMBER 1998: Jonathan Mann, 51

EXPERTISE: He was founding director of the World Health Organization's global Aids program and founded Project SIDA in Zaire, the most comprehensive Aids research effort in Africa at the time, and in 1986 he joined the WHO to lead the global response against Aids. He became director of WHO's global program on Aids which later became the UNAids program. He then became director of the Francois-Xavier Bagnoud Center for Health and Human Rights, which was set up at Harvard School of Public Health in 1993. He caused controversy earlier in 1998 in the media when he accused the US National Institutes of Health of violating human rights by failing to act quickly on developing Aids vaccines.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Swissair Flight 111 over Canada.

JULY 10, 1998: Elizabeth A. Rich, M.D., 46

EXPERTISE: She was an associate professor with tenure in the pulmonary division of the Department of Medicine at CWRU and University Hospitals of Cleveland. She was also a member of the executive committee for the Center for AIDS Research and directed the Bio-safety Level 3 facility, a specialized laboratory for the handling of HIV, virulent TB bacteria, and other infectious agents.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Traffic accident while visiting family in Tennessee.

DECEMBER 25, 1997: Sidney Harshman, 67

EXPERTISE: He was a professor of microbiology and immunology. He was the world's leading expert on staphylococcal alpha toxins.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Complications associated with diabetes.

Mark Purdey, his Lawyer, and Veterinarian working with Purdey Die:

EXPERTISE: Creutzfeldt–Jakob disease (CJD) doctor Mark Purdey was familiar with the expression “abnormal brain protein.” Before Dr. Purdey’s death, he speculated that Dr. C. Bruton might have known more than what was revealed in his paper before he was killed.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Purdey’s house was burned down, his lawyer on mad cow issues was driven off the road and died and the veterinarian in the UK BSE inquiry also died in a mysterious car crash. CJD specialist Dr C. Bruton was killed in a car crash just before he went public with a new research paper. The veterinarian on the case also died in a car crash. Purdey’s new lawyer, too, had a car accident, but not fatal.

MAY 7, 1996: Dr. Tsunao Saitoh, 46

EXPERTISE: Abnormal proteins in Alzheimer’s disease.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Shot and killed, along with his young daughter, in LaJolla, California. He was dead behind the wheel of the car, the side window had been shot out, and the door was open. His daughter appeared to have tried to run away and she was shot dead, also. Yakuza-style hit.

1995: Dr. Jawad Al Aubaidi

EXPERTISE: A graduate doctor from Cornell, he was hired to head the mycoplasma bio-warfare research project. One of Dr. Aubaidi’s projects was filling payloads of scud missiles with mycoplasma strains.

CIRCUMSTANCE: He was hit by a truck in his native Iraq while changing a flat tire.

1994: Dr. C. Bruton

EXPERTISE: A CJD specialist who had recently produced a paper on a new strain of CJD.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Car crash.

MAY 19, 1994: Jose Trias

CIRCUMSTANCE: Trias and his wife were murdered in their Chevy Chase, Maryland home. They met with a friend, a journalist, the day before their murder and told him of their plan to expose Howard Hughes Medical Institute (HHMI) funding of “special ops” research. Grant money that goes to HHMI is allegedly diverted to black ops research projects.

MARCONI SCIENTISTS MYSTERY

COMPILED BY RAYMOND A. ROBINSON

ACCORDING to Raymond A. Robinson, author of The Alien Intent, “over two-dozen science graduates and experts working for Marconi or Plessey Defense Systems died in mysterious circumstances, most appearing to be 'suicides.' The Ministry of Defense (MOD) denied these scientists had been involved in classified Star Wars Projects and that the deaths were in any way connected.”

MARCH 1982: Professor Keith Bowden, 46

EXPERTISE: computer programmer and scientist at Essex University engaged in work for Marconi, who was hailed as an expert on super computers and computer-controlled aircraft.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Fatal car crash when his vehicle went out of control across a dual carriageway and plunged onto a disused railway line. Police maintained he had been drinking but family and friends all denied the allegation.

CORONER'S VERDICT: ACCIDENT

APRIL 1983: Lt-Colonel Anthony Godley, 49

EXPERTISE: Head of the Work Study Unit at the Royal College of Military Science.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Disappeared mysteriously in April 1983 without explanation.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Presumed dead.

MARCH 1985: Roger Hill, 49

EXPERTISE: Radar designer and draughtsman with Marconi.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died by a shotgun blast at home.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

NOVEMBER 19, 1985: Jonathan Wash, 29

EXPERTISE: Digital communications expert who had worked at GEC and at British Telecom's secret research centre at Martlesham Heath, Suffolk.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died as a result of falling from a hotel room in Abidjan, West Africa, while working for British Telecom. He had expressed fears that his life was in danger.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

AUGUST 4, 1986: Vimal Dajibhai, 24

EXPERTISE: Computer software engineer with Marconi, responsible for testing computer control systems of Tigerfish and Stingray torpedoes at Marconi Underwater Systems at Croxley Green, Hertfordshire.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Death-by-fall from Clifton Suspension Bridge (74m - 240ft.), Bristol. Police report on the body mentioned a needle-sized puncture wound on the left buttock, but this was later dismissed as being a result of the fall. Dajibhai had been looking forward to starting a new job in the City of London and friends had confirmed that there was no reason for him to commit suicide. At the time of his death he was in the last week of his work with Marconi.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

OCTOBER 1986: Arshad Sharif, 26

EXPERTISE: Reported to have been working on systems for the detection of submarines by satellite.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died as a result of placing a ligature around his neck, tying the other end to a tree and then driving off in his car with the accelerator pedal jammed down. His unusual death was complicated by several issues: Sharif lived near Vimal Dajibhai in Stanmore, Middlesex, he committed suicide in Bristol and, inexplicably, had spent the last night of his life in a rooming house. He had paid for his accommodation in cash and was seen to have a bundle of high-denomination banknotes in his possession. While the police were told of the banknotes, no mention was made of them at the inquest and they were never found. In addition, most of the other guests at the rooming house worked at British Aerospace prior to working for Marconi, Sharif had also worked at British Aerospace on guided weapons technology.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

JANUARY 1987: Richard Pugh, 37

EXPERTISE: MOD computer consultant and digital communications expert.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead in his flat in with his feet bound and a plastic bag over his head. Rope was tied around his body, coiling four times around his neck.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Accident.

JANUARY 12, 1987: Dr. John Brittan, 52

EXPERTISE: Scientist formerly engaged in top secret work at the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham, Oxfordshire, and later deployed in a research department at the MOD.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Death by carbon monoxide poisoning in his own garage, shortly after returning from a trip to the US in connection with his work.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Accident.

FEBRUARY 1987: David Skeels, 43

EXPERTISE: Engineer with Marconi.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead in his car with a hosepipe connected to the exhaust.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

FEBRUARY 1987: Victor Moore, 46

EXPERTISE: Design Engineer with Marconi Space and Defense Systems.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died from an overdose.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

FEBRUARY 22, 1987: Peter Peapell, 46

EXPERTISE: Scientist at the Royal College of Military Science. He had been working on testing titanium for its resistance to explosives and the use of computer analysis of signals from metals.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead allegedly from carbon monoxide poisoning, in his Oxfordshire garage. The circumstances of his death raised some elements of doubt. His wife had found him on his back with his head parallel to the rear car bumper and his mouth in line with the exhaust pipe, with the car engine running. Police were apparently baffled as to how he could have maneuvered into the position in which he was found.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

APRIL 1987: George Kountis age unknown.

EXPERTISE: Systems Analyst at Bristol Polytechnic.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Drowned the same day as Shani Warren (see below) - as the result of a car accident, his upturned car being found in the River Mersey, Liverpool.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Misadventure. (Kountis' sister called for a fresh inquest as she thought 'things didn't add up.')

APRIL10, 1987: Shani Warren, 26

EXPERTISE: Personal assistant in a company called Micro Scope, which was taken over by GEC Marconi less than four weeks after her death.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found drowned in 45cm. (18in) of water, not far from the site of David Greenhalgh's death fall. Warren died exactly one week after the death of Stuart Gooding and serious injury to Greenhalgh. She was found gagged with a noose around her neck. Her feet were also bound and her hands tied behind her back.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open. (It was said that Warren had gagged herself, tied her feet with rope, then tied her hands behind her back and hobbled to the lake on stiletto heels to drown herself.)

APRIL 10, 1987: Stuart Gooding, 23

EXPERTISE: Postgraduate research student at the Royal College of Military Science.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Fatal car crash while on holiday in Cyprus. The death occurred at the same time as college personnel were carrying out exercises on Cyprus.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Accident.

APRIL 24, 1987: Mark Wisner, 24

EXPERTISE: Software engineer at the MOD.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead on in a house shared with two colleagues. He was found with a plastic sack around his head and several feet of cling film around his face. The method of death was almost identical to that of Richard Pugh some three months earlier.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Accident.

MARCH 30, 1987: David Sands, 37

EXPERTISE: Senior scientist working for Easams of Camberley, Surrey, a sister company to Marconi. Dr. John Brittan had also worked at Camberley.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Fatal car crash when he allegedly made a sudden U-turn on a dual carriageway while on his way to work, crashing at high speed into a disused cafeteria. He was found still wearing his seat belt and it was discovered that the car had been carrying additional petrol cans. None of the 'normal' reasons for a possible suicide could be found.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

MAY 3, 1987: Michael Baker, 22

EXPERTISE: Digital communications expert working on a defense project at Plessey; part-time member of Signals Corps SAS.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Fatal accident when his car crashed through a barrier near Poole in Dorset.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Misadventure.

JUNE 1987: Jennings, Frank, 60.

EXPERTISE: Electronic Weapons Engineer with Plessey.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead from a heart attack.

NO INQUEST

JANUARY 1988: Russell Smith, 23

EXPERTISE: Laboratory technician with the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, Essex.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Died as a result of a cliff fall at Boscastle in Cornwall.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

MARCH 25, 1988: Trevor Knight, 52

EXPERTISE: Computer engineer with Marconi Space and Defense Systems in Stanmore, Middlesex.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead at his home in Harpenden, Hertfordshire at the wheel of his car with a hosepipe connected to the exhaust. A St. Alban's coroner said that Knight's woman friend, Miss Narmada Thanki (who also worked with him at Marconi) had found three suicide notes left by him which made clear his intentions. Miss Thanki had mentioned that Knight disliked his work but she did not detect any depression that would have driven him to suicide.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

AUGUST 1988: Alistair Beckham, 50

EXPERTISE: Software engineer with Plessey Defense Systems.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found dead after being electrocuted in his garden shed with wires connected to his body.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open.

AUGUST 22, 1988: Peter Ferry, 60

EXPERTISE: Retired Army Brigadier and an Assistant Marketing Director with Marconi.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Found on 22nd or 23rd August 1988 electrocuted in his company flat with electrical leads in his mouth.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Open

SEPTEMBER 1988: Andrew Hall, 33

EXPERTISE: Engineering Manager with British Aerospace.

CIRCUMSTANCE: Carbon monoxide poisoning in a car with a hosepipe connected to the exhaust.

CORONER'S VERDICT: Suicide.

GIANT BREACH IN EARTH'S MAGNETIC FIELD DISCOVERED

BY

DR. TONY PHILLIPS

DECEMBER 16, 2008

NASA's five THEMIS spacecraft have discovered a breach in Earth's magnetic field ten times larger than anything previously thought to exist. Solar wind can flow in through the opening to "load up" the magnetosphere for powerful geomagnetic storms. But the breach itself is not the biggest surprise. Researchers are even more amazed at the strange and unexpected way it forms, overturning long-held ideas of space physics.

"At first I didn't believe it," says THEMIS project scientist David Sibeck of the Goddard Space Flight Center. "This finding fundamentally alters our understanding of the solar wind-magnetosphere interaction."

The magnetosphere is a bubble of magnetism that surrounds Earth and protects us from solar wind. Exploring the bubble is a key goal of the THEMIS mission, launched in February 2007. The big discovery came on June 3, 2007, when the five probes serendipitously flew through the breach just as it was opening. Onboard sensors recorded a torrent of solar wind particles streaming into the magnetosphere, signaling an event of unexpected size and importance.

"The opening was huge—four times wider than Earth itself," says Wenhui Li, a space physicist at the University of New Hampshire who has been analyzing the data. Li's colleague Jimmy Raeder, also of New Hampshire, says "10²⁷ particles per second were flowing into the magnetosphere—that's a 1 followed by 27 zeros. This kind of influx is an order of magnitude greater than what we thought was possible."

The event began with little warning when a gentle gust of solar wind delivered a bundle of magnetic fields from the Sun to Earth. Like an octopus wrapping its tentacles around a big clam, solar magnetic fields draped themselves around the magnetosphere and cracked it open. The cracking was accomplished by means of a process called "magnetic reconnection." High above Earth's poles, solar and terrestrial magnetic fields linked up (reconnected) to form conduits for solar wind. Conduits over the Arctic and Antarctic quickly expanded; within minutes they overlapped over Earth's equator to create the biggest magnetic breach ever recorded by Earth-orbiting spacecraft.

The size of the breach took researchers by surprise. "We've seen things like this before," says Raeder, "but never on such a large scale. The entire day-side of the magnetosphere was open to the solar wind."

The circumstances were even more surprising. Space physicists have long believed that holes in Earth's magnetosphere open only in response to solar magnetic fields that point south. The great breach of June 2007, however, opened in response to a solar magnetic field that pointed north.

"To the lay person, this may sound like a quibble, but to a space physicist, it is almost seismic," says Sibeck. "When I tell my colleagues, most react with skepticism, as if I'm trying to convince them that the sun rises in the west."

Here is why they can't believe their ears: The solar wind presses against Earth's magnetosphere almost directly above the equator where our planet's magnetic field points north. Suppose a bundle of solar magnetism comes along, and it points north, too. The two fields should reinforce one another, strengthening Earth's magnetic defenses and slamming the door shut on the solar wind. In the language of space physics, a north-pointing solar magnetic field is called a "northern IMF" and it is synonymous with shields up!

"So, you can imagine our surprise when a northern IMF came along and shields went down instead," says Sibeck. "This completely overturns our understanding of things."

Northern IMF events don't actually trigger geomagnetic storms, notes Raeder, but they do set the stage for storms by loading the magnetosphere with plasma. A loaded magnetosphere is primed for auroras, power outages, and other disturbances that can result when, say, a CME (coronal mass ejection) hits.

The years ahead could be especially lively. Raeder explains: "We're entering Solar Cycle 24. For reasons not fully understood, CMEs in even-numbered solar cycles (like 24) tend to hit Earth with a leading edge that is magnetized north. Such a CME should open a breach and load the magnetosphere with plasma just before the storm gets underway. It's the perfect sequence for a really big event."

Sibeck agrees. "This could result in stronger geomagnetic storms than we have seen in many years."

THE SEWAGE ENGINEER, THE ‘WOW! SIGNAL’ AND THE PROOF THAT THERE REALLY IS LIFE ON MARS

BY

MICHAEL BROOKS

THE DAILY MAIL

FEBRUARY 7, 2010

A LIENS are back in fashion. Even the Royal Society, the most level-headed of scientific establishments, is getting in on the action. Last month it hosted a meeting about the prospects of finding or making contact with extraterrestrials.

But everyone seems to have forgotten something. Reputable scientists say we have already found aliens—and heard from them, too. Did no one tell you?

Gilbert Levin, the man who found life on Mars, is now in his 80s but his eyes still sparkle whenever he talks about the day NASA’s Viking probe touched down on the Martian Plains of Gold. It was July 20, 1976.

“Oh, it was very exciting,” he told me when I visited his offices in Beltsville, Maryland, a few years ago. A grin broke out across his face. “Everything went just right.”

That includes the experiment he designed to look for the signs of life. Levin is a sewage engineer by training, and it was this that led him to invent a novel way to detect microbes.

His trick was to put out radioactive food and watch for wisps of radioactive gas belching out as a by-product of microbe digestion. NASA saw it as an ideal way to test for life in Martian soil.

Levin's experiment worked perfectly. Before launch, the apparatus successfully detected the scarce life in soil samples taken from the Californian desert. Two hundred million miles from Earth, it worked again: Levin's instrument got another positive result from Martian soil samples.

Levin went out to buy champagne and cigars. A party was in full swing when renowned astronomer Carl Sagan phoned Levin to offer his congratulations. Levin remembers it as the happiest day of his life.

His unhappiest came just two days later when the Viking mission leader announced they had failed to find life on Mars.

A colleague dug Levin in the ribs. "He said, "God damn it, Gil, will you get up and tell them you detected life?" " But Levin, cowed by his relatively junior status, did not dare.

The problem was straightforward. Another of the instruments on the Viking mission had searched for traces of carbon in Martian soil and found none. With no carbon, the mission chiefs reasoned, there could be no life. The result of Levin's experiment must have been a mistake, they said. Carl Sagan called again—to withdraw his congratulations.

The trouble is, the mission chiefs had been misled.

Ten years after the Viking probe landed on Mars, a scientist called John Milan Lavoie Junior contacted Levin and told him he had worked on the instrument that was supposed to look for carbon. No one had admitted it at the time, but the instrument had never worked properly, he said. Levin told a few people but no one seemed to care.

A further 15 years passed and another of the instrument's engineers, Arthur Lafleur, came forward and told the same story. On Earth, before the mission had blasted off for Mars, the instrument had been given relatively large quantities of carbon to detect. It had failed but the scientists had kept quiet about it.

The final nail in the instrument's coffin came in 2006 when the prestigious US National Academy of Sciences published a devastating critique of it. Their report said it had not been sensitive enough to rule out the existence of carbon-based molecules in Martian soil.

You would think that, given all this, Levin would have been vindicated by now. In fact, he has been labeled a troublemaker. At the party to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Viking mission, he caused a bit of a scene by suggesting that NASA revisit his results. When the 30th anniversary party came around, he simply wasn't invited.

A growing minority of scientists are now taking Levin's claims seriously, saying that Viking may well have discovered life. But most shrug their shoulders and say it was all too long ago to be sure.

Which brings us on to that alien signal—if that is what it was. It came on AUGUST 15, 1977, the night before Elvis Presley died.

The Ohio radio telescope that picked up the signal was called the Big Ear. At 11.16pm, it recorded a single pulse of radiation that seemed to come from somewhere in the constellation of Sagittarius.

It is now known as the "Wow! Signal." That's what Jerry Ehman, the man who spotted it in the computer printout, scrawled in the margin. He had good reason to do so: the characteristics of the signal were exactly what alien-hunters had been told to look out for.

Eighteen years previously, researchers had put themselves in ET's shoes and tried to work out the best way to attract our attention. They decided that the most noteworthy signal would be a radio signal at exactly 1,420 MHz. This is the vibration frequency of hydrogen, the most common molecule in the universe.

Everyone agreed that it would be the most widely intelligible way of saying, "We're here—are you?" When the Wow! Signal came in; its frequency was 1,420 MHz...

I have never met Jerry Ehman but we have exchanged emails and talked on the phone. He got in touch with me—he had heard that I was looking for the latest thinking on what the signal meant.

His first email told me everything I needed to know. "I am still waiting for a definitive explanation that makes sense," it said.

Ehman and his colleagues have explored every possibility: military transmissions, reflections of Earth signals off asteroids or satellites, natural emissions from stars, but nothing fits.

The strangest thing of all is that it came from a blank patch of sky. When Ehman and his colleagues looked at the exact location of the source, it turned out to be devoid of stars. Ehman's only thought is that it could have been beamed from a spaceship travelling through the universe in search of some sign of life.

Not that he is totally convinced it really was aliens but he has never come up with a better explanation.

"It had all the earmarks of being a signal from an intelligent civilization," Ehman told me on the phone. "There it was, like it was saying, 'Here I am—can you see me?'" But, he concedes, we may never have proof one way or the other.

Ehman was inspired to become an astronomer after coming across a Reader's Digest article by Frank Drake, one of the first scientists to calculate our chances of finding extraterrestrial life. I was there when Drake spoke at the Royal Society meeting last month.

He told the audience that, given the sheer vastness of the universe and the relative weakness of our technology, the chances of finding life or making contact with an alien civilization are unbelievably slim. In other words, it might happen just once in a lifetime.

Which made me wonder: have we been both extraordinarily lucky and extraordinarily careless? It seems we have had two chances, and missed them both.

A BLUEPRINT FOR A QUANTUM PROPULSION MACHINE

TECHNOLOGY REVIEW

PUBLISHED BY MIT

DECEMBER 9, 2009

PUSH on the electromagnetic fields in the quantum vacuum and you should get an equal and opposite force.

The quantum vacuum has fascinated physicists ever since Hendrik Casimir and Dirk Polder suggested in 1948 that it would exert a force on a pair of narrowly separated conducting plates. Their idea was eventually confirmed when the force was measured in 1997.

In recent years, a new way of thinking about the quantum vacuum has emerged which has vastly more potential. And today, one physicist describes how it could be used to create propulsion.

Before we discuss that, let's track back a little. According to quantum mechanics, any vacuum will be filled with electromagnetic waves leaping in and out of existence. It turns out that these waves can have various measurable effects, such as the Casimir-Polder force.

The new approach focuses on the momentum associated with these electromagnetic fields rather than the force they exert. The question is whether it is possible to modify this momentum because, if you can, you should receive an equal and opposite kick. That's what rocket scientists call propulsion.

Today, Alex Feigel at the Soreq Nuclear Research Center, a government lab in Yavne Israel, suggests an entirely new way to modify the momentum of the quantum vacuum and how this can be exploited to generate propulsion.

Feigel's approach combines two well-established ideas. The first is the Lorentz force experienced by a charged particle in electric and magnetic fields that are crossed. The second is the magneto-electric effect--the phenomenon in which an external magnetic field induces a polarized internal electric field in certain materials and vice versa.

The question that Feigel asks is in what circumstances the electromagnetic fields in a quantum vacuum can exert a Lorentz force. The answer is that the quantum vacuum constantly interacts with magneto-electric materials generating Lorentz forces; most of the time, however, these forces sum to zero.

However, Feigel says there are four cases in which the forces do not sum to zero. Two of these are already known, for example confining the quantum field between two plates, which excludes longer wavelength waves.

But Feigel says the two others offer entirely new ways to exploit the quantum vacuum using magneto-electric nanoparticles to interact with the electromagnetic fields it contains.

The first method is to rapidly aggregate a number of magneto-electric nanoparticles, a process which influences the boundary conditions for higher frequency electromagnetic waves, generating a force.

The second is simply to rotate a group of magneto-electric nanoparticles, which also generates a Lorentz force.

Either way, the result is a change in velocity. Feigel says that the "mechanical action of a quantum vacuum on magneto-electric objects may be observable and have a significant value.

The beauty of Feigel's idea is that it can be easily tested. He suggests building an addressable array of magneto-electric nanoparticles, perhaps made of a material such as FeGaO₃ which has a magneto-electric constant of 10^{-4} in a weak magnetic field.

These nanoparticles simply have to be rotated in the required way to generate a force. Feigel calls it a magneto-electric quantum wheel.

Of course, nobody is getting a free lunch here. "Although the proposed engine will consume energy for manipulation of the particles, the propulsion will occur without any loss of mass," says Feigel. He even suggests, with masterful understatement, that this might have practical implications.

So here is a high-risk idea with a huge potential payoff. The question is: who has the balls to try it?

MINORITY REPORT

by

Scott Frank

REVISED DRAFT

May 16, 2001

BLACK

We hear a woman WHISPER:

WOMAN'S VOICE
Murderer.

FADE IN: A SERIES OF IMAGES

Some coming at us fast and furious, some slowed down, and some still as photographs, none making sense to us yet:

A HAND picks up a PAIR OF SCISSORS... THE FACE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN. The SCISSORS POKE THROUGH THE EYE. A NEWSPAPER BOY rides by on a recumbent bike. A NEWS PAPER HITS THE GROUND. SNIP go the scissors and now we see...

A MAN'S face watching us -- muscular, handsome -- with a KID'S FACE beside his own. The same man's face with the kid's face on the other side of him, now facing backwards. SNIP go the scissors and we now see...

A WOMAN admires herself in a mirror. WATER runs into a BATHTUB. A HAND REACHES FOR A DOORKNOB. WE MOVE THROUGH IT, leaving the DOOR OPEN BEHIND US. A FLIGHT OF STAIRS. SNIP go the scissors and we now see...

The woman UNBUTTONS HER BLOUSE as THE MAN -- now half-nude, WATCHES from a doorway. We START UP THE STAIRS. A DOOR at the top, slightly ajar. SNIP go the scissors and we see...

The WOMAN at the mirror. The MAN comes up behind her and enfolds her in his arms. SNIP and we see...

A KISS on the NECK. SNIP. SNIP. And we CONTINUE ON UP THE STAIRS. We're at the door now. SNIP. A HAND now dips into the rush of WATER from the spout, testing it. SNIP SNIP SNIP and we see...

THE WOMAN smiling into the MIRROR, pleased with her reflection. SNIP SNIP and we see...

The WOMAN and the MAN on the bed making love. ANOTHER MAN'S face rising over the bed now as he watches. The WOMAN looks over her lover's shoulder, sees the face and sits up...

The man by the bed is smaller than the lover, older, but ENRAGED as he now raises THE SCISSORS and we PULL AWAY TO REVEAL:

That we're looking at the image as it plays out inside the dark pupil of a HUMAN EYE. The eye BLINKS and now we go...

WIDER, we're looking now at A FEMALE FACE staring up at us -- eyes blue as gas flames -- floating in some sort of WHITE LIQUID as she looks up at us and speaks:

FEMALE FACE

Howard --

PULLING BACK STILL FURTHER we see A MALE FACE next to her:

MALE FACE

I forgot my glasses.

THE SCISSORS SNIP.

MALE FACE

You know how blind I am without them.

WE SEE THE WOMAN IN THE BEDROOM

As she SCREAMS and the man stabs her in the throat with the scissors as now the MUSCULAR MAN gets out of the bed, tries to run for the safety of the bathroom, gets stabbed in the back. QUICK FLASHES of the scissors as the muscular man goes down.

The bloody scissors bounce open onto the bathroom floor.

Now BLOOD-RED water begins to overflow onto the floor. We follow the water through the cracks and lines in the tile, to an OUTSTRETCHED HAND, still, striped with blood. We then...

DISSOLVE TO:

THE THREE FACES

As they shut their eyes, begin to slowly sink back down into the white liquid as they all whisper together:

THE THREE OF THEM

Murderer.

As their faces disappear into the milky void, we HEAR A SIREN ALARM and now see...

A RED BALL - ANALYTICAL ROOM

Rolling fast down a chute from the top right CORNER OF FRAME.
And now another RED BALL rolls down from the top left corner.
The motion is slowed for an instant so that we can see NAMES etched into it: SARAH MARKS. And then: DONALD DOOBIN.

It rolls past and now A SECOND RED BALL rolls right at us from the top left. The motion on this one is slowed for an instant so that we can read the name etched into the side:
"HOWARD MARKS". Just as it rolls over to us, we now see...

INSIDE PRECRIME HEADQUARTERS - MAIN FLOOR

Slides open, revealing senior detective JOHN ANDERTON. Mid thirties, military haircut. He pushes through a second, pressurized door, leading us past a series of glassed-in offices and viewbicles.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

ANDERTON

Okay, Jad, what's coming?

JAD

Red Ball -- double homicide: one male, one female. Killer's male, white, 40's.

JAD (28, African- American), the main dispatcher, one of six TEAM MEMBERS crowded around the computer display. They back off so Anderton can take a look.

JAD

We need confirmation on the time frame. Location still uncertain. Remote witnesses are hooked in...

ANDERTON

Case #1108, previsualized by the Precogs and recorded on holoshpere by Precrime's q-stacks.

(to a screen)

My fellow witnesses for case #1108 are Dr. Katherine James and Chief Justice Frank Pollard.

ON A VIDEO SCREEN

As a split-image emerges of James and Pollard in their respective offices.

ANDERTON

Have the witnesses previewed and validated #1108?

INT. POLLARD'S OFFICE - MORNING

As an elderly man, retired CHIEF JUSTICE FRANK POLLARD stares at a video monitor showing the Prevision.

POLLARD

Affirmative. Validated.

INT. DR. JAMES' OFFICE - MORNING

As KATHERINE JAMES, a bespectacled, middle-aged criminal psychologist yawns, a big cup of coffee in one hand.

JAMES

Go get him.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Anderton pulls a small disc from his pocket.

ANDERTON

Stand by...

The men all share knowing glances as he inserts the disc into a player and we now hear a STRAUSS SYMPHONY OVER...

Anderton slips on an eyepiece and special finger gloves, then moves his hands over the huge PREVISION SCREEN, "conducting" the array of images we saw during the opening. The screen responds to wherever he looks, or whatever he touches...

ANDERTON

Alright, Howard, where are you...

INT. SUBURBAN D.C. KITCHEN - MORNING

We HEAR BIRDS CHIRPING, someone HUMMING softly, then...

A WOMEN'S VOICE

Breakfast!

SARAH, the woman we just saw murdered, cooks breakfast, bathed in a halo of bright sunshine that streams in from a window. She looks up, smiles. A beautiful day outside.

VOICE

For score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this, um...

She sets two plates of scrambled eggs down on the table where her SON -- 10 -- sits reciting the Gettysburg Address as he cuts out A CARDBOARD MASK with a pair of SCISSORS, poking through Lincoln's eyes to make holes he can see through.

SARAH

Continent...

SON

Continent. A new nation, conceived in liberty...

SARAH

Howard?! Breakfast!

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

Everybody in the room working on the vision. A team of researchers study the buildings. The trees in the area.

JAD

I show eight "Howard Marks" inside the District. Sorting by race and

On another screen, Driver's license photos now begin to FLASH PAST.

ANDERTON
Let's see if we can get lucky...

He ZOOMS IN on the image of a NEWSPAPER. The headline reads PRESIDENT SUPPORTS PRECRIME AMENDMENT...

ANDERTON
Come on...

EXT. BROWNSTONE IN GEORGETOWN - MORNING

As the SPRINKLERS COME ON just as HOWARD MARKS, the older man we saw stab his wife, steps out of the house.

VOICE
Morning, Mr. Marks.

He looks over as A PAPERBOY waves from a recumbent bicycle and tosses A NEWSPAPER. As it flies at us...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

The image auto-enhances as we zoom in closer to the newspaper sitting on the KITCHEN TABLE. We see AN ADDRESS LABEL with the name HOWARD MARKS...

EXT. BROWNSTONE - MORNING

As the paper lands on the lawn, starts to get soaked by the sprinklers. Howard frowns at the kid, reaches through the water to grab it...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Anderton sees that the INK ON THE WET ADDRESS LABEL has run, blurring the information. Jad shakes his head.

JAD
We can't grab it...

ANDERTON
Run the subscription list...

EXT. BROWNSTONE - MORNING

As A MOUNTED POLICEMAN rides by. Howard smiles, turns and starts to head back inside when he notices something across the street...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Anderton focuses now on the "murder room". He ZOOMS IN on a blurry nightstand clock. A stack of books blocks it... He ZOOMS OUT THE WINDOW...

ANDERTON

I've got north facing shadows out the window of the building behind.
I need trig and image analysis...

VECTORS from the shadows appear on the screen now.

JAD

Workin' it.

Anderton turns and looks at THREE SCREENS showing the male faces and the female face floating in the liquid we saw in the beginning.

ANDERTON

Morning, detectives.

The faces don't respond. Just stare into the void. Anderton touches the screen and now the FEMALE seems to turn and look at him.

EXT. BROWNSTONE - MORNING

Howard Marks pauses, notices A MAN -- handsome, muscular, practically bursting out of a nice suit -- loitering in front of the small park across the street. Howard studies the man a moment as Sarah appears in the doorway behind him, sees him looking at the man.

SARAH

Breakfast, honey.

And now the Man across the street looks this way, sees Howard, sees Sarah right behind him and quickly moves off.

HOWARD

He looks familiar.

SARAH

Who?

HOWARD

The man across the street. I've seen him before...

SARAH

How can you even tell? You know how blind you are without your glasses.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Jad looks at an array of Driver's License Photos... We see
ONE FOR HOWARD MARKS. Then ANOTHER FOR SARAH MARKS. Same address.

JAD

Got him in the Foxhall. 4421
Gainsborough.

ANDERTON

Send a DCPD blue & white out there, set up a perimeter and tell 'em we're en route. What's our confirmed time?

JAD

From solar position, Trig & Image confirms it at approximately eight oh-four a.m.

The whole team looks up at the clock on the wall. 7:47.
Anderton sets THE TIMER ON HIS WATCH.

FLETCHER

Seventeen minutes.

ANDERTON

Armor up -- sick-sticks and concussion guns -- this is gonna be close.

INT. PRECRIME READY ROOM - MORNING

Like a firehouse, everybody slipping into uniform, riding up poles on chairs. A flurry of activity as weapons, helmets, and other newfangled gear are pulled from wall racks.

KNOTT, a big redhead, thick of neck and thicker of head, hands out the gear. He takes what looks like A BILLY CLUB and points it at a HEAVYSET COP who wolfs down the last of a Danish...

KNOTT

Hey, Steadman, wanna lose those ten ugly pounds like right now?

The cop reacts, pushes the stick away...

PETROTTA

Touch me with that puke-pole, asshole, you're gonna wear the fuckin' risoto I had for dinner last night along with the two chilidogs I had for breakfast.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Jad spins around in his chair...

JAD

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Chief, we got a problem with our location --

Anderton looks at him.

JAD
It's no longer there.

Jad indicates a video screen showing VIDEO BOT VIEW OF A FIRE
CHARRED HOME. Only one wall is left standing...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Anderton looks at the Prevision, begins manipulating the images... He glances at the PRECOG MONITOR. The female face writhes in the screen and Anderton looks at her.

ANDERTON
Where we going, Agatha? Talk to me.

Anderton turns away as FLETCHER (30), second in command approaches Anderton. The FEMALE FACE turns and seems to look at Anderton through the screen.

FLETCHER
Chief, the investigator from the Fed is here.

ANDERTON
(distracted)
You're kidding, that's today?

FLETCHER
I wrote it down in your calendar, then left a message at your house --

ANDERTON
(working)
All I need, some twink from the Fed poking around right now.
(then, to Jad)
Check again with the paper, they had it forwarded. See if the neighbors know where they went, check all relations --

FLETCHER
Uh, sir...

ANDERTON
Get him some coffee and tell him to wait outside.

VOICE
I've got coffee, thank you.

Anderton turns to see DANNY WITWER. Mid-twenties, quietly looking at everything and everyone. He extends his hand.

WITWER

Danny Witwer.

(then)

The "Twink from the Fed". Gum?

Anderton gives him a look, Witwer offers Anderton a stick of GUM.

JAD

The Marks moved two weeks ago. No one knows where. Still searching for family and employer.

MECHANICAL VOICE

Time horizon: 12 minutes...

Anderton looks at his watch: COUNTING DOWN, 12 MINUTES.

ANDERTON

I'm sorry Danny, but I'll have to give you the full tour later on.

WITWER

Your secretaries were all kind enough to give me a look around the office...

Anderton looks through the glass doors where A HALF DOZEN FEMALE PRECRIME OFFICE WORKERS ogle Witwer, even one that's pregnant (a moving image of her baby on the front of her maternity T-shirt). They ALL CHEW GUM.

Witwer watches as Anderton moves his fingers across the display, "flying through" the precrime scene, moving forward and back in time. ARCHITECTURAL REFERENCE SCREENS run side by-side with the Prevision Screen...

ANDERTON

Original running bond brick pattern, streamlined early Georgian Details...

Fletcher begins pointing out the equipment to Witwer who just listens quietly... asks no questions.

FLETCHER

What he's doing now, we call "scrubbing the image", looking for clues as to where the murder's going to happen.

ANDERTON

The brick has been repointed, the glass is original with new glazing

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... bars. I show composite mouldings with dentils.

(then) Someone took care in the renovation. Let's find the architect...

FLETCHER
Victims are pronounced here.
Killers here. We never touch anything.

ANDERTON
I show a cop on horseback.

JAD
Somewhere near the capital?

ANDERTON
No maglev system.

JAD
The mall?

ANDERTON
Georgetown.

Fletcher introduces Witwer to a female member of the team.

FLETCHER
This is Evanna, the team pilot.

WITWER
Nice to meet you. Gum?

She gives him a once over, takes a piece of gum.

EVANNA
Oh, thank you...

He pops a piece in his own mouth, cuts a look back at her...

WITWER
She's cute.

Witwer now notices the three faces on screen, can't take his eyes off them. Witwer looks at the images on the screen.
These three faces writhing in agony.

FLETCHER
Filtered, the Precogs can see outward up to four days with a sensory range of 200 miles.

Witwer stares at them, blowing a bubble.

WITWER

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
So if you wanna kill someone, you take him to Miami.

FLETCHER
Not after the vote next week. Once the Amendment passes, we go national, there's gonna be nowhere to run.

Anderton cuts a look at him as Jad indicates a 3D map full of BLUE DOTS...

JAD
Two Howard Markses EYEdented in the sprawl. Neither show married --

Anderton looks at THE REFERENCE SCREENS AS THEY SCROLL THROUGH ARCHITECTURAL IMAGERY...

ANDERTON
I show a match for Dwight Kingsley.
Nineteenth century architect. He did two dozen houses in D.C....

MECHANICAL VOICE
Time Horizon, ten minutes...

Witwer reacts to the incessant RINGING OF THE ALARM BELL.

WITWER
Can't they shut that off?

FLETCHER
That's the Red Ball Alarm.

Witwer looks at him.

FLETCHER
Crime of passion. No premeditation. They show up late.
Most of our scrambles are flash events like this one. We rarely see anything with premeditation anymore.

WITWER
People have gotten the message.
(to Fletcher)
Gum?

INT. MARKS KITCHEN - MORNING

As Howard sits down with his son who keeps cutting the piece of cardboard while reciting the address.

SON
... the world will little note, nor

HOWARD
(looks at Sarah)
I was thinking, maybe I'd play
hooky, stay home today.

Her back to him, Sarah pauses for just a second.

SARAH
What about your meeting?

HOWARD
I'll reschedule. I've been working too much anyway.

The boy holds up what WE NOW SEE IS A LINCOLN MASK to his face...

SON
... that these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave us they gave the last full measure of devotion...

He looks at the back of his wife as he pokes at his breakfast.

HOWARD
We could have lunch together.

SARAH
I'd love to, but I've got an open house today at the Ressler place.

HOWARD
Ah. That must be why you look so nice.

As Sarah turns and smiles at Howard.

SARAH Raincheck?

HOWARD
Sure. Raincheck.

SON
... that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain...

We hear a HORN HONK O.S. Sarah looks at her son.

SARAH
Your ride's here. Get your stuff.

The boy gets up, setting THE SCISSORS down on the table.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

Two men act as "dressers", getting Anderton into gear while he works. They help him on with a jacket, the word PRECRIME emblazoned on the back.

JAD

Director. Line three.

And now we see an IMAGE OF LAMAR BURGESS, DIRECTOR OF PRECRIME in one corner.

BURGESS

Tell me not to worry, John.

ANDERTON

Don't worry, Lamar.

BURGESS

The nation votes this week...

Anderton notices something on the prevision screen, brushes off the "dressers".

BURGESS

Which makes this the worst possible time to show that we're only human.

ANDERTON

(working)

Uh-huh...

BURGESS

Has the observer from Justice shown up yet?

ANDERTON

Hang on, Lamar --

Anderton mutes the director, looks at AN IMAGE OF THE MUSCULAR MAN IN THE SUIT. There's a CHILD'S FACE to the left of his own.

INT. MARKS KITCHEN - MORNING

Howard takes his jacket and leaves. Sarah watches after him for a beat, a little out of sorts.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Anderton indicates the screen to Jad. Witwer watches.

ANDERTON

Look at the kid. In this one, he's

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... on the left of the man in the suit.

JAD
Yeah? So?

ANDERTON
Now look at him...

Anderton moves his hand so the image changes and the kid is now to the right of the man, but FACING BACKWARDS. He now moves back and forth between the images...

ANDERTON
It's a park.

He runs the image and we see the kid back on the left facing front, then on the other side facing back...

EXT. PARK ACROSS FROM THE MARKS BROWNSTONE - MORNING

The HANDSOME MAN IN THE SUIT watches the house. Behind him, we see A KID ON A PUSH MERRY-GO-ROUND, as he goes by we see him facing one way, then the other...

The man glances about, then crosses the street. He climbs the steps to the front door. Doesn't even get to knock before Sarah opens it.

SARAH
Come on...

The man follows her inside. A beat later, Howard steps into FRAME. He never really left for work.

INT. PRECRIME - MORNING

As Anderton runs with his team -- five in all. Witwer trails behind them.

FLETCHER
There's only sixteen of those old merry-go-rounds left in the city. Two of which are in Georgetown. One in Barnaby woods, the other Woodley.

Anderton looks at the readout Fletcher hands him.

ANDERTON
Woodley's all Victorian. It's gotta be Barnaby Woods.
(keeps moving)
I want two cameras: one Spyder, one floater.

Witwer watches as Anderton pulls a .45 from his waistband. Jacks the clip and checks it.

WITWER

As I recall, they outlawed compression firearms in the District ten years ago.

ANDERTON

(replacing the clip)
They did. Make yourself comfortable. We'll be back in an hour.

WITWER

You mind if I tag along?

Some looks amid the team. They know Anderton doesn't want him here.

ANDERTON

I'd love to take you along,
Inspector, but there's no room on the ship.

EXT. DEPARTMENT OF PRECRIME - ROOF - MORNING

Anderton and his team head for a HOVERSHIP. Anderton climbs in beside EVANNA, the female pilot. Even with everyone onboard, one seat is conspicuously vacant. KASI, an African American cop, sets some equipment on it, smiles at Anderton.

EVANNA

Time Horizon six minutes.

As the hovership lifts off.

EXT. MARKS HOUSE - GEORGETOWN - MORNING

Howard walks up the steps to his house, takes out his key.
His hand shaking, he inserts the key into the lock. A long beat. He makes a decision and he finally turns it.

INT. MARKS HOUSE - KITCHEN - MORNING

We hear LAUGHING from the second floor. Howard picks up the scissors from the table.

INT. HOVERSHIP - MORNING

As Anderton looks at his watch. COUNTING DOWN 5:38...
5:37...

INT. MARKS HOUSE - MORNING

As we HEAR FOOTSTEPS and Howard steps behind a door, watches as the Lover, wrapped only in a towel, comes WHISTLING into the kitchen, grabs a couple of sodas from the refrigerator, then heads back out.

EXT. D.C. - MORNING

Overhead, the precrime Hovership ROARS past. In the distance, we see familiar Washington buildings, along with some new ones.

INT. MARKS HOUSE - MORNING

Howard starts up the stairs. We hear the sound of WATER RUNNING.

INT. MARKS HOUSE - MORNING

Howard gets to the door, slowly pushes it open with the point of the SCISSORS.

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

As we see Sarah's reflection in the bathroom mirror as she wraps her arms around her lover, kicks the door closed with her foot.

We now see HOWARD MARKS standing there, reflected in the full length mirror on the other side.

EXT. PARK - MORNING

The only sound, the SQUEAK OF THE MERRY-GO-ROUND as the kid goes round and round. All of a sudden several PRECOPS drop down on DESCENDERS. The kid looks off at them, confused as to why it's now raining cops... he slowly looks UP and sees THE HOVERSHIP floating above him...

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

We hear GIGGLING O.S. as Howard Marks sits down on the bed, and starts to weep, he slides onto the floor...

EXT. PARK - MORNING

As Anderton studies his portable screen, the image of the kid with the house behind him. He looks up and realizes that the PARK IS SURROUNDED ON FOUR SIDES BY HOUSES. And THEY ALL LOOK ALIKE...

INT. PRECRIME HOVERSHIP - MORNING

As Evanna watches the image, watches Howard Marks kill his wife over and over. The rest of the team is anxious.

MECHANICAL VOICE
Time Horizon. One minute.

EVANNA
Chief, we're catching up to the future.

EXT. PARK - MORNING

As Anderton calmly looks around at the surrounding houses, all we hear is the SQUEAK of the merry-go-round.

ANDERTON

Jad?

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Jad answers the call. Witwer is right there watching.

JAD

Go ahead.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

Did he close the front door?

JAD

What?

ANDERTON (PHONE)

Did Marks close the front door?!

Jad looks over the prevision a moment. He sees the image of the front door... the stairs just beyond it...

JAD

Negative -- front door is open!
The front door is open!!

EXT. PARK - MORNING

As Anderton scans the houses, sees one across the park with the door open --

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

As the two lovers now stumble wet from the bathroom onto the bed, neither of them see Howard sitting there on the floor on the other side of the bed, his head in his hands. They start to make love. Howard doesn't move.

EXT. PARK - MORNING

As Anderton makes a headlong dash for the house. The other cops right behind him...

INT. PRECRIME HOVERSHIP - MORNING

As Evanna takes off...

MECHANICAL VOICE

Time Horizon, thirty seconds --

EVANNA

The craft pitches as she heads over the park now...

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

As the motion of the two lovers now begins to rock Howard back and forth. He looks at the SCISSORS in his lap, also rocking back and forth to the rhythm of the two in the bed.

EXT. HOUSE - MORNING

As Anderton blows through the open front door...

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

As Howard now stands up, looks down at the bed, his face turning from disgrace to rage as he raises the scissors over his head.

INT. HOUSE - MORNING

As Anderton sprints up the stairs, the other cops behind him.

INSERT - HIS WATCH COUNTING DOWN the last few seconds...

INT. BEDROOM - MORNING

As Sarah opens her eyes, sees Howard standing there over the shoulder of her lover and gasps.

SARAH

Howard --

HOWARD

I forgot my glasses.

The lover rolls off of her and sits up.

HOWARD

You know how blind I am without them.

She sees the scissors in his hand. SCREAMS. He's bringing them down when, suddenly, the HAND HOLDING THE SCISSORS IS GRABBED by Anderton...

HOWARD

What --

TIGHT ON THEIR TWO HANDS

As Anderton's watch BEEPS as it counts down the last second and now...

... the SKYLIGHT OVERHEAD EXPLODES, wood and glass flying everywhere as the other Precops descend from the Hovership, drop straight into the room.

A FLOATING CAMERA BOT pushes past Anderton to the center of the room.

CAMERA BOT - POV

GRIDS and VECTORS place and locate everyone in the room. A screen-within-a-screen zooms in on the SCISSORS. It films Sarah's lover as he comes away from the bed.

ANDERTON

Mr. Marks, you're under arrest
for --

Howard makes a run for the door...

ANDERTON

Knott --

Knott grabs him, but the man puts up a fight.

Anderton takes a hand-held device from his belt (A SPYDER) and scans Marks' retina.

ANDERTON

Positive for Howard Marks --

Howard stands frozen, mouth agape as he now fully sees the PRECRIME SHIP hovering right out the window.

ANDERTON

By mandate of the District of Columbia Precrime division, I'm placing you under arrest for the future murder of Sarah Marks and Donald Doobin that was to take place today, April 22, at oh-eight hundred hours, four minutes --

SARAH

What?

HOWARD

I didn't do anything! Sarah!

ANDERTON

(to Fletcher)

Give the man his hat.

And now the other team members grab hold of Howard and start to shave his head with an electric sheer right there on the stairs, his hair falling in clumps to the floor below.

HOWARD

Oh, God. Don't put the halo on me!

And now Fletcher steps forward with what is essentially a metal HALO. Fletcher places it on Howard's head while he screams...

HOWARD

I wasn't going to do it! I wasn't going to hurt her! I just wanted to scare her!

As the halo is fitted onto his head, Howard's body arches in a convulsive shock, his eyes rolling white into his head as he finally goes limp.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - MORNING

As Witwer watches the Prevision Screen.

WITWER

I thought they stopped the murder --

Jad looks over as Witwer indicates an image of Howard Marks stabbing his wife, now from a slightly different angle.

JAD

That's just an echo.

(smiles)

Precog Deja Vu.

(looks at the screen)

Some of the really bad ones, the Precogs see over and over again.

The stabbing happens again and Jad moves his hand across the screen and it goes BLANK. Witwer looks at the PRECOG SCREEN, watches as the female rolls over and sinks under the milk.

INT. MARKS HOUSE - MORNING

Anderton goes into the bathroom and SHUTS OFF THE WATER in the bathtub just as it's about to overflow.

He stands, sees Sarah, hugging herself in the middle of the room. She stares back at him, confused and overwhelmed as we now...

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. INNER CITY - NIGHT

As Anderton, now in a hooded sweatshirt and sweatpants, jogs through the rain, the neighborhood around him getting worse and worse as he goes.

INT. A DARK ROOM - NIGHT

We can see Howard Marks' breath as he's laid out naked on a metal table. His head has been shaved.

VOICE OVER

Precrime: It works!

EXT. INNER CITY - NIGHT

As Anderton runs through the city, we now hear OTHER VOICES joining in saying the same thing, over and over, finally overlapping one another:

VOICES

PRECRIME: IT WORKS!

(until we hear)

IT WORKS IT WORKS IT WORKS...

And now, PROJECTED ON THE WALL BESIDE ANDERTON, we start to see a SERIES OF HUGE CLOSE-UPS as he runs by:

AFRICAN-AMERICAN WOMAN

I used to worry about my children going to the playground...

POLICEMAN

My partner was murdered...

VARIOUS PEOPLE

My sister was murdered... My brother was killed... I was attacked in the stairwell... My teacher was stabbed... My neighbor was shot... My child was murdered...

And now we see a series of shocking murder scenes, as the above testimonials continue in the b.g.

INT. DARK ROOM - NIGHT

A LARGER METAL HALO, spikes pointing inward, is fitted onto Howard Marks' head. He starts to SCREAM...

A DEEP VOICE

In a world where we look to science for answers, they were a gift...

EXT. INNER CITY - NIGHT

As Anderton runs along the wall, the PROJECTIONS CONTINUE: the images are of different people on the street now. WE BEGIN PULLING BACK...

VARIOUS PEOPLE

I was going to be killed in my apartment... He was going to rape me and then stab me... It was going to happen in a parking lot... We were having marital problems, I had no idea he would try and...

So that now we see we're looking at some sort of SCREEN ON THE SIDE OF THE BUILDINGS. On it, we see a shot of the Precrime building, a statue of the precogs out front.

THE DEEP VOICE

And now, Precrime is coming to your state, allowing you to sleep as well as we do in the District of Columbia.

Anderton, runs past the HUGE PROJECTION...

THE DEEP VOICE

On April 30, vote Yes on the National Precrime Referendum and make murder a thing of the past.

On the screen we see a SCHOOLYARD FULL OF KIDS...

CHILDREN

Precrime: It works!

Above Anderton, in the middle of the projection, some MENTAL CASE sticks his head out a window and SCREAMS at the night.

EXT. INNER CITY - DARK

As Anderton slows down, turns up a DARK ALLEY. He pauses, looks around.

ANDERTON

Lycon?

A VOICE

What's the matter, can't sleep?

Anderton turns and we see a dark FIGURE in a black coat sitting in a doorway. LYCON.

ANDERTON

I just need a little clarity.

LYCON

True that. You want the customary, or the new and improved?

ANDERTON

I'll try the new stuff.

Anderton reaches into his sock and takes out some CASH. Lycon takes out his own, much filthier sock and reaches inside. He pulls out a handful of tiny BLACK INHALERS and holds a few of them out to Anderton who hesitates, then takes them.

LYCON

"Chief". Anderton turns and looks at the Dealer.

LYCON

Oh, don't worry none, your secret's safe with me.
After all, you gonna be The Big Boss soon enough, be nice to have a little juice on my side.

ANDERTON

What makes you say I'm gonna be the boss?

LYCON

You're the perfect man for the job.
It's like my Daddy used to say, "In the land of the blind..."

Lycon leans forward and the moonlight catches his face, and we see that BOTH OF HIS EYES ARE GONE FROM THEIR SOCKETS.

LYCON

"The one eyed-man is King".

Lycon starts to laugh. Anderton watches him a moment, then turns and jogs off into the wet night.

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

Dark. Rain falls on the towers and pavilions of the inner city that fill the large windows. The front door opens and Anderton comes inside. When he turns on a light, we see the place is a complete mess.

Trash and black INHALERS litter the floor. Clothing is strewn about. In the kitchen, cupboards, even the refrigerator door have been left open. You might think the place has been burglarized, but it's just the way he left it.

Anderton walks past a bedroom -- an airplane bed and toys on the floor tell us this was once a kid's room. He continues on to...

HIS BEDROOM

Where he peels off his sweatshirt, then moves to the bed and sticks the old .45 back under the pillow it came from.

On the nightstand, are piles of NEWS CLIPPINGS, all of them with headlines like "BOY MISSING ELEVEN YEARS RETURNS HOME!" Or "FAMILY FIGHTS TO CLONE DEAD CHILD" or "GIRL RESCUED FROM KIDNAPPERS AFTER TWO YEAR ORDEAL".

Anderton grabs a BLACK INHALER from atop one of the clippings and shakes it, sees that there's still something in it. He takes it, goes into...

THE SOLARIUM

Anderton moves to a COMPUTER and types in an entry. All at once, the room begins to fill with HOLOGRAPHIC IMAGES of his son, SEAN. The images are ghostlike, not solid; created by a dozen LASER PROJECTORS placed around the room.

The scenes themselves are "stolen" from birthday parties, outings and vacations from a life that's somehow no more.

In one of them, his son Sean (age 2), playing with toys on the floor with LARA, Anderton's ex-wife. Anderton looks at Lara a moment, reaching out to her when we hear...

SEAN

Daddy!

Anderton looks to a HOLOGRAM where Sean (age 4) is throwing a Frisbee on a beach. The hologram-Sean looks up in Anderton's general direction as he throws...

SEAN

Catch!

And the Frisbee sails right through Anderton. He takes a deep hit off the inhaler and then looks around the room.

ANDERTON'S POV

As the images GRADUALLY BEGIN TO FILL IN. LOOK REAL.

SEAN

Hi, Daddy...

Anderton moves to one of the images in the middle of the room and crouches down in front of it.

ANDERTON

Hi, Sean. How was your day?

And then the image cuts to Sean (age 6) holding a soccer ball...

SEAN

I scored a goal!

ANDERTON

That's great.

And now the IMAGE JUMPS and we see Sean (age 4) at a younger age...

SEAN

I raced mommy!

And we see LARA, smiling beside him on a beach. Anderton looks at Lara a moment, then...

SEAN

I won!

ANDERTON

What a big boy. How old are you?

The image JUMPS and we see Sean (age 6)...

SEAN

I want pizza!

Wrong answer. Anderton frowns, goes over to the computer, starts searching through the images. He stops when he sees one of Sean at age 4, at a birthday party, holding up four fingers. He then walks back to the image...

ANDERTON

(tries again)

How old are you, Sean?

And now the holo-image JUMPS so that it's the same as the one we just saw on the computer. SEAN HOLDS UP FOUR FINGERS.

ANDERTON

Four. Wow. What a big boy.

(then)

I love you, Sean.

SEAN

(age 2)

I love you, too!

(age 4)

I love you daddy.

(age 6)

Love ya, dad.

Anderton sits down on the floor beside the image and takes another hit off the inhaler. He then lies back and watches his "son" as we now...

FADE OUT.

VINCENT NASH (V.O.)

On the eve of a national referendum that will make all of our citizens safe from violent crime...

FADE IN:

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - MORNING

As Anderton opens an eye, looks off AT A CLOCK TV that shows the image of L. VINCENT NASH, U.S. Attorney General as he addresses a press conference at Precrime...

NASH

... it's the responsibility of the Justice Department to fully review and inspect the Precrime system.

Anderton sits up, looks at the screen. To his horror, he sees WITWER sitting at a long table beside Nash with LAMAR BURGESS sitting on the other side. The chair next to Burgess EMPTY...

ANDERTON

Shit --

Anderton jumps to his feet, begins ripping off his sweats and getting dressed as fast as he can. He grabs his shirt off the answering machine...

SYNTH VOICE

You have twelve messages.

BURGESS' VOICE

John? Where the hell are you?

Anderton sits on the bed and starts pulling on his boots.

BURGESS

Speaking on behalf of Precrime, I'd just like to say that we welcome any review by Attorney General Nash and his team, although I must say I'm somewhat baffled by their timing.

Anderton grabs his coat, pulls his .45 out from under the pillow and tucks it away behind his back.

BURGESS

In the six years we've been conducting our little experiment there hasn't been a single murder in the District.

Anderton opens the door and gets RIGHT INTO HIS VEHICLE.
It's there IN THE WALL. He sits down, closes the door and the VEHICLE DROPS FROM SIGHT.

EXT. PRECRIME - DAY

As Anderton runs across the busy quad to the entrance of the building.

BURGESS (V.O.)

So I'm sure I speak for Chief Anderton who's on assignment, that we plan to do everything we can to help our good friends and

He lowers his sunglasses and two ultraviolet lights STROBE on the retinal scanner as Anderton is EYEdentiscanned and cleared to enter.

INT. PRECRIME HEADQUATERS - MAIN FLOOR - DAY

As Anderton enters, is immediately cut off by Burgess.

BURGESS

Those bastards at Justice want to take it all away from us.

Anderton stops, faces Burgess who looks at his watch, then stares back at Anderton.

BURGESS

And this is exactly the kind of behavior that will give them an excuse to do it.

ANDERTON

Lamar, I'm sorry. I don't know
what --

BURGESS

Don't apologize, John.

His tone stops Anderton.

BURGESS

You understand that a week from now people are going to vote on whether or not what we've been doing down here has been some noble-minded enterprise or a chance to change the way this country fights crime.

ANDERTON

I understand. Sir.

Burgess stares at Anderton.

BURGESS

I need you to do two things for me.
One, watch Danny Witwer.

ANDERTON

Yes, sir.

BURGESS

You can let him look around, answer his questions, but watch him. If there's any problems, make sure we know about it first.

ANDERTON

I understand. What's the other thing?

BURGESS

Tuck in your shirt.

Burgess gives him a look, then turns and walks away. Anderton looks down, tucks in his shirt, then hurries off...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Jad, Fletcher and Knott show Witwer one of the wooden "eggs". All of them now chewing gum, friendly with Witwer.

FLETCHER

The information we need is embedded in the grain of wood. And since each piece is unique, the shape and grain is impossible to duplicate.

WITWER

(returns the sphere to Fletcher)

I'm sure you've all grasped the legalistic drawback to precrime methodology.

KNOTT

Here we go again...

WITWER

Look, I'm not with the ACLU on this Jeff. But let's not kid ourselves, we are arresting individuals who've broken no law.

JAD

But they will.

FLETCHER

The commission of the crime itself is absolute metaphysics. The Precogs see the future. And they're never wrong.

WITWER

But it's not the future if you stop it. Isn't that a fundamental paradox?

ANDERTON (O.S.)

Yes, it is.

They all turn and look at Anderton as he comes into the room, takes the sphere from Fletcher.

ANDERTON

You're talking about predetermination, which happens all the time.

Suddenly, Anderton rolls the ball towards Witwer who catches it just as it's about to go off the table.

ANDERTON

Why did you catch that?

WITWER

Because it was going to fall.

ANDERTON

You're certain?

WITWER

Yes.

ANDERTON

But it didn't fall. You caught it.

Witwer looks at the ball in his hand.

ANDERTON

The fact that you prevented it from happening doesn't change the fact that it was going to happen.

WITWER

You ever get any false positives?
Someone intends to kill his boss or his wife, but they never go through with it. How do the precogs tell the difference?

ANDERTON

The Precogs don't see what you intend to do, only what you will do.

WITWER

Then why can't they see rapes, or assaults... or suicides?

FLETCHER

Because of the nature of murder.

(quoting)

"There's nothing more destructive to the metaphysical fabric that binds us than the untimely murder of one human being by another".

WITWER

Somehow, I don't think that was Anderton looks at Witwer. The man knows more than he thought.

ANDERTON
(looking at Witwer)
It was Iris Hineman. She developed the Precogs, designed the system and pioneered the interface.

WITWER
Speaking of interfacing, I'd love to say hello.

ANDERTON
To Hineman?

Witwer looks at the screens showing THE PRECOGS.

WITWER
To them.

ANDERTON
Cops aren't allowed inside the temple.

WITWER
Really? You've never been inside?

ANDERTON
We keep a strict separation so that no one can accuse us of tampering.

WITWER
So I'll be the first one to go in then?

ANDERTON
Maybe you didn't hear me.

WITWER
If it's a question of authority.

ANDERTON
There's no question. You don't have any.

WITWER
I have a warrant in my pocket that says different.

The other men don't move, don't blink.

ANDERTON
Show it to me.

Witwer pulls out a piece of paper from his pocket folded several times and hands it to him. As Anderton unfolds it...

WITWER

Contrary to what you might think, this experiment is being conducted under the supervision and with the express permission of the Attorney General of the United States. I'm here as his representative. Which means... you're now operating under my supervision.

Anderton looks up from the paper, at his men, at Witwer. He's lost and he knows it. Witwer takes the paper back.

WITWER

It seems you've been left out of the loop, John.

INSIDE THE TEMPLE

AS WALLY, the caretaker, an odd little guy who doesn't get a lot of sun looks over as Witwer and Anderton walk through A LASER DECONTAMINATION BOOTH...

WALLY

No no no no no...

Witwer smiles, extends his hand. Wally backs away.

WALLY

I can't touch you! And John, you can't be in here! You'll confuse them!

ANDERTON

Wally. This is Danny Witwer. He's from Justice and we're to give him a full run of the farm.

WITWER

Nice to meet you, Wally.

WALLY

Shhh! They're sleeping.

WITWER

(whispers)
Tell me how all this works.

AND NOW WE SEE: THE TANK

As a RIPPLE APPEARS in the white liquid.

WITWER (O.S.)

The photon milk acts as both a

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... nutrient supply and a liquid conductor. It makes the images that each of them receive strong.

And now a MAN'S FACE slowly breaks the surface, then ANOTHER MAN'S FACE, followed by A FEMALE FACE...

PULL BACK TO REVEAL: THE THREE PRECOGS

Three nude bodies -- TWO MALE, ONE FEMALE. As they writhe about in the liquid, we can see that their bodies are thin, nearly translucent.

The precogs appear to be in suspended animation or in comas.
They are absolutely still and limp, except for their faces which are in constant motion, reacting to murders only they can see.

WALLY

We call the female Agatha. The twins are Arthur and Dashiell.

REVEAL: THE PRECOG TANK

Egg-like in shape, it's filled with the milky-looking liquid the three Precogs are suspended in.

WALLY

We scan by way of optical tomography, white light pinpoints pulse along the entire length of the headgear and are re-read after absorption through their brain tissue.

Witwer looks at him, has no idea what he just said.

WALLY

In other words, we see what they see.

Wally lifts one of the Male Precogs into a harness and hoists him up for exercise and cleaning. Wally starts to trim his nails and the Precog begins convulsing...

WALLY

They're not in any pain. We keep their heads pretty well stocked with dopamine and endorphins.
Plus, we maintain careful control over their serotonin levels -- don't want 'em to drift off to sleep, but they can't be kept too awake either.

ANDERTON

It helps if you don't think of them

WITWER
(staring at them)
No... they're much more than that.

Witwer nods, looks up at THE SCREENS ABOVE THE TANK, a series of screens tapped into each Precog. We can see all sorts of images, but none of them clear right now. He's mesmerized by all of them.

WITWER
Science has stolen most of our miracles. In a way...
(indicates the tank)
... they give us hope... hope of the existence of the divine.

He sees Anderton and Wally looking at him.

WITWER
I find it interesting that some people have begun to deify the precogs.

ANDERTON
The precogs are pattern recognition filters, nothing more.

WITWER
But you call this room the
"temple".

ANDERTON
Just a nickname.

WITWER
(nods, then)
The oracle isn't where the power is anyway. The power's always been with the priests.
(looks at the Precogs)
Even if they had to invent the
oracle.

Anderton looks to where Fletcher, Jad and Knott stand near the entrance, nodding their heads.

ANDERTON
You guys are nodding your heads like you actually know what the hell he's talking about.

JAD
Come on, Chief, you think about it, the way we work -- changing destiny and all -- we're more like clergy

ANDERTON
Uh-huh. Jad?

JAD
Sir?

ANDERTON
Go back to work. All of you.

The others give him a look and walk out. Anderton turns back to Witwer who smiles at him.

WITWER
Sorry. Old habit. I spent three years at Fuller Seminary before I became a cop. My father was a minister. Lutheran.

ANDERTON
What does he think of your chosen line of work?

WITWER
I don't know. He was shot and killed when I was fourteen on the steps of his church in Bethesda.

He looks at Anderton.

WITWER
I know what it's like to lose someone close, John. Of course, nothing is like the loss of a child.

Agatha rolls over now, seems to be looking at Anderton.

WITWER
I don't have any children of my own, so I can only imagine what that must have been like, to lose your son in a public place like that.

Anderton says nothing. Hates the man all over again.

WITWER
At least now you -- and I -- have the chance to make sure that kind of thing doesn't happen to anyone ever again.

ANDERTON
(beat)
Why don't you cut the cute act,

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Danny, and tell me exactly what it is you're looking for?

WITWER

Flaws.

ANDERTON

There hasn't been a murder in six years. There's nothing wrong with the system. It's perfect.

WITWER

I agree. The system is perfect.
If there's a flaw, it's human. It always is.

(then)

Thank you for the tour, Wally.

Anderton watches him walk out, shakes his head, then notices...

The FEMALE PRECOG'S ARM is resting on the edge of the tank.
He looks down at her a moment. She's looking at him, but her eyes seem somewhere else.

Anderton looks around for Wally, doesn't see him. He doesn't want to touch her. He finally reaches down and gently takes her arm, sets it back into the tank.

As it submerges, she takes hold of ANDERTON'S FINGER and hangs on. He stares back at her. She holds on tight...

ANDERTON

Uh, Wally --

He tries to pull his hand away, but she holds on, grabs onto Anderton's shirt, and STARTS TRYING TO PULL HERSELF OUT OF THE WATER...

ANDERTON

Wally!

AGATHA

(whisper)

Can you see?

And now she's clinging to Anderton, looking up. He looks up at the SCREEN above her and sees...

A FLASH OF A WOMAN'S FACE. Silent. Eyes and mouth wide open. A shock of red hair all around her. Her face is a white mask of terror. She seems to be beckoning Anderton with her arm...

He looks at Agatha, who continues to cling to him, HER OWN FACE HOLDS THE SAME EXPRESSION as the woman on the screen.
She finally lets go of Anderton and falls back into the tank.

WALLY

John?!

Anderton, shaken, looks up and THE IMAGE FADES, replaced with the blurry flood of images we saw earlier.

WALLY

What the hell just happened? Her ACTH levels just shot through the roof!

Anderton turns and looks at the Precog writhing about.

WALLY

Her pituitary dumped a week's worth into her system... What did you do to her?

ANDERTON

Nothing... she grabbed me, and then there was an image on the screen...

WALLY

She grabbed you? Impossible. The Precogs aren't even aware of us. In the milk all they see is the future.

Anderton shoots a look down the hall as WITWER WALKS THROUGH THE LASER DECONTAMINATOR, unaware of what just happened. He turns to Wally and lowers his voice...

ANDERTON

She was looking right at me.

WALLY

It could have been a nightmare... Sometimes they dream about the old murders.

Anderton looks back down at Agatha, her eyes closed now as she sinks down into the milk and disappears, her own arm in front of her, beckoning in the same way as the woman.

ANDERTON

She spoke to me.

WALLY

(dismissive)
To you? I don't think so...
(but has to know)
What'd she say?

ANDERTON

She said...

Anderton looks up at the screens...

ANDERTON

"Can you see?"

EXT. THE DEPARTMENT OF CONTAINMENT - EARLY MORNING

Anderton takes off his sunglasses, looks at a screen:

ANDERTON

Anderton. John.

He moves his eyes close to the screen and gets EYEdentiscanned at the door and goes inside.

INT. DEPARTMENT OF CONTAINMENT - EARLY MORNING

Silent. A huge open space, a human warehouse. Along the floor -- ringing the entire perimeter -- are markers with numbers on the front of them. We now HEAR FOOTSTEPS as...

Anderton enters the building. As he moves further into the space, our angle changes and we now see HUMAN BODIES lying on their backs on the other side of the markers. Each "prisoner" has a metal HALO-like apparatus -- spikes going inward -- fitted onto his head.

Anderton slows his pace, eyeing the row of inert bodies along the floor as he goes. Above each inert prisoner is a SCREEN that continuously plays the Precog's PREVISION OF THE MURDER for which they've been convicted.

Suddenly we hear a blast of ORGAN MUSIC reverberating from somewhere O.S. and he looks off towards a CURTAIN at the back...

ON THE CURTAIN

As Anderton parts it to REVEAL:

A LIVING SPACE

A bed. A stove. A fridge... And A HUGE PIPE ORGAN. A MAN IN A WHEELCHAIR playing with his back to us. From the sound of it, he seems to be making it up as he goes along. Anderton taps the guy on the shoulder, startling him --

MAN

HOO BOY!

(then)

You scared me, Chief.

He takes a breath, looks at Anderton standing there. The man's face is large, almost retarded in appearance. He wears A PRISON GUARD UNIFORM.

ANDERTON

GIDEON
Yes, sir. I'm Gideon.
(indicates the organ)
The music relaxes the prisoners.

Anderton looks around as Gideon quickly moves away from the organ.

GIDEON
I don't ever see any of you precops down here, I'm not in trouble am I?

ANDERTON
No, you're not in trouble. I'm interested in a murder.

GIDEON
Kill type?

ANDERTON
Drowning.

Gideon turns to a computer screen on his wheelchair.

GIDEON
Well, that narrows it down. Not many in here for that one.

Gideon starts going through the files, we see different FACES flash by. Anderton looks over his shoulder.

ANDERTON
Victim's a white female.

GIDEON
This about the Justice Department?
(off Anderton's look)
They laid on a tour for tomorrow a.m. Told me to wear a tie. You like this one?

THE FACE OF THE DROWNING WOMAN Agatha showed Anderton flashes on the screen.

ANDERTON
Stop! Roll back... There!

Gideon looks at the screen.

GIDEON
That's an old one. One of our first.

ANDERTON
This is the official composite of

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... the three precogs?

GIDEON
That's right. It's a combined data stream based on all three previsions.

ANDERTON
Show me just Agatha's data stream.

GIDEON
For that, we have to go for a ride.

Gideon rolls ahead of Anderton, checking his manifest on a small display. Anderton looks around.

ANDERTON
You the only sentry?

GIDEON
I work graveyard, swing and day all by my lonesome.

Gideon hits a button on his wheelchair and we hear a RUMBLING SOUND as the "prisoners" around the perimeter all BEGIN TO RISE.

GIDEON
Hey, bet you don't know where the term "graveyard shift" comes from?

Only half-listening, Anderton watches as now A SECOND TIER OF MARKERS appear right below the first tier. The video screens playing the murder previsions over and over...

GIDEON
Long time ago, in merry old England, they discovered that some coffins, after they reopened 'em -- now why they did that, I couldn't tell you --

And now we see a third tier, also with the video screens showing their own horrific images.

GIDEON
Anyway, they discovered that some of the coffins had scratch marks on the inside, indicating that the person had not been dead when they buried them.

And now Anderton watches as a fourth tier rises up.

GIDEON
So they tied a string to the wrist of each person that lead to a bell

Anderton has to tilt his neck to see the top of the tiers as a fifth tier rises up from the ground...

GIDEON

Someone was assigned to sit at night and listen for the bells.

... until the bodies and their markers are stacked nearly to the roof of the facility and Gideon turns to Anderton and smiles.

GIDEON

Hence the expression...

ANDERTON

(softly, staring at all the prisoners)
... Graveyard shift.

GIDEON

Not to mention, "Saved by the bell".

Gideon starts to roll off. Anderton stands there, looking at all of them.

ANDERTON

I'd forgotten there were so many.

Gideon rolls onto a PLATFORM attached to a long arm and wheels around to face Anderton.

GIDEON

And to think they'd all be out there killing people if it wasn't for you.

Anderton moves onto the platform they lift up and away.

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - DAY

Dark. We hear someone make the lock, then the door opens and we see Danny Witwer standing there looking in. He closes the door, turns on the light and takes in the total disarray.

He bends down, picks up a BLACK INHALER and examines it. He puts it in his pocket and starts to look around.

He moves through the dark apartment to the table where Anderton keeps his Holo-Computer equipment. He looks at it a moment, then starts pressing buttons. And now we hear...

SEAN (O.S.)

Hey, Daddy!

He pulls his weapon, wheels around and points it at the holo image of SEAN (age 4) ON THE BEACH as he wings a Frisbee.

SEAN

Catch!

Witwer ducks as it sails by. He looks around, notices the LASER PROJECTORS all around the room. And now he sees THE IMAGES OF SEAN... everywhere. He slowly puts away his gun.

WITWER

My God...

INT. DEPARTMENT OF CONTAINMENT - DAY

As Anderton rides the platform with Gideon looking at all of the "prisoners".

GIDEON

They get to spend twenty years asleep, somewhere between life and death, all the while getting their bodies pumped up with nutrients they'd never get if they were out on the street.

(stops the platform)

Okee pokee, here we go...

A video screen comes into view, we see it's showing THE DROWNING WOMAN Anderton saw inside the temple.

GIDEON

John Doe drug addict was gonna put down a woman named Anne Lively at Roland Lake.

They move upward, once more gliding up to a video screen as it comes into view, we see it's showing THE DROWNING WOMAN Anderton saw inside the temple.

ANDERTON

That's her --

Anderton looks at the screen. The PREVISION PLAYS OUT: Daytime. A lake. The redheaded woman is shoved under water by two BLACK-GLOVED HANDS, her mouth open to scream.

Anderton looks at the MAN lying there -- tall, shaved head, nearly skeletal.

ANDERTON

Why's he still a John Doe? Why wasn't he ever ID's from an EYEsCan?

GIDEON

On account of those are not his

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... eyes. He had 'em swapped out to fool the scanners.

Anderton sees the dark red scar-lines around his eyes.

GIDEON
You get it done on the street for a few hundred bucks these days.

Anderton looks at the screen as the SCREAMING WOMAN appears again, stares at her face.

GIDEON
Okay, so you want just the female's prevision.

Gideon hits a button on his remote and the VIDEO SCREEN DIVIDES INTO THREE SECTIONS. In the first section, we see various angles of the woman being drowned by John Doe. A similar series of shots on the second screen.

But the THIRD SCREEN IS BLANK.

GIDEON
Huh, we don't seem to have her data.

ANDERTON
Try again.

GIDEON
(works the computer)
No... we have the two previsions from the twins right here, but...
(indicates the blank screen)
... I can't pull up any data from the female. Probably just a glitch.

Anderton stares thoughtfully at the first two images of Anne Lively being drowned.

GIDEON
Hey, you wanna know where the word came from, "glitch?"

ANDERTON
(looks at the face)
Just tell me about the intended victim. This Anne Lively...

Gideon works the computer.

GIDEON
Looks like she was a neuroin addict like John Doe here, but I show an

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... address history that includes the Beaton Clinic.

ANDERTON
So she cleaned up. Where is she
now?

Gideon again works the computer, then sits back.

GIDEON
Huh. How ironic...

He spins the screen so that Anderton can see one word there:
"MISSING"

GIDEON
You finally crawl your way out of one hole, only to fall into another.

Anderton takes a small plastic CARD from his wallet and slides it into A SLOT on the computer. Instantly the MOVING IMAGE OF ANNE LIVELY downloads onto the card.

GIDEON
Careful, Chief...

Anderton looks at him.

GIDEON
You dig up the past, all you get is dirty.

DISSOLVE TO:

THE WHITE LIQUID

THE FACE OF THE FEMALE PRECOG emerges from the milk, her blue eyes suddenly blink open. Something has begun...

INT. BURGESS' LIVING ROOM - DAY

Burgess sits on the couch, a blanket covering his legs, nursing a cold. He looks at THE MOVING IMAGE OF ANNE LIVELY on the small card.

BURGESS
And you say the third prevision was, what, a little fuzzy or something?

ANDERTON
I'm saying the third prevision wasn't there. And that's not all.
I spent a few hours down there and it turns out there's a dozen more cases with missing previsions.

Burgess sneezes, takes out his handkerchief.

BURGESS

You'd think we'd have found a cure for the common cold by now.

WIFE (O.S.)

It's stress.

His WIFE walks in who hands him a steaming mug. He looks at it.

BURGESS

What's this?

WIFE

Herbal tea with honey.

BURGESS

Yeah, well I hate herbal tea... almost as much as I hate honey.

WIFE

Just drink it before I pour it in your lap.

He reluctantly takes it. She smiles at Anderton on her way out.

ANDERTON

Danny Witwer is scheduled for a tour of Containment tomorrow --

BURGESS

So give him a tour. He doesn't know enough to ask the right questions.

ANDERTON

If he's looking for a flaw in the system --

BURGESS

He's not. He's looking for a flaw in us, John.

Anderton notices the change in Burgess' tone. Burgess tosses the CARD onto the coffee table in front of him, and considers Anderton a moment.

BURGESS

Lara called me.

ANDERTON

What?

BURGESS

She's worried about you. And, quite frankly, so am I.

ANDERTON

I'm fine.

BURGESS

I hear you've been spending a lot of time in the sprawl.

ANDERTON

(beat)

I go running down there.

BURGESS

In the middle of the night?

Anderton doesn't have an answer for that one.

BURGESS

What if Danny Witwer came to you right now and insisted on a full chem run?

ANDERTON

I'm fine, Lamar.

Burgess gets up and sits down next to Anderton, puts a hand on his shoulder.

BURGESS

(beat)

You understand, John, that the minute Precrime goes national, they're going to take it away from us.

ANDERTON

We won't let them.

BURGESS

No? How's an old man and a cop on the whiff ever going to stop them?

This stings Anderton. Burgess softens.

BURGESS

My father once said to me that you don't choose the things you believe in, they choose you.

(then)

There's a reason you're here, John.
Had Precrime been in place just six months earlier, the loss you and Lara suffered would have been prevented.

Anderton turns away.

BURGESS

Remember the eyes, John --

Burgess COUGHS, motions for a second while he gets his breath back, then...

BURGESS

Remember, the eyes of the nation are on us right now. We both know I'm not the generation anyone listens to.

(then)

People trust you, John. When you speak of your absolute belief in Precrime, they know it's a belief born of pain and not politics. I've always understood that. And in some ways, I may have even encouraged it, to help with the cause. But now... your pain is hurting both of us.

Anderton nods, finally gets up, puts his hand on Burgess' shoulder, looks the old man in the eye.

ANDERTON

They're not going to take it away from us, Lamar.

(beat)

I won't let them.

INT. TELEVISION SOUND STAGE - MORNING

A talkshow. A woman MODERATOR sits in front of a backdrop that reads "DOUBLE EXPOSURE". Anderton now in a suit and tie sits with the MODERATOR and a WOMAN in a dark suit.

MODERATOR

A week from today conventions will meet in every state to vote on the ratification of the precrime amendment. With us to discuss this historic decision are Chief John Anderton of Precrime in Washington D.C. and Ms. Dinola Margis, Director of the American Freedom Foundation. Both of you, thanks for being here.

ANDERTON/MARGIS

Geraldine. Thanks for having me.

MODERATOR

Ms. Margis, let me start with you.

Last year, more people in this country lost their lives to murder than to natural causes. Doesn't such unparalleled violence require that we protect our citizens, whatever it takes?

MARGIS

No, Geraldine, not at the price of giving up our most fundamental rights. For almost three centuries now, every accused citizen has had the right to be presumed innocent until found guilty. But, here, we have the beginnings of a system that punishes people for crimes that haven't even been committed. I feel stuck in a nightmare.

And now we see Burgess standing in the wings, watching now as Anderton smiles, revs up the charm.

ANDERTON

You forget, Dinola, that the Supreme Court has ruled that the Precogs predictions as foregone, metaphysical conclusions. Meaning what the Precogs say is going to happen, happens.

(then)

Unless we stop it.

MARGIS

You know, the Etruscans used to read sheep livers to predict the future. Maybe we should try that one next.

ANDERTON

That's funny. But the truth is, our Constitution has always recognized that in times of great danger we may have to take actions that... offend certain principles in order to preserve the nation itself.

Burgess looks at Anderton and nods. That's my boy. Anderton nods back, turns back to the table as we...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. SOLARIUM - NIGHT

Anderton, barefoot and shirtless, still in his suitpants, eats a bowl of cereal while the TALKSHOW he taped earlier in the day before plays out on the TELEVISION.

ANDERTON (TV)

In the middle of the civil war, for example, Abraham Lincoln suspended the writ of habeas corpus observing that a limb may be sacrificed to save a life, but a life is never wisely given to save a limb.

Anderton doesn't watch it. Instead, he stares stupidly at the images of SNAP, CRACKLE and POP dancing around on the cereal box that sits on the coffee table in front of him.

MARGIS (TV)

Let me ask you something, Chief?
You're a former police officer -- when was the last time you Mirandized someone?

The ON TV ANDERTON just smiles at her.

MARGIS (TV)

You have the right to remain silent? You have the right to an attorney?

He turns, looks up at the set and now we go...

CLOSE ON MARGIS

MARGIS (TV)

When's the last time you actually said those words?

ANDERTON

Mutes the set, stares back at her when we hear --

ANDERTON'S VOICE

What are you looking at?

Anderton turns and sees A HOLOGRAPHIC IMAGE OF LARA, his ex wife, standing at the window, looking out at the rain.

LARA

Just the rain.

She turns and looks off to a spot in the room where Anderton would have been standing all those years ago with the camera,

LARA

Why don't you put that camera down and watch it with me?

Now Anderton puts down the bowl of cereal, gets up and walks over to her, but THE IMAGE BLINKS OUT, then STARTS ALL OVER AGAIN...

Anderton turns and walks across the room. We now see A DOZEN HOLOGRAPHIC IMAGES from his old life playing around the room. He sits down in an armchair and watches them play out.

He holds a black inhaler to his lips, sucks in the drug, then looks about at the images as, gradually, the holographs begin to fill in, become real. To him anyway.

Sean (age 6) walks up beside him dressed in A YELLOW RAIN SLICKER. Anderton looks over at him, standing there silent. He says something, but there's no audio, or at least we don't hear it. The image jumps, then repeats, the boy walking up in the slicker, his mouth moving silent. Then again...

Anderton reaches out for his son, but the boy DISAPPEARS. In his place, floating green letters read:

END OF FILE

Anderton sits up and rubs his face. He starts to get up, then pauses, looks down at the floor beside the chair.

A PUDDLE OF WATER has formed. He stares at it a moment, A DROP OF WATER FALLS FROM ABOVE and Anderton slowly looks up at...

THE GLASS CEILING OF THE SOLARIUM

A long CRACK in the glass up there. Rain pelts it. Water drips down and forms a puddle on the floor.

Anderton looks around the room and we see a half dozen END OF FILE's all over the room now.

INT. PRECRIME HEADQUATERS - ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As Anderton comes in, takes his coat off. Something drops on the floor. He bends down and picks up the DATA CARD with the image of ANNE LIVELY drowning. He looks at it when...

We hear LAUGHTER O.S. and he looks down through the glass, sees a GROUP OF SECRETARIES having a baby shower for the pregnant woman. He notices Fletcher, some of his guys down there...

And then he sees Witwer. His hand on the pregnant secretary's belly, cracking a joke they all laugh at. Suddenly he's the most popular guy on campus. The guys see Anderton who motions them to stay, it's okay. Witwer looks up at him curiously. Anderton POCKETS THE DATA CARD, turns away and goes into...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Anderton comes in, Jad sits at the big screen, looking at something.

ANDERTON

Jad. How come you're not out there with Father Witwer?

JAD

We're in motion on something.

Anderton comes over now.

JAD

From what I can see, we got a white male, about five-eight, approximately one-forty, takes a round in the ten ring, and goes out a window.

Anderton starts to put on his eyepiece and finger gloves.

ANDERTON

Red Ball?

JAD

Nope. Somebody's thinking about
this one.

ANDERTON

Amazing there's someone within two hundred miles actually dumb enough to still do that.

Jad watches as Anderton sticks a disc into a slot and we hear CLASSICAL MUSIC OVER.

JAD

I love this part.

Anderton starts "conducting" the prevision, organizing the images, moving some up, others back...

FEMALE PRECOG

Wait! Don't --

Anderton looks at the PRECOG SCREEN, sees the three of them writhing about.

ANDERTON

Here we go...

And now we see the screen, various images, all of them
grainy, visual non-sequiters like A FACE WEARING SUNGLASSES... THE NUMBER 9 TURNING INTO THE NUMBER 6... THE INSIDE OF A SMALL APARTMENT... A FIGURE BACKLIT BY A WINDOW... A CRACKED MIRROR... A SMALL MAN... A PAIR OF DARK EYES...

ANDERTON

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Shunt all cycles to a full vis correlation at my mark by the windows.

And now the image starts to resolve, showing TWO MEN, one with a gun, his image still blurred. The other clearer...

ON THE CHUTE: A BALL

Rolls down. Jad moves into read the name:

JAD
The victim's name is Leo Crow.

ANDERTON
(into the computer)
Start a location run and a contact search for future victim Leo Crow.
(to Jad)
And, Jad, I'll need a Last Known
Sheet when you get it.

JAD
I've got no address -- last known or otherwise -- no tax returns for the last five years.

ANDERTON
Check NCIC, maybe he's got a record. Then send a protection team as soon as we lock the location.

Anderton turns to another part of the screen...

ANDERTON
Case #1109, previsualized by the Precogs and recorded on holosphere by Precrime's q-stacks.
(to a screen)
My fellow witnesses for case #1109 are Dr. Katherine James and Chief Justice Frank Pollard.

AND NOW THE SPLIT-IMAGE emerges of James and Pollard in the respective offices.

ANDERTON
Are the witnesses ready to preview and validate #1109?

POLLARD
(a mouthful of dinner)
Ready when you are, John.

JAMES
Standing by.

On the screen in front of Jad we see MUGSHOTS ROLLING BY.
DRIVERS LICENSE PHOTOS... A mass of photo ID data... Anderton ZOOMS INTO A CLOCK IN THE ROOM. 3:06 p.m. Fri.

ANDERTON

I show time of occurrence, Friday at fifteen-zero-six hours.

JAD

That was easy.

Anderton sets his timer for 28 HOURS, THIRTY-ONE MINUTES.

ANDERTON

Confirm with trig and image.

JAD

Any ID on the shooter yet?

ANDERTON

Still scrubbing... looks like there's a third party, somebody wearing shades just out the window...

Anderton ZOOMS IN on the FACE WITH THE SUNGLASSES, then PANS
OVER and tries to get a clearer picture of the gunman.
His image starting to come into focus as he turns. It's slow, jerky, so they don't immediately recognize the face as...

ANDERTON

Jesus...

HIS OWN FACE. And now Anderton watches horrified as on the screen he shoots the man we now know as Leo Crow...

ANDERTON

Okay, very funny.

Anderton looks at Jad, absorbed in his photo ID array. Jad notices him, looks over.

JAD

You say something, Chief?

ON THE CHUTE: THE BALL

With the KILLER'S NAME ON IT: JOHN ANDERTON

Anderton stares at the ball. WE HEAR LAUGHTER O.S. He looks through at the BABY SHOWER, Witwer looking his way.

ANDERTON

(panic rising)

Uh, yeah, you mind getting me a

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... piece of that cake they're eating down there? I'm starving.

JAD

Sure, Chief. I think I'll grab one for myself while I'm at it...

ANDERTON

Take your time.

Jad goes, passing behind Anderton, who quickly changes his screen so Jad won't see his face as the killer.

Alone in the room now, Anderton begins zooming in on the odd details of the vision once more. THE FACE WITH THE SUNGLASSES just outside the window. The NUMBER 6 turning into a NUMBER 9. A CRACKED MIRROR. Anderton shooting the man...

He zooms back in on his face. There's an air of desperation on the Anderton he sees on screen. It's like looking at a stranger.

INT. TEMPLE - DAY

Peeling off his long scrubbing gloves, Wally sits down at his worktable. In the tank, meanwhile...

MALE PRECOG 1

You're not gonna kill me.

MALE PRECOG 2

Good-bye, Crow.

MALE PRECOG 1

Anderton!

And now on the monitors, Wally sees Chief John Anderton blow a man out a window with his .45 Wally almost laughs with disbelief. It can't be, but...

WALLY

(clicking headset)

Jad, are you getting this?

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

Anderton looks over to the phone, hearing Wally's voice.

WALLY (O.S.)

Jad?

INT. JUSTICE POLLARD'S OFFICE - DAY

As the Justice sits frozen at his desk staring at the monitor, a buttered roll poised near his mouth. Katherine James hurries in now and he turns to her.

POLLARD

You saw that? You saw that, didn't you?

JAMES

I saw it.

Pollard reaches for his phone.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Anderton sees Wally on the screen now, looking anxious.

WALLY

Chief?

Anderton's too stunned to answer.

WALLY

I like you, Chief.

Anderton looks at Wally's face on the screen now.

WALLY

You've always been nice to me.

(then)

I'll give you two minutes before I hit the siren.

Anderton looks at the caretaker a second, then slowly gets up and walks out the door...

INT. PRECRIME HEADQUARTERS - MAIN FLOOR - DAY

As a dazed Anderton moves away from the baby shower. Doesn't dare look at Witwer. The LAUGHTER RECEDING BEHIND HIM.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Jad comes in with a piece of cake on a paper plate...

JAD

Here you go, Chief...

... and stops dead when he sees the images playing over and over on the screen.

JAD

Good Christ...

INT. PRECRIME HEADQUARTERS - MAIN FLOOR - DAY

Fletcher tries to wave him over, but Anderton just keeps walking, the whole thing some surreal nightmare.

VOICE

He bumps into the floating videobot and bats it out of the way with the back of his hand. Everybody looking at him now as he gets on the elevator.

INT. ELEVATOR - DAY

As Anderton hits a button...

VOICE
Hold that, please!

Anderton bangs the CLOSE button and the doors start to shut, keeps banging it, as the doors almost get there, when A FOOT blocks them and they part, revealing Danny Witwer.

WITWER
Thanks.

The doors close once more and they start down. Witwer smiling at Anderton.

WITWER
You're in a lot of trouble, John.

Anderton steps back, keeps his hand near his .45.

ANDERTON
You set me up...

WITWER
I'll write the paranoia off to the whiff you been doping on all night.

Witwer reaches into his coat and Anderton grabs him and shoves him against the wall. Anderton's pistol already out, jammed up under Witwer's chin. Witwer keeps his eyes on Anderton as he slowly pulls out A BLACK INHALER.

WITWER
It seems I've found a flaw, John
(then)
You.

ANDERTON
You gonna tell on me?

WITWER
Possession alone will cost you six months, not to mention your badge.

Anderton doesn't say anything.

WITWER
I guess we won't be working together after all.

Witwer shakes his head. DING. The elevator arrives and the doors open.

WITWER

Now put the gun down, John. I don't hear a Red Ball.

THE PRECRIME SIREN GOES OFF. Witwer looks at Anderton, all of a sudden no longer so sure of himself. Anderton smiles, then shoves him back into the elevator and jumps off as the DOORS CLOSE on a stunned Witwer.

EXT. D.C. STREETS - DAY

Racing past other cars, Anderton merges into traffic. He's driving his personal car, not a police-issue.

INT. ANDERTON'S CAR - DAY

Burgess appears on the windshield screen.

ANDERTON

Just so you know, I've overridden the vehicle locator. I just wanted to talk to you before Justice --

BURGESS

Justice already knows. Talk to me,
John. Tell me what's happening?

ANDERTON

This is all Witwer. He's setting me up.

BURGESS

Stop. Just wait. Who's the victim?

ANDERTON

Somebody named Leo Crow.

BURGESS

And who the hell is that?

ANDERTON

I have no idea. I've never heard of him. But I'm supposed to kill him in less than thirty-six hours.

BURGESS

All right, John, just take a breath, let's think about this...

ANDERTON

I'm out of breath! I'm a fucking fugitive!

BURGESS

Then come to my house. We'll talk --

ANDERTON

I can't. They're following me right now. They'll meet me there.
They'll halo me.

BURGESS

How could Witwer have accessed the case file?

ANDERTON

Can you fake the cerebral output?

BURGESS

We're years from that. John, I'm asking you: please, come in, we'll shut down the system until we get this thing figured out.

ANDERTON

You know I can't do that. You can't do that...

(then)

Lamar, I need you to talk to Wally, see if Witwer's gone inside the temple again. Then ask Jad for any off hour EYEdents into the analytical room --

BURGESS

John. Just tell me, who's Leo
Crow?

Suddenly, Anderton's doors LOCK tight.

COMPUTER VOICE

Security lockdown enabled.

ANDERTON

Jesus, you don't believe me.

Anderton looks up at his windshield display which now shows that his vehicle has been rerouted...

COMPUTER VOICE

Revised Destination: Office.

Anderton starts trying to figure a way out of the car.

BURGESS

John. Please. Listen to me --

ANDERTON

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
I'm not getting halo'd.

BURGESS
You can't run --

ANDERTON
Everybody runs.

Leaning back, he KICKS THROUGH the windshield, breaking his way out.

EXT. VEHICLE - DAY

As it goes down a huge maglev "falls", straight down the face of a 200 foot building. Anderton climbs onto the nose of the car, his only hope to jump into one of the BALCONIES that protrude out.

As the car flies down, he tries to time his jump between the umbrellas and flowerpots that whiz by. He finally makes the suicide leap, gets to a balcony and crashes through a table. He picks himself up, goes through the door into...

AN EXERCISE STUDIO

We hear ROCK & ROLL OVER as Anderton now moves through A CONTORTIONIST EXERCISE CLASS, people bent and bowed into impossible positions. Anderton looks back at the Fellini-esque fever dream, then runs out the door.

INT. BURGESS' OFFICE - DAY

Frustrated, Burgess turns away, emotional now and we see Fletcher and Witwer were watching the conversation.

FLETCHER
Don't worry. I'll bring him in unharmed.

WITWER
Actually, Gordon, you're not gonna do that.
(to Burgess)
I'm taking control of the team.

FLETCHER
What?!

BURGESS
(motions to Fletcher "it's okay", then)
Witwer, Fletcher is second in command. It's his show to run. You want, you can observe.
(to Fletcher)
Do it. Find him.

Fletcher cuts a look at Witwer and heads out. Witwer remains eerily calm, sticks a piece of gum in his mouth.

WITWER

He came to see you yesterday.
Right before he got tagged. What did you talk about?

BURGESS

The Mets. John doesn't think they've got a deep enough pitching roster this year, and I'm inclined to agree.

WITWER

Why are you protecting him? You knew he was doping, yet you did nothing about it.

BURGESS

The man lost a child, for Christ's sake...

WITWER

Six years ago. What did you two talk about yesterday afternoon?

BURGESS

(turning away)
None of your damn business.

WITWER

Oh, it's all my damn business now,
Lamar.

(then)

Investigation of a supervising office for a capital crime falls under federal jurisdiction... so as to rule out any possibility of conspiracy. He's my suspect.

BURGESS

He's my subordinate!

Burgess looks at him. Hates him, but knows he can't win.

WITWER

Shall we call the Attorney General?
I'm sure he'd be happy to clarify the issue for you.

BURGESS

(beat)
I don't want John Anderton hurt.

EXT. MALL - DAY

As Anderton seems to float through the city, BILLBOARDS and other ADVERTISEMENTS scan his eyes and actually call to him by name.

ADVERTISEMENTS

(travel)

Stressed out John Anderton? Need a vacation? Come to Aruba!

(sportswear)

Challenge yourself, John! Push harder, John!

(Lexus Motor Co.)

It's not just a car, Mr. Anderton. It's an environment, designed to soothe and caress the tired soul...

WITWER (V.O.)

You've all worked with him...

INT. BRIEFING ROOM - DAY

Witwer addresses the Precrime crew. Behind him is the frozen video image of Anderton shooting Leo Crow. Evanna stares up at it in disbelief.

WITWER

You may consider him a friend.

He walks up the line now, looking into the eyes of each and every one of them.

WITWER

But we know that John Anderton is going to kill Leo Crow this Friday at three-o-six p.m., unless we stop him.

He looks into Fletcher's eyes, moves on...

WITWER

Don't think for a minute that if the situation was reversed he wouldn't go after you. He would be a cop doing his job, as I'm doing mine.

He stops at Evanna and looks her in the eye now.

WITWER

So if you're not ready and willing to put the halo on him, leave now.

A few looks around the room, but nobody gets up. Not even Fletcher. Witwer stares another moment at Evanna, smiles, offers her a piece of gum...

EVANNA

No, thank you.

He sticks it in his own mouth, then turns to the officer beside her.

WITWER

You can go.

OFFICER

Excuse me?

WITWER

Go. You're dismissed.

(points to another)

You, too.

(another)

And you.

Everybody watches as the men Witwer dismissed walk out.

FLETCHER

Sir, the team's gonna be light without those men.

WITWER

Yes, I know.

And now the Pressure Door opens and FOUR LARGE MEN in dark suits enter the room. Knott smiles at the sight of them.

WITWER

These gentlemen are Federal Agents
Jucket, Paymen, Price and Foley.
Like you, I feel more comfortable with people I trust.

INT. MALL - DAY

As Anderton watches people all over the mall getting EYE scanned...

He spots a UNIFORMED COP headed his way. The cop hasn't spotted Anderton yet who now transfers to the fast lane on the moving walkway and gets off at the New Metro station.

INT. NEW METRO - DAY

Reaching the bottom of the escalators, Anderton spots two METRO COPS talking to a HOMELESS MAN. He veers around them, making it across the platform to the train, which is just arriving.

He pushes his way on with the other passengers. As the doors close, an EYE-DENT SCANNER sweeps through the cabin -- that's how the system bills citizens for using the train. Anderton tries to look away, but it's impossible to avoid.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

Witwer watches as Jad works the display, watching the movement of BLUE DOTS that represent EYEscanned citizens. A BEEP and Jad sits up.

JAD

I got him on the Metro!
(indicates the map)
The train makes two stops, at 20th and then 33rd.

WITWER

Split the units, go to both.

FLETCHER

We'll never make 20th.

Witwer looks at Fletcher. Gives him an odd smile.

WITWER

Have faith.

INT. PRECRIME READY ROOM - DAY

As Fletcher and the other Precops strap into HOVERSUITS.

INT. SUBWAY - DAY

Anderton rides the train, avoiding the eyes of other passengers. A nearby PASSENGER is flipping pages in the digital Post, where the headline changes to "Precrime Hunts Its Own".

INT. SUBWAY - METRO STATION - DAY

As Anderton gets off the train, stops cold when he sees...

NINE PRECRIME COPS IN HOVERSUITS stand waiting for him.
Fletcher steps forward...

FLETCHER

We know there's been a mistake, Chief. Come on back with us so we can talk, get this thing straightened out.

Anderton takes off running. He barges through a NEWSSTAND, knocking it over, momentarily slowing the cops behind him.

EXT. SUBWAY STATION - DUPONT CIRCLE - DAY

As Anderton explodes onto street level and takes off running. He runs close to a wall, the ADVERTISEMENTS FLASHING AT HIM. He dodges people left and right, but doesn't slow down...

Anderton runs faster and faster, it's starting to sink in that his life has changed forever... that he's now and forever a hunted man.

Anderton turns down an alley. One of the Hover Cops is now behind him... gets ahead of him, swings around and cuts him off. Anderton stops, sees the others landing at the other end of the alley. WE HEAR A DOG BARKING O.S.

FLETCHER

Don't run, Chief. You know we'll catch you. You trained us.

ANDERTON

Everybody runs.

FLETCHER

You don't have to do this, Chief.

ANDERTON

You don't have to chase me, Fletcher.

He stares at Fletcher. The DOG GOES QUIET.

FLETCHER

Chief, please...

Anderton sees Knott reaching behind his back, coming out with the HALO. The cop BEHIND ANDERTON takes out his sick-stick... All of them begin moving in forcing Anderton back against the wall, A WINDOW BEHIND HIM...

KNOTT

Easy does it, Chief.

Anderton keeps one eye on the sick-stick, the other on the halo. When SUDDENLY A HUGE DOG HITS THE GLASS.

Anderton grabs the sick-stick and shoves it at Knott, then ducks as Knott pukes on the other cop. Anderton starts up the fire escape...

The Hover Cops blast up after him, one of them hitting the floor grating on the landing as Anderton climbs through...

On the landing a Hover Cop floats up, just off the landing and draws his sick-stick. Anderton reaches out and hits the hoverpacks quick release and the PACK ROCKETS UP AND AWAY as the cop now falls.

Several other Hover Cops fly up the building. One of them jumps Anderton on the fire escape. Anderton slams him into the window. The cop kicks back and Anderton swings out, hanging onto the ladder... dangling... he looks down...

The other cops are now jetting up towards him... a moment... then ANDERTON LETS GO... FALLS... going DOWN towards the other cops coming UP... One of them looks up, it's KNOTT...

He gasps as ANDERTON falls onto him. Hangs on. The other cops BLURRING PAST as they fly up... they turn and look at Anderton and Knott now plummeting... the ground coming up fast... when...

Anderton GRABS THE THROTTLE and HITS THE GAS and the hoverpack slows down, Anderton and Knott hovering just above the ground as the other cops now once more descend...

Knott tries to fight back and Anderton hits the throttle and smacks Knott back-first into the wall... and then UP ALONG THE SIDE OF THE BUILDING, taking out planter boxes as they go... hitting a WINDOW AWNING which CATCHES FIRE from the THRUSTERS.

The rest of the cops fly up as Anderton now knocks away the burning awning, sees the ascending cops and sweeps Knott and the hoverpack down and hits the thrusters... blasting the cops...

Anderton (still hanging onto Knott) drops and hovers, then races along the building, scraping KNOTT AGAINST THE BRICK. They head for the wall of another building when Anderton veers them off...

Anderton and Knott head up A CONSTRUCTION TUBE, it catches fire behind them. They race up, the fire racing right behind them. At the end of the tube we see HOVER COPS waiting...

But Anderton and Knott thrust through, head right into a hanging scaffolding, scattering debris down onto the cops. Anderton and Knott race around the corner.

INT. TENEMENT - DAY

As a FAMILY sits down to dinner. Calm. Anderton and Knott burst through the window and zoom around the room before then crashing up into the ceiling, the hoverpack thrusters torching the dinner on the stove directly below.

The other cops now fly in through the windows as Anderton and Knott fly up into the next floor through the hole, the other cops following, the thrusters catching everything in their wake on fire, the FAMILY ducking as the hover cops fly past overhead...

EXT. ALLEY - DAY - LOOKING UP

As Anderton and Knott burst out of one apartment, cross the alley and burst into another...

INT. APARTMENT - A KID'S BEDROOM - DAY

A KID looks up from his homework as the Hoverpack fizzles out and Knott and Anderton go at it on the floor, Anderton taking Knott out with the kid's hockey stick.

The other cops come flying in and Anderton takes off running. The cops in their hoverpacks get stuck in the door. A dazed Knott is the last one to get up, while behind him, we see the kid shove Knott's abandoned hoverpack under his bed...

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

As Anderton crashes into an adjoining apartment an instant before the cops begin deploying in the hallway. Tenants are roused as Anderton changes rooms across the hall, always one beat ahead of the cops.

A cop goes into a room a beat after Anderton. We HEAR THE SOUNDS OF A STRUGGLE, then a moment later, Anderton emerges wearing the cop's hoverpack and rockets down the hall. He crashes out the window, catching the carpet on fire. THE SPRINKLERS ERUPT IN SEQUENCE as...

EXT. BUILDING - DAY

The cops all fly out the window and we now PULL BACK TO REVEAL A DUMPSTER LID in immediate f.g. Anderton lies there watching as the cops fly off and away...

EXT. LEXUS FACTORY - DAY

As Anderton climbs the fence, SETS OFF AN ALARM. He moves to the new vehicles and tries to open the doors. THEY'RE ALL LOCKED. He looks off, sees THE BLINKING LIGHTS of the Hover Cops and runs for the cover of the factory itself.

INT. LEXUS FACTORY - ENTRY AREA - DAY

We hear A LOW HUM as now FOUR PRECOPS enter in hoversuits. They stop in mid-air and drop their packs in unison.

INT. COMPUTER ROOM - DAY

Anderton hides as the precops move towards the room. One of them breaks through the door. The other cops move into the room behind him. ANDERTON IS GONE. They look off at...

THE FACTORY DOORWAY

As Anderton runs through it, heading inside the main building.

INT. MAIN FACTORY AREA - DAY

As Anderton stops a moment and takes in the entire factory. We see that IT IS COMPLETELY AUTOMATED.

INT. ENTRY AREA - DAY

As Witwer and his four goons now head inside. They approach the precops and now they all walk inside together.

A WIDER SHOT

Of the Stereo Lithographer in the f.g. Witwer and the others entering in the b.g. Anderton watches the group from across the factory, then moves off.

ON WITWER

As he looks at the CAMERAS all around the factory, then turns to his wrist communicator...

WITWER

Jad. Patch me into security.

Witwer looks at his watch, sees the different views of the factory. Sees Anderton running. Witwer deploys the other men with HAND SIGNS. Witwer then looks at the watch, moves off, takes a position behind a machine.

ON ANDERTON

As he moves along the assembly line. The car door to a vehicle is being tested: open-shut, open-shut, open...

He's suddenly jumped by Price. Anderton takes a swing, but Foley comes up behind him, and holds onto him while Price now clumsily fumbles with a halo, moves towards Anderton. Anderton struggles as the guy tries to put the halo on...

He kicks Foley, knocks him back into one of the cars as now A ROBOT ARM swings in and a panel welds the man into the door frame.

The arm opens and closes the door in the b.g. as Anderton and Price fight it out in the f.g. Anderton gets free and climbs up a CRANE, hanging onto it as Price hangs onto him and they rise up towards a CONVEYOR BELT full of engine blocks.

Anderton swings Price against the blocks, the lithography pool approaching now. Anderton shakes loose the agent who drops, lands on a CHASSIS IN THE MIDDLE OF THE POOL, sinks into the lithographer surface... and SUBMERGES!

Anderton hangs from the crane as now the LASERS FIRE into the pool. A moment later the chassis re-emerges. We see A HAND, then PULL BACK TO REVEAL AGENT PRICE FROZEN ONTO THE CHASSIS like a giant hood ornament as it's lifted from the pool by a huge robotic arm and carried away.

Anderton jumps from the crane to a smaller one, then lands on the CONVEYER BELT and starts running. And now we go...

OVERHEAD - TRACKING

As Anderton runs below, Jucket on the floor below unable to reach him as he runs by, but now we reveal PAYMEN ON A BEAM ABOVE ANDERTON... he dives and lands on...

Anderton. The two men begin fighting on the conveyor belt leading to the vertical stereo lithographer. Paymen kicks Anderton who falls back on the belt... the lithographer machine in b.g.

Anderton tries to get up, but Paymen hits him again. We see the Lithographer fabricating a car part right behind them... Paymen pulls a weapon and lunges at Anderton who judo throws the man over him and into the lithographer...

The curtain lasers activate and "sculpt" him as he freezes in place. Anderton grabs one of the passing cranes and jumps on...

As Anderton rides the crane ACROSS FRAME, we REVEAL WITWER WATCHING HIM. Anderton gets off the crane and lands right in front of Witwer who steps out and hits him in the face...

The ASSEMBLY LINE moves past as the two men fight their way towards it. A CAR moves past as Witwer and Anderton tumble into the empty engine compartment.

And now the ROBOTIC ARMS GO TO WORK ON THE CAR ALL AROUND THEM. A crane LOWERS AN ENGINE BLOCK above them, Anderton sees it and rolls them both out of the way as THE ENGINE SMASHES DOWN INTO PLACE.

The two of them roll over the dash as another piece drops into frame and smashes into place. As the two fight, a machine blasts in from the side and STAMPS THE DASHBOARD INTO PLACE.

Witwer looks forward and sees the TANGLE OF ROBOTIC ARMS NOW ENVELOPING THE CAR IN FRONT OF THEM. Witwer grabs onto a retracting robot arm and is lifted up and away from the car as now...

The ROBOT ARMS BEGIN ASSEMBLING THE CAR ALL AROUND ANDERTON. He rolls towards the rear as one machine after another stamps pieces into the car. A LASER GRID appears over his face as a LASER WELDER POPS UP and now...

THE LASER begins firing welding "hits" towards him. He jumps to the other side of the car, tries to get out when the DOOR PANEL IS SLAMMED INTO PLACE and now the welder comes around and "grids" him again. Anderton dives for the floor, just missing getting decapitated by the steering wheel as it's slammed into place. But now...

METAL PARTS BOLT UP THROUGH THE FLOOR, narrowly missing his head. Anderton looks up and sees THE SEATS SLIDING INTO POSITION OVER HIM. He grabs the steering wheel and rolls out of the way as the seat comes crashing down.

ANGLE ON RAILING

As Witwer walks up, the other men now flanking him. They watch as ROBOT ARMS DESCEND ON, THEN ENVELOPE THE CAR...

The car moves forward and the robot arms retract and now THE ROOF INSTALLING MECHANISMS SLIDE INTO PLACE. The WINDSHIELD comes down and slams into place as WELDERS DROP DOWN and now secure it.

Witwer watches the car, starts walking for the end of the line. He watches as the car enters THE PAINTING TUNNEL. Witwer and his men walk through the adjacent hallway, watching through the windows as the car rolls out...

The finished car emerges through smoke and lasers from the painting tunnel. Witwer and his men approach the driver's side window... the car looks empty... until...

Anderton pops up into frame and STARTS THE CAR. He turns and looks at WITWER, HIS ANGRY REFLECTION IN THE GLASS as Anderton now DRIVES THE CAR OUT OF THERE and we then...

DISSOLVE TO:

INT./ EXT. RED LEXUS - MARYLAND COUNTRYSIDE - DAY

Anderton drives away from the city on the open road, passing a solar/wind farm. Giant windmills and solar panels dot the landscape for as far as the eye can see.

EXT. FARMLAND - DAY

The surroundings become more and more rural. Anderton's vehicle kicks up a roostertail of dust along the dirt side road as he passes a row of old mailboxes.

EXT. A WALLED ESTATE - DAY

Overgrown with vines and shrubbery of every possible variety. Anderton gets out of his vehicle and moves to a wooden gate. A rusted NO TRESPASSING SIGN is nailed to it.

Anderton rings the BELL. No answer. He peers through a crack in the gate. We then...

BEGIN TO CRANE UP

As Anderton moves to the wall, and starts climbing the vines. He gets to the top of the wall, looks out at...

GARDENS

Wild and out of control. A small ivy-covered STONE HOUSE is nestled into a corner of the property. Smoke rises from the chimney. Anderton starts down the other side of the wall.

EXT. THE GARDENS - DAY

As Anderton jumps to the ground. His shirt is ripped; his arms scratched from what he realizes are THORNS embedded in the vines.

We hear RUSTLING as, behind Anderton, several of the plants unfurl to their full dimensions of eight feet and wrap their vines around Anderton's neck and torso.

He breaks free. We hear CLASSICAL MUSIC O.S. and Anderton moves through the gardens towards it. He stops, dizzy, touches his forehead and then looks off at...

A GREENHOUSE

Where we see A WOMAN, 50, dressed in a wide-brimmed hat and gardening attire, attending to the plants, gently spraying, then wiping each leaf with a small, square cloth...

Anderton staggers into the greenhouse, something now quite wrong with him.

ANDERTON

Dr. Hineman --

Quick as a flash she holds up her cane and a six-inch BLADE extends from the tip to Anderton's throat. She looks down the length of it at Anderton, his ripped clothing, bruised face, and scratched arms.

IRIS

You're trespassing.

He starts to sway, touches his forehead.

IRIS

Something wrong?

ANDERTON

I'm a little dizzy...

She casually leans on the cane, shoving the blade back up inside.

IRIS

Yes, I'm afraid that would be from the Doll's Eye.

ANDERTON

The what?

IRIS

The vine -- the Baneberry that scratched you during your illegal climb over my wall...

She leads Anderton over to a wooden table just inside the greenhouse where she's got AFTERNOON TEA set up.

IRIS

It's not a true Doll's Eye, of course, but a little hybrid of my own design.

Anderton staggers, grabs hold of the table for support.

IRIS

It's quite something, once the poison gets into your bloodstream, you'll start to see what I can only describe as the most extraordinary display of blue objects.

Anderton struggles. She watches him a moment.

IRIS

This just isn't your week, is it, Chief?

He pulls his gun. She shakes her head...

IRIS

Now now...

She easily takes it away from him, jacks the clip onto the table, then calmly pours a cup of tea.

IRIS

You have three minutes to tell me what you're doing here before I feed you to a few of my more predacious plants.

ANDERTON

I'm... not... a... killer.

She studies him a moment, then tears a leaf from a plant, and calmly begins crumpling it up into the tea...

IRIS

You better drink this. Soon you won't be able to swallow, and then you'll be totally buggered.

He looks at the cup, hesitates, tries to pick it up.

IRIS

Drink all of it.

She pours the rest into his mouth. He sits back, waits for the antidote to take effect.

IRIS

Take a moment to right yourself.

She picks up some pruning shears and goes to work on an orchid.

IRIS

Just what is it you think I can do for you?

ANDERTON

You can tell me how someone... could fake a prevision.

IRIS

And how would I know that?

He looks at her.

ANDERTON

You invented precrime.

She chuckles bitterly at that one.

ANDERTON

What's so funny?

IRIS

If the unintended consequences of a series of genetic mistakes and science gone haywire can be called invention, then yes, I invented precrime.

ANDERTON

You don't seem all that proud.

IRIS

I'm not. I was trying to heal them, not turn them into... something else.

ANDERTON

Heal who?

IRIS

The innocents we now use to stop the guilty.

ANDERTON

You're talking about the precogs...

IRIS

You think the three in the tank come from a test tube? They're merely the ones who survived.

She sits down, pours herself some tea.

IRIS

I was doing genetic research at the Woodhaven Clinic in Rhode Island on Renning's Syndrome, a neurological condition that affects the cerebral cortex of children. Most of these kids were abandoned or forgotten. Very few of the kids lived past the age of twelve.

She looks away, remembering it all now...

IRIS

It began as play. A guessing game like you play with any toddler, except these children always guessed right.

(then)

And then the nightmares started. They were all different, but all the same. They were all about murder. And the murders were all happening.

ANDERTON

And how did Lamar become involved?

IRIS

Back then, he was still a DA, and quite a few parents of my patients had passed through his courtroom. You have to understand, these people were the dregs of society. But once they saw their children... he decided he would do whatever he could for them. He's that way, you know, paternal about certain things. Precrime. The precogs. You.

ANDERTON

(keeping her on track)

You say some of the children died?

IRIS

So many of them... despite what we did for them. Or maybe because of what we did to them.

(then, bitter)

It doesn't matter. It's a perfect system now, isn't it?

ANDERTON

I'm not a murderer. I've never even met the man I'm supposed to

IRIS

And, yet, a chain of events has started. A chain that will lead inexorably to his death.

ANDERTON

Not if I stay away from him.

IRIS

How can you avoid a man you've never met?

ANDERTON

So you won't help me?

IRIS

I can't help you. No one can. The Precogs are never wrong.

He turns away, looking lost. She picks up her tea cup, looks at him over the top.

IRIS

But, occasionally, they do disagree.

He turns back to her. She casually sips her tea.

ANDERTON

What?

IRIS

Most of the time, all three Precognitives will see an event in the same way. But once in a while, one of them will see things differently than the other two.

ANDERTON

Jesus Christ -- why didn't I know about this?

IRIS

Because these Minority Reports are destroyed the instant they occur.

ANDERTON

Why?

IRIS

Obviously, for Precrime to function, there can't be any suggestion of fallibility. After all, what good is a Justice system that instills doubt? It may be Anderton tries to take all of this in, looks at her.

ANDERTON

You're saying that I've halo'd innocent people?

IRIS

I'm saying that every so often those accused of a precrime might, just might, have an alternate future.

ANDERTON

Does Burgess know about this?
About the Minority Report?

IRIS

(beat)

I used to joke with Lamar that we were the mother and father of Precrime. Well, in my experience, parents often see their children as they want them to be, not as they are.

ANDERTON

Answer my question. Did Lamar
Burgess know about the Minority Report?

IRIS

Yes, of course, he knew, but at the time, he felt -- we both felt their existence was... an insignificant variable.

ANDERTON

Insignificant to you maybe, but what about those people I put away with alternate futures? My God, if the country knew there was a chance they might not --

IRIS

The system would collapse.

ANDERTON

I believe in that system...

IRIS

Do you? Really?

He looks at her.

ANDERTON

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
You want to bring it down.

IRIS
But you will bring it down if you kill Leo Crow.
(she relishes the thought)
Why, that will be the most spectacular public display of how Precrime... didn't work.

ANDERTON
I'm not gonna kill anybody.

IRIS
Hold that thought.

ANDERTON
Why should I trust you?

IRIS
You shouldn't. You shouldn't trust anyone... certainly not the Attorney General who wants it all for himself. Not the young federal agent who wants your job. Not even the old man who just wants to hang onto what he's created. Don't trust anyone.
(then)
Just find the Minority Report.

ANDERTON
You said they're destroyed.

IRIS
I said the record is destroyed.
The original report exists for all time.
(then)
I designed the system so that whenever a report occurred, it would be stored in a safe place -- but not declared.

ANDERTON
What safe place is that?

IRIS
The safest place of all.

Anderton grabs her hand as she reaches once more for her teacup, spilling it.

ANDERTON
Where?

IRIS

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Inside the Precog who predicted it.
(then)
All you have to do is download it.

ANDERTON
That's all, huh? Just walk right into Precrime, go into the Temple, somehow tap into the Precogs, and then download this Minority Report...

IRIS
If... you have one.

ANDERTON
-- and then walk out.

IRIS
Actually, I think you'll have to run out, but yes, that's what you have to do.

ANDERTON
You're insane or you think I am.

She shrugs.

ANDERTON
I'll get EYEscanned a dozen times before I get within ten miles of Precrime. They'll pick me up...

IRIS
(looks at him)
Sometimes in order to see the light, you have to risk the dark.

He looks back at her.

IRIS
As a policeman -- excuse me, a former policeman -- I'm sure you know all sorts of people who could... help you out in this regard.

Anderton sits there thinking about what she's suggesting.
She gets up, moves to one of her plants, starts feeding it with a sprayer. She reaches out and takes a long vine in her hand and strokes it...

IRIS
It's funny how all living organisms are alike. When the chips are down...
(she grips the vine)
When the pressure is on...

(squeezes it tighter)

... every creature on the face of the earth is interested in one thing and one thing only:

The vine suddenly whips out of her hand.

IRIS

It's own survival.

She looks at Anderton.

IRIS

Find the Minority Report.

Anderton sees that her palm is now bleeding from the vine.
She smiles, takes out a handkerchief and wraps her hand.

She then turns her back on him and faces her plants.

ANDERTON

How do I even know which one has
it?

IRIS

It's always in the more gifted of the three.

ANDERTON

Which one is that?

IRIS

(isn't it obvious)

The female.

She picks up her cane and turns the music back on, leaving Anderton to ponder this.

CUT TO:

THE ANDERTON PREVISION

The series of images we saw earlier: a MAN backlit by a window. A FACE WEARING SUNGLASSES outside the window. "6" becoming "9". A GUN GOES OFF. A MAN FLYING THROUGH THE WINDOW. We're ZOOMING IN AND OUT. PANNING THIS WAY AND THAT now we...

REVEAL: ANDERTON'S OFFICE - PRECRIME

As Fletcher works the Prevision screen in here, Witwer looks around the office. He pulls open a drawer. It's empty.

JAD (O.S.)

He wasn't in here much. He preferred to be with the team.

Witwer looks to where Jad stands in the doorway. Witwer notices something above Jad's head. A LASER PROJECTOR. Witwer looks around, sees A JACKET COVERING A PIECE OF EQUIPMENT ON THE BOOKSHELF. Knott comes into the room.

KNOTT

You seen the latest polls? We're dead even.

He sits on Anderton's desk, knocking over a photograph of Anderton, his wife, and son.

KNOTT

Even since Chief America ran away, the numbers for Precrime have been goin' up.

(looks at Fletcher)

People feel better, they know we're willing to go after one of our own.

JAD

More likely, people just want a show like this every week.

Fletcher calmly rights the photograph, indicates the screen.

FLETCHER

Here's where we're at. Three men in a room. The victims here. Anderton here, and this unidentified male out the window. The exterior of the adjacent building suggests public housing, but I can't make out the location. Government architecture is modern/conformist which means --

WITWER

There's thousands of units like this one.

FLETCHER

(nods)

They're everywhere.

Witwer looks at the photograph of Anderton, Sean and Lara.

WITWER

But he doesn't go there to kill Crow for another twenty-two hours. In the meantime, I'm betting he's somewhere in the sprawl.

Jad and Fletcher exchange looks.

WITWER

Anderton's smart enough to go where

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... electronic billboards and other media can't ID him to pick his pocket. There's fewer consumers down there, which means fewer scanners to target him.

FLETCHER

No offense, sir, but why wouldn't he just run?

WITWER

Because he thinks he's innocent.

Witwer pulls the jacket off and we see A HOLO-COMPUTER like the one Anderton has at home.

WITWER

We concentrate on the sprawl. We do overflies in ships with two spyder teams on the ground. Go building by building. Thermal scan the whole area, read anything with eyes and a heartbeat.

Witwer switches the computer on and we see AN IMAGE OF LARA
IN A EVENING GOWN OPENING A PRESENT...

LARA

John -- stop filming me.

Witwer watches as Lara, looks up at us, her face beautiful.

WITWER

Where is she?

EXT. INNER CITY SLUMS - DAY

As Anderton walks up to one of the more decrepit-looking buildings and then takes off into the night. A giant TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM VENT blows on him from above as he takes a hit off an inhaler, tosses it aside and walks to the entrance.

DR. EDDIE (V.O.)

Have a seat, Chief...

INT. DR. EDDIE'S "OPERATING" ROOM - DAY

A shitty little room with a single stained overstuffed chair in the corner, a foul kitchen piled high with dirty dishes and a grime-smeared window looking out onto another wall.

In the center of all this is a make-shift medical set-up: a gleaming operating table, an array of lasers, scalpels and other surgical and anesthesia equipment.

Anderton sits in a chair facing DR. SOLOMON EDDIE -- a skinny man with a shock of hair on top, like an upended broom. Dr. Eddie sneezes, blows his nose hard into a handkerchief.

DR. EDDIE

Damn cold won't go away.

Anderton glances about uneasily as the man sneezes again. Dr. Eddie sees he's anxious and smiles.

DR. EDDIE

Don't worry. I could cut open your chest, sew a dead cat in there and you'd never get an infection. Not with the spectrum of antibiotics I'll be shooting into you.

ANDERTON

That's comforting.

DR. EDDIE

You do understand I can't just give you new irises. The scanners will read the scar tissue. Alarms will go off. Large men with guns will appear...

ANDERTON

Right. I know --

Anderton stiffens as Dr. Eddie injects him...

DR. EDDIE

Anesthesia. Try to relax, John.

(injecting)

I'm saying I'll have to remove your eyes. Completely.

ANDERTON

Yeah --

DR. EDDIE

And replace them with new ones.

ANDERTON

I know that, but I wanna keep the old ones.

DR. EDDIE

Why?

ANDERTON

Because my mother gave them to me. What do you care? They're no good to you on the secondary market anyway.

DR. EDDIE

Dr. Eddie holds out his hand and Anderton hands him a tiny opalescent card.

DR. EDDIE
Greta!

Dr. Eddie yells something in SWEDISH and now into the room walks a LARGE WOMAN in a white coat.

DR. EDDIE
This is Miss Van Eyck, my gorgeous assistant.

She turns and giggles at Anderton and we see A MOLE on her cheek the size of Bermuda.

ANDERTON
Nice to meet you.

Miss Van Eyck slides the card into a small console, watches the numbers flash up. She says something to Dr. Eddie who looks at the numbers then frowns at Anderton.

DR. EDDIE
That's not much.

ANDERTON
It's all I could safely move.

DR. EDDIE
Tell you what, since you and I go way back, I'll give you my Old Pal discount. How's that sound?

Anderton looks at him. "Go way back?"

DR. EDDIE
You don't remember me, do you?

ANDERTON
We know each other?

DR. EDDIE
Oh, yes.

Miss Van Eyck picks up a LASER SCALPEL, blows on the end to clean it off, then hands it to Dr. Eddie who tests it on a PIECE OF METAL. Anderton watching as it cuts right through.

ANDERTON
From where? D.C.?

DR. EDDIE
Baltimore. Eastside.
(then)

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Solomon P. Eddie M.D. I was a plastic surgeon.

Anderton thinks a moment. The name rings a bell.

DR. EDDIE
I specialized in burn victims.
(then)
Women mostly.

Boom. Anderton looks at him.

ANDERTON
I put you away --

DR. EDDIE
Yes, you did.

ANDERTON
You made those tapes...

DR. EDDIE
(defensive)
They were performance pieces.

ANDERTON
You set your patients on fire!

DR. EDDIE
And put them out. Some not as quickly as others, but let's change the subject, shall we? The future is much more interesting than the past. Don't you think?

Dr. Eddie walks over to a large medical cabinet and opens the door. It's full of EYES and PARTS OF EYES -- all in cryo jars. Anderton turns away. It's the last thing he wants to see. Dr. Eddie studies them a moment, then...

Anderton watches as he and Miss Van Eyck confer in Swedish and she starts giggling at whatever it is he said. The doc himself has a smile on his face as he turns back around.

DR. EDDIE
Lie down, John.

Anderton hesitates, finally complies. Next thing he knows Miss Van Eyck is smiling down on him, her big face hovering above his like a planet. She smiles, then...

MISS VAN EYCK
(the only English she knows)
Hello.

ANDERTON

Uh, hi --

DR. EDDIE
Try to relax, Chief.

Anderton counts to himself, listens to Dr. Eddie preparing instrument trays, sharing another joke in Swedish with his assistant. MORE GIGGLING O.S. Anderton looks over...

ANDERTON
So uh, if you were a plastic surgeon before...

DR. EDDIE
How can I do what I do now? Let's just say I spent a lot of time in the prison library.

Anderton turns and casts a groggy eye at Dr. Eddie to see if he's serious, but the good doctor has his back to him as he does his prep work.

DR. EDDIE
It was a great way to avoid some of the more unpleasant aspects of prison life.
(then)
Yes, confinement was a real education, a real eye opener if you will.

Anderton tries to get up, but Miss Van Eyck gently pushes him down again.

MISS VAN EYCK
No no no...

DR. EDDIE
I mean, for true enlightenment, John, there's nothing quite like the experience of, say, taking a shower while a large felon with a hard-on you can't knock down with a hammer whispers in your --

ANDERTON
(tries to sit up)
Uh, okay, you know what? I think maybe I'll just --

But Anderton can't raise himself up: The drug is starting to take effect. Dr. Eddie approaches with the LASER SCALPEL...

DR. EDDIE
Yes, it was a lot of fun. Thank you so much, John, for putting me there. For giving me the

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... opportunity to get to know myself better. And now...

He clicks on the LASER, right in front of one of Anderton's eyes...

DR. EDDIE
To return the favor...

And just as the LIGHT-BLADE is about to touch the eye, we go to...

EXT. BEACH COTTAGE - CHESAPEAKE BAY - DAY

We see LARA, Anderton's ex-wife, standing on a ladder, painting a weatherbeaten shutter. She looks older now. More tired than in the images we've seen.

VOICE
Lara?

She turns and we see Danny Witwer approaching. She watches him come, climbs down the ladder.

WITWER
My name is Danny Witwer. I'm --

LARA
I know who you are.

She walks past him, goes into the cottage. He looks out at the ocean a moment, then follows.

INT. COTTAGE - DAY

Simple, comfortable with an endless view of the sea. DOZENS OF BLACK & WHITE PHOTOGRAPHS line the floor, hang from the walls. Lara pours Witwer and herself a cup of coffee.

WITWER
This your work?

LARA
Yes.

We see that the photographs are all reportage shots of CHILDREN.

WITWER
I like it.

LARA
Thanks. You take anything in your coffee?

WITWER
Cream and sugar.

LARA

I don't have any cream. Sorry.

WITWER

Just sugar then. You and John ever come here?

LARA

We used to, every summer.

WITWER

He's not here now, is he?

She looks at him.

WITWER

I had to ask.

She hands him his coffee.

LARA

I don't have any sugar either.

WITWER

(smiles)

Thank you.

(then)

He hasn't tried to contact you?

LARA

No.

WITWER

You ever heard him mention the name Leo Crow?

LARA

No, but then I don't talk to John that much anymore.

WITWER

So you haven't seen his apartment?

LARA

That was our apartment.

WITWER

Have you been there recently?

He takes A BLACK INHALER from his pocket...

WITWER

It's full of these.

She stares at it.

WITWER

How long's he been doping?

She turns away, takes a moment, then...

LARA

Since right after we lost our son.

WITWER

You mean after he lost your son.

LARA

It was nobody's fault.

WITWER

But John was with him at the pool?

LARA

Yes.

Witwer watches her a moment, then...

WITWER

You said in your divorce papers that he tried to kill himself.

LARA

It wasn't a suicide attempt. I regret ever saying that.

WITWER

What was it then?

LARA

The FBI found something that belonged to my son.
(hard for her)
A sandal... Anyway, John was upset.
He... he...

WITWER

He took out his gun and sat down to watch his home movies. This is all in your statement, Lara...

LARA

He shot a hole in the damn ceiling.
So what? You lose your son, let's see how well you handle it.

WITWER

Not very well, I'm sure. I'd probably start doping myself. Or maybe I'd...

He looks at her photographs of children, but doesn't finish his thought. She turns and looks at him. He meets her gaze.

WITWER

Lamar Burgess thinks that you left John because he lost himself in Precrime instead of you.

LARA

I left him because every time I looked at him, I saw my son. Every time I got close to him, I smelled my little boy. That's why I left him.

(then)

And now you can leave.

He puts down his coffee and looks at her.

WITWER

You know I need to use you.

LARA

To what? Trap him?

WITWER

To prevent a murder. Sooner or later, he's going to contact you.

LARA

I haven't seen him in two years.

WITWER

But I've seen the three hundred hours of your image he's got stored away.

She reacts to his as he moves up close to her.

WITWER

He's still living with you.

(then)

And your son.

(then)

You have to choose, Lara. You have to choose sides now.

INT. TENEMENT ROOM - DAY

A strange, near Zoetrope-like lighting effect on the walls and ceiling as, outside, the MAGLEV cars go whizzing by. As Dr. Eddie looks down at us...

DR. EDDIE

Don't take the bandages off for twelve hours. If you take them off before then, you'll go blind. Do you understand?

Anderton lies on a caved-in bed, his face swathed in a white bandage.

DR. EDDIE

There's food in the refrigerator.
Make sure you drink a lot of water.

ANDERTON

How do I find the --

DR. EDDIE

Here --

He takes Anderton's hand and places it on a ROPE that's tied from the bedpost to the bathroom and the kitchen --

DR. EDDIE

It goes from the bathroom to the kitchen.

ANDERTON

(tries to sit up)
I can't even stand up --

DR. EDDIE

I know you're in a hurry, so I juiced up the nano-reconstruction around your new eyes.

ANDERTON

The nano... what?

DR. EDDIE

Organic microbots that reconstruct the nerves and blood vessels. It'll feel like fleas chewing on your eyeballs. But whatever you do, don't scratch.

Anderton is already reaching his hands up to his bandages. Dr. Eddie forces them away.

DR. EDDIE

Seeing as we're old pals and all, I'm giving you a bonus, might come in handy. Feel this.

Dr. Eddie takes an air-syringe from his pocket and touches it to Anderton's hand.

DR. EDDIE

It's a temporary paralytic enzyme. Shoot this baby under your chin. Right here...

Dr. Eddie presses the tip into the soft underpart of Anderton's chin. Anderton recoils.

DR. EDDIE

The enzyme turns your facial muscles to mush. You won't look like the same man. You tighten up again in about thirty minutes.
Hurts like nothing you ever felt.
(drops it in a bag)
I'll just drop it in your goodie bag along with the uh...

He holds up the bag with Anderton's OLD EYES.

DR. EDDIE

... leftovers.

Next Dr. Eddie takes a small clock from his pocket and places it on a dresser beside Anderton's bed.

DR. EDDIE

I'm setting up a timer. When it goes off tomorrow, take off your bandages and get the hell out of here. But not before then, or you'll --

ANDERTON

-- go blind. I know.

He takes something from his pocket, puts it into Anderton's hand. A BLACK INHALER.

DR. EDDIE

A little something from our mutual friend.

VOICE

That you, Chief?

Anderton turns towards the voice and we see LYCON standing in the doorway, clutching his dirty sock full of inhalers, HIS MANGY SEEING EYE DOG at his heel.

DR. EDDIE

I believe you know Lycon. I purchase my more hard to get pharmaceuticals from him. And, of course, once upon a time he was also a patient of mine. Like you.

LYCON

Good luck, Chief.

And they start out of there, Lycon's dog bumping into the wall on the way out. We hear the DOOR CLOSE O.S. Anderton lies there, gripping the bed, listening to the TICK TICK TICK of the timer. We now...

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. TENEMENT CITY - DAY

As a Precrime ship cruises past the tenement.

INT. TENEMENT - DAY

It's only been a few hours. Anderton, still blindfolded by his dressings, is unaware of the Precrime Ship that passes by the open window, grimy curtains blowing in the breeze.

He takes the inhaler Dr. Eddie had left him from his pocket. He feels it in his hand a moment, then takes a long hit.

He listens to the MUFFLED VOICES that float in through the paper-thin walls; a cacophony of HUMAN SOUND above, below, and all around him. TICK... TICK... TICK...

SEAN (V.O.)

How much time, Dad?

Now, gradually, LIGHT BEGINS TO FILL THE ROOM as we...

DISSOLVE TO:

A PUBLIC POOL - DAY

Crowded. Laughing kids. Yelling Parents. Anderton stands in the shallow end looking at his WATCH as his six-year-old son breaks the surface of the water.

ANDERTON

Twelve seconds. A new record.

The boy smiles, clings to the side.

SEAN

Okay... now let me time you.

ANDERTON

Are you kidding? There's absolutely positively no way, on my best day, I could ever beat twelve seconds!

SEAN

Come on!

ANDERTON

All right, I'll try...

Sean hauls himself up onto the side, lets his feet dangle in the water. Anderton takes his WATCH off, hands it to him.

ANDERTON

The kid takes it, delighted to be holding his father's watch.

SEAN

Okay -- Ready? Set... Go!

And now WE GO UNDER WITH ANDERTON as he sinks down to the bottom of the pool, shuts his eyes to all of the activity and muffled sound around him.

And now we wait. Five seconds... Ten seconds... Twenty seconds... And then A SHINY GLINT as...

WE SEE HIS WATCH sink past his face and now he opens his eyes. He snatches it, and Anderton now pushes up to...

THE SURFACE. Where Anderton, squinting against the sun's glare, looks to the side of the pool. HIS SON IS GONE.

ANDERTON

Sean?

He moves to the side and pulls himself out of the pool.

ANDERTON

Sean Anderton? Where are you?

He looks around at all the faces, the other kids, parents, a dull panic setting in now as we...

CRANE UP and away from a frantic Anderton now pushing his way through the crowd. Shouting for his son...

ANDERTON

SEAN!!

INT. TENEMENT ROOM - NIGHT

As Anderton's SHOUT ECHOES and then FADES. He sits there a moment, listening to the sounds all around him. He CRUSHES THE BLACK INHALER and throws the pieces on the floor.

He then takes a breath and feels around for THE ROPE and starts for the kitchen, unaware of THE PRECRIME SHIP now moving past the window IN THE OTHER DIRECTION...

INT. PRECRIME HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna, unaware that Anderton is in the building moves into position over the building.

EVANNA

Jad, we're now in position and ready to begin thermal scan on 931 Powell.

INT. TENEMENT ROOM - NIGHT

As Anderton follows the rope to the refrigerator and opens it.

Inside, among plates of ROTTING FOOD we see ONE GOOD SANDWICH. Anderton reaches in, runs his hand over the molding month-old goodies, passing the good sandwich and, instead, grabbing hold of a slimy, green piece of meat.

Much to our disgust, he shoves that in his mouth, immediately spits it out, then washes his mouth out with the old, ruined milk that sits next to the new stuff. He spits that out now, too...

ANDERTON

Shit!

He reaches gingerly into the refrigerator, locates the good sandwich, sniffs it carefully, then wolfs it down. He grabs a pitcher of water and drinks that down as well.

Anderton sits down in a chair. The muffled VOICES next door get louder.

He's sweating. He keeps reaching for his dressings to scratch, then forces himself not to by clinging tightly to the armrests on the chair as the PEOPLE NEXT DOOR move on to breaking things...

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

As Fletcher and Knott exit the Precrime Ship. Fletcher does a thermal reading on the building while they talk.

KNOTT

I'm thinking you must really like me, don't you, Fletcher?

Fletcher looks at him.

KNOTT

That's why you asked to partner with me on this little sortie, isn't it?

FLETCHER

I think you're swell company, Knott.

KNOTT

It's not at all that you don't trust me to be alone with the Chief. That you think I might, you know, fuck with him, if I had the chance...

Knott grins at him now. Pleased with himself.

FLETCHER

No, I just wanna watch him use your body to sandblast another building.
That's all. Jeff.

And the grin goes away as Fletcher looks through the scan lens on his helmet doing the thermal reading on the building.

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna looks at the thermal read on the building.

EVANNA

I show twenty-seven warm bodies.

FLETCHER (RADIO)

What do you think, four spyders?

KNOTT (RADIO)

Let's do eight. I'm hungry.

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

As Knott and Fletcher each unhook A ROUND BALL -- black, the size of billiard balls -- from their belts.

Fletcher rolls his towards the building. Knott does the same. Then they take SIX MORE and roll these as well.

THE BALLS

Roll a few feet, then begin to open up like daisies -- daisies with legs. Robotic SPYDERS, each the size of a fist, with an EYEdentiscan antenna on their head, begin to click their way into the building.

ONE OF THE SPYDERS

Pauses in front of a closed door. It FLATTENS ITSELF, then creeps under the door.

INT. A ROOM - NIGHT

Where AN OLD WOMAN sits eating a bowl of soup. She looks up as the Spyder comes CLICKING across the floor towards her.
She knows the drill, keeps a calm eye on the spyder as she eats her dinner, holding out a leg for the spyder to climb up.

OLD WOMAN

Nice to have some company...

The Spyder climbs up the woman, up her arm and across her shoulder. It grips her cheek lightly as the EYEdentiscan reads her eyes...

OLD WOMAN

See my new earrings? My grandson gave them to me. He's in beauty school --

The spyder BEEPS as it reads her --

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

Fletcher gets a reading and checks off something on his clipboard with a laser pen.

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

Anderton sits in the chair, listening now to the MUFFLED ARGUING NEXT DOOR. Suddenly, THE VOICES STOP. Anderton turns his face toward the wall...

SILENCE. Then we hear BOUNCING BEDSPRINGS as the couple next door starts to go at it. He shakes his head.

INT. HALLWAY - NIGHT

Two spyders exit the stairwell and move to the nearest doors.

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

Knott checks off another tenant. He looks at the thermal scanner, sees the double reading.

KNOTT

Hey, Fletcher. Check out the double reading.
(showing him)
Coitus interruptus.

EVANNA (RADIO)

Do you even know what that means?

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

We hear the bedsprings in the next room SQUEAK FASTER AND FASTER, the woman's MOANING now getting louder and louder.

INT. HALLWAY - NIGHT

One of the spyders flattens itself and goes under the door.

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

He sits in the chair, drumming his fingers on the arm rest as the couple gets ready to blast off. Then, abruptly, they stop. A MAN'S VOICE, SHOUTING:

MAN'S VOICE

Oh -- man -- come on! You can't

WOMAN'S VOICE

This is private property! You can't --

She cries out in pain. Anderton turns his head towards the wall.

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

Knott speaks into a microphone on his collar --

KNOTT

People, if you don't let the spyder scan you, we'll have to come in and arrest you.

FLETCHER

Knott!

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

Anderton hears familiar voices O.S.

FLETCHER'S VOICE

Please permit the spyder to scan
you --

Anderton bolts up from the chair. He quickly feels his way over to the timer, feels the face: six more hours to go; he's only halfway there. He stands there thinking a moment.

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

Knott speaks once more into the microphone...

KNOTT

Let's go, folks.

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

He follows the rope to the kitchen, opens the freezer and reaches inside, feels a couple of ice trays. He grabs them.

WOMAN'S VOICE

There! Now get the hell out!

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton feels his way over to the filthy bathtub, turns on the cold water, dumps the contents of the ice tray inside.

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

Knott checks off another, looks up at the building.

KNOTT

One more...

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

Anderton grabs whatever's cold from the fridge -- sodas, fruit, water, sandwiches -- starts to carry it all into the bathroom. On the way he trips over the guide rope and drops all of the cold stuff onto the floor.

INT. HALLWAY - NIGHT

The spyder comes out of the apartment next door, moves down towards Anderton's door.

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton dumps the stuff from the fridge into the tub. Peels off his clothes.

INT. ANDERTON'S ROOM - NIGHT

As the Spyder flattens out and eases under the door.

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

As Anderton climbs into the ice cold tub, reaches over and shuts the bathroom door as...

THE SPYDER

Turns toward the sound of the water shutting off. As it moves towards the bathroom door, it begins to fold its legs and flatten itself out.

INT. BATHROOM - HIGH ANGLE - NIGHT

Anderton lowers his head under the water, just as the spyder comes under the door and into the bathroom.

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna looks at the thermal scanner.

EVANNA

We lost one --

FLETCHER (RADIO)

Cat maybe, went out the window.

EVANNA

Awful big cat...

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton HOLDS HIS BREATH. The Spyder finally turns to leave. Begins to flatten itself out to go back under the door...

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna watches the scan, turns and looks at the building.

INT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

As Anderton lets a single bubble of air escape his lips. We watch it rise to the surface... then burst with the tiniest sounding: BLIP!

THE SPYDER

Hears it. Stops cold. Begins to EMIT A LOW BEEPING SOUND.

INT. HALLWAY - THE OTHER SPYDERS

Also begin EMITTING THE SAME SOUND, stop, turn and head off in the same direction.

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna starts to get a signal.

EVANNA

Wait a minute...

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton continues holding his breath underwater.

A HIGH ANGLE

As now SEVEN MORE SPYDERS come under the bathroom door.

FROM UNDER THE WATER - ANDERTON'S POV

Looking up at the lip of the bathtub, we SEE THE HEAD OF A SPYDER SLOWLY APPEAR JUST OVER THE EDGE OF THE TUB...

THE HIGH ANGLE

As the Spyder rises over the edge of the tub and we see not that it has grown, but that it is ACTUALLY STANDING ON THE BACKS OF THE OTHER SEVEN SPYDERS...

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

Knott looks at the scanner.

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As Evanna tries to read the scanner...

EVANNA

What do you think, guys, a drunk

EXT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

FLETCHER

Or a guy who doesn't want to get read. Stand by. We're gonna go take a look...

They grab their helmets and go into the building.

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton sits up. He feels one of the spyder's legs grab hold of his cheek and try to read his eye through the bandages. It WHIRS and HUMS trying to adjust its antenna.

ANDERTON

Please...

It STINGS HIM. He jumps back. Then he reaches up and gently, slowly, pulls down the bandages over one eye while the spyder moves in closer to read it.

INT. TENEMENT - NIGHT

As Fletcher and Knott run up the stairs...

INT. BATHROOM - NIGHT

Anderton forces his eye open and lets in the BLINDING LIGHT.

ANDERTON

Oh, God...

The spyder takes forever. Anderton's eye starts to go milky as the color and iris disintegrate. The pain is unbearable.
The spyder finally backs off --

INT. TENEMENT - HALLWAY - DAY

Fletcher and Knott come out of the stairwell, run up to ANDERTON'S DOOR when they HEAR AN INDICATOR, see that the Spyder has now gotten a reading. They stop, look down as...

All eight spyders come under the bottom of Anderton's door and start back down the hallway...

KNOTT

Let's eat.

DISSOLVE TO:

A BLURRY IMAGE

We hear THE MURMUR OF VOICES. Gradually, we begin to FOCUS... objects whizzing by us... PEOPLE all around... it's hard to see... it's all piled on top of each other...

REVEAL: PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Anderton wears new clothing now. He has dark sunglasses. He waits for the subway to pull into the station. He watches people getting on and off, all of them read by the EYEdent scanner, the scanner light silently going from red to green as they pass.

Anderton takes a breath, gets on, relaxes as the scanner light turns green.

He finds an empty seat and sits down. He lowers his head, taking off his glasses and gently massages his eyes. When he looks up, he sees...

A MOTHER AND CHILD. Blurry. Anderton's depth perception is all flattened out. We can't tell, though, that they're both staring this way, the kid pointing now...

KID

Look at his eye --

The mother hushes him up, points out the window at some sight to distract him.

Anderton turns and now WE SEE HIS EYES. One of them is milky. The other is deep brown.

Both are red around the sockets from Dr, Eddie's rush job. Anderton turns and sees his blurred reflection in the window and quickly puts his sunglasses back on.

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

Witwer sits at the desk screen studying the different images from the Prevision of Anderton murdering Leo Crow:

Anderton holding the gun. The shadowy figure of Leo Crow by the window. The face in sunglasses outside the window.

He then pans about the room: A bed. A table. A mirror. There's Anderton. Wait -- he goes back to the mirror. He leans close to the screen. Pushes in. And now we see it: A FIGURE STANDING IN THE MIRROR. Blurry. But there.

WITWER

Fletcher!

EXT. PLAZA NEAR GOVERNMENT BUILDING - DAY

A TOUR GROUP -- mostly kids, a smattering of adults -- gathers in front of the statue of the three Precogs, who look nothing like the creatures we've seen floating in the tank.

TOUR GUIDE

The Precrime program began with a Federal grant in 2036, and today, six years later, the District of Columbia is now the safest city in America. Why? Because Precrime Works.

We move OFF THE TOUR GUIDE to a shady spot beneath a tree where we see Anderton hidden in a shadow, wearing an overcoat.

TOUR GUIDE

Precrime has eliminated the need for traditional detectives, so that most of the work done here is about the verification of motive and the protection of the future victim...

Anderton pulls out the AIR SYRINGE that Dr. Eddie gave him and stares at it. He touches it to the underside of his chin and takes a deep breath...

ANDERTON

Okay, one... two -- shit.

He lowers the syringe. Can't do it. He looks around.

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As Witwer works the equipment tries to enhance the FACE IN THE MIRROR. It looks ephemeral, like the face of a ghost...

EXT. PLAZA - DAY

As Anderton takes another breath. This time counts quickly --

ANDERTON

One two three...

KID

Can we see the precogs?

And injects himself as we then PAN BACK to the Tour Guide...

TOUR GUIDE

The three precogs have such a powerful gift, they have to be kept in peaceful seclusion so as not to be distracted from the outside world. This display should give you some idea of their daily life...

The guide gestures to a DIARAMA like they have in Natural History Museums. But instead of seeing a clan of cavemen hunting a woolly mammoth with spears, the scene depicted here is supposedly of the "three precogs" performing their daily tasks.

But what we're looking at, however, is three healthy-looking silhouettes dressed in loose-fitting pajamas and sitting in overstuffed chairs in the middle of a beautiful living room, surrounded by people in white coats attending to their every need, while images of bloodless murders appear on a small TV screen in one corner.

Not at all the image of three frail, nearly translucent souls writhing about in a milk tank.

ON ANDERTON

In agony, his head ducked as he now pulls out the syringe from under his chin. He stumbles to the PRECOG DIARAMA and slowly looks up.

And now, in front of this display of lies, HIS ENTIRE FACE BEGINS TO SAG as all of his facial muscles essentially let go, changing his appearance from youthful to geriatric in a matter of seconds.

Anderton stumbles over to and then falls in behind the group as it follows the guide into the building.

TOUR GUIDE

The precogs get over eight million pieces of mail each year. That's more mail than Santa gets...

Jucket and Paymen walk out of the building, barely glance at Anderton as he passes.

INT. PRECRIME TEMPLE - DAY

As Wally hoists out one of the male precogs, begins "grooming" him. He hits an ORANGE LEVER and flushes the old milk from the tank.

EXT. PRECRIME BUILDING - DAY

As Anderton moves away from the group to a side entrance where Precrime Personnel enter. He pulls off the overcoat as he goes so that we now read the word MAINTENANCE on the back of his coveralls. He goes inside the building, into...

A MAINTENANCE AREA

Anderton emerges pushing an ultrasonic scrubber. He turns up one corridor, then another. He walks to a door marked NUTRIENT ROOM and looks both ways. He pulls a SMALL, BLACK ZIPLOC-LIKE BAG from his pocket and opens it.

And now, wincing, he very gingerly removes his TWO OLD EYES from the bag. One of the eyes slips from his hands...

ANDERTON

Oh, no...

Then the other one slips.

ANDERTON

No... no... no...

He carefully avoids stepping on them as he awkwardly scoops them up off the floor.

He then glances about, and now, holding one eye in each hand, he very very very carefully holds them up to the EYEDENTISCAN and prays...

After the world's longest beat, he gets CLEARED and quickly drops his eyeballs back into the bag and enters the secured area.

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As Fletcher comes into the room.

WITWER

Take a look.

He moves aside so Fletcher can see the screen.

WITWER

There are two others in the room besides Anderton and Crow.

FLETCHER

Two?

He indicates the face in the sunglasses...

WITWER

There's the man in sunglasses outside the window... here... but there's someone else... here... in the mirror.

Witwer begins enhancing THE FACE IN THE MIRROR...

INT. NUTRIENT ROOM - DAY

As Anderton enters the room and closes the door behind him. The room is full of pipes and tanks full of liquid. We hear A LOW HUM as Anderton makes his way through the room...

He stops at a thick glass window and we realize he's looking into THE PRECOG TANK from below. A series OF PIPES RUN INTO THE TANK. A DOOR is beside the window. Another EYEScan...

He once more takes out the black plastic bag...

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As the FACE IN THE MIRROR comes into sharper focus now...

FLETCHER
It's definitely female...

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - DAY

As Anderton comes through the door. He starts to drag Wally's desk over to barricade it...

WALLY (O.S.)
Hey!

Anderton turns, sees Wally coming over now. A look on his face...

WALLY
What're you doing in here? I'm afraid I'm gonna have to ask you to leave...

Anderton ignores him, puts a screwdriver in his mouth and jumps up and grabs a light fixture near the door, then pulls himself up like a gymnast. Wally is taken aback at the strength of the "old man..."

WALLY
Careful there, old timer, you're gonna hurt yourself...

Anderton takes the screwdriver and jams the sliding-door mechanism with it, then jumps down beside Wally.

ANDERTON
Wally, listen to me...

WALLY
Do I know you? Who are you?

Anderton touches his face, realizes it's still sagging, old looking. He grabs Wally by the shirt...

ANDERTON
I like you, Wally, so I'm not gonna kick you, or hit you with anything, but only if you promise to help me...

WALLY
(beat)
Oh... Hi, John.

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As Witwer stops working, stares at the screen.

WITWER

Who does that look like to you?

Fletcher can't make it out, shakes his head.

WITWER

It's Agatha.

And now we see the image -- the ghost-like face of THE FEMALE PRECOG in the mirror.

FLETCHER

So this means --

Witwer stands up straight as he realizes what it means.

WITWER

He's coming here to get her.

Witwer hits his comline...

WITWER

Jad, ask the building who's come and gone in the last couple of hours...

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - DAY

As Wally works the computer, Anderton looks up at the array of horrifying images on the screens above.

ANDERTON

Are these all of her previsions?

WALLY

There's no way of knowing for sure.
She could've forgotten whatever it is you're looking for...

INT. CORRIDOR - DAY

As Witwer moves along with Fletcher, Jad falling in.

JAD

He was EYEdented five minutes ago in the maintenance area.

WITWER

There any way into the temple from
there?

Fletcher and Jad look at each other. Yes.

WITWER

No alarms. We don't wanna lose

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
him. And call Wally. Tell him to get out of there.

Jucket appears on Witwer's head up...

JUCKET
Chief, we got video on someone inside the temple.

WITWER
What do you mean "Someone?"

JUCKET
Looks like an old man.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - DAY

An anxious Anderton looks over at Wally. His face is starting to tighten, regain it's regular shape and characteristics.

ANDERTON
Just go to the beginning!

WALLY
Okay. Fine. Where the hell is that?

And now we see JAD ON WALLY'S HEAD UP...

JAD
Wally --

Anderton looks over...

JAD
Leave the temple now.

WALLY
Uh -- no can do there, Jad...

Anderton looks down at the female precog, she's suddenly trashing about, trying to sit up...

ANDERTON
What is it?

She reaches out and GRABS HIS ARM.

A LOW ANGLE - ANDERTON

As he looks down at Agatha, WE see every video screen on the ceiling shows the SCREAMING FACE OF ANNE LIVELY. He slowly looks up at them...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Witwer, Jad and Fletcher push through the doors. Jucket and Paymen, geared up, meet him.

PAYMEN

He's inside.

JUCKET

Got some kind of mask on.

They all look at the monitors. Knott and two others are all in full gear.

KNOTT

We got four guys on the other door.

WITWER

Do not fire any weapons inside the temple. Use only bindfoam or your sick-sticks. We go on my count...

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - DAY

Anderton looks at Agatha... who now opens her mouth and speaks:

AGATHA

Can you see?

She looks at Anderton, her eyes imploring him. He thinks a moment, then starts to unhook all of the cables. We HEAR WITWER AND HIS TEAM TRYING TO GET THROUGH THE JAMMED DOORS. We hear as they finally BLOW THE MECHANISM, then...

WITWER (O.S.)

John -- move away from the tank!

Anderton looks over as the team starts to come in.

WITWER

Move away from the tank!

Agatha looks past him up at AN ORANGE LEVER. Nods.

WITWER

John --

Anderton throws the lever. Suddenly, a RUSH as the milk is quickly flushed from the tank. Witwer and the team rush up the steps as...

Witwer freezes, watches as the two male precogs flail about the milk, strapped into their harnesses while Anderton and Agatha are sucked out through a large drain.

WALLY

Oh, God...

Wally, crying now, lifts Agatha's empty restraints and stares at it.

WALLY

They've never been separated before.

WITWER

What does he want with a precog?

WALLY

What do you think? So he can kill whoever he wants to without anyone knowing about it.

WITWER

But there's still the other two.

Wally doesn't say anything, just weeps over the tank.

WITWER

Wally, the other two can still function, right?

WALLY

You don't understand... they're a hive mind. It takes all three for their predictive abilities to work.

WITWER

(incredulous)

Are you telling me they can't see murders anymore?

WALLY

Maybe if he'd taken one of the males. But the female, she's the key. She's the one they listen to, the one with the most talent. The one who takes care of the other two.

WITWER

(staring at the remaining two)

Jesus...

WITWER

(tears in his eyes)

Please, bring her back.

EXT. ALLEY - DAY

As Anderton, the Precog in his arms, both of them soaked, runs to where THE LEXUS is parked.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - DAY

As Fletcher barks into his heads up --

FLETCHER

Find out where that pipe leads -- I want every team underground now!

They look to where Witwer stares at the PREVISION SCREEN.

WITWER

It doesn't matter. He wins.

FLETCHER

We can stop him.

WITWER

She's in the room with him when he kills Crow.

(then)

She's already a part of his future.

And now everybody looks at the image, the ghost-like face of Agatha in the mirror, watching John Anderton shoot a man named Leo Crow.

WITWER

(as he walks out)

Put everything you've got into finding that room and we stop a murder.

(to Jad)

How much time have we got?

INSERT WATCH

As it COUNTS DOWN TO FIFTY-ONE MINUTES. SHADOWS pass over
it...

REVEAL: INT. LEXUS - MOVING - DAY

As Anderton looks at his watch, then out the window...

EXT. INNER CITY - DAY

As Anderton's vehicle moves past the more downtrodden segment of the D.C. population. Agatha sits low in the seat, so that just her eyes peer out of the window at the world around her.

INT. LEXUS - DAY

Anderton looks over at the Precog, staring out the window at the unfamiliar rush of humanity all around her. She SHIVERS.

ANDERTON

Are you cold?

He moves to put his coat over her and she looks at his HAND.

ANDERTON

Can you understand me?

She holds onto his hand, is fixated by it.

ANDERTON

It's the drugs. They'll wear off in a few hours.

She looks up, stares out the window now at the world she's never been a part of.

ANDERTON

I'm sorry, but I need your help.
You contain information. I need to know how to get it.

(then)

Can you just tell me who Leo Crow is? Can you tell me if --

AGATHA

Is it now?

ANDERTON

What?

AGATHA

Is it now?

He looks outside, understands what she means. Then...

ANDERTON

Yes... this is all happening right
now.

She nods, closes her eyes.

AGATHA

I'm tired...

(then)

I'm tired of the future.

INT. MALL CITY - DAY

Anderton's vehicle pulls up in front of a GAP.

INT. LEXUS - DAY

As Anderton turn to Agatha.

AGATHA

I have to take you someplace, in public, which means I have to get you something... else to wear.

She stares out the window, doesn't respond...

ANDERTON

I'll hurry.

INT. THE GAP - DAY

As Anderton walks in the door, gets his new eyes scanned, and we hear a voice say:

STORE VOICE

Hello, Mr. Yakamoto! Welcome back to the Gap.

Anderton stops cold as a HOLOGRAPHIC IMAGE OF A HUGE ASIAN MAN now appears standing in front of him.

STORE VOICE

How'd those assorted tank tops work out for you?

Anderton stops and stares at the thug-like previous owner of his eyes who's now shown wearing a sweater that changes from color to color.

STORE VOICE

Come on in and see how good you look in one of our new Winter sweaters.

INT. LEXUS - DAY

Agatha leans out the window, experiencing the world outside for the first time in years. A group of TEENAGERS walking by. A WOMAN pushing A BABY in a pram.

A MAN WALKING A DOG. The dog turns to Agatha, now trying to pull his master over to her...

She turns to the street and watches people going by on bicycles and inside other vehicles.

But for Agatha, it is not a peaceful scene at all. She sees only death, pain and suffering. The world is overwhelming.

She turns away, watches as RAINDROPS fall on the windshield.
She rolls down the window and sticks her head out to feel the rain.

She listens to the now-soothing sounds of the rain mixed with laughter mixed with the baby crying mixed with the snippets of conversation she hears all around her. Then:

WE HEAR A JACKHAMMER

And Agatha turns to A CONSTRUCTION SITE across the way. A HUGE BUILDING is going up.

A CRANE hoists a bundle of steal GIRDERS up to the top of the site.

A TEENAGE BOY walks to a bicycle locked to a fence in front of the site. She closes her eyes and shudders, then sits up, steels herself and calls to the boy...

AGATHA
(barely)
Nathan --

The boy keeps going.

AGATHA
(tries again, louder)
Nathan!

The TEENAGE BOY stops as he gets to the bike, looks at her.

AGATHA
Come here.

The Boy sees this pretty face inside a vehicle beckoning him, looks around to make sure she meant him, then comes over.

BOY/NATHAN
Do I know you?

AGATHA
Hold my hand.

As she reaches for him, Nathan sees she must be blind.

NATHAN
What?

AGATHA
Please, Nathan, hold my hand.

The teenager sees she's only wearing Anderton's jacket...

NATHAN Whoa --

Agatha reaches out and takes his hand and holds onto it. Something pulses through him. He looks at her, afraid...

NATHAN
Who are you?

INT. THE GAP - DAY

As Anderton walks out with his purchases...

STORE VOICE
Thanks for shopping at the Gap, Mr.
Yakamoto.

ANDERTON

Sayonara.

INT./ EXT. LEXUS - DAY

Agatha looks up at Nathan, into his eyes, who tries to pull his hand away.

NATHAN

Look, whoever you are --

We hear SOMEONE SHOUT and the teenager boy wheels around as...

A STEEL BEAM

Falls from the construction site, landing directly on Nathan's bicycle. Nathan stares in horror at where he would have been had he not come over to Agatha. She lets go of his hand.

AGATHA

You can go now.

Anderton comes out of the store, looks at the crushed bike, a CROWD gathering around it. Oblivious to what's just happened, he walks past the stunned kid.

ANDERTON

Excuse me.

INT. ANDERTON'S OFFICE - DAY

As Witwer sits there staring at the image, the rest of the team gathers in the office.

JAD

What's he want with a precog?

FLETCHER

He knows we can't operate without her. He's gonna ransom her.

JAD

Where's the note?

Witwer gets up and turns on the HOLO-COMPUTER. AN IMAGE OF SEAN (age 6) appears.

JAD

If he's ransoming her, where's the damn note?

SEAN

(jumping between ages)

He, Dad! How's... your... day?

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Hey, look what I built! Thanks... for... helping... me... I... love you... Daddy.

Witwer stares at it.

WITWER
It has nothing to do with ransom.
It has to do with the information that's inside of her.

They all look at him.

WITWER
He's trying to prove his innocence.

FLETCHER
He can't download her without a lot of technical help.

WITWER
(staring at the image)
No. He can't...

Suddenly, Witwer begins to tear apart the computer. He pulls off the cover, looks at the components inside, rips one out, then tosses it aside. He rips out another, sees a NAME PRINTED on the bottom: PATENT PENDING - RUFUS T. RILEY.

WITWER
Who's Rufus T. Riley?

INT. RUFUS' DREAMWEAVER HEADSPA - DAY

CUSTOMERS in dark corners, wearing bladdered bodysuits and tiny headsets, act out various fantasies.

RUFUS
What's your pleasure?

RUFUS RILEY -- heavy, goateed, ponytail down to his waist and a name tag that says "HI! I'M RUFUS!" -- shows a NERVOUS CUSTOMER around the place.

RUFUS
We got it all here. We got guys come in, want to experience sex as a woman. We got women come in, want to get laid by their favorite soap star. We got rape fantasies from both sides. We got sports fantasies. And then we got what I call the "Look Ma, I can fly" fantasies which encompass everything from bungee jumping to soaring like an eagle over the Grand Canyon.

The nervous customer turns as we hear a MAN CRY OUT. He looks in and sees a man flailing about on a cushion.

RUFUS

Near Death's real popular right now, which includes everything from getting hit by a car, to falling off a high building to plane crashes. It's a big rush, you come out the other side without a heart attack.

CUSTOMER

I wanna kill my boss.

RUFUS

(unfazed)

Uh-huh. Okay. You got some images I can work with?

CUSTOMER

(holds out a disk)

Right here.

RUFUS

Good. What I can do is set you up down in the --

ANDERTON

Rufus...

Rufus sees Anderton come in now with Agatha on his arm. He turns back to the guy, says in a loud voice...

RUFUS

Uh, yeah, being concert master of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra is one of our most popular choices...

CUSTOMER

No, I wanna kill my boss!

RUFUS

Get the hell outta here. You sick bastard.

He pushes the man away, sending him tripping for the door.

RUFUS

Detective. Nice of you to come down here.

(lowers his voice)

Seeing as every cop in the world is looking for you right now. Jesus, what's up with your eye?

ANDERTON

I need your help.

RUFUS

Well, hey, you didn't have to come all the way down here. For you,
Chief, I make housecalls...

ANDERTON

I need help with her.

RUFUS

(just notices her)

Well, hello there, honey-pie.

Barely able to yet stand, Agatha is also too stunned by the bizarre surroundings to even respond as Rufus takes her hand and kisses it.

RUFUS

I'm impressed, Anderton. You're on the lam, but you still got the time and energy to slice off a little jerky for yourself.

ANDERTON

Rufus. She's a precog.

RUFUS

(looks at Agatha)

She's a precog?

ANDERTON

That's right.

Rufus starts to laugh. Agatha looks at Anderton. Rufus keeps on laughing... until he looks a little closer and realizes --

RUFUS

You brought a Precog -- HERE?
Jesus Christ...

And now Rufus looks at Agatha, a thought dawning and then drops to his knees. He genuflects, looking up at her.

RUFUS

Are you reading my mind right now?

ANDERTON

Rufus, for Christ's sake, get up.

RUFUS

I'm sorry for whatever I'm gonna do! And I swear, I didn't do any of the stuff I did!

Anderton hauls him to his feet.

ANDERTON

She's got information inside of her. I need you to get it out.

RUFUS

No. No way. I wouldn't even know where to begin!

(to Agatha)

Those thoughts about my cousin Elena -- they were just thoughts. I would never --

ANDERTON

C'mon, Rufus, you've been busted twice for felony hacking.

RUFUS

So?

ANDERTON

So now I need you to hack into her.

Rufus studies her a moment, then...

RUFUS

I tell you what. I do this, I get to keep whatever images I get from her head.

ANDERTON

They don't belong to anybody.

RUFUS

(turns to go)

Then take her to Radio Shack.

Anderton grabs Rufus and throws him against the wall. Gets right in Rufus' face... the one blown eye looking at him...

ANDERTON

Do I look like I'm leaving?

INT. PRECRIME READY ROOM - DAY

As the precops get ready, ride the chairs up to the hovership.

INT. HOVERSHIP - DAY

As Evanna gets ready to lift off, looks over as Witwer gets in and sits IN ANDERTON'S SEAT. She gives him an icy look as he starts to take out a piece of gum...

EVANNA

INT. RUFUS RILEY'S BASEMENT - DAY

Agatha, hooked into some kind of LIGHT READER, sits in a chair in the center of the room, surrounded by contraptions of all kinds. Rufus paces around, checking connections.

RUFUS
Okay, we're all set. I can't promise you the images are gonna be any good, though.

Suddenly, there's A FLOOD OF MURDER-IMAGES (similar in type to the ones used upstairs in the cyber-parlor) beamed from the projector to the center of the room.

RUFUS
Good God...

Dozens of murders happening all around them. Agatha begins twitching. The images shake, distort, go fuzzy, then clear again. It's a rapid-fire display of all the murder and mayhem that Agatha has been privy to, including the last image of the STEEL BEAM CRUSHING YOUNG NATHAN.

RUFUS
(watching)
You know what, Chief? On second thought I don't think I wanna keep any of these --

But now we see ANDERTON BLOW LEO CROW through a window.

ANDERTON
Stop --

RUFUS
Tell me how.

Rufus tries in vain to work the equipment. THE IMAGES RUN ON and now we see THE FACE WEARING SUNGLASSES. The number 9 turning into the number 6.

PROJECTED CROW
You're not going to kill me...

PROJECTED ANDERTON
Good-bye, Crow.

ANDERTON
Rufus -- can you record this?!

Rufus moves to the computer as now we see Crow at the window, the face with the sunglasses behind him as he wrestles with the gun that ANDERTON holds.

The real Anderton walks up to his projection, amazed to see his likeness frozen there, doing something he can't imagine.

He watches as the image jumps and once more Crow is blown out the window. Then we see nothing.

ANDERTON

What happened? Where's the rest?

RUFUS

I guess that's all of it.

Anderton looks at Agatha, her expression calm.

ANDERTON

Is there a Minority Report?

She just looks at him. A what?

ANDERTON

An alternate future. Do I have one?

She looks at where the images were projected a moment ago.

AGATHA

No.

Anderton is about to turn away. She takes his hand, as she did in the temple, and suddenly the room is full of IMAGES:

AGATHA

Can you see?

Every single one of the images is the same: THE SCREAMING FACE OF...

ANDERTON

Anne Lively...

Anderton looks at Agatha. Her face is contorted in the same way as the image. Suddenly, there's a RUSH OF IMAGES, we glimpse only some of them, TWO FIGURES STRUGGLING, a SPLASH. ANNE LIVELY DROWNING. Then nothing...

ANDERTON

Why are you showing me this? What do you want me to see?

She doesn't move, a single TEAR rolls down her cheek.

ANDERTON

Rufus, play it back...

RUFUS

Uh, I'll try...

And now we see the FOLLOWING IMAGES ALL PLAYING BACKWARDS... Anne Lively being drown, but now she comes OUT OF THE LAKE... backwards. We see Anne Lively on the ground by the lake, struggling with A MASKED FIGURE. Suddenly, the FIGURE POPS up and RUNS BACKWARDS. She pops up a second later (a STUMBLE IN REVERSE) and runs BACKWARDS. Now we see an OVERCOAT BEING PUT ON, TURNING INSIDE OUT, FROM DARK TO LIGHT.

Anderton looks about the room, THE IMAGES ALL AROUND HIM. The dark figure is just ABOUT TO TAKE OFF THE MASK when --

THE IMAGES STOP and Agatha holds on tight to him.

ANDERTON

What?

AGATHA

They're inside.

ANDERTON

Who?

Suddenly, a red light flashes on the wall. Rufus scrambles to a security monitor.

RUFUS

Your old Teammates.

INSERT MONITOR: Witwer leads a team through the parlor.

INT. NEUROPLEX - DAY

Witwer and the Precrime team move through the parlor.

WITWER

Check every room.

INT. BASEMENT CORRIDOR - DAY

As Rufus leads them down a long, dark corridor and up a flight of stairs...

RUFUS

You come up just outside the sprawl on Millhouse.

EXT. OUTDOOR CLOTHING MARKET - DAY

Anderton and Agatha come through a hidden door and hurry through the market. She stops at one of the stalls...

AGATHA

Can you see the umbrella?

Anderton looks at A STALL SELLING UMBRELLAS.

AGATHA

Take it.

ANDERTON

Agatha...

He buys an umbrella from the vendor, then drags her off.

INT. INNER CITY - MALL - DAY

As they move through the crowded inner city shopping area. She has trouble keeping up. She looks ahead, something in her eyes, then...

AGATHA

Can you see the man in the blue suit?

Sure enough a MAN walking by in the other direction is wearing a blue suit.

AGATHA

He drops his briefcase.

He drops his briefcase, spilling all kinds of papers all over the sidewalk, including a NEWSPAPER WITH ANDERTON'S PHOTO.

AGATHA

A woman in a brown dress is going to come out of the door up ahead.

This happens.

AGATHA

Wait -- she knows your face. Turn in here.

The WOMAN looks at Anderton, squints, but before she can make any kind of determination as to who he is and why he looks sort of familiar, Anderton and the Precog have gone into...

A PET SHOP

They move through the store, jammed with all kinds of animals, including FOXES and shrieking EXOTIC BIRDS. They go through the back door and come out...

IN A DIFFERENT SECTION OF THE MALL

As Anderton starts to lead her around a corner, she stops. Anderton looks around, sees A PRECOP on the UPPER LEVEL.

ANDERTON

Agatha --

AGATHA

Can you see the balloon man?

ANDERTON

What?

PRECOP'S POV - FROM THE UPPER LEVEL

As the cop scans the mall. He's about to spot Anderton and Agatha when A BALLOON VENDOR comes around the corner where they're waiting and blocks the cops view. He moves on.

ANDERTON & AGATHA

Start walking again.

AGATHA

This way...

She leads him underneath the PEDESTRIAN BRIDGE.

AGATHA

Stop.

We now BOOM UP to the TOP OF THE BRIDGE where we see Knott moving to the side, leaning over the rail and peering down...

ON ANDERTON & AGATHA

She gently pulls Anderton further under the bridge so that...

ON THE BRIDGE - KNOTT

Can't see them when he looks down. They're a foot or two out of his sightline. He then moves to the other side of the bridge and peers down as...

AGATHA

Now leads Anderton a step or two back the other way, so that again...

KNOTT

Just misses seeing them. He moves off across the bridge.

ANDERTON & AGATHA

Hurry through the mall now.

A BUM in one of the doorways begs for change. They walk past him...

BUM

May the Devil take you as his bride!

A few steps later, Agatha stops IN FRONT OF A DOOR.

AGATHA

Drop some money.

ANDERTON

Forget that guy --

AGATHA

Do it. Right here. On the ground.

Anderton reaches into his pocket, drops some change on the ground. Agatha looks back at the Bum who turns towards them upon hearing the sound of the coins hitting the ground. She then leads Anderton off...

BUM

May God Bless You!

The Bum comes over, bends down IN FRONT OF A DOOR just as IT OPENS INTO HIM, knocking him over, and TWO PRECOPS burst out and TOPPLE OVER HIM.

EXT. STREET - DAY

As Anderton and Agatha exit the mall and IT STARTS RAINING. Anderton OPENS THE UMBRELLA along with the dozens of people around him just as...

EXT. UPPER LEVEL - DAY

As Fletcher leads some cops outside, they look down, but all they can see is a sea of umbrellas below them.

EXT. STREET - DAY

As Agatha and Anderton walk along the street. Behind them the way is blocked off with buildings. There's only one way out: Straight ahead. They start for it.

Suddenly KNOTT COMES OUT OF A BUILDING IN FRONT OF THEM AND STARTS WALKING IN FRONT OF THEM. Anderton starts to turn around... Agatha pulls on his arm.

AGATHA

No. Follow him.

ANDERTON

He'll turn around.

AGATHA

He won't.

Anderton and Agatha walk past a LARGE METAL GATE, she stops. Knott slows down ahead of them, starts to look this way and that. Anderton starts to back away...

ANDERTON

Agatha...

AGATHA

Wait.

WE HEAR A BELL RING and suddenly the GATE OPENS, and a beat later, KIDS SWARM OUT OF A SCHOOL. Knott turns around, is about to spot them when...

AGATHA

Can you see his shoe?

In front of them one of the kids trips OVER HIS SHOE LACES.

AGATHA

Tie his shoe.

Anderton drops down to help him, Agatha does the same so that...

Knott sees nothing but A SWARM OF KIDS.

KNOTT

(into his radio)

He's not here. I'll check one block east.

Knott moves off across the street. Anderton smiles at the kid as he helps him with his shoe...

ANDERTON

Here you go, buddy...

KID

I can do it myself!

Anderton finishes tying the kid's shoe, stays low as a TEACHER ushers the kids off, REVEALING: PART OF A GIANT FACE WEARING SUNGLASSES.

Anderton slowly stands up, looks at A BILLBOARD, spinning in the wind as it's hoisted upward by a GIANT CRANE, it SPINS AROUND, we see that it's for REVO -- on it is A HUGE GRINNING FACE WEARING SUNGLASSES. Anderton turns and looks at...

AN OLD HOTEL

A dozen stories up, WORKMEN motion for the CRANE OPERATOR to hold up as they continue to get the steel frame prepared.

ANDERTON

Agatha. Can you see that?

Anderton looks at Agatha, she's looking away.

ANDERTON

That's the man in the window.

He looks at his watch. COUNTING DOWN: EIGHTEEN MINUTES.

INT. RUFUS' CYBER PARLOR - DAY

As Witwer looks at the equipment, turns to Rufus.

WITWER

What was he looking for?

EXT. STREET - DAY

As Anderton takes Agatha by the arm, but she stays put.

AGATHA

Don't go inside.

He looks at her.

AGATHA

You don't have to.

(then)

Walk away.

He looks at her, then turns and walks to the hotel. We see THE BILLBOARD as it's hoisted up towards the hotel.

INT. RUFUS' CYBER PARLOR - DAY

As Witwer stands there looking at the Anne Lively murder. Confused.

WITWER

This is what he wanted to see?

RUFUS

No... This is what she wanted him to see.

WITWER

(watches, then)

I'll need a copy of this.

INT. HOTEL - DAY

Once grand, now pretty much a flophouse. The skinny and skagged-out CLERK looks up from the tattoo magazine as Anderton walks to the desk and looks around...

CLERK

Room's are ninety-five a night plus tax.

(regarding Agatha)

Or fifteen an hour.

ANDERTON

You mind if I take a look at your register?

CLERK

Yeah, I mind --

The guy starts to get up and Anderton pulls his gun, puts the muzzle in the guy's eye.

ANDERTON

How about now?

He spins the register around so that Anderton can read it.

CLERK

Help yourself.

Anderton looks at the register...

ON THE REGISTER

As Anderton runs the BARREL OF THE GUN down the inky list of names scrawled in the book. Most of them Smith or Jones. He stops when he gets to L. CROW.

ANDERTON

He's here.

AGATHA

Anderton, leave.

He looks at her.

AGATHA

You have a choice. Walk away.

(holds out her hand)

Right now.

He stands there a moment, torn. He starts to close the register and follow her to the door. But then he stops, takes his hand back.

ANDERTON

I can't. I have to know.

AGATHA

Please --

ANDERTON

I have to find out what happened to my life.

(then)

Agatha. I'm not going to kill the man. I don't even know him.

She looks frightened.

ANDERTON

Don't you understand, going upstairs is the only way I'll ever

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev... find out what's underneath all of this. Who's setting me up.
(then)
I have to know.

Anderton turns to the clerk.

ANDERTON
What room's Crow in?

CLERK
Ten-o-six.

Anderton and Agatha ride up. The elevator looks out at the other buildings, people working in offices across the way. Anderton looks at his watch: COUNTING DOWN ELEVEN MINUTES.

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

Anderton and Agatha walk up the hall, stopping at a door marked 1006. Anderton knocks. No answer. He tries the door. It's open.

INT. ROOM - DAY

Anderton steps into the empty room, just a bed (made), a night table and a dresser. He pulls out a drawer: it's empty. Turns on the bathroom light -- no personal effects -- turns it off.

AGATHA
He's gone.

Anderton stands in the room, thinking. He looks out the open door into the hallway.

ANDERTON
Wait a minute...

ANDERTON'S POV - THE ROOM ACROSS THE WAY

The number on the door to this room is also 1006.

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

Anderton steps into the hallway and looks at the door he just came through. The "6" is lower than the other three numbers.

Now Agatha watches as Anderton reaches up and pivots the number "6" into a "9", making the number now even with the other three.

ANDERTON
It's the wrong room.

He turns and looks across the hall at the real 1006. He looks at his watch. COUNTING DOWN: EIGHT MINUTES...

AGATHA

Anderton...

Anderton knocks on the door. No answer. Agatha recoils as Anderton suddenly kicks the door open.

INT. THE REAL 1006 - DAY

Someone definitely lives in this room. The bed's unmade. Clothes are strewn about, hanging from open drawers. Anderton steps around a half-eaten meal that sits on the floor.

He looks down and stares at a pile of POLAROID PHOTOGRAPHS that sit on the dresser.

All of them are of CHILDREN. Some sitting on beds in hotel rooms like this one, looking afraid. Others in parks and schoolyards unaware that their picture was taken...

ANDERTON

Jesus...

EXT. STREET - DAY

LEO CROW, the man we saw in the prevision, walks along the sidewalk. He's unsteady, and keeps bumping into people. In person we can see that the man's small, with countable wisps of hair combed over one side of his head. His eyes are dark, almost black, more insect-like than human.

INT. HOTEL ROOM - DAY

Anderton quickly rifles the stack of photographs. He suddenly stops and stares at one of them. The impact of the image makes his legs buckle, forcing him to sit down on the bed.

ANDERTON

Oh, God...

AGATHA

What is it?

A BOY we know very well, hugging himself in the back seat of some vehicle.

ANDERTON

This is Sean. My son.

INT. LOBBY - DAY

As Crow stands in the doorway a moment, teeters a bit, then enters the hotel, the CLERK looks up from his magazine. But doesn't say a word.

INT. HOTEL ROOM - DAY

Agatha sits beside Anderton on the bed.

ANDERTON

Every day for the last six years
I've thought about only two things.
The first was what my son would look like if he were alive today.
If I would even recognize him if I saw him on the street.

(then)

The second was what I would do to the man who took him.

AGATHA

Anderton --

ANDERTON

You were right. I'm not being set up.

Anderton looks at the photograph.

ANDERTON

I'm gonna kill this man.

INT. ELEVATOR - DAY

As Crow rides up. He takes out a DENTED FLASK and takes a long hit from it... draining it of the last drop.

INT. HOTEL ROOM - DAY

We now hear the elevator DING. Anderton looks at his watch, gets to his feet.

AGATHA

Please, I want to go back...

ANDERTON

I can't leave. You said so yourself, there is no Minority Report. I don't have an alternative future.

AGATHA

But you still have a choice. The others never had a chance to see their future. You did.

FOOTSTEPS. Anderton waits. The door slowly opens and we see Crow peering around it.

ANDERTON

Leo Crow?

The man does a strange thing: he glances at his watch. Then takes a deep breath...

CROW

Who... who... The hell are you?

Anderton kicks the door shut on the man's hand. Crow screams and he goes down. Anderton steps on him.

ANDERTON

Six years ago. Baltimore. You grabbed a kid at Francis public pool in the West End.

CROW

Did I? I don't recall... I got lots of kids from that place --

Anderton kicks the man in the stomach.

CROW

Jesus --

He doubles over. Anderton grabs him by the hair, pulls his head up. The guy is shaking like mad...

ANDERTON

Do you know who I am?

CROW

Some -- somebody's father?

ANDERTON

His name was Sean. Six years ago. Francis pool.

The guy doesn't raise his head for a moment. Finally...

CROW

I told him I was a policeman...

Anderton reacts to this.

CROW

... and that I needed his help. It wasn't so bad really.

(looks at Anderton)

I sang him a song, made him laugh, bought him a pretzel. I took care of him. I made him happy.

ANDERTON

He's alive?

The man just looks at him. Anderton is reeling...

ANDERTON

"MINORITY REPORT" -- May 16, 2001 rev...
Where've you got him? Is he all
right?
(shaking Crow)
Tell me, you fuck -- WHERE IS HE?!

CROW
(beat)
I put him in a barrel and sunk him in the bay.

Anderton stops. Shocked by this image.

CROW
It floated back up. I had to take him out and --

ANDERTON
NO!

Anderton screams and throws him against the wall, ignoring Agatha's SCREAMS for him to stop. For his part, Crow just covers up and waits for it to end, shouting over and over...

CROW
I'm sorry! I'm sorry...

INSERT - ANDERTON'S STOPWATCH. Counting down from 18 SECONDS.

Anderton pulls the man to his feet, shoves him up against the window and now stands there shaking, staring at Crow, the man shaking as Anderton weighs what he's about to do.

And now behind Crow, we see THE REVO BILLBOARD as it's hoisted upward by the crane, the SMILING FACE coming around so that its grinning visage is just over Crow's shoulder as it was in the prevision.

He cuts a look into the mirror off to his left, sees the IMAGE OF AGATHA, her face imploring...

AGATHA
Anderton, you can choose... You can choose.

INSERT - ANDERTON'S WATCH. Counting down from 5 - 4 - 3 - 2 - 1 - The ALARM on the watch goes off. BEEP. BEEP. BEEP.
BEEP. BEEP.

Finally, tears in his eyes, Anderton backs away from Crow and looks at the gun in his hand. Crow opens his eyes, watches as Anderton finally lowers the gun.

ANDERTON
You have the right to remain silent. Anything you say can be used against you in a court of law.

Crow looks at him. Not what he expected.

ANDERTON

You have the right to an attorney present now and during any future questioning. If you cannot afford one, one will be appointed to you.
Do you understand these rights?

Crow doesn't move, confused.

CROW

You're not gonna kill me?

ANDERTON

No.

Crow still doesn't move.

CROW

(whispering)

But you have to.

(then)

They said you would.

ANDERTON

(looks at Agatha)

The precogs were wrong.

CROW

If you don't kill me, my family gets nothing!

Anderton pauses, looks back at him as Crow comes forward.

CROW

You're supposed to kill me. He said you would.

ANDERTON

Who said I would?

CHILDREN

He called me in Prison. Said if I went along, he'd get me released, take care of my family.

ANDERTON

If you did what?

CROW

Acted like I killed your kid.

Anderton goes stiff, looks at Agatha.

CROW

Look, I've put my family through enough misery. You gotta kill me! This way I can leave 'em something.

ANDERTON

Crow. I'm not gonna kill you.

CROW

Look, believe me, I know it's hard, but you gotta do it --

ANDERTON

I'm asking you again, who made you do this?

CROW

I don't know -- I never saw his face. All I know is, the next day I was out, so the guy must've had juice somewhere. Look, man, you gotta go through with this.

ANDERTON

What the fuck is going on?

Suddenly Crow steps forward, grabs the muzzle of Anderton's gun, holds it up to his own chest. Agatha's eyes roll, she holds onto the table for support...

AGATHA

Anderton --

CROW

Kill me!

Anderton tries to pull the gun away, but Crow hangs on.

ANDERTON

What about the picture --

CROW

Fake. He gave it to me. Now -- (pulling on the gun)
-- shoot me, Goddammit, before I lose my nerve!

ANDERTON

(pulls the gun back)
Tell me, who was it, set this up?

CROW

If I tell you, my family gets nothing.

ANDERTON

Who made you do this?

CROW

(pulls the gun)

Kill me!

ANDERTON

Tell me!

Anderton looks at Crow who holds the gun muzzle tight to his chest, his eyes imploring Anderton to pull the trigger.

ANDERTON

Let go of the gun.

CROW

You're not gonna kill me...

ANDERTON

Good-bye, Crow.

Anderton turns to go, but Crow hold onto the muzzle --

CROW

Anderton! Wait -- don't --

Crow yanks on the gun, making Anderton pull the trigger. We hear a loud BOOM and Anderton turns, sees Crow holding the gun to his own exploded chest.

ANDERTON

Jesus --

Crow looks at Anderton, a stupid look on his face. He stumbles backwards towards the window. Anderton moves forward and reaches for his shirt as...

AGATHA

NO!

... now she turns away, framed in the mirror, as Crow falls through the glass window.

Anderton stands there frozen a moment, unable to move or think. We HEAR SOMEONE SCREAM O.S. Anderton looks across the way, sees everyone in the building across the street watching him. Agatha takes him by the arm...

AGATHA

Go...

Anderton grabs Agatha and runs out of the room.

INT. HALLWAY - DAY

As People stick their heads out of their doors and WHISPER as Agatha leads a stunned Anderton down the hall.

A WOMAN watches them go, then moves to the doorway, and peers into the room, sees the broken window through the doorway...

WOMAN

Murder!

EXT. HOTEL - DAY

As they come outside, quickly move past where Crow's body lies crumpled half-on and half-off the roof of the CRANE. Gawkers stand around stunned, staring at the body until the WOMAN sticks her head out of the WINDOW above and SCREAMS:

WOMAN

MURDER!

And now everybody's whispering...

DIFFERENT VOICES

Murder!!!

Agatha leads Anderton around the back of the building.

INT. PRECRIME HOVERSHIP - DAY

As the ship comes over the roof of the hotel, Witwer looks down at the billboard sitting there, and then, as they move past the edge of the roof, he sees the crane with the body of Leo Crow on top.

EXT. HOTEL - DAY

Other COPS keep the crowd back as the ship lands in the middle of the street and the team disperses. Witwer goes straight to the body. He looks up at the broken window in the hotel.

INT. CROW'S HOTEL ROOM - DAY

As Witwer moves around the room. He looks at the Polaroids on the bed, spots the one of Sean and freezes. As Anderton did, he sits down on the bed. He notices something on the floor by the window and moves to it. He slowly bends down and picks up Anderton's .45.

FLETCHER

First murder in six years.

Witwer looks up at Fletcher standing in the doorway, looking around at the room.

FLETCHER

Jesus, they're never wrong, are they?

Witwer looks at Fletcher a moment.

WITWER

FLETCHER

I don't know, why?

WITWER

If you were a child killer, you took these pictures, would you leave them out on the bed for anyone to find?

FLETCHER

They could have been put away.
Anderton could have found them.

WITWER

(beat)

What kind of cop were you before this?

FLETCHER

I was a Treasury Agent for eight years. Why?

WITWER

Treasury... Then this would be your first actual murder scene.

Fletcher nods, watches as Witwer looks around the room.

WITWER

I worked homicide before I went federal.

(indicates the room)

This is what we would've called an "orgy of evidence".

(then)

Do you know how many orgies I had as a homicide copy, Gordon?

FLETCHER

How many?

WITWER

None.

(looks at the room)

This was arranged.

INSERT - A PHOTOGRAPH OF A CHILD

Slowly developing, floating in solution. We HEAR A PHONE RING. And...

WIDEN TO REVEAL: A DARK ROOM

Lara Anderton working under the red light. She watches the photo develop a moment, drops it into the stop-bath and answers the phone...

ANDERTON'S VOICE

Crow is dead.

She goes stiff.

LARA

John?

ANDERTON'S VOICE

He's dead, Lara.

LARA

(beat)

Oh, God, what did you do?

ANDERTON'S VOICE

Nothing. I didn't kill him.

LARA

Then how did he --

ANDERTON'S VOICE

Lara, I don't know why this is happening. I just know they're setting me up. I can't trust anybody. I don't know who to talk to or where to go...

(then)

Lara? Are you there?

She stands there a moment, staring at the image...

LARA

Yes, I'm here, John.

EXT. COASTAL HIGHWAY - DAY

Anderton stands outside the Lexus, talking on the phone. He looks off towards the water...

LARA'S VOICE

I'm right here.

EXT. CHESAPEAKE BAY - DAY

As the Lexus moves along the coast.

INT. LEXUS - DAY

Agatha stares out the window at the bay. She looks pale, weak. Anderton's jacket is folded over her.

AGATHA

Can you see? So beautiful...

She looks at him.

AGATHA

Where are we going?

ANDERTON

Someplace safe.

AGATHA

I have to go back.

ANDERTON

Why?

AGATHA

The other two will die without me.

ANDERTON

You want to spend the rest of your life in the temple?

She looks back out the window.

AGATHA

I always wondered what the world would be like. But now that I've seen it, I don't need to see any more.

(then)

It's all right. Once I'm in the tank, I won't remember any of this.

ANDERTON

Agatha, you're never going back
there.

AGATHA

I am going back. I see myself
there.

He reacts to this. She touches his arm.

AGATHA

It's best, Anderton, if you don't think of me as human.

He looks at her, but she closes her eyes.

INT. BURGESS' HOUSE - DAY

A sad Burgess sits with a drink in his hand watching the CNN coverage of the Crow "murder".

Burgess shakes his head, as his WIFE comes in.

WIFE

Danny Witwer's on the phone. He

Burgess mutes the set, watches as the Attorney General, looking like shit right now, talks to the reporter.

BURGESS
(into the phone)
What?

We see the image of Witwer in one corner of the TV screen.

WITWER
Lamar, I found something.

BURGESS
What?

WITWER
I don't wanna say over the phone, but I think we may be chasing the wrong man.

BURGESS
(beat)
Where are you?

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - DAY

As Anne Lively is drowned by an assailant in black in the middle of the room. Witwer sits at Anderton's holo-computer watching the image. It finishes just as Burgess comes into the room.

BURGESS
Good God. What was that?

WITWER
Wait, just a second...

Witwer works the machine a moment while Burgess looks around the apartment, takes in the mess, the open cupboards in the kitchen. He kicks at the inhalers on the floor and sits down. He see ANDERTON'S .45 sitting by the chair and picks it up and examines it.

WITWER
We recovered that from Crow's hotel
room.

Burgess looks sadly at the gun a moment.

BURGESS
I remember when I gave this to him.
Back in Baltimore. He was one of those cops, still thought he could make a dent in all the bad there was in the world.

Burgess looks around the apartment now.

BURGESS

The irony is, sometimes it's the very vision that makes you want to make the world a better place that turns you into something you can't even recognize anymore.

He sighs, looks at Witwer.

BURGESS

Tell me what you have.

Witwer nods, starts the image once more.

WITWER

This is the murder of a woman named Anne Lively.

Burgess sits forward, watches as The Man in black shoves her face under the water.

BURGESS

He told me about this. You got this from Containment?

WITWER

Yes. This is from the twins, Arthur and Dashiel. Agatha's stream was missing. Now this one is from the cyberparlor. Anderton downloaded it directly from Agatha. Watch...

We see the fragments of A MAN DONNING GLOVES, DROPPING AN OVERCOAT and then once more we see the Man in black drowning her...

BURGESS

It's the same prevision.

WITWER

Not quite.

Witwer gets up, moves to the image...

WITWER

Look at the surface wind across the water. Watch the ripples... moving away from shore.

We see they're all moving right to left. We watch the silent murder of Anne Lively. The image finishes. A blank. We see the fragmented images of the gloves. And now we see the second image of Anne Lively being murdered...

WITWER

Now the second image. Watch the water. The wind's changed. The ripples are going the other way.

BURGESS

I don't understand --

WITWER

This murder is happening at two different times.

Burgess stares at the image. Watches again as it repeats. Witwer hits the remote and the image of Anne Lively freezes.

WITWER

According to the Sentry, Anderton was watching this at Containment right before he was tagged.

BURGESS

I know. He came to me, told me about the missing data stream.

(then)

He was concerned that you might find it.

WITWER

I did find it. It was inside of Agatha all this time. So the question is, why would someone want this erased from the data file?

BURGESS

(intrigued)

Danny, tell me what you're thinking.

WITWER

I'm thinking someone got away with murder.

BURGESS

How?

Witwer moves around the frozen image of Anne Lively.

WITWER

By fooling the system. All someone would have to do is wait for Precrime to stop the murder from taking place, then, a few minutes later, commit the crime in exactly the same way.

BURGESS

(nods)

Yes... It's called an echo. The act of murder is such a violent disturbance in the future continuum that it sometimes repeats to the Precogs.

WITWER

(beat, remembering)

Precog Deja Vu...

BURGESS

We teach the tech's to identify them and disregard...

Witwer looks at him.

WITWER

So there is a way to fool the system?

BURGESS

Yes.

Witwer looks at the image.

WITWER

Of course, it would have to be someone with access to the Prevision in the first place, someone fairly high up --

BURGESS

(finger to his lips)

Shhh. You know what I hear?

WITWER

What?

BURGESS

Nothing. No footsteps coming up the stairs. No hovercraft out the window. No clickity click of little spyders. No one crashing through that door. And do you know why I don't hear any of those things, Danny? Because right now, the Precogs can't see.

Witwer suddenly understands. See Anderton's .45 in Burgess' hand and knows it's already too late as the gun goes off loud, Burgess shooting Witwer right through the holo-image of Anne Lively.

Burgess stands up as Witwer drops to his knees. He looks up at Burgess -- gasping, clutching his chest with both hands as if in prayer -- and can do nothing but watch as the man shoots him once more, knocking him down to the floor.

Burgess steps over him, crouches down and takes something from Witwer's pocket. A stick of gum. He puts it into his mouth, then starts to wipe the .45 down with a handkerchief.

HIS PHONE RINGS. Burgess answers it.

BURGESS

Burgess.

INT. THE COTTAGE - DAY

As Lara watches Anderton pull up to the cottage.

LARA

Lamar, it's Lara.

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - DAY

Burgess talks to her, all the while continuing to wipe down the gun, tidy up the apartment.

BURGESS

Yes, Lara.

He takes the DISK from the holo-computer and drops it into his pocket.

LARA'S VOICE

You have to help him.

BURGESS

(beat)

Is he there?

INT. THE CLIFF COTTAGE - DAY

As Lara watches Anderton lead Agatha towards the door.

LARA

Yes.

BURGESS' VOICE

Has he got the precog with him?

LARA

Yes.

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - DAY

Burgess looks around the room, making sure he hasn't forgotten anything.

BURGESS

Keep them there. I'm on my way.

LARA'S VOICE

Please don't tell Witwer. I don't trust him.

Burgess looks at Witwer's body.

BURGESS

I won't say a word. You just don't let John leave. All right?

LARA'S VOICE

He's no killer, Lamar.

BURGESS

I know.

EXT. THE CLIFF COTTAGE - DAY

As Agatha looks at the house, watching as Lara now comes out the front door and hugs Anderton. She looks at Agatha...

ANDERTON

It's all right. Lara, I want you to meet Agatha.

Lara smiles at her. Agatha turns and looks at the RUSTED TRICYCLE lying in the weeds near the door and shivers...

AGATHA

I'm cold --

As Lara opens the door...

LARA

Come inside.

EXT. COTTAGE - DUSK

As Lara walks to the cliff, stands beside Anderton.

ANDERTON

I... just need to sit and think, figure this out.

He turns to her.

ANDERTON

It's like a bad dream. It's like I'm down the fucking rabbit hole.

It's getting dark. He takes off his sunglasses and she now sees his "new" eyes. She gasps...

LARA

Oh, God, John... What have you done?

INT. COTTAGE - DUSK

Agatha moves around the house. Stops at a bedroom. Inside is a DAYBED, BEACH TOYS, STUFFED ANIMALS, TOY SOLDIERS. She puts her hand in Anderton's coat pocket, takes out the CARD CONTAINING THE IMAGE OF ANNE LIVELY DROWNING.

INT. PRECRIME HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

The team flies silently over the countryside.

EVANNA

ETA five minutes.

EXT. COTTAGE - NIGHT

As Anderton paces along the cliff...

ANDERTON

They used Sean. They wanted me to think Crow killed him --

Lara reacts to this.

ANDERTON

-- but he didn't.

LARA

Then who was he?

ANDERTON

Just some guy... they found.

LARA

Found? Where?

ANDERTON

Somewhere.

He stands there. A thought dawning on him.

LARA

Think, John. Why would they set you up?

ANDERTON

(beat)

Because I found out about her...

LARA

About who?

ANDERTON

Anne Lively...

He starts for the house.

INT. CLIFF HOUSE - NIGHT

Anderton comes in from the back. The place is dark.

ANDERTON

Agatha?

INT. BACK BEDROOM - NIGHT

Agatha sits on the floor in the midst of a pile of toys, face streaked with tears.

AGATHA

Dr. Hineman once said to me that
"The dead don't die."

(looks up)

"They look on and help."

(then, as a statement)

Remember that, John.

Agatha looks around the room...

AGATHA

He's on the beach now, a toe in the water, asking you to come in with him. He's been racing his mother up and down the sand.

She looks up at Anderton, smiling and crying at the same time.

AGATHA

There's so much love in this house.

She closes her eyes.

AGATHA

He's ten years old. He's surrounded by animals. He wants to be a vet. You keep a rabbit for him. A bird. And a fox.

Anderton can't move, can't breath.

AGATHA

He's in high school. He likes to run. Like his father. He runs the two mile and the long relay.

(then)

He's twenty-three, at a University.
He makes love to a pretty girl named Claire. He asks her to be his wife. He calls her and tells Lara who cries... he still runs.
Across the University. And in the stadium where John watches.

She's shaking her head now...

AGATHA

Oh, God -- he's running so fast, like his daddy. He sees his daddy, wants to run to him, but he's only six years old and he can't do it.
And the other man is so fast.

Agatha looks up at Anderton, weeping, shaking...

AGATHA

There was so much love in this house.

Anderton turns away, see Lara in the doorway now, her own eyes full of tears.

ANDERTON

I'm so sorry... I just want him back... I want him back so bad...

LARA

I know... I do, too...

AGATHA

So did she.

They both look at her. She's staring at the PHOTOGRAPH OF ANNE LIVELY.

AGATHA

Can't you see? She just wanted her little girl back.

ANDERTON

Who wanted her little girl back?

AGATHA

The drowning woman.
(shows him the photograph)
Anne... But it was too late. Her little girl was already gone.

ANDERTON

She died?

AGATHA

She grew up.

ANDERTON

She's still alive?

Agatha looks up at Anderton now.

AGATHA

She's not alive, but she didn't

ANDERTON

(beat)

Oh, Jesus...

LARA

John? What is it?

ANDERTON

How did I not see this?

(then)

Agatha, who killed your mother? Who killed Anne Lively?

She looks at Anderton, keeps her voice calm as she says:

AGATHA

I'm sorry, John, but you have to run again.

ANDERTON

What --

AGATHA

RUN!

Suddenly the room is BATHED IN LIGHT --

EXT. HOUSE - NIGHT

The Precrime Ships hover over the house. Precrime cops are everywhere.

INT. HOUSE - NIGHT (SLOW MOTION)

We hear NO SOUND as the cops burst into the room and grab Anderton. We see, but don't hear, Lara scream as they throw him to the floor.

He sees Knott come forward, pulling the temporary halo from his belt.

KNOTT

(muted)

John Anderton, by mandate of the District of Columbia, precrime division, I'm placing you under arrest for the murders of Leo Crow and Danny Witwer --

Lara sees the surprise in Anderton's face as he now turns at the mention of Witwer's name --

ANDERTON

Witwer --

But another cop pulls his head back and begins to quickly shave his head, his hair falling onto the picture of his dead son.

He looks over, sees Agatha in the center of it all, THE ONLY ONE MOVING AT NORMAL SPEED, going from one cop to the next, whispering in their ears, startling them, until Fletcher takes her by the arm and ushers her away...

She nods and that's the last thing Anderton sees before his body racks and goes stiff with a shock, and we then...

FADE TO BLACK.

We hear a soft cooing voice, like someone talking to a baby...

VOICE

That's it... that's my girl...

FADE IN: ON THE PRECOG TANK

As Wally gently lowers Agatha into the tank and begins the process of reconnecting her to her "brothers". Her eyes are sunken and dark.

WALLY

I was so worried about you. Did he hurt you?

He stops and looks at her a moment, then takes out a NEEDLE and injects her with the Drug...

WALLY

God, I missed you so much...

She says nothing as he kisses her on the mouth...

INT. A DARK PLACE

Where Anderton lies still as a halo CLICKS into his shaved head. Anderton moves his eyes and sees Gideon smiling over him.

GIDEON

You're part of my flock now, John.
Welcome.

ANDERTON

Lara --

GIDEON

It's actually kind of a rush. They say you get visions; that your life flashes before your eyes. That all your dreams come true.

Anderton struggles, but can't move. Gideon starts to roll away.

INT. PRECOG TANK - DAY

As Wally climbs down. Agatha then turns to her brothers and takes each one by the hand as the tank begins to refill with the "milk."

INT. DEPARTMENT OF CONTAINMENT - DAY

As the TIER begins to SINK DOWN INTO THE FLOOR, Anderton starts to sink into the blackness below...

ANDERTON

Gideon --
(screams)
GIDEON!

But Anderton's scream is drowned out by a blast from Gideon's PIPE ORGAN as we now...

CUT TO BLACK.

SEAN (V.O.)

Dad? Wake up...

And now we see ANDERTON'S SON standing before him. He's now eleven years-old.

ANDERTON

Sean -- you're not real.

SEAN

You gotta have faith, Dad.

ANDERTON

It's a little late for that.

SEAN

Wanna hear something funny?

ANDERTON

What the hell.

SEAN

I lived for a year with a man who was pretending to be my father. He took me all over the world.

Anderton looks at him.

ANDERTON

You're alive?

SEAN

No.

(then)

He got tired of pretending.

ANDERTON

Oh, Sean --

SEAN

The funny thing is, I started to believe he really was my Dad.

ANDERTON

Sean --

SEAN

I feel bad about that.

(then)

I need you to forgive me.

ANDERTON

I forgive you.

SEAN

Once I even told him I loved him.

ANDERTON

I forgive you...

SEAN

The more you want to believe something, the easier it is to be fooled.

ANDERTON

I was looking for you...

SEAN

I know that. I know you would have done anything to find me. I know you would have died for me.

ANDERTON

I wanted to.

SEAN

Good-bye, Dad...

The boy begins to fade away.

ANDERTON

Who are you?

SEAN

I'm your son. I'm you.

ANDERTON

Sean, wait...

SEAN

(now six years old)

Hold your breath, Dad...

And he's gone. Anderton is left alone in the dark.

INT. LAMAR BURGESS' OFFICE - DAY

As Lara is greet by Burgess in a white T-shirt and slacks, no shoes -- in the middle of getting dressed. He embraces her.

BURGESS

This is all my fault.

LARA

No, it isn't, Lamar. There was nothing anyone could do.

She sits on the couch, a BOX OF ANDERTON'S BELONGINGS on the coffee table in front of her.

BURGESS

I thought you might want to have those.

He moves to a mirror, starts to put on his Precrime dress uniform shirt.

BURGESS

I haven't worn this damn thing in years. I just wanted to make sure it fits before tonight.

LARA

You look great.

He watches in the mirror as she lifts John's .45 out of the box.

BURGESS

I knew he was having trouble for some time, and yet I did nothing about it.

Lara is about to say something when Burgess' Secretary sticks her head in...

SECRETARY

The guy from USA Today is here.

BURGESS

Tell him not now.

SECRETARY

He just wanted a few minutes before --

BURGESS

Not. Now.

The Secretary exits. Burgess buttons his shirt.

BURGESS

It's insanity around here.

LARA

I thought you were retiring?

BURGESS

I was, but this whole incident with John made me realize the fragility of what we've built here. This is John's legacy as much as mine and I want to protect that.

He looks at her.

BURGESS

I know how hard this all is for you, but you can at least find some comfort in the fact that John finally found the man who killed your son.

She looks at him, thinks about what he just said, watching as he pins his precrime badge to his shirt.

LARA

Who's Anne Lively?

He pokes himself with the pin, winces.

BURGESS

Who?

LARA

Anne Lively. John was talking about her right before they took him.

BURGESS

I don't know who that is.

Burgess doesn't say anything. The news keeps getting worse.

LARA

John said something about him being set up because he "found out about her."

BURGESS

We know why John was tagged.

LARA

Burgess looks at her.

BURGESS

And Witwer? He was shot with John's gun inside John's apartment.

She looks back at Burgess a moment, then:

LARA

Lamar, do you know the reason why
John came here to work with you?

BURGESS

Sean --

LARA

No. That's what everyone thinks.
(then)
John shot a man dead in Baltimore six months before.

She lets Burgess react to that, then...

LARA

He was serving a warrant on a murder suspect when the guy opened fire from inside. It was a good shooting. The department gave John a commendation for it. But John couldn't let it go. He'd say the man's name in his sleep. He didn't eat. It was all he talked about.
It was all he thought about. He came to work for you because he thought if he could just stop that kind of thing from happening...

She takes a breath, tries to control herself.

BURGESS

I understand.

LARA

No. I don't think you do.
(then)
The other day, when he came to the cottage, he talked about a lot of things, but Danny Witwer, the man he was supposed to have just killed? He didn't mention him. He didn't say his name even once.

Burgess looks at her, then takes her hand and sighs.

BURGESS

Lara, John was the best cop I ever knew, and in some ways, the best man. But the scars he carried around, well...

(shakes his head)

I know that he'd want us to honor the good things we remember about him.

She keeps looking at him. He smiles.

BURGESS

But I also know why he married you: you're as stubborn as he is.

LARA

Lamar --

BURGESS

All right. Tell you what I'll do. First thing Monday, I'll look over the Witwer evidence and I'll have Gideon run the Containment files, see if anyone drowned a woman named -- what did you say her name was?

LARA

(beat)

Anne Lively... But I never said she drowned.

Burgess looks at her, his expression slowly going icy as his Secretary once more reappears.

SECRETARY

Sir, the press conference is starting.

BURGESS

(looking at Lara)

I'll be right there.

The Secretary backs out of the room. Burgess moves to Lara. She flinches slightly as he reaches past her head, and grabs his HAT from the back of the couch.

BURGESS

We'll talk about this later.

(kisses her)

I'll come by the cottage.

He walks out, leaving her there on the couch. She looks around the office, then at John's .45 sitting on the table.

INT. DEPARTMENT OF CONTAINMENT - NIGHT

Moving in on Gideon's hands as he plays the ORGAN. Suddenly the fingers stop. We REVEAL: Lara standing there, Anderton's .45 pressed to Gideon's temple.

LARA

I'd like a word with my husband.

He looks at her.

GIDEON

You're not authorized. How did you get in here?

She drops THE BLACK ZIPLOC on the table in front of him. Gideon nods as Anderton's old eyes "swim" past the clear plastic window.

GIDEON

Okee pokee... off we go...

EXT. WILLARD HOTEL - NIGHT

News crews are out front. A NEWS REPORTER faces a hovering NEWS BOT...

REPORTER

... today a six year experiment was deemed a success when all fifty states overwhelmingly ratified the National Precrime Amendment...

INT. HOTEL BALLROOM - NIGHT

A gala ball. Lamar Burgess and HIS FAMILY are surrounded by WASHINGTON DIGNITARIES and WELL-WISHERS, all here to celebrate the passage of the National Precrime bill.

On a giant screen, victims are expressing their thanks for the programs existence, including Sarah Marks.

ATTORNEY GENERAL NASH

Speaks to a throng of reporters, not looking too happy about what he has to say...

NASH

The President feels, and I agree, that the best way to avoid any appearance of impropriety, or any kind of infighting was to create an entirely new entity...

PULL BACK TO REVEAL: INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As the team watches the "festivities" on a monitor. Their faces are all glum. Evanna looks like she's been crying.

NASH (TV)

... and, of course, the only man qualified to run such an entity is Lamar Burgess...

(then)

Now, if you'll excuse me, I'm urgently needed... uh, somewhere... else.

Fletcher pours some more CHAMPAGNE into a paper cup, drinks it down. He's drunk.

FLETCHER

Why don't I feel like celebrating?

KNOTT

Cause all of a sudden you got no one you can fucking brown nose anymore.

Fletcher looks at Knott. Gets to his feet. Unsteady...

FLETCHER

John Anderton was my friend!

KNOTT

You "friend's" a murderer and he ruined our perfect record. Six years, not one damn murder...

Knott grabs the champagne from Fletcher, starts to pour it into a cup, but just sucks on the bottle instead.

INT. WILLARD BALLROOM - NIGHT

A VIDEO PRESENTATION of the history of Precrime, and LAMAR BURGESS. We hear music, see different shots of Burgess at his Rehab-Prison, we hear about its fabulous success rate.
The video ends to GREAT APPLAUSE.

ANNOUNCER

Ladies and gentlemen, Lamar Burgess, Director of the new, national Precrime.

Applause. Then the room falls silent as Burgess' STAFF presents him with an IVORY BOX. He opens it, looks at his secretary who smiles.

SECRETARY

Congratulations, sir.

BURGESS

My God...

He holds up a beautiful ivory-handled ANTIQUE REVOLVER and the crowd ooohs and ahhhs.

BURGESS

How did you get this?

SECRETARY

I padded your expense account for the last six months.

LAUGHTER. But as he stares at the gun, moved almost to tears, the room grows silent. He looks up.

BURGESS

Revolvers like this one were given to Generals at the end of the Civil War by their troops. The cylinders were loaded with six gold-plated bullets to symbolize the end of the destruction and death that had ripped the country apart for six years.

He opens the gun and shows them the six GOLD BULLETS. We pick out LARA in an evening gown at the back of the room, watching, her eyes fixed on Burgess.

BURGESS

With Precrime going national, maybe we can all look forward to a time when none of us have to discharge another firearm ever again.

Everyone APPLAUDS. Burgess' secretary gets a phone call and ducks her head so that she can hear...

BURGESS

I think people forget that, for all the talk about the Precogs, Precrime is only as good as the men and women who support them...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As Anderton's old team watches... silent.

BURGESS (TV)

I'm grateful to you for all that you've done to make this happen.
And I assure you that I won't forget you when bonus time comes around!

Knott raises the bottle.

KNOTT

Now that's cool.

INT. WILLARD BALLROOM - NIGHT

As Burgess smiles now...

BURGESS

Now enjoy yourselves. That's an order!

LARA watches as Burgess steps off the stage and his Secretary meets him. He's immediately surrounded by WELL-WISHERS and AUTOGRAPH SEEKERS.

SECRETARY

You have an emergency call on your private line.

BURGESS

Thank you.
(into his phone)
This is Burgess.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

Hello, Lamar.

Burgess goes instantly pale as his wife comes up and kisses him on the cheek.

BURGESS

John --

ANDERTON (PHONE)

I just wanted to congratulate you.
You did it. You've created a world without murder. So what if you had to kill someone to do it.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As Jad gets a phone call...

JAD

A-room. Jad.

INT. BALLROOM - NIGHT

Burgess smiles at his unaware wife, then starts walking to the side doors, trying to get away from the crowd, many of whom now thrust PRECRIME BASEBALL HATS at him to sign. He moves past Lara, on her phone, who turns away...

LARA

(to Jad)
John needs a favor...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As Jad listens a moment, then hits a switch and now we hear the conversation between Burgess and Anderton...

ANDERTON (PHONE)

All these years Agatha's had the truth locked inside of her -- the Minority Report. All these years she's the only one who knew what really happened...

INT. PRECRIME TEMPLE - NIGHT

As Agatha lies there, staring upward.

ANDERTON (V.O.)

... until last week when she took my hand and showed me the image of a drowning woman... an image that would eventually lead me back to you.

CLOSE ON BURGESS

A forced smile, nodding to this person and that.

BURGESS

I don't know what you're talking about, John.

CLOSE ON THE BACK OF ANDERTON

We don't know where he is yet...

ANDERTON (PHONE)

I'm talking about Anne Lively. Just a junkie who had a kid once and had to give her up.

INT. BALLROOM - NIGHT

As Burgess smiles tightly at people, mouths "excuse me" as he tries to make for the damn door, but can't seem to get away from the crowd of well-wishers including the Attorney General who reluctantly shakes his hand...

ANDERTON (PHONE)

But, surprise, this junkie cleaned herself up.

INT. PRECOG TANK - AGATHA - NIGHT

As Agatha opens her eyes. We begin moving into ONE OF THEM...

ANDERTON (V.O.)

And she wanted the kid back.

AND NOW WE SEE IN HER EYE:

The screaming face of Anne Lively.

ANDERTON (V.O.)

She wanted Agatha...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As Jad sees the image on the screen, starts patching it in.

ANDERTON (V.O.)

But you and Hineman had already turned the girl into something else: A Precog.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - NIGHT

As Wally looks up at the image on the screen. ANNE LIVELY DROWNING...

JAD (PHONE)

Wally? You getting this?

WALLY

Uh-huh...

INT. BALLROOM - NIGHT

As Burgess, surrounded by AUTOGRAPH SEEKERS, is forced to stop and sign their PRECRIME HATS... while Anderton continues.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

And without her, there was no Precrime. She's always been the strongest of the three. And you know that without Agatha, you had nothing. Without her, you wouldn't be where you are now, standing there signing autographs...

Boom. Burgess stops cold, starts looking around the room.
Knows Anderton is somewhere nearby.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - NIGHT

As Wally studies the IMAGE OF ANNE LIVELY DROWNING plays over and over.

WALLY

It's a single stream, from the female only, with no time or incident data.

JAD (PHONE)

Meaning?

WALLY

Meaning whatever this is, it ain't the future.

(watches the drowning)

It already happened.

INT. HOTEL BALLROOM - NIGHT

As the screen starts to show the SAME VISION and people react. Burgess, at the back of the room sees it, too.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

So now you had to get rid of Anne Lively, you had to find a way to shut her up... which presented a problem. How can you murder her without the precogs seeing it? Simple: you use the system against her.

Burgess quickly goes through a swinging door into...

A CORRIDOR

Where he looks up and down the corridor for Anderton.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

You hired someone to kill her for you, knowing full well the precogs would see that murder.

Burgess turns back, looks through a CIRCLE OF GLASS in the swinging door at...

THE BALLROOM SCREEN - A SERIES OF GRAINY IMAGES

A FIGURE in a black overcoat pulls on a mask...

ANDERTON (PHONE)

You lured Anne Lively out to the lake with the promise of doing the right thing, reuniting her with her daughter...

And now we see Anne Lively standing by the side of A LAKE, her hair whipping in the wind. As THE FIGURE APPROACHES...

ANNE

Mr. Burgess?

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - NIGHT

As the IMAGE PLAYS OUT IN AGATHA'S EYE...

AGATHA

Run...

INT. HOTEL BALLROOM - ON THE SCREEN - NIGHT

As Anne Lively looks up, sees the source of the wind is THE PRECRIME HOVERSHIP. The figure takes off running...

ANDERTON (PHONE)

You even made the arrest yourself...

And now we see a series of images, Lamar Burgess standing there in a WHITE COAT getting off the hovership as the KILLER IS BROUGHT DOWN, THE MASK RIPPED OFF. We see the RED LINES
AROUND THE EYES. We see it's the JOHN DOE from Containment.
HIS FACE SHOVED INTO THE MUD...

THE CROWD

Stands there stunned by what they're watching.

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

As we move through the chaos of fifty SERVERS, COOKS, and DISHWASHERS, we find Anderton for the first time, standing in a corner, in a hooded sweatshirt, his back to us...

ANDERTON

And then, when you were all alone...

INT. THE CORRIDOR - BURGESS - NIGHT

Staring through the glass at the BALLROOM SCREEN as we see the younger Burgess facing Anne Lively beside the lake, as the HOVERSHIP LIFTS OFF IN THE B.G.

ANNE

Where's my daughter?

On screen, the younger Burgess takes off the WHITE OVERCOAT.
He pulls his arm from the coat and we see that the inside is BLACK; that the coat is REVERSIBLE.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

You killed her yourself in the same way the Precogs predicted your John Doe would kill her. You made the real murder look like an echo, knowing the tech would ignore it.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - NIGHT

As the image plays out in Agatha's eye... Anne Lively backing away...

ANDERTON (V.O.)

You fooled the other two precogs, but not Agatha.

And now inside her eye, we see the image of BURGESS pulling

ANDERTON (V.O.)

She was going to see the murder of her own mother no matter what state you did it in, or how you tired to hide it.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - NIGHT

As Agatha tries to sit up...

AGATHA

Run!

INT. HOTEL BALLROOM - SCREEN - NIGHT

The crowd is SILENT as they watch A SERIES OF FAST IMAGES:
Anne Lively stumbles. Burgess grabbing her... Anne's face hitting the water... Burgess shoving her head under and holding it down...

ON BURGESS

Through the glass window, watching himself murder this woman.

INT. PRECOG TEMPLE - IMAGE IN AGATHA'S EYE

As Anne Lively dies under the water, her arm floating across her chest, beckoning us to her as she floats away. Agatha raises her own arm now...

AGATHA

Mama...

INT. CORRIDOR - NIGHT

As Burgess turns away from the window and leans against the wall. Sweating. Ashen faced.

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

Anderton turns around, so that we see the two different colored eyes peering out...

ANDERTON

You still there, Lamar?

INT. CORRIDOR - NIGHT

Burgess looks down for a moment, then holds up his hand. And we see that he STILL HOLDS THE REVOLVER.

INT. PRECOG TANK - NIGHT

As now ALL THREE PRECOGS float to the surface.

MALE FACE

Murderer.

CUT TO:

A RED BALL

Screaming at us...

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As an ALARM SOUNDS and Wally appears on screen...

WALLY

We got a Red Ball!

INT. PRECOG TANK - NIGHT

As Agatha rises to the surface...

AGATHA

Think about the lives that little girl saved.

INT. CORRIDOR - NIGHT

As Burgess collects himself, starts walking...

BURGESS

Think about the lives that little girl saved.

He peers into a room, looking for Anderton.

BURGESS

Think about all the lives she will save?

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

As Anderton moves through the steamy room...

BURGESS (PHONE)

That little girl could have saved
Sean --

Anderton slams his hand down on a metal counter.

ANDERTON

DON'T YOU FUCKING SAY HIS NAME!

INT. CORRIDOR - NIGHT

As Burgess hears the sound, starts down the corridor for it.

INT. PRECOG TANK - NIGHT

As one of the males speaks...

MALE PRECOG

You used the memory of my dead
son...

INT. KITCHEN - NIGHT

People in the kitchen are now looking at Anderton. He turns away...

ANDERTON

You used the memory of my dead son to set me up! That was the one thing you knew would drive me to murder.

INT. CORRIDOR - NIGHT

As up ahead Burgess sees A WAITER EXIT THE KITCHEN.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

What are you going to do now,
Lamar?

INT. PRECOG TANK - NIGHT

As the male speaks...

MALE PRECOG

How are you gonna shut me up?

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

Anderton starts for the kitchen door...

ANDERTON

How are you gonna shut me up?

And now, behind him, we see BURGESS COME INTO THE KITCHEN...

BURGESS

John, people have seen a future where they feel safe. If all it cost was the death of a former drug addict...

(then)

Leave it alone, John. Leave it alone.

INT. PRECRIME ANALYTICAL ROOM - NIGHT

As THE ANNE LIVELY IMAGES distort into static, we now see an image of Lamar Burgess embracing Anderton, THE CITY SKYLINE behind them. We see ANDERTON WHISPER IN BURGESS' EAR...
Burgess looks at him, then...

BURGESS

Forgive me, John.

And now Burgess SHOOTS ANDERTON AT POINT BLANK RANGE.

FLETCHER

Oh, God --

ON THE RED BALL (VICTIM)

As it slows and we see the name JOHN ANDERTON...

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

As the two men move about the giant kitchen, Burgess now stalking Anderton.

BURGESS

People want to believe in the system. That's the beauty of it...

ANDERTON

Beauty? The precogs don't even always agree with each other!

Burgess catches a glimpse of Anderton, moves that way.

BURGESS

The precogs don't have to always work, John, just as long as people believe they do, that's enough.

INT. PRECRIME READY ROOM - NIGHT

As the Team gets ready. A drunk Fletcher tries to put on his uniform.

FLETCHER

Willard Hotel... Two minutes...

Jad rests a hand on his shoulder.

JAD

Fletcher, I think you should stay with me.

Knott looks at Fletcher...

KNOTT

Not to worry, Gordon. I'll save your pal.

INT. HOTEL KITCHEN - NIGHT

As Burgess moves through the huge space looking this way and that for Anderton...

BURGESS

My God, John, a few hundred years ago, they used to bleed the sick. Twenty years ago, you had a tumor, they'd cut it out of you, with a knife, for Christ's sake.

He peers into a walk-in freezer as it's opened...

BURGESS

Since then the focus of medicine has gone from cure to prevention. Well, now law enforcement is going the same way.

As the FREEZER DOOR is closed, he sees A MOVING REFLECTION IN THE STAINLESS STEEL, turns and sees Anderton go through a door at the back.

ANDERTON (PHONE)

Lamar, it's over.

INT. TEMPLE - NIGHT

As the male precog rolls over...

MALE PRECOG

The question you have to ask is...

EXT. HOTEL TERRACE - NIGHT

With nowhere else to go, Anderton stands at the balcony. His hood is off exposing his shaved head.

ANDERTON

What are you gonna do now?

He turns, sees Burgess standing in the doorway, holding the gun on him. Anderton looks off at the SKYLINE. We see a BLINKING RED LIGHT moving towards us over the city...

ANDERTON

No doubt the Precogs have already seen this.

BURGESS

(seeing the red light)

No doubt.

ANDERTON

Then go ahead, pull the trigger.

EXT. WASHINGTON D.C. - NIGHT

As the HOVERSHIP whips past us like a gunshot...

EXT. HOTEL TERRACE - NIGHT

Burgess begins moving towards Anderton.

ANDERTON

What's the matter, Lamar? You see the problem, don't you? If you don't kill me, it means the precogs were wrong and Precrime is over. If you do kill me, you go away, but... it proves the system works. The precogs were right.

Burgess is now right in front of Anderton, the gun inches from Anderton's chest.

ANDERTON

So what do you do?

INT. HOVERSHIP - NIGHT

As EVANNA'S WATCH COUNTS DOWN: SEVEN SECONDS...

EVANNA

We're not gonna make it...

EXT. HOTEL TERRACE - NIGHT

Anderton waits for Burgess to pull the trigger.

ANDERTON

What's it worth? Just one more murder...

And now THE HOVERSHIP RISES UP OVER THE TERRACE...

ANDERTON

You'll rot in hell with a halo, but people will still believe in Precrime.

Burgess looks at the ship...

ANDERTON

All you have to do now is pull the trigger like they said you would.

Burgess turns back, raises the gun: his hand shakes.

ANDERTON

Except...

(a step closer)

You've seen your own future. Which means...

A wind blows AS THE HOVERSHIP NOW COMES DOWN ON THE TERRACE, THE PRECOPS DESCENDING FROM INSIDE.

ANDERTON

You can change it if you want to.

Burgess looks off as the PRECOPS run across the terrace.

ANDERTON

You still have a choice, Lamar...

Suddenly, all at once, THE PRECOPS' WATCHES BEGIN TO BEEP AS THE TIME RUNS OUT.

Anderton, his eyes on Burgess, raises his hand, and motions for the Precops to all stop where they are. The SOUND OF THE SHIP IS LOUD, Anderton speaks into Burgess' ear.

BURGESS

(finally)

Yes, I have a choice... and I've made it.

He lowers the gun, the precops stand there, waiting for him. Anderton takes Burgess by the arm, but the man is unsteady, and Anderton holds onto him. Burgess looks him in the eye...

BURGESS

Forgive me, John.

We hear A GUNSHOT and everybody freezes. Anderton falls to his knees. Looks up at Burgess. A RED STAIN now spreading around BURGESS' heart...

BURGESS

Forgive me...

And as Anderton and now the rest of the precops all move to a dying Burgess, we HEAR THE SOUND OF RAIN OVER and...

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. PRECRIME HEADQUATERS - DAY

It's raining. A CRANE dismantles the statue.

EXT. DOWNTOWN - DAY

As "regular cops" patrol the rainy streets.

INT. PRECRIME TEMPLE - DAY

The tank is empty... the equipment gone.

INT. ANDERTON'S APARTMENT - DAY

Anderton stands alone, watching the rain fall, looking out at the city. A figure walks up to him. But this time it's not digital -- it's Lara. She's flesh and blood. And she's PREGNANT. She stands beside him, watching the rain as we...

DISSOLVE TO:

THE IMAGE OF ANNE LIVELY

On the PLASTIC CARD Anderton had downloaded from Containment. It's cracked, but the image still moves: Anne Lively drowning, her hand beckoning us in death. A FINGER caresses the image as we now PULL BACK TO REVEAL...

AGATHA. Sitting in a rocking chair, bundled up, wind blowing her hair. She stares at the photograph. We hear LAUGHTER O.S. as we continue PULLING BACK TO REVEAL...

A SMALL CABIN. She sits in front of it, rocking back and forth. She looks off as we PULL BACK FARTHER TO REVEAL...

THE OTHER TWO PRECOGS, dressed in warm clothing, working in a crude garden, one of them pulling rocks from the flower bed. We now begin TO CRANE UP so that we see they're...

BY THE SHORE. The ocean, murky and fierce, with HUGE WAVES crashing on the rocky beach. WE CRANE ALL THE WAY UP AND BACK so that now we see that the three of them are...

ON A SMALL ISLAND. In the middle of the North Atlantic somewhere. With no other people... no civilization...

And no murder. And then we...

FADE OUT.

AVATAR

written by James Cameron

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. COPYRIGHT ©2007 TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX FILM CORPORATION. NO PORTION OF THIS SCRIPT MAY BE PERFORMED, PUBLISHED, REPRODUCED, SOLD, OR DISTRIBUTED BY ANY MEANS, OR QUOTED OR PUBLISHED IN ANY MEDIUM, INCLUDING ANY WEB SITE, WITHOUT THE PRIOR WRITTEN CONSENT OF TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX FILM CORPORATION.

THE SOUND OF DRUMS, from a great distance, growing louder.

FADE IN:

WE ARE FLYING through mist, a dimly glimpsed forest below.

VOICE (V.O.)

When I was lying there in the VA hospital, with a big hole blown through the middle of my life, I started having these dreams of flying.

We are very low over the forest now, gliding fast, the drums BUILDING to a PEAK --

VOICE (V.O.)

Sooner or later though, you always have to wake up...

CUT TO:

EXT. CITY - NIGHT

A SCREECH OF BRAKES as a vehicle WIPES FRAME, revealing --

JAKE SULLY, a scarred and scruffy combat vet, sitting in a beat up carbon-fiber wheelchair. At 22, his eyes are hardened by the wisdom and wariness of one who has endured pain beyond his years.

Jake stares upward at the levels of the city. MAGLEV TRAINS WHOOSH overhead on elevated tracks, against a sky of garish advertizing.

JAKE (V.O.)

They can fix a spinal, if you've got the money. But not on vet benefits, not in this economy.

The traffic light changes and Jake pushes forward with the crowd, pumping the wheels of his chair. Most of the people wear FILTER MASKS to protect them from the toxic air. In a LONG LENS STACK it is a marching torrent of anonymous, isolated souls.

INT. JAKE'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

The room is a tiny CUBICLE, prison cell meets 747 bathroom. Narrow cot, wall-screen droning away in the B.G. --

PERKY NEWSCASTER

The Bengal tiger, extinct for over a century, is making a comeback. These cloned tiger cubs at the Beijing Zoo are...

Jake laboriously pulls his pants off -- rocking to one side, pushing the fabric down past his hip, then rocking to the other, and so on.

His legs are white and atrophied. Utterly useless. But his arms are tattooed and powerfully muscled. A "Born Loser" tattoo prominent on his shoulder.

JAKE (V.O.)

I became a Marine for the hardship. To be hammered on the anvil of life. I told myself I could pass any test a man can pass.

Jake struggles with his pants a long time.

CUT TO:

INT. ROWDY BAR -- NIGHT

Not the kind of place you'd bring your mom.

We find Jake near the pool table, BALANCING his chair, front wheels off the ground, while holding a tequila shot on his forehead. ONLOOKERS, including some other disabled vets, CLAP and WHOOP.

Jake grabs the glass, SLAMS down the shot as they cheer.

A WALL-SIZED SCREEN filled with the World Cup game -- men RUNNING on antelope legs.

CU JAKE, watching what he can't have. Expression stony.

JAKE (V.O.)

Let's get it straight up front. I don't want your pity. I know the world's a cold-ass bitch.

Jake's eyes shift -- HIS POV, seeing the bar through gaps in the crowd. A MAN on a barstool SLAPS the WOMAN he's with. Hard. She cowers but he's got her arm, shouting, raising his fist. An eternal tableau. People look away.

CU JAKE -- not looking away.

JAKE (V.O.)

You want a fair deal, you're on the wrong planet. The strong prey on the weak.

TIGHT ON JAKE'S HAND as he starts pushing the wheel of his chair.

TRACKING WITH HIM as he rolls forward.

JAKE (V.O.)
It's just the way things are. And nobody does a damn thing.

Jake stops, unnoticed, next to the bullying man. He leans down and grabs one leg of the man's barstool -- and YANKS.

The chair flips. The guy goes down HARD and -- JAKE hurls himself from the wheelchair, toppling on the guy, getting a grip on him like a pit bull and PUNCHING the crap out of him, right there on the floor.

THE BOUNCER jumps in, trying to drag him off and it goes into SLOW MOTION, everybody yelling and pulling...

JAKE (V.O.)
All I ever wanted in my sorry-ass life was a single thing worth fighting for.

CUT TO:

EXT. ALLEY BEHIND BAR -- NIGHT

THE BOUNCER hurls Jake out the door, sending him SPRAWLING on the pavement. A moment later, his chair CRASHES down on him, banging across the alley, landing in the trash.

Jake struggles to rise on one elbow. He's bleeding and bruised, but still crazed and ready to fight.

JAKE
I hope you realize you've just lost a customer!

He collapses onto his back, panting.

JAKE
 (to himself)
 Candy ass bitch.

He stares upwards at the levels of the city. MAGTRAINS ROAR overhead. It starts to RAIN. He just lies there, blinking -- then shouts jauntily to no one in particular --

JAKE
 If it ain't rainin' we ain't trainin'!

CAMERA PULLS BACK high and wide, as Jake lies spread-eagled amongst the trash, getting drenched.

TWO LONG SHADOWS enter FRAME, coming to rest across him.

Jake sees two pairs of SHINY SHOES stop next to him. He squints up at --

TWO MEN. Matching suits. Their features unremarkable and blandly threatening in the way of FBI agents and auditors.

AGENT 1
Are you Jake Sully?

JAKE
Step off. You're ruinin' my good mood.

AGENT 2
It's about your brother.

CUT TO:

INT. MUNICIPAL CREMATORIUM - NIGHT

DOWN-ANGLE on a large rectangular cardboard box. HANDS ENTER FRAME, pulling open the top to reveal a DEAD MAN'S FACE. He looks EXACTLY like a clean-shaven version of Jake. His IDENTICAL TWIN -- TOMMY.

JAKE (V.O.)
The strong prey on the weak. A guy with a knife took all Tommy would ever be, for the paper in his wallet.

WIDER, showing Jake and the two agents in a high tech CREMATORIUM -- a row of stainless steel furnaces. Jake stares down at his own face.

JAKE
Jesus, Tommy.

JAKE (V.O.)
The Suits' concern was touching.

AGENT 1
Your brother represented a significant investment. We'd like to talk to you about taking over his contract.

The ATTENDANT closes the box and seals it with a tape dispenser, like it's a package for shipping. The cardboard coffin is rolled into the furnace.

JAKE (V.O.)
The egghead and the jarhead. Tommy was the scientist, not me. He was the one who wanted to get shot light years out into space to find the answers.

PUSHING IN ON JAKE as he watches, bathed in orange light.

JAKE (V.O.)

Me -- I was just another dumb grunt gettin' sent someplace I was gonna regret.

INSIDE THE FURNACE the burners quickly eat away the cardboard; TOMMY'S FACE is, for a moment, wreathed in flame but not touched by it, as we --

DISSOLVE TO:

JAKE'S FACE, in icy darkness. CLOSE ON his eyes -- they OPEN suddenly, and he takes a sharp breath.

JAKE'S POV -- the inside of a metal coffin. A SERVO WHINE and we are moving, emerging into a large chamber --

INT. CRYO VAULT

JAKE'S POV -- A TECH in medical scrubs FLOATS WEIGHTLESSLY toward us. Wherever we are, we're not on Earth.

Jake squints as the lights flicker on, revealing --

WIDE SHOT -- the multi-tiered CRYO VAULT. Hundreds of CRYO-CAPSULES are opening like morgue drawers, as med techs pull themselves about in ZERO-G, tending to their patients.

JAKE

(a hoarse whisper)
Are we there?

MED TECH

We're there, Sunshine.

TIME CUT -- SCORES OF PEOPLE emerge from their cryo-capsules in ZERO-G. Pale spirits of the dead rising from rows of open coffins.

The MED TECH floats among them, using his announcement voice.

MED TECH

People, you have been in cryo for five years, nine months and twenty two days. You will be hungry, you will be weak. If you feel nausea, please use the sacks provided for your convenience. The staff thanks you in advance.

FOLLOWING JAKE as he pushes away from his capsule, gliding to the LOCKERS across the aisle, his paralyzed legs not an impediment in weightlessness.

CUT TO:

EXT. SPACE

Against the cold infinity of stars glides an INTERSTELLAR SPACECRAFT -- ISV VENTURE STAR. As it moves past like an endless train, we realize this thing is ENORMOUS -- over half a mile long. PAN WITH IT 180 to REVEAL --

A GAS-GIANT PLANET called POLYPHEMUS, ringed with dozens of moons which cast beauty-mark shadows on its vast face.

The ISV diminishes away from us toward the largest MOON-- a blue and surprisingly Earth-like world called PANDORA. The ship dwindles to a speck against the BLUE MOON.

CUT TO:

EXT. PANDORA ORBIT

ISV Venture Star drifts above a spectacular vista -- the sapphire seas and unfamiliar continents of Pandora.

CLOSE ON ISV -- two massive "VALKYRIE" SHUTTLES are mated to a DOCKING NODE. One of them separates from the starship and moves away, its thrusters FIRING in short bursts.

As the shuttle moves away, descending toward Pandora, we hear the sound of DRUMS, building, louder and louder until we--

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - TWILIGHT

FLYING OVER A LANDSCAPE of massive cliffs and towering mesas carpeted in rainforest. Great scarves of cloud swirl around the mesa tops. A primeval landscape, vast and forbidding.

The trees are alien, the color too cyan. There are waterfalls, rivers, and distant flocks of WINGED CREATURES.

Suddenly the carpet of virgin rainforest gives way to --

AN OPEN-PIT MINE. A lifeless crater -- as if a giant cookie-cutter took a chunk out of the world. Down among the terraces are EXCAVATORS and TRUCKS the size of three story buildings.

And beyond the mine is the HUMAN COLONY --

EXT. HELL'S GATE - TWILIGHT

HELL'S GATE is a cluster of squat concrete and steel structures surrounded by chain-link FENCE 10 meters high, topped with razor wire.

At the corners are towers with automated SENTRY GUNS swiveling on servo mounts.

Visible beyond the gun towers, the VALKYRIE SHUTTLE roars in across the treetops. VECTORING NOZZLES change angle, bringing the ship to a SLOW HOVER.

EXT. RAIN FOREST - TWILIGHT

Through a screen of jungle canopy, we see the VALKYRIE thunder overhead. Camera TILTS with it until leaves block the view.

A BLUE INHUMAN HAND reaches INTO SHOT, parting the foliage to reveal the shuttle hover-taxiing across the compound.

REVERSE -- ECU of two intense, cat-like golden EYES watching.

INT./EXT. SHUTTLE

The CREW CHIEF stomps down the aisle yelling --

CREW CHIEF
Exopacks on!

Passengers don their EXO-PACK breathing gear with practiced moves. Everybody except JAKE, who's turning his this way and that trying to figure out the straps.

CREW CHIEF
Remember people, you lose your mask you're unconscious in 20 seconds and you're dead in four minutes. Let's nobody be dead today, it looks bad on my report.

The crew chief stops by Jake long enough to bark --

CREW CHIEF
Exopack on, let's go!

BENEATH THE SHUTTLE air blasts outward for a hundred meter radius as it settles onto its landing gear.

INSIDE everybody is queued up in the aisles, with duffles ready. Rows of tense, expectant faces in breathing masks -- and we DIP DOWN to find Jake, wheelchair putting him at the level of everyone else's WAISTS.

THE CARGO RAMP OPENS with a hydraulic whine.

CREW CHIEF

Go directly into the base! Do not stop!
Go straight inside!

HAND-HELD, running with the arriving colonists who double time down the ramp. They jog across the exposed apron toward a walkway covered in CHAINLINK which leads to the complex.

Inside the chain-link tunnel are a couple of SEC-OPS TROOPERS, CORPORAL LYLE WAINFLEET and PRIVATE FIKE. Sec-Ops is the colony's private security force. These guys are laid back, hardened, and haggard.

WAINFLEET

Look at all that new meat.

THEIR POV -- Jake rolls down the ramp.

FIKE

Check it out, man. Meals on wheels.

WAINFLEET

That is just wrong.

Jake, pumping his chair, looks around as --

A huge TRACTOR, taller than a house, ROARS past on muddy wheels. He notices something sticking in the tires -- ARROWS. The neolithic weapons are jarring amid all the advanced technology.

Beyond the tractor, two VTOL vehicles take off. Armored and heavily armed, they are AT-99 "SCORPION" GUNSHIPS.

MITSUBISHI MK-6 AMPSUITS -- human operated walking machines 4 meters tall -- patrol the perimeter. They are heavily armored, and armed with a huge rotary cannon called a GAU-90.

Beyond the outer fence stands a black wall of forest hundreds of feet high. A SENTRY GUN OPENS FIRE from a tower. TRACERS light up the twilight. A shadowy SHAPE SHRIEKS and drops off the fence. It is an armed camp in a state of siege.

WAINFLEET and Fike give Jake and his chair the hairy eyeball as he approaches.

JAKE

What're you two limpdicks starin' at?

As Jake rolls past, SOMETHING SWOOPS down behind him and --

K-KRASH! SMASHES against the chain-link right next to his head.

A vicious AERIAL PREDATOR a meter across gnashes glass fangs against the steel. It STABS at him through the chain link with a tail ending in a glistening stiletto. A STINGBAT.

WAINFLEET casually BLASTS IT with his PISTOL. It drops off the fence, tail still lashing.

WAINFLEET

Seen a lotta guys leave this place in a wheelchair. Never seen anybody show up in one.

Jake stares at the gnashing fangs of the dying alien.

ON A WALKWAY of the OPS CENTER, seen from above, a UNIFORMED FIGURE grips the railing, watching Jake pump his chair through the tunnel below.

The hair is clipped short. The scalp is etched by long parallel SCARS where some Pandoran denizen's claws raked across it. The bare arms, below tightly rolled sleeves, seem hewn out of some hard tropical wood. Criss-crossed by scars.

The MAN raises his masked face to look at the sky. He eyes are an icy steel gray.

HIS POV -- the mighty POLYPHEMUS seems to fill the sky, beyond the clouds.

MAN (V.O.)

You are not in Kansas any more...

CUT TO:

INT. COMMISSARY - TWILIGHT

THE MAN from the balcony -- COLONEL MILES QUARITCH -- is the HEAD OF SECURITY for the Hell's Gate colony. A hundred new arrivals watch raptly as he paces like a panther across the front of the large cafeteria. He stops, stance wide.

Without his mask, we see that Quaritch's features are rugged and handsome, except for the SCAR, which runs from scalp to jaw down one side of his face. On one hip he carries a very large PISTOL.

QUARITCH

... You are on Pandora, ladies and gentlemen. Respect that fact every second of every day.

JAKE ROLLS IN, watching from the back.

COLONEL QUARITCH raises his hand and points out the window, toward the dark treeline.

QUARITCH

Out beyond that fence every living thing that crawls, flies or squats in the mud wants to kill you and eat your eyes for jujubees.

The room gets very quiet.

QUARITCH

We have an indigenous population of humanoids here called the Na'vi. They're fond of arrows dipped in a neurotoxin which can stop your heart in one minute. We operate -- we live -- at a constant threat condition yellow.

PAN ACROSS the solid faces of miners, Cat-machine drivers, engineers, geologists, as they take that in.

QUARITCH

As head of security, it's my job to keep you alive. I will not succeed -- (pausing for effect)
-- not with all of you. If you wish to survive, you need a strong mental attitude, you need to follow procedure...

PUSH IN ON JAKE, watching as the briefing continues.

JAKE (V.O.)

Nothing like an old-school safety brief to put your mind at ease.

CUT TO:

INT. CORRIDOR

People are roaming in both directions, looking for rooms, lugging duffels and cases.

An eager young XENOANTHROPOLOGIST, staggering under an overpacked duffel, runs to catch up to Jake.

NORM

Hey, you're Jake right? Tom's brother? You look just like him.
(off Jake's wary look)
Sorry, I'm Norm Spellman, I went through avatar training with him.

Norm offers his hand and Jake shakes it.

NORM

He was a great guy -- funny. It was a big shock to all of us.

JAKE

Yeah.

Jake pumps the wheels of his chair, rolling on. Norm walks with him.

NORM

And duh! -- obviously you look like him. I mean, if you weren't genetically identical, you wouldn't be taking over his avatar.

JAKE

That's why I'm here.

NORM

So -- you want to go check it out?

CUT TO:

INT. BIO-LAB - DAY

JAKE AND NORM enter the BIO-LAB -- a large lab complex with many adjoining rooms.

MAX

Me and Norm were out here to drive these remotely controlled bodies called avatars. They're grown from human DNA mixed with DNA from the natives here.

A scientist, DOCTOR MAX CULLIMORE, is supervising the uncrating of two SHIPPING CONTAINERS. The nearer has the sides removed, revealing -- a ceiling-height acrylic TANK.

Norm stops to stare, and Jake rolls past him as if drawn by some unseen force, toward --

THE AMNIO TANK. There is a FIGURE floating languidly inside, which looks like a man. A very large, very blue, man.

Blood circulates through a synthetic UMBILICAL in the abdomen. As the figure turns in the amniotic fluid, we see that it has a lemur-like TAIL. The skin is cyan-blue. Long black hair drifts, graceful as seaweed.

JAKE

Damn. They got big.

NORM

Yeah, they mature on the trip out.

(to Max)

So the proprioceptive sims worked pretty well.

MAX

Yeah, they've got great muscle tone. Give us a few hours, you guys can take them for a spin.

THE FIGURE'S sleeping face turns toward us, and the features are -- despite feline ears and a long feral snout -- definitely JAKE'S.

JAKE

It looks like him.

NORM

No, it looks like you. This is your avatar now, Jake.

ON JAKE, mesmerized as he stares into the tank.

JAKE (V.O.)

The idea is -- every driver is matched to his own avatar --

STEREOCAM VIDEO SHOT OF JAKE -- facing the camera, talking directly to the lens. JAKE'S VOICE-OVER up until now has been part of this VIDEOLOG.

JAKE

-- so their nervous systems are in tune. Or something. Which is why they offered me this gig, because I can link with Tommy's avatar, which was insanely expensive.

(looking off camera)

Is this right? I just say whatever in these videologs?

WIDER, showing Norm working nearby with Max.

NORM

Yeah. You just need to get in the habit of documenting everything -- what you see, what you feel -- it's all part of the science. Good science starts with good observation.

JAKE

Right.

(to camera)

So, whatever. Here I am. Doing science.

(looks around)

Never been in a lab before.

MAX

Log off. It's time to meet your boss for the next five years.

He leads Jake and Norm through the short corridor to the --

CUT TO:

INT. LINK ROOM - DUSK

The LINK ROOM contains a dozen PSIONIC LINK UNITS, which look like coffins crossed with MRI scanners.

NORM

Grace Augustine is a legend. She's the head of the Avatar Program, and she wrote the book -- I mean literally wrote the book -- on Pandoran botany.

MAX

(low, over his shoulder)

That's because she likes plants better than people.

DR. GRACE AUGUSTINE sits up in her link, stretching and cracking her neck after a long session. She's fifty, with a strong face and fiercely intelligent eyes.

GRACE

(yelling)

Who's got my goddamn cigarette?!

A TECH scurries to bring it to her, already lit. Around here they jump when Grace barks.

Grace stands, scowling, as Jake, Norm and Max approach.

MAX

And here she is, Cinderella back from the ball. Grace, I'd like you to meet Norm Spellman and Ja --

GRACE

Norm. I hear good things about you. How's your Na'vi?

NORM
 (Na'vi, subtitled)
May the All Mother smile upon our first meeting.

Grace nods approvingly, taking a drag on her cigarette.

GRACE
 (subtitled)
Not bad. You sound a little formal.

NORM
 (subtitled)
There is still much to learn.

Jake waits while they ignore him, chattering in fluent Na'vi.

MAX
 Uh, Grace, this is Jake S----

GRACE
 (turning to Jake)
 Yeah, yeah, I know who you are, and I don't need you. I need your brother.
 (to Max)
 You know -- the PhD who trained three years for this mission.

JAKE
 He's dead. I know it's a big inconvenience to everyone.

GRACE
 How much lab training have you had? Ever run a gas chromatograph?

JAKE
 No.

GRACE
 Any actual lab work at all?

JAKE
 High school chemistry. But I ditched.

Grace wheels on Max.

GRACE
 You see? You see? They're pissing on us without even the courtesy of calling it rain.
 (turning away)
 I'm going to Selfridge.

She shoves past Jake.

MAX

Grace, that's not a good idea.

But she's already out the door and clomping down the corridor. Max turns to Jake with a pained look.

MAX

Here, tomorrow, oh eight hundred. Try to use big words.

CUT TO:

INT. OPS CENTER - DUSK

It looks like an air-traffic control tower, with lots of screens and bay windows showing the whole complex.

ADMINISTRATOR PARKER SELFRIDGE takes a ball from a newly opened case of TITLEISTS and sets it on the floor. Selfridge is young, charismatic, focused. Some would say ruthless.

He assumes the stance and lines up his putt, toward a practice cup across the control room floor. He glances up as Grace strides toward him.

GRACE

Parker, I used to think it was benign neglect, but now I see you're intentionally screwing us.

SELFRIDGE

Grace. You know I enjoy our little talks.

GRACE

I need a research assistant, not some jarhead dropout.

Selfridge looks down and hits the ball.

Grace kicks the practice cup aside, and the ball rolls past. Selfridge looks at her with a sigh.

SELFRIDGE

Actually, we got lucky with him.

GRACE

Lucky? How is this in any way lucky?

As Selfridge saunters over to retrieve the ball --

SELFRIDGE

Well -- lucky your guy had a twin brother, and lucky the brother wasn't an oral hygienist or something. A Marine we can use. I'm assigning him to your team as security escort.

GRACE

The last thing I need is another trigger happy asshole out there!

SELFRIDGE

Look, you're supposed to be winning the hearts and minds of the natives. Isn't that the whole point of your little puppet show? If you look like them, if you talk like them, they'll trust you?

Selfridge crosses to his office, behind a glass wall nearby. Grace follows.

SELFRIDGE

But after -- how many years? -- relations with the indigenous are only getting worse.

GRACE

That tends to happen when you use machine guns on them.

On Selfridge's desk is a magnetic base, and hovering in mid-air, in the invisible field, is a lump of METALLIC ROCK. Pure UNOBTANIUM. He grabs it and holds it up between thumb and forefinger, in front of Grace's eyes.

SELFRIDGE

This is why we're here. Unobtanium. Because this little gray rock sells for twenty million a kilo. No other reason. This is what pays for the party. And it's what pays for your science. Comprendo?

He places it back in the magnetic field.

SELFRIDGE

Those savages are threatening our whole operation. We're on the brink of war and you're supposed to be finding a diplomatic solution. So use what you've got and get me some results.

CUT TO:

INT. LINK ROOM - DAY

NEXT MORNING, GRACE, NORM and JAKE approach their link units.

Jake glances through a PRESSURE WINDOW. In an adjoining chamber (the AMBIENT ROOM) JAKE'S AVATAR lies on a gurney, breathing slowly in PANDORAN AIR. NORM'S AVATAR is on a second gurney. Both are attended by med techs in exo-masks.

Norm slips into his LINK CHAIR, expertly donning biometric sensors.

GRACE

How much link time have you logged?

NORM

Five hundred and twenty hours.

Grace looks pointedly at Jake.

JAKE

Like -- an hour.

GRACE

Tell me you're joking.

Grace opens the hood of Jake's link unit. Jake starts hauling himself across from his wheelchair. She reaches to help him but --

JAKE

Don't! I got this.

Grace steps back, hands raised. He drags himself into the unit.

GRACE

So you just figured you'd come out here to the most hostile environment known to man, with no training of any kind, and see how it went? What was going through your head?

He meets her eyes with a defiant glare.

JAKE

Maybe I was just tired of doctors telling me what I couldn't do.

Grace watches him laboriously pull his inert legs into the link chair by hand.

Jake settles into the warm fluid gel packs lining the unit. It seems to enfold him. Grace adjusts his biometric sensors, then lowers the UPPER CLAMSHELL --

GRACE
Relax and let your mind go blank. That shouldn't be hard for you.

JAKE
Kiss the darkest part of my lily white --

But the SLAMMING HOOD muffles the rest.

MAX
Initiate link.

The LINK TECH touches some controls.

ON A LARGE MONITOR a 3D SCAN of Jake's brain appears. Regions of activity flow with complex shifting colors.

MAX
That's a gorgeous brain. Nice activity.

GRACE
Go figure.
(walking away)
Alright, I'm going in.

TECH
Phase-lock at forty percent. He's in transition.

Max watches a display showing the avatar's nervous system aligning with Jake's -- two ghostly networks of light merging.

MAX
That's it. Find your way home.

ECU JAKE, inside the link unit. His eyes move under the lids, like a dreamer in REM sleep as --

INSIDE JAKE'S MIND -- radiant streamers coalesce into a pulsing TUNNEL OF LIGHT and --

THE SCREEN FLARES WHITE -- ZZZWHAP! -- resolving into an overexposed, out-of-focus image -- two BLURRY FACES wearing masks, looking down.

ECU JAKE'S AVATAR -- two very intense eyes FILL FRAME, the pupils contracting. Golden irises pulse with life.

MAX

He's in.

TECH

Phase-lock ninety nine percent. The link is stable.

Blinking, Jake slowly sits up on the gurney. He looks down at his AVATAR BODY, touching his chest with one hand.

MAX

Take it slow, Jake. We need to check your motor control. Try touching your fingertips together --

But Jake isn't listening. He's staring at his legs. He eases them off the gurney and --

HIS BLUE FEET touch the concrete floor, taking his weight.

JAKE STANDS, feeling the strength in his legs. His expression is child-like with wonder.

HIS POV -- looking down at the med techs, who seem the size of children next to his 9' tall frame.

He sees something like a blue tentacle curl across his arm and he JERKS AROUND in alarm. HIS TAIL.

As he turns to see it, the tail sweeps instruments off a table with a crash. Jake laughs and grins at Max.

MED TECH

Easy, Jake, I need you to sit down --

But Jake takes a step, then another. The wires to the bio-monitors pull taut, and he yanks them off his chest.

MAX

Jake! Wait, we have to run some tests --

But Jake pushes past the protesting med techs, toward the door and --

EXT. AVATAR COMPOUND - DAY

Jake emerges, blinking in the morning sun. He finds himself in the AVATAR COMPOUND -- a living and training area.

Nearby, a couple of AVATARS are playing one-on-one in front of a (non-regulation height) basketball net. Others go about their daily activities around the compound.

Jake flexes his legs -- JUMPS -- and lands a little unsteadily, but his expression is joyful.

He takes a few steps and breaks into a RUN. People are calling to him, somewhere, but he doesn't hear them -- he's running. RUNNING!

He finds himself in the COMPOUND GARDEN, and stops amid neatly tended rows of ALIEN PLANTS. He looks down, wiggling his toes in the warm soil. Then inhales deeply -- revelling in the alien smells -- earth, plants, the nearby forest. He looks at his bare footprint in the soil of an alien world.

GRACE (O.S.)
Hey Marine!

Jake turns at the familiar voice to see --

A statuesque FEMALE AVATAR walking toward him. AVATAR GRACE is magnificent, with panther thighs, flat muscular stomach and firm athlete's breasts. She wears shorts and a T-shirt. In human years she would be about 35.

JAKE
Grace?

GRACE
Well who'd you expect, numbnuts? Think fast!

She throws him a piece of Pandoran fruit, which he catches.

GRACE
Motor control is looking good.

Jake bites into the fruit, the juice running down his chin.

NORM (O.S.)
Hey, check it out.

Jake turns to see NORM'S AVATAR posing like a bodybuilder -- chest shot, back shot, bi's.

NORM
I am a living god.

CUT TO:

EXT. MINE PIT - DAY

A WIDE SHOT of the terraced crater of the UNOBTANIUM MINE. A quiet beat, then --

K-WHOOOOM! The entire face of one terrace is blown skyward in a chain of EXPLOSIONS. The "shot" blasts hundreds of tons of rock loose.

LONG LENS ANGLES of enormous WHEEL-LOADERS shovelling up ore-rich rock and dropping it into DUMP TRUCKS.

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

A wall of steel FILLS FRAME. The DOZER BLADE crushes everything in its path, reducing trees to kindling.

WIDER, showing the CLEAR-CUTTING operation near the mine, as a road is cut through the jungle. Remotely operated DOZERS three stories tall rip into the tree-line.

One of the dozers has rotating SLASH-CUTTER, a vicious spinning head, mounted on a hydraulic arm, that hogs through the enormous tree trunks in a spray of wood-shrapnel.

The heavy machines are escorted by AMPSUITS. COLONEL QUARITCH, on foot, leads a squad of troopers wearing breathing masks and carrying almighty big AUTOMATIC WEAPONS.

A BANSHEE -- a fearsome aerial predator -- HURTLES from above, diving toward them on wings 3 meters across. We get a glimpse of glassy fangs before --

P-P-POOM! Quaritch cranks off three rapid SHOTS with his massive sidearm, and the creature drops with a SHRIEK.

It crashes near them and Quaritch FIRES two more well placed rounds. The newbies stare at the thing's barracuda teeth.

QUARITCH

For you pagues, this is a banshee. A small one. See, they like it when I bring fresh meat out here. And this clearcutting really stirs up the hornet's nest. So keep your head on a swivel. If it moves, shoot it. If you're not sure it's moving -- shoot it! If it looks like a bunch of flowers you want to take home to Sally Rottencrotch -- SHOOT IT! What're you gonna do?

TROOPERS

Shoot it, sir!

QUARITCH

Outstanding. Let's roll.

Quaritch leads his squad into the gloom of the forest, his eyes scanning. Flanking the squad, LYLE WAINFLEET drives an AMPSUIT, his massive feet CRASHING through the underbrush.

As his gaze comes down, he sees something ahead of him on the trail -- an intricate TOTEM of woven sticks, bones and feathers hanging across the trail like an orb-weaver's web.

He tears it down with the barrel of his rifle, and stomps it into the mud as he moves on.

INT. AVATAR LONGHOUSE - DUSK

Jake sits on a wooden bed in a long hut of tropical-style construction -- beamed ceiling, open sides covered by screen.

Around him the other avatars are bedding down for the night, pulling insect netting around their cots. In one hand, Jake holds the end of his long braided QUEUE of hair.

CLOSE ON the queue -- the ends of the hair writhe slowly with their own life, like tendrils of a sea creature.

JAKE

That's kinda freaky.

GRACE switches off the overheads.

GRACE

Lights out amigos. See ya' at dinner.

Jake sits in the twilight, listening to the SCREECHES and HOOTS from the forest. Finally he lies down, CLOSING HIS EYES and --

INT. LINK ROOM - NIGHT

ECU HUMAN JAKE -- his eyes OPEN.

Jake blinks, disoriented, as Max opens the upper clamshell of his link unit.

In the next chair Grace sits up, yawning and cracking her neck as the scared tech runs to her with a lit cigarette.

GRACE

(looking down)

Damn. Same old sack a' bones.

JAKE struggles with the dead weight of his legs as he hauls himself out of the unit.

CUT TO

INT. COMMISSARY - EARLY MORNING

JAKE sits with GRACE, NORM and the other avatar "drivers", while around them miners, troopers and other base personnel wolf their breakfasts. Grace is engaged in a heated conversation with another SCIENTIST.

Jake, isolated from the conversations around him, notices --

PILOT TRUDY CHACON approaching, dressed in her flight suit. She's a rock-hard former Marine with thousands of flight hours out in the badlands.

TRUDY

Sully -- Colonel wants to see you in the Armor Bay.

Jake gives Norm a puzzled glance and pivots from the table. He wheels away, led by Trudy.

TIGHT ON GRACE, scowling as she watches him go.

CUT TO:

INT. ARMOR BAY - MORNING

JAKE AND TRUDY enter the ARMOR BAY, passing TILT-ROTORS under repair. There are the heavily armed SCORPIONS as well as several SA-2 SAMSON work-horses outfitted with door guns and rocket pods.

JAKE

You guys're packing some heavy ordinance.

TRUDY

Yeah, 'cause we're not the only thing flyin' around out there. Or the biggest. I'm gonna need you on a door gun, I'm a man short.

JAKE

Yeah, no problem.

She extends her fist and he taps it with his.

TRUDY

See ya on the flight-line, zero nine.
(she points)
He's down there.

Jake rolls his chair along the central gallery of the Armor Bay, passing rows of AMPSUITS standing in service racks. Techs clamber over the 'suits, loading ordinance with cranes and lifts.

At the end of the row is a makeshift GYM area. QUARITCH is bench-pressing massive plates.

QUARITCH

This low gravity makes you soft.
(pushing the last rep)
You get soft, Pandora will shit you out dead with zero warning.

Quaritch racks the bar and sits up, sweating but not winded.

QUARITCH

I pulled your record, Corporal. Venezuela
-- that was some mean bush. Nothing like this here, though. You got heart kid, coming out here.

JAKE

I figured -- just another hellhole.

Quaritch chuckles appreciatively, claps him on the shoulder.
The CHIEF MECHANIC yells from the nearest AMPSUIT --

MECHANIC

That servo's in, Colonel, if you want to try it.

Quaritch crosses to the 'suit, with Jake following.

QUARITCH

I was in First Recon a few years ahead of you. More than a few. Two tours in Nigeria, not a scratch. I come out here and --

He points to his scarred face.

QUARITCH

They could fix this if I rotated back.
But you know what? I kinda like it.
Reminds me every day what's out there.
Besides, I can't leave --

He looks out, as if he can see through the wall to the tree-line.

QUARITCH

This is my war, here.

Quaritch climbs the 'suit and reaches into the cockpit, throwing some switches. The 'suit's gas-turbine spools up with a rising WHINE.

QUARITCH

The avatar program is a joke -- buncha limp-dick scientists. But we have a unique opportunity here, you and I. A recon Marine in an avatar body could get me the intel I need, on the ground, right in the hostiles' camp.

The WHINE is now a roaring WHOOSH as the 'suit trembles with power. The air boils above the exhaust vents.

Quaritch reaches in and operates the controls, flexing one huge hand. He nods to the waiting mechanic --

QUARITCH

Looks good.

(to Jake)

I need you to learn about these savages, gain their trust. Find out how I can force their cooperation, or hit 'em hard if they don't. Maybe you can keep some of my boys from going home like you. Or bagged-and-tagged.

JAKE

(nodding)

That sounds real good, Colonel. So -- am I still with Augustine?

QUARITCH

On paper. You walk like one of her science pukes, you quack like one, but you report to me. Can you do that for me?

Jake nods. Quaritch brings the 'suit to life. He steps forward and pivots smoothly.

He balances the two ton machine on one foot while sweeping the arms in strong, graceful arcs. Jake realizes he is doing a WU-SHOO KATA. A flawless display of strength and control. He's impressive, and Jake is impressed. Quaritch is the kind of man he respects -- focused, hard. Determined.

QUARITCH

Look, son -- I take care of my own. Get me what I need, I'll see you get your legs back when you rotate home. Your real legs.

He raises the 'suit's hand, and slams the canopy shut like the visor of a helmet. Jake watches Quaritch walk past, huge feet CLANGING -- KUNG! KUNG! KUNG!

INT. BIO LAB - DAY

GRACE is on the move, gulping coffee, in a hurry to get their FIRST SORTIE started. She hands a clipboard to MAX.

GRACE
Start calibrating. We're on the flight line in ten minutes.

Max nods and jogs ahead toward the LINK ROOM. JAKE and NORM fall in with Grace as they enter the CONNECTING CORRIDOR.

GRACE
What did Atilla want?

JAKE
Just Marines comparin' tattoos.

GRACE
(not buying it)
Yeah. Well, listen to me, Marine --

She stops, turning to drill him with a look.

GRACE
-- you're driving an avatar, now. That means you're in my world, got it?

JAKE
Got it.

She turns and enters the LINK ROOM.

INT. LINK ROOM

Grace crosses to the controls of Jake's LINK UNIT. As the others catch up --

GRACE
That son of a bitch has screwed up this program enough. All this -- (indicating link room)
-- exists so we can go out there and build a bridge of trust to these people, who could teach us so much. But thanks to Quaritch and his thugs the Na'vi won't even talk to us anymore.

JAKE
Then how's this supposed to work?

GRACE

We have a new face.

(turning to Norm)

You're fluent, you've studied the culture. You're non-threatening. The ones we know best -- the Omaticaya clan -- may give you a chance. Maybe you can get them back to the table before things go tits-up for good.

NORM

This is failing as a pep talk.

Jake hauls himself across from wheelchair to link.

JAKE

How do we contact them?

GRACE

We don't. They contact us. If they see us taking our samples, treating the forest with respect --

(pointedly to Jake)

Not trampling everything in sight -- they may reach out to us.

JAKE

Or they may skin us and make a drum.

Jake lies back, lowering the sensor array over his body.

GRACE

Just keep your mouth shut and let Norm do the talking.

She closes his clamshell, HARD, and we --

CUT TO:

EXT. RAIN FOREST / AERIAL - DAY

FLYING over a carpet of rainforest, past sheer cliffs and cloud-wreathed mesas. TRUDY'S SAMSON TILT-ROTOR chases its shadow across the treetops. Though big as a Blackhawk, it is tiny in the vast primeval landscape.

ANGLE THROUGH the open side doors of the Samson. Trooper WAINFLEET, in exo-mask and body armor, leans on his door gun, scanning for aerial predators.

In avatar form JAKE, GRACE and NORM watch the forest unrolling beneath them, the wind blasting their clothes. Jake mans the other door gun, his feet propped on the skids.

TRUDY flies from a pressurized cockpit. She banks to follow a shallow river.

TRUDY (INTERCOM)
Sturmbeest herd, one o'clock.

Norm grins and points, excitedly. Jake looks in time to see-- A herd of STURMBEEST -- massive six-legged creatures reminiscent of buffalo -- thundering across the river.

GRACE
Looks like a bull, six cows and some juveniles.

NORM
The bull has the red on the dorsal armor?

Grace nods approvingly.

TIME CUT -- Hundreds of purple winged creatures take flight from a lake, startled by the Samson. They skim the water above their own reflections. TETRAPTERONS.

TIME CUT -- the ground drops away as the Samson flies over a WATERFALL hundreds of feet high. Trudy banks hard, rolling in on the gorge below like it's a gun-run.

Wainfleet WHOOPS while Norm looks like he's about to puke.

WAINFLEET
Yo Chacon! Get some!

Jake grins into the airstream.

CUT TO:

EXT. CLEARING - DAY

A small meadow among towering trees. The fern-like "grass" is beaten down in waves by the rotor-wash as the Samson settles to the ground.

Jake pulls the massive door gun off its pintle mount and hefts it like an assault rifle.

He and Wainfleet leap out to secure the LZ, scanning the tree-line warily, weapons aimed.

Grace jogs forward to the cockpit, motioning Trudy to shut down. Trudy kills the Samson's TURBINES.

Grace, towering over Wainfleet, motions him to hang back.

GRACE
Stay with the ship.
(for Jake)
One idiot with a gun's enough.

WAINFLEET
Whatever you say, Doc.

Jake takes point as they enter the jungle.

WAINFLEET
(laughing)
Ya'll have fun out there.

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

The forest engulfs JAKE, GRACE and NORM in cyan gloom. The shadows are alive with the CHITTERING sounds of unseen alien wildlife.

TRACKING WITH JAKE as he moves through the foliage, hyper-alert -- looking around like a tourist in Hell. A monkey-like PROLEMURIS leaping from limb to limb overhead, flashing through the sunlight streaming down in shafts.

A PLANT with swaying tendrils which reach toward Jake as he passes.

This forest is more alive than any on Earth, with plants that react and move like animals. Jake white-knuckles his rifle as if every shadow conceals razor-fanged death.

GRACE
Relax, Marine. You're making me nervous.

She pushes ahead of him on the trail, forcing him to lower his muzzle as he follows her. Grace moves nimbly on the path, seemingly unconcerned.

CUT TO:

EXT. FOREST/ GLEN

WIDE SHOT as the party moves between the huge trees, tiny as ants. The trail has gotten steeper, the going tougher.

CUT TO:

EXT. SCHOOL RUINS - DAY

They enter a clearing with an OVERGROWN BUILDING made of timbers cut from the local trees, with a thatch roof. It is covered with vines as the jungle reclaims it.

NORM
How will they know we're here?

GRACE
I'm sure they're watching us right now.

Norm gulps. Jake looks behind him as they approach the school, feeling unseen eyes.

CUT TO:

INT. SCHOOL RUINS

TRACKING WITH JAKE'S BOOTS as he steps among dried leaves and a few moldering CHILDREN'S BOOKS. Floorboards CREAK.

GRACE (O.S.)
The kids were so bright, so eager to learn... they picked up English faster than I could teach it to them.

WIDER as Jake explores the room. Grace and Norm are selecting INSTRUMENTS from storage cases on a wooden table.

GRACE
Bring the soil probe -- right there, yellow case.

Jake looks up at a RUSTLING among the dark rafters. Roosting STINGBATS eye him warily, fluttering their wings.

Grace picks up a moldering copy of "The Lorax" by Dr. Seuss from the floor and puts it back on a shelf.

GRACE
(wistfully)
The stingbats knock them off. I guess I always hope somebody will come back and read them.

NORM
Why don't they come back?

GRACE
(grimly)
The Na'vi learned as much about us as they needed to know.

Jake sees something, and approaches the blackboard -- reaches out to touch a pattern of holes blasted into the slate. Unmistakably BULLET HOLES.

JAKE
(turning to her)
What happened here?

GRACE
(sharply)
Are you going to help with this gear?
We've got a lot to do.

She turns away. Jake watches her as he jams equipment into his pack.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

CLOSE ON Grace's blue hand gently brushing away soil, exposing a tangle of ROOT TENDRILS.

GRACE
See, right here where the roots of the two trees interact.

WIDER -- GRACE and NORM crouch among enormous octopoidal roots. She takes a tiny sample using a needle-like probe. Norm uses a digital DEVICE to scan the roots.

JAKE, bored, scouts ahead a few meters.

He comes to a GLADE filled with shoulder-high SPIRAL PLANTS called HELICORADIANS.

He BRUSHES one and SHTOONK! -- it SUCKS DOWN into a tube in the ground so quickly it seems to simply vanish.

Curious, Jake touches another -- SHTOONK! And another -- like popping balloons after a party. SHTOONK! SHTOONK! SHTOONK!

A chain reaction begins and the whole colony pulls down into the ground, REVEALING --

A HAMMERHEAD TITANOTHERE. Like a six-legged rhinoceros, but twice that size. Its massive, low-slung head has projections of bone giving it the look of a hammerhead shark.

Its baleful eyes lock onto him. Jake raises his rifle.

Grace, alerted by the creature's SNORTS, runs to where she can see the tableau. She presses her THROAT MIKE.

GRACE
Don't shoot. You'll piss it off.

The bull HAMMERHEAD bellows and lowers its 3 meter wide sledgehammer of a skull.

JAKE

It's already pissed off!

GRACE

Jake, that armor's too thick. Trust me.

Jake starts to back away. The hammerhead bellows again, pawing the earth.

GRACE

It's a territorial threat display. Do not run, or he'll charge.

JAKE

What do I do?

GRACE

Hold your ground!

The hammerhead SLASHES its head sideways, splintering saplings. It bellows again, lowers its head and CHARGES --

Jake SCREAMS at the top of his lungs, spreads his arms wide and runs straight at the thing.

It STOPS abruptly, with an oversized BLEAT.

ON JAKE -- amazed the gambit worked.

JAKE

Oh yeah! Who's bad?! That's right.

SOMETHING rises up behind him out of focus --

A THANATOR. The most awesome land predator the universe has ever conceived This thing could eat a T-rex and have the Alien for desert.

It is a black six-limbed panther from Hell, with an armored head and massive distensible jaws.

JAKE, unaware of the advancing thanator, is still bracing the hammerhead --

JAKE

That's what I'm talkin' about, bitch!

The bull wheels around, TRUMPETING in fear, and CRASHES away through splintering undergrowth.

JAKE

That's right motherf--

A guttural SNARL behind him. Jake spins in time to see --

THREE TONS of rippling thanator LAUNCH over him, landing between him and the hammerhead. The ground shakes.

The thanator emits an earsplitting ROAR, enraged that the hammerhead got away. It twists on itself, turning to face Jake, and bares its fangs with a lethal HISS.

JAKE

What about this one? Run, don't run?
What?

GRACE

Run. Definitely RUN!

Jake BOLTS as --

The thanator LEAPS after him and --

Jake launches himself between two large trunks, forcing the beast to claw its way around to the side while --

Jake scrambles up -- around -- over a tangle of roots and --

SK-RASH!! CLAWS SLASH the air behind him, EXPLODING bark off a trunk as -- JAKE wills himself forward in a frenzy. With rippling muscle the beast is airborne again, blacking out the sun but --

JAKE dives under a massive root system, and --

CRASH! Kindling rains around him as the beast tears into the root-trunks above him. Claws SLASH down next to him as he rolls and crawls -- Glistening jaws SMASH and SNAP against the barrier trunks, sending chunks of wood flying. It's spittle sprays across Jake, jaws inches away as --

He rolls onto his back, and FIRES his AR point blank but the rifle is SNATCHED out of his hands. The beast SCREECHES an ungodly WAIL of pain and rage and -- RIPS the ENTIRE TRUNK away. Jake scrambles to escape but --

GLISTENING JAWS lunge downward, SNAP SHUT and --

The creature rips Jake out of the tree, shaking him like a junkyard dog with a rabbit, only --

It has him by the BACKPACK, so Jake unlatches it and --

He FLIES FREE as the thanator crushes the pack with its teeth. Giving Jake a moment to sprint away, but --

With a hideous BELLOW the thanator crashes after him, splintering trees.

JAKE RUNS in a blur, dodging between trunks as a glistening black tornado shreds the forest behind him and --

He sees WATER ahead and DIVES OUTWARD with all his might --

The thanator's jaws SNAP SHUT inches behind him as he flies out into open space and --

JAKE SPLASHES down into a swiftly moving river.

The thanator LEAPS DOWN AFTER HIM, pursuing from rock to rock, its claws swiping like a grizzly fishing for salmon.

Jake ducks under as -- FWHOOSH! -- black claws SLASH past his face amid turbulent bubbles.

A WATERFALL ahead. Jake is swept over the falls, with the thanator SWIPING at him from a rock, just MISSING and -- Jake disappears down the throat of the thundering cataract.

EXT. RIVER BELOW FALLS - DAY

The water boils below the cataract. Jake's head bursts through the surface, and he gasps for breath.

He is carried along by the current, but manages to grab a limb on a fallen tree. He weakly pulls himself up, and just lies there gasping on the trunk.

Above him, on the cliff, the THANATOR BELLOWS, a roar which echoes across the jungle.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

JAKE, wet and bruised, crouches under a screen of giant leaves. He hacks manically at the end of a cut sapling with his knife, forming a crude but sharp tip.

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

TRACKING with Jake as he walks through the forest like it's a minefield, carrying his SPEAR white-knuckled. He is freaked and hyper-alert.

The trees here are a hundred meters high, blocking out the sky. A few pencil beams of sunlight filter down into the cyan gloom.

POV FROM ABOVE -- looking down through leaves we watch Jake move warily through the forest.

ECU -- TWO GOLDEN EYES, bright in the shadows.

DOWNANGLE as Jake passes under a tree limb. Invisible to him, draped on the limb like a leopard, is a striking NA'VI GIRL. She watches, only her eyes moving.

She is lithe as a cat, with a long neck, muscular shoulders, and nubile breasts. And she is devastatingly beautiful -- for a girl with a tail. In human age she would be 18. Her name is NEYTIRI(nay-Tee-ree).

Jake passes less than 2 meters beneath her, oblivious.

NEYTIRI rises soundlessly. In one fluid, sinuous movement she NOCKS an arrow to her BOW and DRAWS, aiming RIGHT AT JAKE. Utterly silent.

Below her Jake is totally unaware of the arrow aimed at his THROAT.

ON NEYTIRI as she follows him with the bow, muscles tensing for the shot --

-- and SOMETHING drifts down in front of her, F.G. She hesitates.

RACK FOCUS to the tip of the arrow -- where a single WOODSPRITE floats down to land on the arrow-head. Like a dandelion seed, but larger, the WOODSPRITE waves its silky CILIA, feather light, as it balances on the deadly point. It glows faintly in the dark shadows.

NEYTIRI frowns, puzzled, and LOWERS her bow slowly. The woodsprite WHIRLS away into the gloom.

CUT TO:

INT./EXT. SAMSON - SUNSET

GRACE and NORM peer down into the shadowed forest as TRUDY banks in a search pattern.

TRUDY (INTERCOM)
I'm going to have to call it, guys. We're not allowed to run night ops. Colonel's orders.

Grace looks to the west. The sun setting behind alien trees.

GRACE

Shit.

TRUDY

Sorry, Doc. He's just gonna have to hang on 'till morning.

GRACE

He's not going to make it till morning.

Grace stares into the dark forest as the Samson banks hard, thundering away toward the setting sun.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - NIGHT

LONG LENS-- POLYPHEMUS. The giant planet rises behind the black trees.

Jake's got a new problem. He sees shapes moving with liquid grace in the NIGHT shadows behind him. He is being stalked by a pack of VIPERWOLVES.

Jake catches only glimpses -- a glint of eyes, a slinking black movement -- then nothing. Darkness.

TIME CUT -- TIGHT ON Jake's hands as he knots his T-shirt around the butt end of the spear.

ANGLE ON THICK SAP trickling down a tree-trunk. Jake jams the makeshift torch into the sap, soaking the shirt with it.

A WATERPROOF MATCH from his survival kit lights the torch.

The torch creates a pool of light surrounded by pulsing, leaping shadows. Jake turns warily as he moves along the trail.

Behind him are several pairs of reflective green EYES. Another pair flanking him beside the trail. Black-on-black SHAPES which seem to flow like liquid.

He looks up -- sees one cross a limb overhead. Another on his opposite flank.

Then a hideous sound, like a hyena's psychotic LAUGH.

The VIPERWOLVES can run like a dog and climb like a monkey. They are hunting Jake from the ground and the trees.

JAKE RUNS by torch-light, on the edge of panic. He reaches a steep banked stream and -- without thinking -- runs across it on a horizontal trunk --

-- and STOPS DEAD on the other side. The torch illuminates GREEN EYES cutting ahead of him across the trail. The viperwolves have him encircled.

The psychotic BARKS become more intense as they signal each other, getting excited. ONE MAKES A RUN at him, angling on his legs from behind but --

JAKE WHIRLS, jamming the torch in its face. It yips and goes past, but ANOTHER moves in --

He jabs it with the business end of the spear and it SNARLS, retreating, baring its fangs.

Now half a dozen are circling him in the open, and he sees what he's up against. The VIPERWOLVES are six-limbed with shiny chitinous skin, their paws leathery BLACK HANDS. Intelligent eyes. Glistening black teeth in dead white gums.

Jake realizes that he is making his final stand. He whirls the torch in an arc, keeping them at bay --

And feels a rush of adrenaline. It goes through him like a lightning bolt and the fear is gone.

JAKE
(screaming)
I don't have all goddamn night! Come on!
Come on!

With snarls and a blur of motion THEY ATTACK.

Jake CRACKS the spear down on one, then SPINS as --

ANOTHER LEAPS at him and he plants the spear in it, striking true, but --

Its momentum wrenches it from his hands, and the torch goes flying. Left in semi-darkness, Jake draws his KNIFE as--

A WOLF LUNGES, sinking its teeth into his arm. He YELLS in pain and fury, SLASHING with the knife which -- CUTS deep into the beast's shoulder and it lets go.

JAKE SPRINTS, trying to escape, but a snarling viperwolf leaps, GRABBING him by the ankle with its fore-hand. Jake tears away, sprawling, SCRAMBLING to get up as --

THREE WOLVES charge at once. The nearest LEAPS at his throat just as --

THUNK!! -- an ARROW appears in its chest.

The wolf lands on him, already a dead weight. He pushes it off in time to see --

A BLUE AMAZON emerge from the trees, nock another arrow, draw and FIRE in one fluid motion. AN UNEARTHLY YOWL as another wolf falls.

NEYTIRI LEAPS right over Jake, and CRACKS her bow down on the skull of a circling wolf.

ANOTHER SPRINGS at her and she drops under its weight, but rolls, coming up on top of it with a knife in her hand.

Her knife FLASHES down, buried to the hilt in its chest.

SNARLING, a wounded wolf attacks Jake, and he KICKS it away, but --

It SPINS and leaps back onto him, and Jake barely catches its throat in time to keep the SNAPPING JAWS away from his face.

MEANWHILE Neytiri swings her bow in a big arc, CRACKING IT across the heads and shoulders of two remaining wolves.

NEYTIRI
Rrreeyaaah! Hyaaaah!!

The wolves slink and circle, yelping as the bow whistles past them. Finally they break and run, with Neytiri chasing and--

They bound away through the foliage as she SHOUTS after them--

NEYTIRI
Raaaarrrrr!

Jake has his adversary pinned and is choking it with all his weight. Finally it stops thrashing. Panting, he releases it and looks up at -- NEYTIRI. Her tail LASHES as she scans the forest, listening to the fading YELPS of the wolves. Satisfied the attack is over, she turns.

She regards him coldly for a second, then walks past him. Neytiri picks up the torch and extinguishes it in a stream.

JAKE
Wait, don't --

Jake blinks around at the darkness -- realizing he can still see. In fact, with the blinding torchlight gone, the forest is transformed.

The jungle has come alive with BIOLUMINESCENCE -- spots and patterns, ghosts and galaxies of blue-green light.

Jake scrambles to recover his spear. Neytiri kneels beside --

A DYING WOLF. It's CRIES are pitiful. It paws the air, trying to raise its head. She pulls her KNIFE from its chest.

NEYTIRI
(in Na'vi)
Forgive me, my brother.

She cuts its throat, ending the pitiful cries. She touches its head gently, regarding it with sadness.

Neytiri wipes the knife and returns it to the sheath at her waist. She crosses to another slain wolf and kneels, pulling the arrow from its heart.

JAKE
Look, um, I know you probably don't understand this. But -- thanks. Thank you. I owe you.

Neytiri ignores him, assuming a prayer posture over the dead animal.

NEYTIRI
(in Na'vi)
Forgive me. May your spirit run with the Great Mother.

JAKE
I would have been screwed if you hadn't come along --

She rises and walks away without looking at Jake.

JAKE
Hey, wait. Wait! Where you goin'?

He crashes through some plants, catching up to her.

JAKE
Slow down a second will you. I just want to thank you for killing those --

He makes the mistake of grasping her shoulder and --

WHACK! She WALLOPS him upside the head with her bow in a fierce backhand swing, laying him out flat.

He looks up to see a FURY standing over him. A Fury who speaks English -- accented, halting, angry English.

NEYTIRI

Don't thank! You don't thank for this!
This is sad. Very sad, only.

JAKE

Okay, I'm sorry. Whatever I did -- I'm sorry.

She gestures at the bodies of the viperwolves.

NEYTIRI

All this is your fault! They did not need to die.

JAKE

They attacked me. How'm I the bad guy here--

She silences him with the tip of her bow at his throat.

NEYTIRI

Your fault! You are like a baby, making noise, don't know what to do. You should not come here, all of you! You only come and make problems. Only.

Jake gets up, slowly, facing her.

JAKE

Okay, fine, you love your little forest friends. So why not just let them kill my ass? What's the thinking?

CU Neytiri -- looking away. Finally, reluctantly, her eyes MEET HIS for the first time -- a riveting gaze with those big gold orbs.

NEYTIRI

Why save you?

JAKE

Yes, why save me?

NEYTIRI

You have a strong heart. No fear.

She leans closer --

NEYTIRI

But stupid! Ignorant like a child!

She turns away, stalking off, but Jake goes after her.

TRACKING WITH Neytiri as she climbs nimbly along a huge ROOT.

WIDER as she trots with perfect balance along the root, which forms an elevated walkway.

Jake runs to catch up, realizing suddenly that he is far above the forest floor. Throughout the following they move through a GLOWING PHANTASMAGORICAL FOREST.

JAKE

If I'm so ignorant, maybe you should teach me.

NEYTIRI

Sky people can not learn. You do not See.

She leaps to another elevated root. Jake follows, surprised that he made it.

JAKE

Whooaa.

He runs to catch up with her easy jogging pace.

JAKE

Then teach me to "see."

She stops and he almost runs into her.

NEYTIRI

No one can teach you to See.

Then she turns and trots on.

EXT. GORGE - NIGHT

They run across the elevated root of an enormous tree -- a horizontal trunk big as an oak.

WIDE SHOT as they cross a DEEP GORGE. A waterfall shimmers silver in the Polyphemus-light. Vines hang down a hundred feet into the gorge, and among them swoop stingbats and other night flyers.

JAKE

Hey, slow down. Look, I think we just got off on the wrong foot and -- Jake looks down, suddenly aware of the height.

JAKE
--you just have to get to know me. I'm
Jake. Jake Sull--

A vine catches his spear and spins him off balance. He drops the spear and almost falls off the root.

JAKE
Whooaaa -- shit!

Neytiri catches him with one hand, gripping his bicep. He watches the spear cartwheel down to splash in the river.

She pulls him upright. Shouts at him in English and Na'vi.

JAKE
I need your help.

NEYTIRI
You should not be here.

JAKE
So take me with you.

NEYTIRI
No. You go back.

DOWN ANGLE FROM FAR ABOVE -- several WOODSPRITES float down through the trees. FOLLOW THEM as they descend silently toward Jake and Neytiri.

NEYTIRI, sensing a presence, looks up to see --

The WOODSPRITES, PULSING with purpose, float right towards Jake. They dance gently around his shoulders and head.

JAKE
(off her amazed look)
What?

More woodsprites gather around him. Several ALIGHT on him.

Jake holds still, knowing he should be afraid -- but somehow he's not. He spreads his arms. More sprites come, landing all over his arms, hands, body.

JAKE
What are they?

CU NEYTIRI -- reacting with a mixture of wonder and dread.

NEYTIRI
Atokirina'. Seeds of the Great Tree -- very pure spirits.

Jake -- now a pulsing, glowing, fluttering MASS OF LIGHT -- moves one hand slowly, not wanting to break the spell. He studies one of the sprites dancing on his palm until --

-- WHOOSSHH! the woodsprites whirl up and away, scattering into the darkness.

JAKE
 What was that all about?

Neytiri seems shaken. She seizes his hand and pulls him after her.

NEYTIRI
Come!

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - NIGHT

TRACKING WITH JAKE as he gazes about him in growing wonder.
 He touches leaves as he passes, watching the bioluminescence shiver through them.

Jake looks down as -- they cross a bed of purple MOSS which reacts to the pressure of their footsteps. Rings of green light, like ripples on a pond, expand outward from each footfall. Exploding rings of light where his feet touch down. Dream-like, surreal beauty.

WIDE ON THEM as they run over a large root, across a mirror-like POOL at the base of a WATERFALL.

Jake follows Neytiri, running along a raised root-trunk.

JAKE
 What's your name?

JAKE hears WHOOSH-WHOOSH and snaps a look as a BOLO flies at him, spinning end for end and --

SHWHAP!! -- tangles around his legs. He topples off the root and crashes into the foliage below.

JAKE untangles himself, getting up to run just as --

SEVERAL NA'VI RIDERS thunder toward him. They are riding DIREHORSES -- six-legged, armor-skinned alien Clydesdales.

We see that the riders' QUEUES are connected to the horses' long moth-like antennae -- a neural-link with which they can command the horse, leaving hands free for weapons.

The riders aim bows and spears at Jake as they approach. Jake turns to bolt, but --

NA'VI HUNTERS melt out of the shadows, weapons aimed -- blocking his retreat.

Neytiri drops to the ground next to Jake and confronts the LEAD RIDER. She shouts sharply in Na'vi --

NEYTIRI
(subtitled)
Tsu'tey, what are you doing?! He is my captive!

TSU'TEY(tsu-Tay)is young and powerfully built, with sculpted features and a proud jawline, piercing eyes. Tsu'tey swings off his mount with fluid grace.

TSU'TEY
(subtitled)
These demons are forbidden here. I will kill this one as a lesson to the others!

Tsu'tey draws his bow but Neytiri leaps between him and Jake, confronting him warrior to warrior.

NEYTIRI
(subtitled)
Stop! There has been a sign. This is a matter for the Tsahik.

Tsu'tey clenches his jaw with frustration -- frustration with her as much as the situation. He turns and angrily remounts his direhorse, barking a command to the HUNTERS.

TSU'TEY
(subtitled)
Bring him.

They grab Jake and haul him to his feet. Encircled by spears and bows, he is shoved forward along the trail, as Tsu'tey and the others ride ahead.

CUT TO:

EXT. HOMETREE - NIGHT

JAKE is hauled roughly toward Neytiri's village, which is sheltered inside one of the GREAT TREES. HOMETREE is 250 meters tall, with a trunk four times the diameter of the largest Sequoia, and a base of massive mangrove-pillars.

TSU'TEY rides inside the columns at the base of Hometree, shouting an ululating WARNING.

Jake is force-marched through the pillars into --

INT. COMMONS/HOMETREE - NIGHT

An open CENTRAL AREA. The villagers gather to see the arriving hunt party. We see the people of the tribe -- mothers with babies, old women, young hunters.

They gawk at the alien, expressions ranging from curiosity to outright hostility. The huge eyes of the children follow him.

Jake is amazed at the size of HOMETREE inside. By the light of the COOK-FIRES he can see up into a vast cylindrical gallery -- a living cathedral.

Clear membranes -- sturmbeest bladders -- filled with fluttering bio-luminescent insects, act as area lighting.

The central space is dominated by the SKULL of some enormous creature, mounted with much embellishment on a TOTEM. Standing in front of this, awaiting their approach, is -- EYTUKAN (AY-too-kahn), the Clan Leader. Eytukan has deeply chiselled features and a long chest mantle of THANATOR CLAWS. His normally stern features are clouded further by anger.

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

Why do you bring this creature here?

Neytiri addresses Eytukan in Na'vi.

NEYTIRI

(subtitled)

I was going to kill him, but there was a sign from Eywa.

He glowers at her as he responds, pointing at Jake.

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

I have said no dreamwalker will come here, to offend our home! His alien smell fills my nose

Neytiri stands her ground, answering in a respectful but not submissive tone.

NEYTIRI

(subtitled)

Father, many atokirina came to this alien.

JAKE

What's going on?

NEYTIRI

My father is deciding whether to kill you.

JAKE

Your father!?

(to Eytukan)

Uh, good to meet you, sir.

Jake steps forward, offering his hand, and the hunters JUMP to restrain him, shouting. But they all FREEZE as --

A commanding FEMALE VOICE echoes through the chamber.

MO'AT

(Na'vi)

Step back!

Everybody looks up.

MO'AT (MOH-aht) stands on the second level, looking down. She is a severe woman in her 50's. Her bearing is haughty, her expression friendly as a hanging-judge. Her outfit is elaborate, denoting her rank as CLAN MATRIARCH.

MO'AT

(subtitled)

I will look at this alien.

There is an expectant hush as Mo'at descends the helical core of Hometree, a kind of natural spiral staircase.

NEYTIRI

That is Mother. She is Tsahik -- the one who interprets the will of Eywa.

JAKE

Who's Eywa?

Neytiri kneels before her like an acolyte as Mo'at passes.

The villagers stare silently as the Matriarch circles slowly around Jake, examining his tail and the end of his queue.

MO'AT
(thick accent)
What are you called?

JAKE
Jake Sully.

She produces a long THORN between her fingertips. With a flourish she strikes his chest.

Jake flinches. RED BLOOD wells up and Mo'at rubs some between her fingertips. She tastes it.

MO'AT
Why did you come to us?

JAKE
I came to learn.

MO'AT
We have tried to teach other Sky People.
It is hard to fill a cup which is already full.

JAKE
My cup is empty, trust me. Just ask Doctor Augustine. I'm no scientist.

MO'AT
What are you?

JAKE
I don't know. I was a Marine -- uh, a warrior. Of the Jarhead clan.

TSU'TEY
(subtitled)
A warrior! I could kill him easily!

EYTUKAN
(subtitled)
No! This is the first warrior dreamwalker we have seen. We need to learn more about him.

JAKE
What's going on? What are they saying?

MO'AT
(to Neytiri, subtitled)
Daughter. You will teach him our way, to speak and walk as we do.

NEYTIRI looks shocked, then angry.

NEYTIRI
(subtitled)
Why me? That's not fair! I only--

MO'AT
(subtitled)
It is decided!

Neytiri subsides, turning to glare at Jake.

MO'AT
(to Jake)
My daughter will teach you our ways.
Learn well, Jakesully. We will see if your insanity can be cured.

She turns to Neytiri, her expression stern --

MO'AT
(subtitled)
He is your responsibility.

Neytiri nods, accepting, but she's not a happy camper. She grabs Jake's arm and pulls him roughly away.

JAKE
So it's all good, right? You and me --

NEYTIRI
Do not speak.

CUT TO:

INT. SECOND LEVEL/HOMETREE

LATER, Neytiri leads Jake up the spiral to the SECOND LEVEL. He now wears only a ratty LOINCLOTH. His wounds are bound with plant-fiber bandages.

THE ENTIRE CLAN is squatting at dinner in a huge circle. They stop talking and turn to gaze at Jake as he enters the circle.

JAKE
Don't get up.

Neytiri crosses the circle to the cook pit and returns with several large leaves heaped with food. She kneels next to Jake, placing the food in front of him almost DEFIANTLY.

JAKE
You never told me your name.

NEYTIRI
Neytiri te Ckaha Mo'at'ite.

JAKE
 Okay, again, a whole lot slower.

NEYTIRI
 (exaggerated slowness)
 Neytiri. Nay-TEE-ree.

Jake knows she's baiting him. He smiles in response.

JAKE
 Nay-TEE-ree. That's nice. Nay-TEE-ree.

ACROSS THE CIRCLE, Tsu'tey, Mo'at and Eytukan sit together, glancing up occasionally from their food to the stranger.

TSU'TEY
 (subtitled)
These aliens try to look like people, but they can't.

MO'AT
 (subtitled)
He seems dim to me. And his eyes are too small.

NEYTIRI motions for Jake to take portions from the serving leaves onto his own leaf.

JAKE
 Your mom likes me. I can tell.

MO'AT, watching Jake and Neytiri, leans over to Eytukan.

MO'AT
 (subtitled)
Neytiri will test this "warrior." Hey may learn nothing -- but we will learn much.

EYTUKAN
You speak truth. We must understand these Sky People if we are to drive them out.

Jake munches on a white shrimp-like thing.

JAKE
These rock. What are they?

NEYTIRI
 Teylu. You call beetle larvae.

Jake blanches. She heaps some more onto his leaf -- a CHALLENGE -- and Jake meets her eyes, takes a handful, and starts munching enthusiastically.

JAKE
That's some damn fine teylu. That's like grandma's teylu.

CU TSU'TEY, warily eyeing Jake --

TSU'TEY
(subtitled)
I say she will kill him.

CUT TO:

INT. THIRD LEVEL - NIGHT

The sleeping level -- families nesting in groups on woven hammocks the size of trampolines. The hunters sleep along SPOKES joining the inner trunk to the tree's outer shell.

Jake lies awake in a hammock, people rustling in the darkness around him. Neytiri is nearby, curled up like a little girl. She stares at him for a moment, then closes her eyes.

Jake watches the glowing bugs fluttering inside a night-light, a pulse of life energy. A strange peace spreads through him. He closes his eyes and --

CUT TO:

INT. LINK ROOM - NIGHT

GRACE is over JAKE in the Link, SLAPPING him, as Max and NORM hover.

GRACE
Come on back, kid, that's it.

JAKE
Wha --? Oh.

He looks around, blinking. Reality crashing in.

GRACE
Damn, you were dug in like a tick.
(she helps him sit up)
Is the avatar safe?

JAKE
(huge grin)
Yeah, Doc -- and you are not going to believe where I am.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMISSARY - MORNING

BREAKFAST the next day. The other drivers lean forward, hanging on Grace's re-telling of the tale.

GRACE

-- so the kid's out there one night and he's got the Queen Bitch herself offering him the spare room and the car keys. Unbelievable.

JAKE

It's not something you can teach.

Some of the other scientists clap Jake on the shoulders in congratulation.

MAX

That's awesome, Jake.

NORM chomps his bacon, fuming.

GRACE

(to Jake, getting serious)
For reasons I cannot fathom, the Omaticaya have chosen you. God help us all.

CUT TO:

INT. OPS CENTER - MORNING

JAKE has reported to SELFRIDGE and QUARITCH. Quaritch turns from gazing out at the wall of forest, displaying a feral grin.

QUARITCH

Jarhead clan?
(he laughs)
And that worked?

JAKE

(grinning)
Yeah. They want to study me. See if I can learn to be one of them.

QUARITCH

That's how you seize the initiative. I wish I had ten more like you.

SELFRRIDGE

Look, Sully -- find out what these blue monkeys want.

(MORE)

SELFRIDGE (cont'd)
We try to give them medicine and education. Roads! But no -- they like mud. I wouldn't care except -- Selfridge turns to a large 3D GRAPHIC DISPLAY, pointing. A road runs from Hell's Gate to a proposed new mine miles away.

SELFRIDGE
Their damn village is sitting right over the richest unobtainium deposit for a hundred clicks in any direction. Which sucks -- for them -- because they need to relocate.

JAKE
(taking that in)
Does Augustine know about this?

SELFRIDGE
Yeah, she does, and she's on the next ship back if she tries to cock-block me on it.

JAKE
So -- who talks them into moving?

QUARITCH
(turning)
Guess.

JAKE
What if they won't go?

QUARITCH
(icy)
I'm betting they will.

SELFRIDGE Killing the indigenous looks bad, but there's one thing shareholders hate more than bad press -- and that's a bad quarterly statement. Find me a carrot to get them to move, or it's going to have to be all stick.

Jake is shaken by the enormity of this new responsibility.

QUARITCH
You got three months. That's when the dozers get there.

JAKE
I'm on it.

CUT TO:

INT. BIO LAB - MORNING

JAKE pumps his chair across the lab, flanked by GRACE and NORM. Grace holds STEREO STILL PICTURES in front of him, one at a time -- images of clan members she has shot over the years -- a kind of flash card drill.

JAKE

Tsu'tey.

(next photo)

Mo'at.

(next photo)

Eytukan.

GRACE

He's the clan leader --

(indicating Mo'at)

-- but she's the spiritual leader. Like a shaman.

INT. LINK ROOM

The dialogue is continuous as they enter.

JAKE

Got it. So who's this Eywa?

NORM

Who's Eywa? Oh, only their deity. The Great Mother. The goddess made up of all living things. You'd know that if you had any training whatsoever.

He hauls himself from wheelchair to Link.

JAKE

Who's got a date with the chief's daughter?

GRACE

Knock it off. Jesus, it's like kindergarten around here.

As Jake settles into the soft embrace of the link, Grace inputs commands at the control station.

GRACE

Neytiri was my best student. She and her sister Silwanin. Just amazing girls.

JAKE

I didn't meet the sister.

GRACE
(quietly)
No, she's dead.
(turning to him)
Okay, let's go -- village life starts early.

MAX
Link is ready.

Grace lowers the bio-sensor array over Jake's chest.

GRACE
Don't do anything unusually stupid.

She closes the clamshell and we --

INT. HOMETREE/ THIRD LEVEL - DAY

CU JAKE'S AVATAR, blinking awake, staring up at --

HOMETREE, like a gothic cathedral overhead. Sunlight streams down through gaps in the towering vault.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMONS - DAY

JAKE walks among the villagers, who go about their daily tasks.

-- young girls sit together, weaving and SINGING. They look up as he passes, then go back to work.

--two men clean the fish they've caught.

-- a young mother pounds seeds into meal, while nursing an infant.

--children chase each other and climb like monkeys. One bold LITTLE GIRL runs up to Jake, stops -- staring -- then shrieks with laughter as she runs back to her playmates.

GRINNING, Jake turns to see NEYTIRI cantering toward him on a DIREHORSE. She leads a second horse, an old sway-backed MARE. His grin drops.

EXT. RIVER NEAR HOMETREE - DAY

JAKE nervously grips the surcingle of the mare. Neytiri holds its nose-ring while Jake clumsily mounts.

Jake bends one of its ANTENNAE down to the tip of his queue.
He hesitantly touches them together and --

TIGHT SHOT -- the tendrils INTERWEAVE.

Jake's PUPILS DILATE and his mouth drops open. The horse's eyes also go wide and it HONKS nervously. Neytiri touches her fingertips to the neural interface.

NEYTIRI

This is shahaylu -- the bond. Feel her heartbeat, her breath. Feel her strong legs.

Jake closes his eyes, nodding. One with the horse.

TSU'TEY and another young hunter come out of the forest leading TWO DIREHORSES. The magnificent animals drink from the edge of the pool. Tsu'tey watches Jake's riding lesson with disdain.

NEYTIRI

You may tell her what to do --
(she touches her head)
-- inside. For now, say where to go.

JAKE

Forward.

The horse LAUNCHES into a GALLOP. Jake flops around, with no idea how to sit the animal, and is promptly THROWN OFF. He lands painfully in the mud.

He gets up, brushing mud off knees and ass, as Neytiri leads the horse back to him.

NEYTIRI

Again.

SERIES OF JUMP CUTS -- Jake falls off the horse in various ways, seemingly landing harder each time.

ON JAKE, face down in the mud of the riverbank. He painfully rises to hands and knees. Which is when he sees -- TSU'TEY and another HUNTER thundering across the shallow river on their direhorses. Spray blasts up from their hooves.

Jake stands, covered in mud, as Tsu'tey stops his horse next to him, looking down with disdain.

TSU'TEY

You should go away.

JAKE
 (to Neytiri)
 I knew this guy could speak English.

Tsu'tey turns to Neytiri, who is leading the old mare back.

TSU'TEY
 (subtitled)
This alien will learn nothing. A rock Sees more.

She sighs in agreement. Tsu'tey and the other hunter wheel their horses around and THUNDER OFF into the woods.

NEYTIRI gestures to Jake's horse.

NEYTIRI
Again.

CUT TO:

OPS CENTER - NIGHT

Grouped around a table are JAKE, COLONEL QUARITCH, SELFRIDGE and few ENGINEERS and OFFICERS. Jake is talking them through plans he's made of Hometree's inner structure.

JAKE
 You've got outer columns, then a secondary ring here, and an inner ring. Then a core structure, it's like a spiral, that's how they move up and down.

QUARITCH
 I'm going to need accurate scans of all these columns.

JAKE
 Roger that.

ANGLE ON MAX, at the stairwell. He's been watching Jake talking rapidly to Quaritch, but can't hear him. Frowning, he backs away, down the stairs.

CUT TO:

INT. BIO LAB - DAY

JAKE, GRACE and NORM are packing science gear and supplies.

GRACE
 I'm not about to let Quaritch and Selfridge micro-manage this thing.
 (she looks pointedly at Jake)
 We're going up into the mountains.
 (MORE)

GRACE (cont'd)
 There's a mobile link up at Site 26 that we can work out of.

NORM
 The Hallelujah Mountains?

GRACE
 That's right.

NORM
 Yesssss!
 (off Jake's look)
 The legendary Floating Mountains of Pandora? Heard of them?

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - AERIAL - DAY

A SAMSON THUNDERS over the rainforest, climbing into the mist-shrouded mountains.

In the SEALED COCKPIT, Norm is up front, sitting left seat so Trudy can talk him through the flight controls. Jake and Grace are behind them, in the jump-seats.

Grace and Norm's UNCONSCIOUS AVATARS ride in the open back compartment.

TRUDY
 It only takes tiny inputs. Here, put your hand on the cyclic --

She points to the stick between her knees. Norm hesitantly reaches over and rests his hand on hers.

TRUDY
 Feel how small the moves are? You barely have to think it, and the aircraft reacts.

ON NORM -- reacting to tiny inputs from the hot lady-pilot.

THE SAMSON is dwarfed by enormous ARCHES OF ROCK.

GRACE
 See these magnetic formations. We're getting close.

TRUDY
Yeah we are. Look at my instruments.

On the dash, many of the displays are fritzing out.

GRACE

Yup. We're in the flux vortex.

AHEAD, a cloud bank parts, revealing --

THE HALLELUJAH MOUNTAINS. Right in front of them.

NORM

Oh. My. God.

Jake leans forward between the seatbacks for a good look out the front canopy.

JAKE'S POV -- enormous islands of rock are hovering a half mile above the ground. They are overgrown with rainforest, and straggly beards of vines hang down beneath them. Waterfalls stream down the sides and dissolve into spray at the bottom.

ON JAKE, staring in amazement. It is both awe-inspiring and disturbing.

Trudy turns, grinning at Jake.

TRUDY

You should see your face.

WIDE AERIAL -- the Samson is tiny as it approaches the floating islands of rock. An archipelago among the clouds, they cast great shadows over the forested slopes below.

JAKE (V.O.)

Yeah, so what does hold them up? Grace explained it to me -- some kind of maglev effect because unobtanium is a superconductor, or something. At least somebody understands it. Just not me.

CUT TO:

EXT. SITE 26 - DAY

A remote RESEARCH STATION -- TWO SHACKS and a few clusters of instruments perched on a promontory near the Hallelujah Mountains. The shacks are AIRLIFT MODULES the size of buses.

THE SAMSON LANDS, beating the grass with its rotor-wash. The humans hop out, wearing MASKS.

They move toward the Shack, taking in the spectacular panorama.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK - DAY

NORM and TRUDY assist JAKE with his chair as they cycle in through the AIRLOCK. GRACE is already inside, starting the GENNY. She turns on the lights and equipment.

There are 4 bunks, a clutter of science gear, and -- through a short connecting corridor -- THREE LINK UNITS in the second module.

As Grace powers up the Link equipment, Jake stops to look at STEREO STILL PICTURES which are taped and tacked up around her workstation.

CLOSE ON PICTURES -- Grace posing at the school with various grinning children. There is one of her with two lanky girls, a younger Neytiri and an older girl who looks much like her.

GRACE

Jake, take number two, it's the least glitchy. Norm, I need you to operate Jake's link.

Norm glares at Jake as he passes.

JAKE

Hey. You got a problem?

Norm turns to Grace, his frustration boiling over.

NORM

I trained three years for this mission.
I speak the language fluently.
(he points at Jake)
He falls off the frickin' turnip truck and all of a sudden he's cultural ambassador!?

GRACE

It's not our choice, Norm.

He glowers at Jake.

NORM

Yeah, well I didn't come out here to wash the dishes while you're on some interspecies booty call.

He stalks off.

GRACE

He can't go far.

She points to Jake's link.

GRACE
Let's get you in.

CUT TO:

INT./EXT. HOMETREE - BANSHEE EYRIE

LOOKING DOWN the central shaft of Hometree, 80 meters to the ground. Villagers are ant-like.

Jake tries to keep up with Neytiri as she leaps up the core trunk like a lemur. He climbs the last section, arriving out of breath beside her. She leads him OUTSIDE, onto --

A large branch. Through gaps in the foliage Jake can see other Great Trees scattered across the landscape, like enormous umbrellas above the rainforest.

NEYTIRI strides out across the branch toward some kind of STRUCTURE -- a WEB made of thick woven fiber. DARK SHAPES clinging to it stir with a leathery RUSTLING SOUND.

Neytiri makes a series of TRILLS and CLICKS. One of the shapes MOVES toward them, emerging into a shaft of sunlight.

A huge MOUNTAIN BANSHEE. Much larger than the forest banshees, this thing is taller than a Na'vi with a 10 meter wingspan. A leathery FWHOOOP, like the crack of sails, as it alights on the branch right in front of her.

JAKE
Holy shit.

NEYTIRI
Do not look in her eye.

Neytiri feeds it a large scrap of meat, which it SNATCHES and gulps down. She murmurs to it and strokes its NECK.

It lets out a signature SHRIEK, and some of the others in the shadows nearby answer.

Neytiri flip-catches her queue and gently connects it to the Banshee's ANTENNA. It shivers and stretches its wings as the neural connection is made.

NEYTIRI
Ikran is not horse. Once shahaylu is made, ikran will fly with only one Hunter in the whole life.

She climbs smoothly onto the animal's back.

NEYTIRI

To become taronyu -- Hunter -- you must choose your own ikran. And he must choose you.

JAKE

When?

NEYTIRI

When you are ready.

The BANSHEE shivers with anticipation.

NEYTIRI

Heeyaaaahh!

Jake ducks as the great wings EXPLODE OPEN and the banshee DROPS off the branch. It swoops down across the forest canopy, banks hard, lets out a CRY and beats its wings in a power climb.

Completing the bank, Neytiri directs the banshee into a close SWOOPING FLYBY, and Jake instinctively ducks.

ON NEYTIRI -- flying in perfect fusion with her winged mount, the rainforest rolling beneath her.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK - NIGHT/EXT

STEREO VIDEO-LOG IMAGE -- Jake has just switched on the camera. He looks tired.

JAKE

Do I have to do this? I need some rack.

GRACE, behind him, looks up from her MICROSCOPE, scowling.

GRACE

No -- now, when it's fresh.

JAKE

Yeah, yeah.

(to camera)

The days are starting to blur together.
The language is a bitch, but I figure it's like field-stripping a weapon.
Repetition.

THIS THROWS US INTO A TEACHING MONTAGE:

JAKE AND NEYTIRI kneel together inside Hometree. Neytiri touches her lips with her fingertips.

JAKE

Seyri.

She touches her nose, her ears, her eyes in quick sequence.

JAKE

Ontu, mikyun, nari.

NEYTIRI stands next to him, correcting his position as he draws a longbow.

BARKING commands, she SMACKS him on the shoulder, then the elbow, repositioning him roughly.

JAKE (V.O.)

Neytiri thinks I'm some kind of retard.

HUMAN JAKE emerges from the LINK to see --

TRUDY and NORM caught IN THE ACT on Norm's bunk. Norm blushes and Trudy waves, pulling the blanket over their heads.

JAKE (V.O.)

Norm's attitude has improved lately.

NORM works with JAKE at the small table in the SHACK kitchen.

NORM

Thank you?

JAKE

Ireiyo.

Norm comically exaggerates the pronunciation.

NORM

Irrrreiyo. Irrrreiyo. You've gotta roll the R, r-r-r-oll it.

Norm makes Jake repeat the word, getting more frustrated.

JAKE (V.O.)

It's good he's back on board, but he thinks I'm a retard too.

TRACKING WITH JAKE'S FEET as he runs over rocks, leaping onto a thick root, running on across the rough bark.

JAKE (V.O.)

My feet are getting tougher. I can run farther every day.

Neytiri leads him along a massive root, and soon they are running 30 meters above the ground.

He sprints with her through the trees, trying to keep up. She CLIMBS and LEAPS with the ease of a spider monkey.

JAKE (V.O.)

I have to trust my body to know what to do. With Neytiri it's learn fast or die.

Neytiri LEAPS off into space, falling, falling until --

She catches an enormous palm leaf and, gripping it, allows its DROOP to slow her fall. She lets go, plummeting, and catches another.

JAKE FOLLOWS in a leap of faith. THE CAMERA PLUNGES with him, from leaf to leaf, down and down in a dizzying kinetic rush.

He drops down from the last leaf, landing next to her on a game trail. He is exhilarated to still be alive.

Neytiri is surprised -- that he followed. That he lived.

TIGHT ON HUMAN JAKE, in the shack. Thinking as he looks at the pictures of Grace with the laughing kids at the school.

IN THE COMMONS -- AVATAR NORM formally greets MO'AT. The Matriarch looks on as GRACE kneels to hug children she knows. Grace's eyes sparkle as she chats with them in Na'vi.

JAKE (V.O.)

I sweet-talked Mo'at into giving Norm and Grace a hall pass. Now Grace even makes me coffee before link every morning.

Grace looks up to see Neytiri approaching. It is an awkward moment between them. Grace makes the formal gesture of greeting.

GRACE

(Na'vi, subtitled)

I See you, Neytiri Mo'at'ite.

NEYTIRI

I See you, Doctor Grace Augustine.

ANOTHER DAY -- NEYTIRI kneels on a game trail, pointing out the tracks in the mud to Jake. She touches the edges of the plants around her, and sniffs the air.

JAKE (V.O.)
I'm learning to read the trails, the tracks at the water-hole, the tiniest scents and sounds.

JAKE AND NEYTIRI watch through a screen of leaves as --

A HERD of huge, armored STURMBEEST walks through the shallows of a lake. In the middle of the herd, the babies are sheltered from predators among their parents' legs.

One of the BULLS trumpets, and a flock of TETRAPTERONS takes flight, an explosion of purple wings.

Jake stares at the strange and wild alien tableau.

ANOTHER PLACE -- NEYTIRI STANDS utterly still, except for her ears, which move with a life of their own. Her eyes are closed. She speaks very softly to Jake --

NEYTIRI
When you hear nothing, you will hear everything. When you see nothing, you will See everything.

JAKE (V.O.)
Sometimes I have no idea what she's talking about.

Jake and Neytiri creep quietly, stalking a large male HEXAPEDE -- a six legged deer-like creature.

Jake expertly nocks an arrow and draws his bow as Neytiri watches. He takes a bead on the hexapede -- tracks it for a beat with the drawn bow, then RELAXES his arm. Zen archery.

JAKE (V.O.)
It's been a month and I'm still not allowed to make a kill. She says the forest hasn't given permission.

OMIITED

NEYTIRI and JAKE crawl through the undergrowth. She points and he parts some leaves to see --

A MOTHER VIPERWOLF bringing meat to her cubs, which frisk around her legs. She licks their faces.

JAKE (V.O.)
There's a lot of crap like that. She's always going on about the flow of energy-- the spirits of the animals and what not --

VIDEO-LOG IMAGE -- HUMAN JAKE talks into the lens. He's changing -- un-shaven, cheeks hollow. Pale.

JAKE
(smirking)
I just hope this treehugger shit isn't on the final.

Visible behind him, Grace is hunched over her samples.

GRACE
(without looking up)
This isn't just about eye-hand coordination out there. You need to listen to what she says. Try to see the forest through their eyes.

JAKE
Excuse me -- this is my video-log here,
okay?

NEYTIRI AND JAKE move through the NIGHT FOREST, surrounded by galaxies of shimmering bioluminescence. They move gracefully, soundlessly -- two forest spirits.

CU JAKE -- the pupils of his cat eyes dilated. The night forest floods his brain with its million bio-sources.

NIGHT SHOT, from overhead -- Jake and Neytiri bow-fishing from a dugout canoe over huge glowing ANEMONES at the bottom of a pool.

A large fish swims silhouetted against the pastel glow. ZAP! Jake drills it. He holds up the fish, triumphantly.

ANOTHER DAY -- Neytiri stands close behind Jake, adjusting his position as he draws his bow. Only now her hands are GENTLE as they move on his arms, his shoulders.

Aware of her touch, Jake's focus is broken. Their eyes meet, and she pulls away quickly.

NIGHT -- they enter a CLEARING filled with chest-high ferns. Neytiri signals him to move slowly. They approach a creature on one of the ferns. An ugly, stick-like LIZARD-THING perched on a frond. As he approaches --

SNAP! A long spine whips in a circle, unfurling a bioluminescent membrane -- a disk a meter across, opening like a Chinese fan. It FLIES OFF, a living Frisbee.

THE FAN LIZARD FLOATS across the clearing.

Neytiri plunges among the ferns with a SHARP CRY. An EXPLOSION OF COLOR as dozens of FAN LIZARDS take flight.

Grinning widely, she hops around like a little girl, until they are all flying. And for the first time, she is unguarded and joyful, totally herself with him.

INSIDE THE LINK -- Jake's eyes open in the darkness. He doesn't know where he is. He weakly pushes open the lid, blinking at the light.

JAKE (V.O.)
Everything is backwards now. Like out there is the true world, and in here is the dream.

TIGHT ON AVATAR JAKE silently drawing his bow, his eyes focused in intense concentration. A beat -- the arrow flies.

JAKE PULLS the arrow from the twitching body of a hexapede. He dispatches it with his knife.

He speaks haltingly, but with feeling, in Na'vi.

JAKE
 (Na'vi)
I See you Brother, and thank you. Your spirit goes with Eywa, your body stays behind to become part of the People.

NEYTIRI watches with approval.

NEYTIRI
 A clean kill. You are ready.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK - NIGHT

Lying in the link, Jake looks exhausted, pale, thin. Norm helps Grace get him to his chair.

GRACE
 You're still losing weight. Here --

She hands him a microwaved burrito. He looks at the now alien food. Bites into it without enthusiasm.

JAKE
 I made a kill today. We ate it. I know where that meal came from.

GRACE

Other body. You need to take care of this body.

JAKE

Yeah yeah.

GRACE

Jake, I'm serious -- you look like crap. You're burning too hard.

Jake takes the cigarette out of her mouth and stubs it out.

JAKE

Get rid of this shit, then you can lecture me.

GRACE

I'm telling you, as your boss and someone who might even consider being a friend someday, to take some down time.

JAKE

Not now. Tomorrow we leave for Iknimaya.

GRACE walks past Jake, starts making herself coffee.

GRACE

Yeah -- you're gonna go ride a banshee. Or die trying.

JAKE

That's right, Grace. This is what I've been working for.

GRACE

And this is your check up from the neck up, Marine. You're getting in way too deep.

(she turns away)

Trust me, I learned the hard way.

Jake scans the pictures tacked up around Grace's workstation.

JAKE

What did happen at the school?

GRACE looks up from making coffee. Her eyes track across the pictures of the laughing children. Finally --

GRACE

Neytiri's sister -- Sylwanin -- stopped coming to school. She was angry about the clear-cutting.

GRACE sips her coffee, grimaces at the taste.

GRACE

One day, she and a couple of other young hunters came running in, all painted up -- they'd set a bulldozer on fire -- I guess they thought I could protect them.

GRACE'S voice stays oddly CALM as he tells this terrible story, while getting MILK out of the refrigerator.

GRACE

The troopers pursued them to the schoolhouse.

MACRO as she pours the milk -- her hand is SHAKING.

GRACE

They killed Sylwanin in the doorway. Right in front of Neytiri. Then shot the others.

(mildly)

I got most of the kids out, before they shot me.

JAKE

Jesus.

GRACE

Yeah.

Jake realizes that Grace is on the verge of tears and desperately trying to hide it.

GRACE

A scientist stays objective -- we can not be ruled by emotion. But I poured ten years of my life into that school. They called me sa'atenuk. Mother.

(turning to him)

That kind of pain reaches back through the link.

GRACE sits down at the table, looks intently at Jake.

GRACE

It's a job. Learn what you can -- but don't get attached.

GRACE looks at him with real PAIN in her eyes.

GRACE

It's not our world, Jake. And we can't stop what's coming.

CUT TO:

EXT. MOUNTAIN TRAIL - DAY

TSU'TEY leads three direhorse riders up the trail -- two TEENAGE HUNTERS and JAKE, who's riding well enough to keep up. The horses' hooves CLOP right next to a sheer drop into a misty canyon.

JAKE (V.O.)

Iknimaya translates roughly as stairway to heaven. It's the test every young hunter has to pass.

TSU'TEY signals a stop.

UP-SLOPE AHEAD is an astounding formation. Thick vine-like trees have trapped large FLOATING BOULDERS of UNOBTANIUM in their gnarled grip.

A hundred meters above them more boulders are WOVEN into the twisted vine-trunks. This is some sort of freak natural occurrence -- like the mythical beanstalk, going up into the clouds.

There is a THUNDERING ROAR, like an artillery barrage, and the ground SHAKES. Jake looks around at --

One of the FLOATING MOUNTAINS grinding against the flank of a nearby mesa. A huge rockfall is set loose. The mountain is drifting toward them, filling half the sky.

The Hunters dismount.

JAKE looks up at the beanstalk going into the clouds. He turns to Tsu'tey, who is checking the young hunters' gear.

JAKE

We doin' this?

Jake leaps to catch up as Tsu'tey and the hunters swarm up the base of the beanstalk.

CUT TO:

EXT. BEANSTALK - DAY

200 METERS up the BEANSTALK, the hunters nimbly climb along the vine-trunks. They clamber over one of the unobtainium BOULDERS which is lifting this incredible tree.

JAKE looks down -- the massive trunk dwindles to the size of a licorice stick. A chunk breaks off a boulder as he climbs over it -- it floats upward.

They reach the upper branches of the beanstalk. Above them, the craggy underbelly of MONS Veritatis looms. Spray from one of the waterfalls hits them.

Some of the HANGING VINES are brushing over the upper branches of the beanstalk with a crackling hiss.

One by one the hunters grab onto vines as they pass.

Jake shrugs and leaps to a passing vine, his feet dangling over nothingness. They climb toward the floating islands above.

EXT. MONS VERITATIS - DAY

TINY FIGURES cross a causeway of vines connecting a small island of unobtainium to the main mass of Mons Veritatis.

WIDE SHOT looking down a rock face bigger than Half Dome -- the sheer side of Mons Veritatis.

Banshees circle next to the cliffs, flashing in shafts of sunlight. Waterfalls dissolve into nothingness below.

EXT. GROTTTO/BANSHEE ROOKERY - DAY

A waterfall THUNDERS down into the void like a faucet of the gods. Jake looks down the sheer cliff at the world far below -- a view from Olympus.

A SHRIEK and the THWAP THWAP of leathery wings -- NEYTIRI'S BANSHEE swoops in to perch at the edge of the grotto. She dismounts and, like a falconer, covers its eyes with a woven HOOD. It waits, docile, as --

She joins Jake and the hunter party. Tsu'tey leads them through the cave until they emerge onto a CLIFF FACE. And Jake sees --

The BANSHEE ROOKERY. HUNDREDS of banshees huddle on rock outcroppings as far as the eye can see. They cling to the walls with the fore-claws on their wings, or perch on ledges.

TSU'TEY

Jakesully will go first.

Tsu'tey smirks at Jake, a challenge in his eyes. The two teenage Hunters are scared but trying to act tough.

Tsu'tey scowls when Neytiri leads Jake out onto the ledge.

NEYTIRI

(whispering)

Now you choose your ikran. This you must feel -- inside. If he also chooses you, move quick, like I showed. You will have one chance.

JAKE

How will I know if he chooses me?

NEYTIRI

He will try to kill you.

JAKE

Outstanding.

Out of sight of Tsu'tey, Neytiri takes his hand and squeezes it. Jake feels a rush of emotion, but she breaks away like it didn't happen. He is on his own, on the ledge with --

The BANSHEES. They eye him as he approaches. Several SHRIEK and take flight. Others flap their wings and yawn, showing rows of fangs, in a threat display.

Jake unrolls a weighted leather strap, like a one-ended BOLO.

A LARGE MALE spreads enormous wings, SHRIEKS, and glares straight at him.

Jake looks directly into its eyes -- and strides toward it.

JAKE

Let's dance.

The challenged banshee HISSES and leaps at him, jaws wide as--

Jake times the lunge, swinging the bolo, feinting and then slipping aside as the banshee's jaws miss him, SNAPPING SHUT.

Jake WHAPS the bolo across its snout. The weighted thong whips twice around its long jaws, tying them shut. A MUFFLED SCREAM and it SLASHES at his stomach with razor talons but -- Jake is already leaping, over the talons and tackling the banshee around the neck. It topples on its side, and he SWARMS IT -- arms around its thrashing head.

Jake grabs its whip-like antenna and brings it toward his queue but --

The bony head SLAMS sideways, and BAM! -- clocks him right in the face, almost knocking him out and --

IT WRITHES, flinging him to the ground. He slides on the rock and almost goes over the edge as -- NEYTIRI gasps. Tsu'tey laughs and yells mockingly.

The bolo is coming loose as the creature shakes its head, way pissed off now, but --

Jake scrambles up and leaps straight at it. Claws rake his leg but he gets his arms around its head and CLAMPS DOWN HARD. They flop to the ground and he scrambles on top, pinning it and --

Grabs its whipping antenna, locks it under his arm, and jams the end of his queue into it. They FUSE together and --

The banshee stops struggling. It lies there panting. They are locked together, literally eye to eye.

JAKE

That's right! You're mine.

ECU BANSHEE -- the pupil like a deep black well.

Jake relaxes his grip and slowly, warily, slides his leg over the creature's back.

Neytiri runs to him.

NEYTIRI

First flight seals the bond. You cannot wait.

Jake sits astride the creature, feeling its power. He grips a hank of the beast's main, and --

JAKE

Heeeyyyaaaah!

THWAP! THWAP! The banshee is off like a shot. Jake SCREAMS as they PLUMMET off the cliff -- the banshee WAILS and --

They fall together, spiralling out of control, and he is almost tossed lose. The thing is SQUAWKING and SHRIEKING so much he can't think.

JAKE
Shut the hell up!!

It does.

JAKE
Level out! Fly straight!

It levels out. Jake cocks his head, only thinking "bank left" and the animal complies. He settles the banshee into an easy loping beat of its huge wings, while he catches his breath.

NEYTIRI'S BANSHEE falls into formation with him. She signals "follow me" and DIVES.

Jake guides his banshee clumsily after her. Neytiri's banshee moves with precise movements of its wingtips, while Jake's wobbles and dips, almost falling out of the sky.

THE CAMERA SWOOPS after them as Neytiri leads an arcing DIVE around the flank of Mons Veritatis. The scenery is stunning. They pass waterfalls and swoop between hanging vines.

Neytiri leads Jake in a sharp bank, skimming close to the cliffs. They punch through streamers of cloud and emerge into sunlight.

Jake is getting the hang of it. He jinks left, then right, then dives, tucking himself tight against the animal's back. He's reckless, fearless. Half in control and LOVING IT.

Neytiri dives next to him as he lets out a long WHOOP of joy.
CUT TO:

INT./EXT. GROTTTO/MONS VERITATIS - DAY

FLIGHT MONTAGE:

NEYTIRI squats with Jake, using her hands to explain flight principles like one fighter pilot to another.

LOOKING DOWN a sheer cliff. SWOOOSH! Jake and Neytiri dive their mounts STRAIGHT DOWN PAST CAMERA, pulling out and soaring into a series of aerobatic turns.

JAKE (V.O.)
I may not be much of a horse guy. But I was born to do this.

THEY FLY in close formation with TSU'TEY and the young HUNTERS, 5 banshees flashing through scarves of mist.

ANOTHER DAY. Jake dives, playing hide and seek with Neytiri among the clouds. They are wild and free in a wild world. She grins and banks hard, diving -- catch me if you can. He DIVES after her.

IN THE GROTTO, by firelight, JAKE'S BANSHEE snaps at a piece of meat which he playfully pulls back. He's teaching it to take the food more slowly. He strokes its long head.

TSU'TEY is nearby with the young hunters. He eyes Jake with frustrated hostility.

ANOTHER DAY -- Jake and Neytiri fly abreast, soaring easily. She points and Jake sees --

A BIZARRE GEOLOGICAL FORMATION. Arches of magnetic rock form rainbows of stone above a deep CALDERA. In the center of the caldera is a single, enormous WILLOW TREE, gnarled and ancient. This, we will be told, is THE WELL OF SOULS.

CUT TO:

EXT. RIDGE

JAKE flies with Neytiri along a forested ridge. She is teaching him to hunt from his banshee. They carry their bows at the ready, scanning below them for prey.

A HUGE SHADOW covers him and Neytiri SHOUTS a warning. Jake looks up to see --

A LEONOPTERYX in a delta-dive, whistling straight at him.

Like a banshee, only several times larger, it is the king predator of the air: the GREAT LEONOPTERYX. Striped scarlet, yellow and black, with a midnight blue crested head -- it is both gorgeous and terrifying.

The hunter has become the prey. JAKE snap-rolls and dives toward the forest canopy. He plummets into the gloom as -- K-CRASH -- the leonopteryx tears through foliage, following him down, both diving like missiles and --

JAKE yanks into a hair-pin bank, right through a gap between two huge branches --

Forcing the leonopteryx to brake with a loud FWOOSH of wings. It banks away with a frustrated SHRIEK. Two flaps of its mighty wings and it is gone, back above the canopy.

CLOSE ON THE LEONOPTERYX, as its fanged mouth opens in a bloodcurdling SCREECH which echoes among the mountains. The lord of its domain.

ON JAKE, shaken. Neytiri flies up, her expression the Na'vi equivalent of Oh my God. A beat -- they both crack up.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK - NIGHT

Jake ponders images Grace has called up at her workstation-- science graphics of the Leonopteryx. Trudy and Norm are crowded around as well.

GRACE

The Great Leonopteryx is the apex aerial predator. Not only rare, but the sightings tend not to get reported.

Trudy makes a clicking motion with her thumb.

TRUDY

There usually isn't time to key the mike.

JAKE

The People call it Toruk.

NORM

(translating)
Last Shadow.

JAKE

Last one you ever see.

TRUDY

I saw one take out a gunship once --
WHAM! Total frickin' yard sale. Ate the crew like peanuts.

TIME CUT -- Grace is scanning through images and Jake stops her on one -- a 3D aerial shot of the strange arched formation.

JAKE

That's it.

GRACE

Vitraya Ramunong -- The Well of Souls.
It's their most sacred place.

She moves the virtual camera, and we seem to fly around the Well of Souls, catching only a glimpse of the interior.

GRACE

Something big is going on in there, biologically. I'd die to get samples, but outsiders are strictly forbidden.

TIME CUT -- Jake looks through the pressure window at HUMAN GRACE and NORM outside. Wearing masks, they are taking readings from some time-series experiments Grace has set up.

As TRUDY watches, JAKE works fast to download Grace's images of the Well of Souls onto a memory chip.

TRUDY

They're coming back.

Jake pulls the chip, then hesitates. Torn by what he is doing.

TRUDY

If you don't give him something, he's gonna shut us down.

He hands her the chip and she slips it into a pocket of her flight-suit just as Grace and Norm enter from the airlock.

JAKE

Hey, guys.

CUT TO:

INT. HOMETREE - NIGHT

JAKE STARES up at the TOTEM SKULL, which we now recognize as that of a GREAT LEONOPTERYX. NEYTIRI watches as he reaches up to touch the tall indigo crest.

NEYTIRI

My grandfather's grandfather was Toruk
Macto -- Rider of Last Shadow. Toruk chose him. It has only happened five times since the time of the First Songs.

JAKE

That's a long time.

Neytiri takes his hand, because that's what the Na'vi do when they're telling you something important.

NEYTIRI

Toruk Macto was mighty -- he brought the clans together in a time of great sorrow.
All Na'vi people know this story.

PUSH IN SLOWLY on the skull totem, then --

CUT TO:

EXT. RIVER BED - DAY

JAKE, NEYTIRI and other FLYING HUNTERS swoop low above a HERD OF STURMBEEST -- a rapids of thundering muscle. Dust rises from this living river like steam from a python's back.

TRACKING WITH the herd. A HUNTER appears in FG, astride a direhorse at full gallop. The sight is breathtaking. He hurls a 3 meter spear and one of the sturmbeest CRASHES down, flipping twice from momentum.

JAKE ROLLS IN like a fighter jet, his banshee screaming. He draws and fires his bow. The arrow strikes true, in the plexus between the armored shoulders and --

THE BEAST crashes to the ground. Skids to a stop in a cloud of dust.

NEYTIRI swoops in next to Jake, arms raised and grinning wolfishly.

CU TSU'TEY, banking around Jake's kill. Jake looks up, and Tsu'tey SALUTES in grudging admiration.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMONS/HOMETREE - NIGHT

The central space is lit by a BONFIRE, around which the HUNT FESTIVAL is in full swing. Wild dancing. People gnawing on massive sturmbeest ribs. A bowl of some kava-like intoxicant is passed around.

NEYTIRI dances in a flowing costume as the BANSHEE SPIRIT. NORM is dancing seductively with his own tail.

JAKE, surrounded by young hunters, acts out the leonopteryx attack with his hands. The leaping fire-light plays across the eye sockets of the TORUK SKULL, bringing it to life. It seems to watch Jake.

TSU'TEY squats next to Jake, the usual scowl on his face.

Jake braces himself -- and Tsu'tey holds up the KAVA BOWL, offering it to him. A challenge or an olive branch?

Jake takes a long, hearty drink as some of the young hunters hoot and clap hands in a fast rhythm.

GRACE

Watch that stuff. It'll knock you into next week.

Jake offers the bowl back to Tsu'tey. They lock eyes.
Tsu'tey drinks.

LATER -- AN EMPTY BOWL drops, landing on a pile of empty bowls near the fire.

WIDER ON JAKE and TSU'TEY, sitting amid the rowdy hunters.
Tsu'tey looks a little blearily at Jake. Finally, he GRINS.

TSU'TEY

I thought -- enough drink -- you would not be so ugly.

JAKE

Sorry.

Tsu'tey looks deep into the fire.

TSU'TEY

Your warriors -- hide inside machines -- fight from far away.

(he looks at Jake)

I did not think a sky person could be brave.

Before Jake can answer, NEYTIRI'S lithe shape runs through the circle of silhouetted dancers toward them. She takes Jake by the hand and pulls him up --

NEYTIRI

You must dance! It is the way.

TSU'TEY watches as she leads him away, his face darkening -- the moment of connection to Jake lost to anger.

The hunters WHOOP and CHEER as Jake joins the circle of dancers.

Jake takes Grace's hand and pulls her up, protesting.

JAKE lets the DRUMS and CHANTING flow through him. He lets himself go, dancing from the inside, channeling the primal energy.

GRACE is rocking out, grinning. We see the young girl, so repressed, who lives within her.

Jake and Neytiri flow amongst the dancers, but they are looking only at each other.

A couple of the young girls watching from outside the circle are giggling and talking about them. Mo'at and EYTUKAN follow their look, seeing the obvious connection.

MO'AT

(subtitled)

We cannot let this seed grow. Her path is with Tsu'tey.

ON JAKE, dancing with abandon to the primal beat, eyes locked with Neytiri.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

WIDE VISTA -- mist blowing through the treetops as the morning sun burns it away. A spectacular panorama of a vast, primeval land.

UP ANGLE TRACKING among the trees, the sunlight shafting down like light in a cathedral.

JAKE (V.O.)

It's hard to put in words the deep connection the People have to the forest.

HIGH IN THE BRANCHES of a tree, Jake watches as Neytiri gently bends a large pitcher-like flower toward her, sipping nectar which is sweet and thick as honey. An incredibly sensuous image.

JAKE (V.O.)

They see a network of energy that flows through all living things. They know that all energy is only borrowed--

MACRO SHOT of a purple flower, beaded with raindrops. A blue hand picks the flower.

JAKE (V.O.)

-- and one day you have to give it back.

LOOKING DOWN into a hole dug among tree roots. The body of an old Omaticaya WOMAN lies curled there like an unborn baby in the womb of the earth. The purple flower is gently placed on her body, joining flowers, totems and beads.

Mo'at recites a prayer as Neytiri, acting as acolyte, places a WOODSPRITE, a seed of the Great Tree, on the body.

Earth is poured over the LENS and we CUT TO -- JAKE WAKING UP in the Link. DARK as a coffin. He pushes the lid off, letting in light, and lies there. He looks pale and haggard, with a scraggly beard.

JAKE (V.O.)
Hard to believe it's only been three months.

JAKE SITS in front of the video log camera, late at night. It is many log entries later. He has lost a lot of weight. He looks like a junkie watching a test pattern.

JAKE
 (to the lens)
 I can barely remember my old life. I'm not sure who I am anymore.

CUT TO:

EXT. COMPOUND - DAY

Under a sky of thunderheads, the forest is a dark wall beyond the fence. SELFRIDGE, wearing an exopack, TEES UP while GRACE and JAKE approach from the direction of the Ops Center.

SELFDRIDGE
 Good of you to stop by. How's it going out there? Our blue friends all packed up yet?

Selfridge swings his DRIVER with good form.

SELFDRIDGE
 See, I keep hooking it. It's the damn pack.

THE BALL drops into the mud just past a marker which reads 220. A TROOPER walks over to retrieve it.

SELFDRIDGE
 The low gravity and the high air density cancel out so --

JAKE
 You called us back to report -- you want to hear it or not?

SELFDRIDGE
 Go ahead.

GRACE
 Jake is making incredible progress, years worth in just a few months. But -- we need more time.

SELFRIDGE

Not what I was hoping to hear.

It starts to rain. Selfridge calmly pulls an umbrella from his golf bag and snaps it open.

GRACE

Parker, it's their ancestral home. They've lived there since before human history began. You can spare them a few more weeks.

SELFRIDGE

This thing is inevitable. What does it matter when it happens? I'm sorry, Dr. Augustine. You're out of time.

He leaves them standing there to get drenched.

CUT TO:

INT. ARMOR BAY

A break table, under a harsh overhead light. Quaritch pulls up a chair, turns it around, and sits astride it facing Jake. He studies Jake's pale, sunken face. The scraggly beard.

QUARITCH

You're not gettin' lost in the woods, are you son?

Jake can't meet his eyes.

QUARITCH

Your last report was two weeks ago. I'm starting to doubt your resolve. From what I see, it's time to terminate this mission.

Jake eyes flare with alarm.

JAKE

No. I can do this.

QUARITCH

Look, you've given me plenty of usable intel. Like this "Well of Souls" place -- I've got them by the balls with that, when it turns into a shit-fight. Which it will.

Jake feels hollow inside, knowing what he's done.

QUARITCH

So you'll get your legs back, like I promised.

(puts his hand on Jake's shoulder)

It's time to come in.

Jake ponders this. Isn't this what he was doing all this for?

JAKE

I've gotta finish this thing. There's one more test -- the Dream Hunt. It's the final stage of becoming a man. Then I'm one of them. They'll trust what I say...

It's hard for him to even form these words --

JAKE

... and I can negotiate the terms of their relocation.

QUARITCH

Then you need to get it done, Corporal.

CUT TO:

EXT. HALLELUJAH MOUNTAINS - NIGHT

Strange horizontal LIGHTNING branches through the floating mountains, twisted by the magnetic fields. The sky is black and heavy with clouds.

INT. SHACK KITCHEN - NIGHT

Jake is gulping black coffee like a tequila shot, looking pretty STRUNG OUT. GRACE is smoking furiously.

GRACE

Jake, I can't allow this. You're just not strong enough.

JAKE

It's the last door -- I'm going through it. You can help me or get out of the way.

Jake pushes past her toward the corridor --

GRACE

(grabbing him)

Will you listen to me? Sometimes the Na'vi themselves die in these vision quests. The venom takes you to the edge of death.

(MORE)

GRACE (cont'd)
 And the psychoactive alkaloid in the worm-
 - we have no idea what that'll do in an avatar brain.

Jake breaks free and wheels away, down the corridor.

GRACE follows JAKE as he crosses to the Link. A sheet of LIGHTNING flashes across the sky outside.

Norm is initializing the Link.

NORM
 Calibrating. Thirty seconds.

She puts her hands on his shoulders.

GRACE
 No matter what you prove out there-- you are still in here.
 (shaking him)
Right here.

JAKE
 I have to go all the way -- become one of them--

GRACE
 (furiously)
 Goddammit, Jake, you can never be one of them!

Norm looks up, startled at the VEHEMENCE in GRACE' voice.

GRACE
 Our life out there takes millions of dollars of machinery to sustain. You visit -- and you leave.

During this, Jake pulls himself from his wheelchair, levering himself into the Link, hauling his useless legs inside.

GRACE
 (softening)
 You can never truly be with her.

Jake stops, pinioned by the truth. He seems suddenly very lost.

JAKE
 You know why I'm here? Because Quaritch sent me.

NORM
 What?

JAKE

That's right -- to embed with the Omaticaya. To find out how to screw them out of their home. By deceit or by force, he didn't care. And if it turned out to be force, then how best to do it.

Norm is in shock. But Grace is eerily calm.

GRACE

And what about now, Jake?

JAKE

I'm not that guy any more.

Grace nods. She's been on his journey every step of the way.

GRACE

I know.

JAKE

But if I tell Quaritch the truth, he yanks me out -- I never see her again. And if I tell her the truth, the clan throws me out -- that's if they don't cut my heart out and show it to me.

Jake looks hopelessly at the two of them. In his own perfect Hell.

NORM

They won't understand what you've done.

JAKE

They don't even have a word for "lie" -- they had to learn it from us.

Grace sees he is on the verge of tears. Lost and alone, between worlds.

GRACE

I know. I taught it to them.

JAKE

(pleading)

Grace. I've gotta go. They're waiting.

NORM

Link is ready.

Grace stops him as he tries to close the lid.

GRACE

Jake. You can't carry this burden much longer.

JAKE

(smiling wanly)

It's okay. Mo'at says an alien mind probably can't survive the Dream Hunt anyway.

Grace closes the lid. It feels like closing a coffin. She watches his psionic patterns aligning to his avatar, somewhere out in the night.

GRACE

(to Norm)

Prep my link. I'm going in.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMONS/HOMETREE - NIGHT

JAKE SITS, eyes closed, as Neytiri and another young hunter paint his face and body in preparation for uniltaron -- the Dream Hunt.

NEYTIRI

When your Spirit Animal comes, you will know.

Their eyes meet with emotion neither can conceal any longer.

TIME CUT. GRACE stands with the crowd at the ramp to HOMETREE'S LOWEST LEVEL. Jake barely sees her as he goes down the spiral. She tries to follow, but is barred by a hunter.

BELOW, seemingly in the womb of the earth, Jake walks slowly into the center of a tight circle of seated elders and hunters. An ELDER is slowly rapping a large WATER DRUM.

TIME CUT -- MO'AT purifies him with smoke from burning herbs, CHANTING in a low monotone. Jake, squatting, washes the smoke over himself with his palms.

MACRO - MO'AT'S FINGERS unwrap a piece of wood riddled with holes. She catches the end of a glowing purple WORM, and draws it out of the wood.

MO'AT

(subtitled)

Oh wise worm, eater of the Sacred Tree -- bless this worthy Hunter with a true vision.

MO'AT places the worm on Jake's out-stretched TONGUE. It twists on itself, lighting his mouth before he closes it. She indicates he should chew. He does.

MACRO -- AN EARTHEN JAR is opened. EYTUKAN removes a writhing black ARACHNOID, the Pandoran equivalent of a scorpion.

He places it against the back of Jake's neck and presses. The insect drives its stinger into Jake's skin and -- Jake grimaces. Mo'at and Eytukan step back, leaving Jake alone in the circle.

Neytiri watches intently, joining in the low chant.

SLOW DOLLY IN on Jake. His eyes OPEN. He looks around at the faces -- they seem to TRANSFORM, becoming threatening.

Jake looks down at the palms of his hands.

JAKE'S POV -- his hands recede, his whole body, the ground and --

INSTANTLY the circle of Na'vi recedes, as if to a distant horizon, leaving vast ground in between. SPACE is utterly distorted, and SOUND as well -- echoing, THUNDEROUS.

ECU JAKE -- pupils DILATED black. He looks around and --

The onlookers are gone, replaced by a ring of glowing trees, which seem miles high. The whole image is bathed in spectral radiance. Jake looks down --

JAKE'S POV -- his body and hands transforming -- fingers stretching into tendrils, legs becoming roots which spread outward across the ground, a thousand glowing dendrites which connect to the roots of the trees and --

CUT TO REALITY -- Jake is on his hands and knees, PUKING in the dirt. He contorts, crying out in agony as the venom contracts his muscles but --

IN HIS VISION Jake stands serene on a FLOATING MOUNTAIN CLIFF. A GREAT BLACK SHADOW covers him, the unmistakable X silhouette of a diving LEONOPTERYX. The LAST SHADOW.

CAMERA SCREAMS down on him as the shadow grows larger -- WE RUSH into his face, into the blackness of his pupil which FILLS THE UNIVERSE and --

REAL JAKE writhes in the dirt, his back arched as his muscles seize. He foams and thrashes, his eyes rolled back in his head, while inside --

TIME ITSELF HAS ACCELERATED -- clouds scream around the mountain tops, mist boils through the forest. He feels the wind of time blowing through him as --

REAL JAKE claws the ground, moaning, staring blindly while --

INSIDE, IN POV he FLIES over the landscape of Pandora --

--but the forest is BLASTED. Fires flicker among trees that are BURNED black and lifeless in a smoky twilight.

A great WINGED SHADOW is cast below, rippling over the devastated ground. AVATAR JAKE looks down at the shadow. Realizes HE is casting it, and we RUSH IN to his PUPIL and --

PULL BACK from the eye of a GREAT LEONOPTERYX, flying lordly and terrible over the land. It lets out an almighty SHRIEK which seems to echo to eternity and -- SLAM CUT to Jake, on his back, GASPING -- back in his body. He weakly rolls up to one elbow and looks around the room.

MO'AT

It is finished.

Neytiri's face is flooded with relief. The faces of the clan elders look at Jake expectantly.

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

Did your Spirit Animal come?

Jake looks from Eytukan to Mo'at, Tsu'tey and the elders. How can he tell them what he has seen?

Mo'at puts her splayed fingers against his face, seeming to peer into his troubled soul.

MO'AT

(to Jake)

Something has come.

(to the others, subtitled)

It will take time for the meaning to be clear.

She steps back, and Eytukan motions for Jake to stand. He gets up, weakly.

OUTSIDE THE ENCLOSURE -- Eytukan emerges with Jake and the others. The entire clan is gathered, waiting to hear what has happened. Jake looks up at the Leonopteryx Skull Totem, which seems to stare down at him.

GRACE watches, her eyes brimming. Proud. Relieved. Amazed.

Eytukan places both hands on Jake's chest and holds them there.

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

You are now a son of the Omaticaya. You are part of the People.

All the members of the clan press forward, crowding around and putting their hands on Jake's shoulders, back, chest -- hands upon hands, until he is connected to everyone.

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - NIGHT

JAKE and NEYTIRI run silhouetted in the night. Behind them waterfalls cascade down in the silvery light. POLYPHEMUS RISES behind the trees.

NEYTIRI DIVES from a rock, slicing into a mirror of water. Jake follows her and --

UNDERWATER, they swim over glowing ANEMONES.

They seem to float in a cosmic dance above a luminous garden of waving shapes. Tiny purple fish swirl around them.

Their hands come together, fingers twining, as they float weightlessly, as if between worlds.

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. WILLOW GLADE

Laughing, they run together into a stand of WILLOWS. Their trunks are as gnarled as bonsai. Long faintly glowing tendrils hang straight down in pastel curtains.

Underfoot, a bed of moss glows faintly. It REACTS to their footsteps with expanding rings of light.

It is an exquisitely beautiful spot.

The willows stir, responding to their presence. She holds up her hands, letting the TENDRILS caress her.

NEYTIRI

This is a place for prayers to be heard.
And sometimes answered.

Jake puts out his hands and the tendrils play over his fingers, his palms, his forearms. His eyes go wide. We hear the WHISPERING of ancient Na'vi VOICES.

JAKE

It's like -- a sound you feel.

NEYTIRI

We call this utraya mokri -- the Tree of Voices. The voices of our ancestors, who live within Eywa.

A few WOODSPRITES circle around them, some alighting on their shoulders and arms.

They stand, very close together now. Her eyes are intense, almost luminous. He feels drawn into them.

But she pulls back a little.

NEYTIRI

You are Omaticaya now. You may make your own bow from the wood of Hometree.
(she looks away)
And you may choose a woman.

The Amazon warrior trying so hard to sound casual. Jake suppresses a smile.

NEYTIRI

We have many fine women. Ninat is the best singer --

JAKE

I don't want Ninat.

NEYTIRI

There is Beyral -- she is a good hunter --

Jake puts his fingers on her lips to stop her.

JAKE

I've already chosen. But this woman must also choose me.

She takes his hands and their fingers intertwine, moving gently over each other.

NEYTIRI

She already has.

He puts his face close to hers. She rubs her cheek against his. He kisses her on the mouth. They explore each other.

Then she pulls back, eyes sparkling.

NEYTIRI

Kissing is very good. But we have something better.

She pulls him down until they are kneeling, facing each other on the faintly glowing moss.

Neytiri takes the end of her queue and raises it. Jake does the same, with trembling anticipation. The tendrils at the ends move with a life of their own, straining to be joined.

MACRO SHOT -- The tendrils INTERTWINE with gentle undulations.

JAKE rocks with the direct contact between his nervous system and hers. The ultimate intimacy.

They come together into a kiss and sink down on the bed of moss, and ripples of light spread out around them.

THE WILLOWS sway, without wind, and the night is alive with pulsing energy as we DISSOLVE TO --

LATER. She is collapsed across his chest. Spent. He strokes her face tenderly.

JAKE

Neytiri, you know my real body is far away, sleeping.

She raises up, placing her fingertips to his chest --

NEYTIRI

This body is real.

(she touches his forehead)

This spirit is real.

Her eyes are luminous, honest, infinitely deep.

NEYTIRI

When I was first your teacher, I hated all Sky People. But you have also taught me.

(whispering)

Spirit is all that matters.

She lays her head down, against his chest, listening to his heartbeat.

NEYTIRI

I am with you now, Jake. We are mated for life.

JAKE

We are?

NEYTIRI

Yes. It is our way.

(innocently)

Oh. I forgot to tell?

He rouses up, making her look at him.

JAKE

Really, we are?

NEYTIRI

We are.

Jake considers this.

JAKE

It's cool. I'm there.

He lays his head down, and her arms enfold him, sheltering him as he sleeps.

INT. SHACK - NIGHT

Jake's eyes open in the darkness. He just lies there, thinking. In his coffin. In another world.

CUT TO:

EXT. WILLOW GLADE - DAWN

DAWN BREAKS in the sacred glade. Shafts of orange morning light. Jake and Neytiri asleep in each others' arms. Maxfield Parrish painting. But then --

THE ROAR OF ENGINES. Neytiri awakens with a start. The SPLINTERING, CRACKLING of forest being crushed under enormous treads gets louder.

SHE WATCHES in growing horror as the BLADE of a bulldozer becomes a dark wall behind the sheltering ring of willows. She shakes Jake, shouting at him in Na'vi to wake up.

NEYTIRI

Jake! Wake up! Where ever you are, come back to me now. Jake!

INT. SHACK - DAWN

HUMAN JAKE is in a hurry to get back to the link. GRACE, still groggy, chases him with coffee and microwaved eggs.

GRACE

Here -- eat this. I'd hate to have to force-feed a cripple.

She slams the lid shut before he can enter and sticks the plate under his nose.

GRACE

(grinning)
She's not going anywhere.

He sighs heavily and starts wolfing the eggs.

EXT. WILLOW GLADE - DAWN

Neytiri SCREAMS as --

The willows begin to fall before the blade, to be ground under the treads. AVATAR JAKE is directly in the path. She tries to lift him, but he is too heavy. She is screaming at him, frantically trying to wake him, as --

INT. SHACK - DAWN

Jake adjusts himself in the link chair. He hands Grace the empty plate.

GRACE

And when was the last time you took a shower? Jesus, Marine.

Jake pushes her hands away and pulls the lid down.

EXT. WILLOW GLADE

AVATAR JAKE wakes up to see --

NEYTIRI dragging him, screaming. He leaps up as --

THE DOZER pushes inexorably into the glade, splintering the trees, plowing the earth before it.

JAKE RUNS into the path of the bulldozer, waving his arms.

JAKE
Hey! Heeeeey! Stop! Stop!

He positions himself where the camera-eyes of the robotic juggernaut will see him.

INT. OPS CENTER - DAY

CLOSE ON MONITOR -- Jake shouts but there's no sound feed.

WIDER as the TRACTOR OPERATOR sees him and pulls back on the remote throttles. He yells to his SUPERVISOR.

OPERATOR
Hey, I got one of the natives blockin' my blade here.

This attracts the attention of Selfridge, who comes over to the workstation.

ON THE SCREEN -- Jake, in his Omaticaya loincloth and ceremonial body paint, is unrecognizable.

SUPERVISOR
(to Selfridge)
What do we do?

SELFRIDGE
Roll on. He'll move. These people have to learn that we don't stop.

TIGHT ON THROTTLES as the operator pushes them forward.

ON THE SCREEN Jake stumbles back, tripping, disappears below the blade for a second -- reappears, running to the side.

EXT. WILLOW GLADE

JAKE grabs a rock and LEAPS onto the dozer. He climbs quickly to the CAMERA MAST.

SMASH! The rock crashes into the lens of the camera. Jake beats the rock furiously against it, pounding it to junk.

INT. OPS CENTER

CLOSE ON MONITOR -- as Jake's demonic face is replaced by noise.

OPERATOR
I'm blind.

He pulls back on the throttles.

EXT. WILLOW GLADE

THE JUGGERNAUT grinds to a stop. But the ROAR of engines continues because --

MORE DOZERS and TRACTORS advance nearby, crushing the forest before them. Trees are slashed down by the PLASMA CUTTERS. Terrified animals flee before the onslaught.

POWERSUITS and TROOPERS stride through the ravaged forest, blasting anything that moves. A trooper sees Jake on the dozer. He rips off a BURST and --

Rounds CLANG into metal as Jake dives off the machine. He grabs Neytiri and they run into concealing foliage. From behind a screen of leaves, they watch as --

THE DOZERS advance, obliterating the sacred site, leaving only mud and wood splinters in their path.

CU NEYTIRI, stunned by the nightmarish, unfathomable wrongness of it. She sobs as the willows die.

INT. OPS CENTER

MINUTES LATER, the operator is playing back the CAMERA'S FEED for Quaritch and the others.

QUARITCH

Freeze it, right -- there.

ON MONITOR -- the image expands, until Jake's face is clear, frozen in an animal snarl.

SELFIDGE

Son of a bitch!

PUSH IN ON QUARITCH as his jaw clenches in cold fury.

He turns and strides toward the door, shouting to his WATCH COMMANDER as he passes.

QUARITCH

Get me a pilot!

CUT TO:

INT. COMMONS/HOMETREE - DAY

A RAIDING PARTY of hunters, their bodies painted, raise weapons overhead. AVATAR GRACE watches with growing alarm.

EYTUKAN
 (subtitled)
Tsu'tey will lead the war party!

Tsu'tey steps forward, face full of hate, raising a war cry among the hunters.

GRACE
 (subtitled)
Please -- this will only make it worse --

TSU'TEY
You do not speak here!

JAKE and NEYTIRI cross the commons toward them. Jake feels all eyes turn toward him. He takes her arm, stopping her.

JAKE
 (to Neytiri, low)
 Okay, listen. There's something I have to tell you. It's gonna be hard. I just need you to --

He sees TSU'TEY striding toward them, his face a mask of fury.

TSU'TEY
You!

Tsu'tey walks right up and SLAMS Jake in the chest with both hands. It is so unexpected, that Jake topples on his ass.

TSU'TEY
You mated with this woman?!

GRACE
 Oh shit.

Jake stands. He reaches out for Neytiri. She goes to him, clutching his hand.

MO'AT
 Is this true?

NEYTIRI
 (subtitled)
We are mated before Eywa. It is done.

Tsu'tey turns to Mo'at and Eytukan, his face anguished.

TSU'TEY

(subtitled)

Neytiri was promised to me! Everything is changing. Everything is being destroyed!

Tsu'tey points at Jake, his pain shifting to rage.

TSU'TEY

(subtitled)

These aliens kill everything they touch, like poison.

MO'AT

Neytiri! If you choose this path, you can never be Tsahik. Your life will be wasted.

Neytiri looks at her mother -- sees the grief in her eyes.

NEYTIRI

I have chosen.

Tsu'tey draws his knife and --

TSU'TEY

Yeeeeeeaaa!

LUNGES AT JAKE, who's ready this time -- he sidesteps, blocking the knife, and elbows Tsu'tey HARD in the face.

Tsu'tey reels back, nose bleeding. He starts forward on a second attack but -- Eytukan grabs his arm and spins him around.

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

Stop! This is not a proper challenge.

Tsu'tey glares at Jake while sheathing his knife.

TSU'TEY

I challenge you.

GRACE

Jake, don't --

JAKE

I accept.

CUT TO:

INT./EXT. SAMSON - DAY

QUARITCH rides left seat as Trudy pilots through the mountains. She glances at him, then toggles the aircom.

TRUDY
Loveshack this is Samson One Six inbound hot to your pos. I have Colonel Quaritch with me and --

But Quaritch SLAMS the switch, cutting her off.

QUARITCH
Did I tell you to announce us?

TRUDY
Sorry sir, it's procedure.

INT. SHACK

Norm punches buttons on the comms console.

NORM
Samson One Six? Trudy?
(no answer)
Crap.

He looks helplessly at Jake and Grace's link units -- no way to warn them.

INT. HOMETREE - DAY

TSU'TEY AND JAKE square off. Each holds a long, solid staff. The entire clan crowds around them in a circle.

GRACE
What the hell are you doing?

JAKE
It's the only way to get him to goddamn listen.

TSU'TEY LEAPS at Jake with a sharp cry and Jake parries with his staff. The staves CLACK off each other as the two combatants LEAP, DUCK and STRIKE furiously.

Tsu'tey sweeps Jake off his feet with a roundhouse hit to the ankles, but --

Jake ROLLS out of it and catches Tsu'tey in the belly with the blunt end.

EXT. SITE 26 - DAY

TRUDY'S SAMSON lands. QUARITCH and a posse of troopers jump down and rush the Shack.

INT. COMMONS

TSU'TEY wades in with a series of short, sharp blows. Jake swings with equal fury. Both fighting from the heart.

The staves whistle through the air, and CLACK together like gunshots. Jake presses hard, and Tsu'tey staggers back, stumbling as --

Jake lands a SOLID HIT, dropping him to his knees, just as --

INT. SHACK

THE INNER DOOR bangs open and QUARITCH stomps toward Grace's Link controls.

NORM

Hey, hang on, you can't interrupt a link in progress, it's dangerous -- wait!

Quaritch shoves him aside and SMACKS his fist down on the POWER switch. Grace's unit goes dead and --

INT. COMMONS

AVATAR GRACE'S eyes roll back and she keels over. NEYTIRI barely catches her before she hits the ground.

JAKE parries as Tsu'tey swings but then --

Jake's eyes go blank just as -- K-RACK! Tsu'tey puts one alongside his head. Jake sprawls, completely inert. Tsu'tey pokes him with his staff, then raises it and lets out a piercing VICTORY CRY.

INT. SHACK - DAY

JAKE SLAMS OPEN the Link, amped from the fight, furious --

JAKE

Are you out of your goddamn mind?!

QUARITCH

You crossed a line.

Quaritch PUNCHES HIM HARD. Jake flops back, dazed. The troopers yank him out and ZIP-TIE his wrists.

INT. COMMONS

TSU'TEY draws his KNIFE, and bends down, grabbing Jake by the hair.

TSU'TEY
(subtitled)
This is a demon in a false body. It should not live.

He puts his knife to Jake's throat but --

NEYTIRI BLIND-SIDES him at full tilt. Tsu'tey sprawls, rolls, comes up to see -- Neytiri crouched like a lioness over Jake, her KNIFE and teeth bared, her ears flattened. She SNARLS with primal fury.

Tsu'tey stands panting. He pushes through the crowd and walks away, calling for his hunters.

CUT TO:

INT. OPS CENTER - DUSK

TIGHT ON MONITOR -- showing JAKE'S AVATAR FACE on the dozer camera, as he pounds a rock into the lens. The shot FREEZES on Jake's ANIMAL SNARL.

WIDER -- HUMAN JAKE sits, bruised and bleeding, watching himself on the monitor. GRACE and NORM stand nearby, rubbing their wrists where the zip-ties bit in. SELFRIDGE and QUARITCH watch with disdain.

QUARITCH
You let me down, son. You got a little local pussy and completely forgot what team you play for.

Jake meets his gaze with a defiant glare.

GRACE
Parker, listen, there may still be time to --

QUARITCH
Shut your fucking hole!

Grace is momentarily stunned by Quaritch's fury. But she meets it with her own intensity, not backing down an inch.

GRACE

Or what, Ranger Rick? You gonna shoot me?

(to Selfridge)

You need to muzzle your dog!

SELFRIDGE

Can we just take this down a couple notches, please.

JAKE

(to Quaritch)

You say you want to keep your people alive. Start by listening to her.

Jake nods to Grace to continue.

GRACE

(to Selfridge)

This is bad, Parker. Those trees were sacred to the Omaticaya in a way you can't imagine.

SELFRIDGE

You know what? You throw a stick in the air around here it falls on some sacred fern.

GRACE

I'm not talking about pagan voodoo here -- I'm talking about something real and measurable in the biology of the forest.

SELFRIDGE

(frustrated)

Which is what exactly?

Grace's nerve fails. A rush of conflicting emotions -- the need to act, to do something, colliding with her scientific rigor.

GRACE

(to Jake)

I can't do this. How am I supposed to reduce years of work to a sound bite for the illiterate?

JAKE

Just tell him what you know in your heart.

She turns to Parker, steeling herself.

GRACE

Alright, look -- I don't have the answers yet, I'm just now starting to even frame the questions. What we think we know -- is that there's some kind of electrochemical communication between the roots of the trees. Like the synapses between neurons. Each tree has ten to the fourth connections to the trees around it, and there are ten to the twelfth trees on Pandora --

SELFRIDGE

That's a lot I'm guessing.

GRACE

That's more connections than the human brain. You get it? It's a network -- a global network. And the Na'vi can access it -- they can upload and download data -- memories -- at sites like the one you destroyed.

SELFRIDGE

What the hell have you people been smoking out there? They're just. Goddamn. Trees.

GRACE

You need to wake up, Parker. The wealth of this world isn't in the ground -- it's all around us. The Na'vi know that, and they're fighting to defend it. If you want to share this world with them, you need to understand them.

QUARITCH

We understand them just fine. Thanks to Jake here.

Jake shares a look of alarm with Grace as Quaritch selects a NEW CLIP on the main monitor -- TIGHT ON MONITOR -- VIDEO-LOG IMAGE of Jake, looking haggard and borderline deranged, rambling in a late-night monologue.

JAKE (RECORDED)

They're not going to give up their home -- they're not gonna make a deal. For what? Lite beer and shopping channel? There's nothing we have that they want. We're a horror to them. We're the monsters from space.

JAKE watches with a growing dread as his words condemn the people he has grown to love.

JAKE (RECORDED)

They're never going to leave Hometree.

Quaritch FREEZES the recording.

QUARITCH

Since a deal can't be made -- it gets real simple.

(to Jake, icily)

So thanks. I'm getting all emotional. I might just give you a big wet kiss.

GRACE

Parker, we have to talk, like rational people.

SELFRIDGE

Well, I'd cherish that, but unfortunately you're out of here on the next shuttle. All of you. I'm shutting down the Avatar Program, effective now.

ON JAKE, GRACE AND NORM, speechless.

SLOW DISSOLVE TO:

A WALL OF FIRE. Silhouettes of direhorse riders cross in SLOW MOTION, spears and bows held high.

INT. OPS CENTER - MORNING

MONITOR SCREEN IMAGE -- WAINFLEET pans a camera across the smoldering hulks of BURNED DOZERS. The toppled remains of a charred ampsuit. Dead troopers bristling with arrows.

WAINFLEET

They hit with banshees first. Set the ampsuit on fire. Driver's toast.

Quaritch and Selfridge look on grimly.

QUARITCH

The rest of the squad?

WAINFLEET

Six bodies -- that's all of 'em. And the equipment is totalled.

SELFRIDGE

Christ.

INT. SELFRIDGE'S OFFICE - DAY

Selfridge is stares soberly as Quaritch outlines the plan.

QUARITCH

I can do it with minimal casualties to the indigenous. We'll clear them out with gas first. It'll be humane. More or less.

Selfridge sighs and rubs his face.

QUARITCH

Hey, don't go limp on me now. This is exactly the incident we needed.

SELFRRIDGE

Alright, let's pull the trigger.

CUT TO:

INT. BIO LAB

MAX and the lab staff are glumly packing files and equipment, under the watchful eye of armed SEC-OPS TROOPERS. JAKE, GRACE, NORM stare bleakly at each other.

GRACE

They bulldozed a sacred site on purpose, to trigger a response. They're fabricating this war to get what they want.

NORM

I can't believe that.

JAKE

Yup. That's how it's done. When people are sitting on shit you want, you make them your enemy. Then you're justified in taking it.

TRUDY RUNS into the lab, breathless. She's wearing full flight gear and carrying her helmet.

TRUDY

Sec-ops is rolling the gunships. They're gonna hit Hometree!

JAKE

When?

TRUDY

Now. We're spooling up now! I gotta go.

GRACE

My God.

Jake pumps furiously toward the door, Grace following.

INT. OPS CENTER - DAY

SELFRIDGE surveys the airfield, where crews swarm over the gunships, loading ordnance. He turns as JAKE and GRACE charge toward him.

GRACE

Parker, wait. Stop! These are people you're about to --

SELFRIDGE

They're fly-bitten savages who live in a tree! Look around -- I don't know about you but I see a lot of trees. They can move.

GRACE

For God's sake, there are children in there. Babies!

JAKE

Look Selfridge, you don't want this kind of blood on your hands. Let me try to talk them out. They trust me.

ON SELFRIDGE, considering this.

CUT TO:

INT. LINK ROOM

SELFRIDGE and an escort of armed TROOPERS accompany Jake and Grace to the links. The two enter their units, as NORM and MAX prep the system.

SELFRIDGE

You've got one hour. Unless you want your girlfriend in there when the axe comes down, you get them to evacuate. One hour.

Jake lowers the upper clamshell. Norm starts the sequence.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMONS -DAY

The entire clan is gathered, with Eytukan and Mo'at presiding. Jake looks around, feeling the gaze of the People upon him. He steels himself, and speaks in clear Na'vi --

JAKE
 (subtitled)
Eytukan, I have something to say, to everyone.

EYTUKAN
 (subtitled)
Speak, Jakesully.

JAKE
 (subtitled)
A great evil is upon us. The Sky People are coming to destroy Hometree. They will be here soon.

A murmur of fear and anger goes through the crowd.

JAKE
 (subtitled)
You have to leave, or you will die.

MO'AT
 Are you certain of this?

JAKE
 They sent me here to learn your ways. So one day I could bring this message, and you would believe it.

NEYTIRI
 What are you saying, Jake? You knew this would happen?

He is unable to meet her eyes.

JAKE
 Yes.
 (anguished)
 At first it was just orders. Then everything changed. I fell in love-- with the forest, with the Omaticaya People --
 (he looks at her)
 -- with you. And by then, how could I tell you?

Neytiri can barely breathe. She is shaking with the enormity of it, her voice cracking with rage and pain --

NEYTIRI
 I trusted you, Jake!

JAKE
Neytiri. Please, I only wanted to --

NEYTIRI
You will never be one of the People!
NEVER!

TSU'TEY yells to his HUNTERS --

TSUTEY
(subtitled)
Bind them.

They grab Jake, who doesn't resist. Others seize Grace.
Both are driven to their knees, and their arms bound.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

SCORPION GUNSHIPS darken the sky as they come over the tops of the trees. At the head of the formation is one much larger ship, a monster 150 feet long -- the GENERAL DYNAMICS C-21 DRAGON GUNSHIP.

Quaritch, next to the pilot of the Dragon, surveys the world below like Napoleon astride his horse.

EXT. HOMETREE

JAKE and GRACE are lashed to posts at the front entrance to Hometree. The People look up as --

THE DRAGON and its escort of GUNSHIPS arrive over the trees. The DOWN-BLAST from their rotors creates a maelstrom of flying leaves and debris.

IN THE DRAGON COCKPIT Quaritch watches a targeting screen -- a telescopic image of Jake and Grace tied to posts.

QUARITCH
Well, I'd say diplomacy has failed.

TSU'TEY and another HUNTER hold knives to the throats of the two avatars, glaring defiantly at the gunships.

QUARITCH
I think they mean to cut their throats if we don't back off. Make sure you get a nice close-up of that. I can tack it onto the after-action report.

JAKE YELLS to Neytiri, Tsu'tey, the others gathered nearby --

JAKE

You have to get out of Hometree! Run to the forest! Please, I'm begging you!

EYTUKAN scowls at Jake, then GRABS TSU'TEY and yells --

EYTUKAN

(subtitled)

Take the ikran! Attack from above!

Tsu'tey grabs some hunters and runs up the roots of Hometree.

IN THE COCKPIT Quaritch grows impatient.

QUARITCH

Alright, let's get this done. Give me forty millimeter gas rounds, right in the front door.

GUNNER

Roger. CS forties. Going hot.

QUARITCH

Fire.

On the Dragon's stub-wings the 40mm ROCKET LAUNCHERS open up with a BARRAGE of leaping fire which FLASHES down and --

K-WHOOM!K-WHOOM!K-WHOOM! -- the inside of Hometree ERUPTS with multiple EXPLOSIONS of TEARGAS.

THE GAS rolls across the confused villagers. They begin to cough and gag.

Eytukan and the remaining HUNTERS bravely fire at the gunships with their longbows.

IN THE DRAGON'S COCKPIT, Quaritch laughs as arrows CLINK against the armored windows.

AMID CLOUDS of teargas, the Omaticaya run, stumble, collapse.

EYTUKAN

(yelling/subtitled)

Everybody outside! Go to the Forest.

The villagers pour out of Hometree. Everyone is yelling. Piercing SCREAMS in the boiling gas.

JAKE, eyes streaming, struggles with his bindings.

KA-WHOOM! An INCENDIARY ROUND explodes inside the Commons. FLAMES ROAR through the base of Hometree.

INSIDE HOMETREE it is a burning smoky HELL. Flames roar up the inside like a chimney. STRAGGLERS scramble outside, coughing and dragging wounded with them.

High up in the trunk, TSU'TEY and his hunters leap rapidly from spoke to spoke, climbing barely ahead of the fireball.

OUTSIDE the fire is driven by the rotor-wash toward JAKE and GRACE who are still bound tightly to the posts.

Out of the smoke, MO'AT appears in front of Jake. She raises a KNIFE and -- SLASHES DOWNWARD. Jake looks down, surprised, to see his bonds falling away. He meets her eyes, which are filled with horror, but also something else. Call it faith.

MO'AT

You are one of us. Help us!

Jake takes the knife and cuts Grace free.

JAKE

We've gotta move! He's gonna blow the columns.

As Grace realizes what he means, he grabs her and they RUN. Around them the Omaticaya flee in horror and confusion.

IN THE COCKPIT, Quaritch watches as the Omaticaya stream away from the Great Tree, running along roots and branches.

QUARITCH

That's how you scatter the roaches. Okay, switch missiles. Give me H-E's at the base of the west columns.

PILOTS (V.O.)

Copy, switching missiles.

IN TRUDY'S SAMSON -- she hears the other pilots acknowledging Quaritch's order.

TRUDY

Screw it.

She takes her finger OFF the fire-control and pulls her aircraft out of formation.

PUSHING IN ON QUARITCH, the Hometree reflecting in his glasses.

QUARITCH
Bring it down.

MISSILES stream down from the DRAGON and the other gunships and --

The base of Hometree VANISHES in a chain of HIGH-EXPLOSIVE BLASTS. The massive PILLARS fragment into matchsticks, and --

The Omaticaya watch in horror as --

HOMETREE GROANS and starts to MOVE.

In a cacophony of cracking, splintering roots, the mighty tree TOPPLES with agonizing slowness.

AT THE BANSHEE EYRIE, TSU'TEY and the other hunters spur their mounts into flight. They swoop among the branches as the tree, the one fixed thing in their lives, MOVES.

It CRASHES DOWN through the forest canopy, crushing the lesser trees in its path, FALLING PONDEROUSLY.

HOMETREE hits the ground like the end of the world, raising a great cloud of dust and pulverized debris.

IN THE DRAGON cockpit, Quaritch surveys the destruction.

QUARITCH
Nice work people. Alright, let's light it up.

INCENDIARIES launch from the gunships, EXPLODING into gouts of FIRE in the debris of Hometree.

THE GUNSHIPS fan the flames through the trees like a fire-storm. The Omaticaya retreat as a WALL OF FIRE advances.

JAKE SEARCHES for Neytiri amid swirling smoke and sparks.

JAKE
Neytiri! Neytiri!

GRACE is gathering crying CHILDREN, and herding them away from the fire-storm.

NEYTIRI stumbles through the burning wreckage at the edge of the INFERNO. She sees -- EYTUKAN. A large shard of wood is driven through him like a spear. He recognizes her as she kneels over him.

EYTUKAN
 (subtitled)
Daughter -- take my bow. Protect the People.

In his last living moment he places his bow in her hands.
 She collapses over him, her face crumpling in grief.
 JAKE reels out of the smoke. Kneels next to her.

JAKE
 I'm sorry --

She shoves him away and stands, screaming at him as tears stream down her face.

NETYIRI
 Get away from me, Jake. Go away! Never come back!

Jake stumbles back as she slumps down by her father's body.
 Sparks and smoke swirl around him. He watches as -- NETYIRI kneels, grieving. Slumped over, clutching her stomach. Keening like an animal.

SLOW MOTION -- Jake staggers lost and alone through the burning forest. Utterly shattered. Eyes vacant.

JAKE (V.O.)
I was a warrior who dreamed he could bring peace. Sooner or later though, you always have to wake up...

INT. LINK ROOM

SELFRIDGE watches a video feed of the destruction on one of the monitors. Max and NORM stare in shock.

SELFRIDGE
 Pull the plug.

A TROOPER crosses to the console and grabs the handle of the MASTER BREAKER --

EXT. RAINFOREST

The strings are cut. Jake flops to the ground, limp.

Elsewhere in the smoky Hell, Grace slumps unconscious. The crying kids pull at her. Mo'at, leading a group of Omaticaya, comes upon the scene.

She grabs the kids and pulls them away, leaving Grace's avatar helpless in the path of the flames. She hesitates, then --

MO'AT
(subtitled)
Bring her.

INT. LINK ROOM

BLACKNESS. Then the top clamshell of Jake's unit is yanked upward, and troopers grab him, zip-tie his wrists as we --

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DUSK

ON A HILLSIDE -- a grieving Neytiri stands with Mo'at and the Omaticaya refugees. Two hunters pull Grace's avatar on a travois.

They watch as the flames burn like a funeral pyre below. A great pall of smoke darkens the landscape.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. LOCK-UP - NIGHT

Jake, Grace, and Norm are in a common holding cell. They sit, staring in silence. Too wired to sleep, too emotionally drained to move.

GRACE
They never wanted us to succeed.

AT THE DESK OUTSIDE, the lone TROOPER looks up as -- TRUDY approaches along the corridor, pushing a stainless steel trolley.

TRUDY
Personally I think steak's too good for these traitors.

GUARD
They get steak? That's bullshit. Let me see that --

The guard bends to look into the hot cart and --

THE MUZZLE of Trudy's pistol presses behind his ear.

TRUDY

Oops.

(shoving him down)

All the way down, pendejo.

She WHISTLES and MAX trots around the corner.

Trudy binds the guard with one of his own zip-ties as Max grabs his KEY CARD and runs to the cell. Swipes the card. The door is rolling open when --

ANOTHER TROOPER rounds the corner. Trudy takes him down with a sharp BLOW to the windpipe and a THAI KNEE to the ribs.

Meanwhile the first TROOPER is getting up, but Max CLOCKS him heartily with a coffee urn. He goes down and stays down.

MAX

That was unexpectedly satisfying.

Trudy plants a kiss on Norm as he runs out of the cell.

NORM

Baby, you rock.

Jake wheels out, grabbing the sidearm from the fallen trooper as Trudy binds his wrists.

JAKE

(to Max and Trudy)

Thanks.

Jake faces his motley group, chambering a round.

JAKE

So what do you say? Time for a revolution?

GRACE

I'm free.

Trudy grins and taps his fist.

JAKE

Come on.

CUT TO:

INT. UTILIDOR

In the utility corridor under the base, Jake pumps the chair furiously, as the others jog. They reach an AIRLOCK and start donning EXOPACKS.

JAKE
(to Trudy)
Get your ship fired up.

Trudy nods. She grabs Norm and enters the airlock. Jake turns to Max.

JAKE
Stay here. I need somebody on the inside
I can trust.

Max nods. Jake grips his hand tightly.

CUT TO:

EXT. AIRFIELD - NIGHT

IN THE SAMSON, Norm is helping Trudy race through the preflight checks as the turbines spool up. A LIGHT hits them.

An armored TROOPER approaches, aiming his AR at them.

TROOPER
I need you to shut down and step out of the vehicle! Now!

JAKE rolls up behind him, aiming his pistol.

JAKE
Take it nice and easy, troop.

The trooper turns, sees the gun.

JAKE
On the ground, face down. Hands behind your head.

The trooper hesitates.

GRACE
Do what he goddamn says!

He does. Norm jumps down and grabs the trooper's rifle and side-arm, covering him, while Grace helps Jake from chair to the back bay of the chopper. She throws his chair in, and jumps in herself.

JAKE
Go! Go! Go!

INT. OPS CENTER - NIGHT

QUARITCH, watching a monitor, sees what's happening down at the airfield. He slams his palm down on an ALARM BUTTON.

He draws his PISTOL. Strides toward the EMERGENCY DOOR. He undogs it.

EXT. OPS CENTER/AIRFIELD - NIGHT

HOLDING HIS BREATH Quaritch yanks the hatch open and strides onto the outer landing. Inside people scramble for MASKS.

THE SAMSON lifts off in a blast of rotor-wash just as --

QUARITCH OPENS FIRE and --

ROUNDS rake the ship. Trudy banks hard, using the bottom to shield them. Bullets WHACK into the ship as she climbs-out over the tree-line.

Jake's fist pumps the air exultantly.

JAKE

Oh yeah, baby!

GRACE

Aaahh, crap. Not again.

He looks over at Grace and freezes. She is looking down at a BLOODY HAND. She clutches her abdomen, covering the spreading stain. Looks at Jake, wide-eyed.

GRACE

This is gonna ruin my whole day.

JAKE

Hang on, Grace.

CUT TO:

EXT. SHACK / SITE 26 - NIGHT

NORM'S AVATAR, with an AR slung over his shoulder, stands on the roof of the LINK MODULE. He gives a thumbs up signal. The lift cable goes taut and --

The shack LIFTS OFF THE GROUND.

Trudy's Samson beats the grass of the mountain meadow, straining to lift the module on a long-line sling. The shack sways as Trudy banks across forested slopes and heads deeper into the HALLELUJAH MOUNTAINS.

INT. SAMSON CABIN - NIGHT

Outside the windows, clouds and cliffs pass by, lit by Polyphemus.

Jake is yanking stuff out of the Samson's trauma bag, while Grace lies curled across two back seats, hugging her blood-soaked abdomen. She is pale and shocky.

Trudy is flying on visual only, by the light of Polyphemus. Her instruments are showing gibberish.

TRUDY

Well, at least they won't be able to track us up here. Not this deep in the vortex.

JAKE

It's strongest at the Well of Souls, right?

TRUDY

Yeah.

JAKE

Good, 'cause that's where we're going.

TRUDY

Copy.

He gives Grace an ampule of morphine for the pain.

JAKE

I'm gonna get you some help, Grace.

GRACE

Forget it, it doesn't matter.

Jake grabs her shoulders.

JAKE

No! The People can help you. I know it.

CUT TO:

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - AERIAL - DAWN

Dawn light paints the massive ARCHES of magnetic rock above the Well of Souls.

Tiny as an insect, the SAMSON passes.

JAKE (V.O.)
The Well of Souls. The heart of the forest. I knew the People would go there.

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - DAWN

The WELL OF SOULS is a deep caldera 100 meters across. It is ringed with enormous WILLOWS whose roots seem to pour down the sheer rock walls like candle wax.

AT THE BOTTOM, in a natural amphitheater, the Omaticaya refugees are clustered around a central rock outcropping which forms a kind of dais and altar.

Shafts of dawn light reach to the bottom of the grotto, lighting a single willow -- the MOTHER TREE. Ancient and gnarled, it grows in the center of the rock.

Its ROOTS spread down to the grotto floor, where they merge with the roots of the willows ringing the Well -- forming a braided mat resembling the surface of a brain.

Mo'at stands on the dais, leading them in a CHANT.

MO'AT
 (subtitled)
Wise ancestors who live within Eywa, guide us. Give us a sign.

CUT TO:

EXT. FOREST CLEARING - DAWN

The shack descends from the sky like a gift from the gods. It bumps to the ground.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK -- DAY

Grace lies, comatose, in her open link. Trudy gives Jake a look that says "not much time." Jake feels Grace's cold forehead, then crosses to his own link.

As Trudy helps him in, Norm rapidly preps the system.

NORM
 (low)
Tsu'tey is Olo'eyctan now. He's not going to let you get near that place.

JAKE
I've gotta try, Norm.

Jake pulls the clamshell down and we --

CUT TO:

EXT. RUINS OF HOMETREE - DAY

CU JAKE'S AVATAR -- HIS EYES OPEN. He sits up. The forest is silent, shrouded in smoke that the sun can't penetrate. The animals have fled. Ash blows on the wind.

JAKE (V.O.)
Outcast. Betrayer. Alien. To ever face them again, I was gonna have to change the rules.

DISSOLVE -- JAKE reaches the top of a rise. The forest beyond is utterly DEVASTATED. The trees burned and fallen. Small fires still flicker across a landscape in Hell.

JAKE stares. It is his vision, made real. He stumbles through the dark wasteland, sparks and ash swirling around him.

A SCREECH. Jake looks up as --

HIS BANSHEE -- bonded for life -- flaps down to a landing in front of him. He steps to it, and strokes its head. It nudges his chest like a horse.

JAKE (V.O.)
Sometimes your whole life boils down to one insane move.

JAKE
 Come on, boy. Time to fly.

OMIITED

EXT. MOUNTAINS - DAY

THE GREAT LEONOPTERYX glides effortlessly along the ridge where Jake and Neytiri first encountered him.

It scans for prey below, its magnificent indigo-crested head cocking left, then right.

JAKE (V.O.)
The way I had it figured, Toruk is the baddest cat in the sky. Nothing attacks him. So why would he ever look up?

FROM ABOVE -- THE SMALL SHADOW of Jake's banshee falls across the back of the mighty Toruk.

JAKE (V.O.)
But that was just a theory.

JAKE DIVES and WE RUSH DOWN toward the great beast and our own shadow then --

CUT TO:

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - LATE AFTERNOON

The Omaticaya people lift their voices in a SONG filled with tragic loss and yearning for deliverance.

CLOSE ON NEYTIRI, singing. A SHADOW CROSSES HER FACE. She looks up, and her eyes go wide as --

A TERRIBLE CRY echoes, turning all eyes skyward. AN ENORMOUS SHADOW covers the crowd as -- TORUK comes out of the sun, beating its huge wings to slow its descent. Its crimson and black wings, backlit by the sun, seem to glow from within.

The People CRY OUT in alarm and scatter as the dreaded beast alights in their midst. And that's when they see -- JAKE, riding high on its shoulders, plugged-in to its antenna. It folds its wings and stands calmly amid the paralyzed Na'vi.

Toruk lowers its body. They stare in awe as Jake dismounts and strokes the magnificent animal's flank.

NEYTIRI, TSU'TEY and MO'AT watch in stunned amazement as the legendary Rider of Last Shadow walks toward them.

NEYTIRI
 (breathing the words)
Toruk Macto.

Neytiri raises her arms.

NEYTIRI
 (shouting)
Toruk Macto!

ON THE FACES of the Omaticaya -- new hope dawning in their eyes. WHISPERS flow among them, the words REPEATED --

CROWD
Toruk Macto... Toruk Macto...

Jake walks through the crowd, straight to Neytiri at the foot of the dais. He looks into her enormous eyes, and the emotion between them is powerful and pure.

NEYTIRI

I See you.

JAKE

(a hoarse whisper)

I See you.

Neytiri's eyes brim with tears.

NEYTIRI

I was afraid Jake -- for my people. I'm not any more.

Jake takes Neytiri's hand and climbs the steps of the dais.

MO'AT steps back in awe as he approaches. He turns to Tsu'tey, who stares at him with fear and incomprehension. Jake plays to the rapt crowd as he says --

JAKE

(subtitled)

Tsu'tey of the Rongloa, son of Ateyo. I stand before you, ready to serve the People.

(then just for Tsu'tey)

You are Olo'eyctan, and you are the best warrior. I can't do this without you.

Tsu'tey struggles with his emotions. Finally --

TSU'TEY

I will fly with you.

JAKE

Ireiyo.

JAKE turns to the MATRIARCH.

JAKE

Grace is dying. I beg the help of the Great Mother.

MO'AT

Bring her, Jakesully.

TIME CUT -- AVATAR JAKE carries Grace's HUMAN BODY, lightly in his arms like a child. Jake walks through the crowd to the dais, followed by NORM, who carries GRACE'S AVATAR.

JAKE

Look where we are, Grace.

Her eyes flutter open. She looks up wonderingly at the Mother Tree.

GRACE

(with a wan smile)

I need to take some samples.

Mo'at directs them to lay both bodies among the roots on the altar-rock.

Mo'at touches Jake's shoulder and he steps back.

MO'AT

(quietly)

The Great Mother may choose to save all that she is --

Mo'at's hand indicates Grace's AVATAR --

MO'AT

-- in this body.

CU JAKE, realizing the enormity of what she's saying.

JAKE

Is that possible?

MO'AT

Possible, yes. She must pass through the Eye of Eywa -- and return. But Jakesully-- she is very weak.

Jake kneels next to Grace, taking her tiny human hand in his avatar hand.

JAKE

Hang on, they're gonna fix you up.

Grace is barely conscious. She grips his hand.

GRACE

I -- always held back. But you gave them your heart. I'm proud of you, Jake.

Jake feels his throat close with emotion.

Grace's eyes blaze with intensity though her voice is faint.

GRACE

Help them. You do whatever it takes. You hear me?

JAKE

I will.

TIME CUT -- MO'AT stands in a kind of trance amongst the tendrils of the Mother Tree.

NEYTIRI and the other acolytes dance hypnotically. All the Omaticaya sway and chant to the rhythm of the drums.

MACRO SHOT -- fine, hairlike THREADS have emerged from the roots and are gently spreading over Grace's HUMAN skin.

JAKE, still holding her hand, watches her body being fused to the root-floor by a thousand connections.

GRACE'S AVATAR is gently connected by the same questing ROOT-CILIA-- they entwine with the QUEUE and spread over the body.

The grotto is dark except for the spectral GLOW of the willows. The CHANT continues, hypnotically. MO'AT, on her knees beneath the Mother Tree, writhes her arms in the trance state. Her eyes are rolled back, showing only WHITE.

GRACE GASPS and her eyes SNAP OPEN. Her expression is AMAZED, as if seeing something so beautiful it can never be explained.

ON HER HAND -- GRIPPING Jake's convulsively, as she tries to anchor herself to this world for a few more seconds --

GRACE

I'm with her Jake --
(an amazed whisper)
-- she's real --

Grace SHUDDERS, as pain shoots through her. BLOOD seeps through the silken white root-cilia growing across her abdomen. Drowning WHITE in shocking CRIMSON.

She exhales a last shuddering breath -- and goes STILL.

JAKE

Grace!

He sees the roots falling away from her human body.

JAKE TURNS hopefully toward her AVATAR -- but the roots are falling away from it as well. It sleeps -- VACANT.

MO'AT stops the chant. She crosses to Jake and kneels with him, touching his shoulder.

MO'AT

Her wounds were too great, there was not enough time. She is with Eywa now.

NEYTIRI removes Grace's mask and gently closes her eyes.

Jake stands slowly, barely holding it together.

NEYTIRI comes to him and he sees the despair and hope conflicting on her face --

-- and he raises his head. TURNS to face TSU'TEY and the CROWD.

JAKE

With your permission, I will Speak now.
You would honor me by translating.

Tsu'tey gestures assent, and they face the clan together.

JAKE SPEAKS, the pain of Grace's death in the passion and fury of his voice. Tsu'tey TRANSLATES beside him.

JAKE

The Sky People have sent a message that they can take whatever they want, and no one can stop them. But we will send them a message. Ride out, as fast as the wind can carry you, tell the other clans to come. Tell them Toruk Macto calls to them. Fly now with me brothers and sisters! Fly! And we will show the Sky People that this is our land!

TSU'TEY finishes with a bloodcurdling war-cry, and the entire CLAN responds, their shouts echoing across the forest.

JAKE takes Neytiri's hand and runs to the leonopteryx. He vaults onto its back and pulls her up behind him.

THE HUNTERS run to their banshees, mounting quickly. Jake's leonopteryx rises on mighty wings into the night sky. With a thunder of wings, the banshees take off after it.

LONG LENS -- POLYPHEMUS. Across its face, the banshees rise like a swarm of bats. Groups of riders peel off in different directions.

CUT TO:

EXT. CLAN GATHERING - NIGHT

JAKE and NEYTIRI stand before the gathered members of ANOTHER CLAN. Jake speaks as she translates. We don't hear the words.

TRACK ACROSS the faces of the clan, a sea of eyes in flickering fire-light.

JAKE (V.O.)

We rode out to the four winds. To the horse clans of the plain, to the ikran people of the mountains. When Toruk Macto called them, they came.

VARIOUS ANGLES -- SLOW MOTION as riders vault onto their armored direhorses. Banshee riders raise spears and bows, spurring their mounts to leap skyward.

CUT TO:

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - DAWN

With a WHOOSH and the crack of mighty wings, JAKE RETURNS. Jake and Neytiri alight from his legendary mount.

Around them HUNDREDS OF BANSHEES are landing. A gathering of eagles.

FROM ABOVE we can see hundreds of Na'vi streaming down into the Well of Souls and many hundreds more camped in the forest above it.

DIREHORSE RIDERS are arriving along many trails.

BANSHEE RIDERS circle and swoop, darkening the sky above the grotto.

JAKE, standing next to the Leonopteryx, watches his army gathering.

CUT TO:

INT. COMMISSARY - DAY

It's standing room only as all base personnel are crowded into the dining hall. A portable 3D GRAPHICS PROJECTOR has been set up, and the lights are down. QUARITCH stands in front of the display image -- a classic pre-mission briefing.

QUARITCH

People, you are fighting for survival.
There's an aboriginal horde out there massing for an attack. First slide.

The display shows an overhead image of the Well of Souls. It looks like Woodstock in the jungle.

QUARITCH

These orbital images show the hostiles' numbers have gone from a couple of hundred to over two thousand in one day, and more are pouring in. By next week it could be twenty thousand. Then they'll be overrunning our perimeter here. We can't wait. Our only security lies in pre-emptive attack. We will fight terror with terror.

TRACKING ACROSS the grim faces of the miners and troopers. Fear transforming to hatred in their eyes.

QUARITCH

Next slide. This mountain stronghold is supposedly protected by their deity. When we destroy it, we will blast a crater in their racial memory so deep they won't come within a thousand clicks of this place.

CUT TO:

INT. ARMOR BAY - DAY

TROOPERS issue automatic weapons and magazines to a long line of mine workers. The miners lock and load like the red-blooded redneck NRA supporters they are.

BLASTING TECHS are setting radio-detonated primer charges into two-ton stacks of EXPLOSIVE COMPOUND. The stacks are band-strapped together on pallets.

TRACKING WITH SELFRIDGE, staring around him in growing dismay as he walks through the full-scale mobilization.

He approaches Quaritch, who is barking orders amid a hive of activity around the ampsuits.

SELFRIDGE

This thing is completely out of control!

Quaritch ignores him, turning away to focus on ordnance loading.

SELFRIDGE

Listen to me! I am not authorizing you to turn the mine-workers local into a freakin' militia!

QUARITCH

I declared threat condition red. That puts all on-world assets under my command.

SELFRIDGE

You think you can pull this palace coup shit on me?! I can have your ass with one call --

Quaritch grabs him and PINS him against the side of an ampsuit.

QUARITCH

You're a long way from Earth.

Selfridge is paralyzed. Physical force -- against him? Quaritch releases him and walks away.

QUARITCH

(to his men)

Get him out of here.

Several troopers converge on Selfridge.

SELFRIDGE

You touch me you're so fired.

He pushes through them and they escort him toward the door.

CUT TO:

INT. SHACK - DAY

HUMAN JAKE, NORM and TRUDY are gathered around the comms monitor, talking to MAX.

MAX

I don't know how secure this channel is.

JAKE

Talk fast.

MAX

It's crazy here, Jake. It's full mobilization. They're rigging the shuttles as bombers. They've made up these big pallets of mine explosives. It's for some kind of shock and awe campaign.

TRUDY

Frickin' daisycutters.

NORM

Holy shit.

JAKE

(to Max)

Can you talk to Selfridge? Maybe we can cut some kinda deal before this thing goes all the way.

MAX

No, Quaritch has taken over. He's rolling and there's no stopping him.

JAKE

When?

MAX

Oh six hundred tomorrow.

Jake takes that in.

JAKE

Thanks.

Max signs off.

NORM

We're screwed.

TRUDY

You know he's gonna commit those bombers straight to the Well of Souls.

JAKE

That's right. Because I gave it to him on a plate.

TRUDY

We both did.

NORM

If he takes out the Well of Souls -- it's over. It's their main line to Eywa, to their ancestors -- it'll destroy them.

JAKE

Then I guess we better stop him.

Jake looks like he's about to collapse. He's gaunt, eyes deeply shadowed, hands shaking.

TRUDY

You need to get some rack.

He grabs a packet of freeze-dried crystals and pours them directly into his mouth, chewing them up.

JAKE

Gonna have to settle for coffee.

CUT TO:

EXT. BATTLE CAMP - DUSK

TRACKING through the warrior camp above the Well of Souls. Hundreds of hunters from many clans prepare their weapons.

Hunters paint the wings of their banshees like war ponies. DIREHORSES are painted and ornamented with totemic streamers.

The Na'vi paint and pierce themselves. Dance. Bathe in the smoke of cleansing herbs -- RITUAL PURIFICATION. HUGE DRUMS are beaten. A dark primeval energy. They are psyching themselves up for battle.

JAKE (V.O.)

I was a warrior who dreamed he could bring peace. But there was only one thing I was ever really good at. Ooh-rah.

TIME CUT -- Jake, Neytiri a group of banshee riders squat around an animal skin on which he has drawn the silhouette of a Scorpion gunship -- like a hunt totem.

JAKE

(Na'vi/subtitled)

Strike here and here.

Jake splats red dye at the centers of the circles symbolizing the rotors. The Na'vi absorb the lesson eagerly, like kids.

He sees TRUDY approaching and breaks off. Neytiri stays with the hunters, talking about what they've learned.

TRUDY

(low)

You know our chances suck.

JAKE

Yeah.

TRUDY

Going up against gunships with bows and arrows...

JAKE

What's your point?

TRUDY
 (nodding)
 Right.

She taps his fist and walks away toward her SAMSON.

CUT TO:

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - NIGHT

The cook-fires of the battle camp FLICKER like a constellation around the edge of the Well of Souls as --

JAKE slips down into the darkened, empty amphitheater.

He moves to the MOTHER TREE -- gnarled, ancient, MAJESTIC. The roots spread in all directions, like the center of the world.

Jake steps forward. The willow-like tendrils SWAY toward him, moving in a breeze that isn't there.

JAKE
 I've never done this in my life.

He squats at the base of the tree.

JAKE
 And I'm probably just talking to a tree right now. But if you're there -- I need to give you a heads up.

He looks up into the tree. The hanging tendrils undulate softly. It's easy to imagine a presence.

JAKE
 If Grace is there with you -- look in her memories -- she can show you the world we come from. There's no green there. They killed their Mother, and they're gonna do the same thing here.

FROM UP IN THE TREE, looking down. WOODSPRITES float in silence, moving around aimlessly.

JAKE
 More Sky People are gonna come. They're gonna come like a rain that never ends --

Neytiri approaches silently behind him, listening.

JAKE
 -- until they've covered the world.
 Unless we stop them.
 (MORE)

JAKE (cont'd)

Look, you chose me for somethin'. And I'll stand and fight, you know I will.
But I could use a little help here.

Jake senses Neytiri and turns.

NEYTIRI

Our Great Mother does not take sides.
She protects only the balance of life.

She comes to him, intertwining her long fingers with his.

JAKE

It was worth a try.

They lean in, foreheads touching, bodies pressed together.
Holding each other -- in this, the last moment of peace.

CUT TO:

TIGHT ON a turbine as it starts to turn. Its RISING WHINE carries over --

A SERIES OF RHYTHMIC CUTS:

MAGAZINES are slammed into automatic weapons. AMMO BELTS are fed into rotary cannons. MISSILES are attached to gunship stub-wings.

TIGHT ON BLUE HANDS sharpening wooden arrows. Stringing bows. Cinching direhorse harnesses.

TROOPERS DROP into amsuit cockpits. PILOTS close gunship canopies. TROOPERS run up shuttle ramps.

LONG LENS STACK, tight and abstract on gunships as they rise in a swarm amid boiling turbine exhaust and blasting rotor wash.

EXT. RAINFOREST/ AERIAL - DAWN

WIDE SHOT -- TILTROTORS fill the sky. Deadly armored beetles.

The DRAGON leads the formation, flanked by SCORPIONS. Behind that is a wave of SAMSONS, and last, the two enormous VALKYRIE shuttles, packed with troops and amsuits.

INSIDE THE DRAGON, Quaritch surveys his armada as they skim over the tree tops.

THEY SWEEP toward the Hallelujah mountains in a thundering wave.

EXT. MOUNTAINS/ AERIAL - DAWN

SQUADRONS OF BANSHEES darken the sky in waves, led by a single GREAT LEONOPTERYX. Jake sits astride his mount, flanked by Neytiri and Tsu'tey on their banshees.

EXT. MOUNTAINS - DAWN

THE DRAGON DESCENDS on final approach to a large clearing -- the LZ. The Samsons flair and touch down, disgorging troops, while the gunships hover protectively.

THE VALKYRIES blast the ground with their powerful lift jets. They land. The ramps drop. Troopers pour out, weapons leveled, advancing in a cordon.

UP ANGLE as AMPSUITS descend from the Dragon on cables. Their massive feet smash down, and they march forward, leading the army into the forest.

LYLE WAINFLEET, walking point in his hydraulic suit, scans his cockpit screens. He sees movement on the FLIR display -- ghostly THERMAL SIGNATURES.

WAINFLEET

Contact. Two hundred meters.

A chilling SOUND echoes through the forest -- the ululating WAR CRIES of untold Na'vi. The troopers, look around, spooked. They can't tell where the sound is coming from.

Then they feel it -- the GROUND ITSELF SHAKING. They grip their weapons, bracing themselves as --

THREE HUNDRED NA'VI HORSEMEN charge through the forest at a full gallop, their hooves POUNDING the earth. It is an awesome sight.

NORM SPELLMAN rides with the Na'vi hunters, carrying an assault rifle.

THE NA'VI CHARGE thunders toward the human line. The hunters raise their bows as --

THE AMPSUITS raise their GAU-90's.

ON THE THERMAL IMAGERS target-cursors track the ghost riders.

QUARITCH

Fire for effect.

The entire line of troopers opens fire. TRACERS riddle the jungle, blasting foliage into confetti.

CHARGING DIREHORSES crash down, flipping over. Riders are flung off. The withering fire continues, and the ranks are decimated as --

RIDERS LAUNCH their arrows at a full gallop. A few hit their marks among the troopers. NORM FIRES his AR on full auto.

TWO CHARGING DIREHORSES have a heavy log slung between them like a battering ram. At a full gallop they hit an amsuit, FLIPPING IT onto its back with a blown-out canopy. Victory is short lived as the two riders are cut down.

NORM'S HORSE is hit by tracer fire. He is flung off as the creature cartwheels. He hits hard, scrambling for cover as --

A WARRIOR HURLS his spear a moment before his horse is cut down. It SLAMS through an amsuit's canopy but --

THE MERCILESS FIRE continues. Horses rear and collapse. Riders pivot their mounts to flee and --

THE THERMAL SCREENS show the remaining ghost riders scattering.

LYLE signals and the line advances, firing sporadically at moving targets.

OVERHEAD, NA'VI HUNTERS stream through the trees, running along the branches.

As the troopers advance into bow range, the NA'VI open fire and --

TROOPERS SPROUT ARROWS in throat, legs, masks -- the targets Jake taught them, but --

THE FIRING LINE aims upward, tracking the THERMAL TARGETS. TRACERS rip through the foliage and -- NA'VI FALL while others retreat as bark and wood is blasted off the limbs beneath their feet.

NORM sprints frantically through the woods, shouting into his HANDSET --

NORM
Jake! Jake! We're falling back!

SURVIVING NA'VI flee the horrific onslaught. It is a total rout.

IN THE DRAGON, Quaritch catches glimpses of the figures streaming through the forest below.

QUARITCH

Blue team, switch forties. Fire at will.

Led by the Dragon, the gunships FIRE streamers of 40mm ROCKETS ahead of them. The jungle EXPLODES with HE bursts. Circular SHOCK WAVES flash outward through the jungle --

STROBOSCOPIC GLIMPSES of terrified horses rearing, Na'vi leaping, as the jungle rocks with the concussive onslaught.

HUNTERS LOOK UP as a dark shape hovers overhead. The downblast of the VALKYRIE'S lift jets shreds the forest.

INSIDE THE SHUTTLE'S cargo bay, a row of DAISYCUTTERS are lined up. Troopers roll the first pallet down the ramp.

THE PALLET falls into the jungle below and --

BA-WHOOOOOM! -- an enormous high-explosive blast rips a huge hole in the forest. A white concussion wave flashes out across the ground for hundreds of meters in all directions.

AT GROUND LEVEL it is an apocalypse. Running Na'vi are blasted out of existence by fire and shock waves.

IN THE CARGO BAY the troopers WHOOP and high-five.

TROOPERS

Yeah baby! Get some!

GROUND TROOPS ADVANCE, firing flamethrowers, AR's and GAU-90's.

EXT. FLOATING MOUNTAINS - AERIAL

Quaritch's fleet flies into the shadow of the Mountain of Truth.

QUARITCH

Blue team, stay with the ground units.
Red team, with me. We're punching for the main target.

Quaritch glances up to see --

A squadron of WINGED SHAPES, diving out of the morning glare like birds of prey.

CLOSE ON JAKE, rushing straight down, SCREAMING a war cry as he leads the charge and --

SCORES OF BANSHEES SLAM into the gunships and Samsons like falcons hitting fat turkeys. The air battle is joined.

JAKE'S GREAT LEONOPTERYX flairs into its signature crimson X shape just before --

K-WHAM!! -- it knocks a Scorpion tumbling. It coils around the gunship, slashing furiously as they spin together. JAKE can barely hang onto the gyrating creature.

The pilot of the Scorpion sees nothing but jaws slamming into his canopy. Jake releases the gunship and it careens into a CLIFF, tearing off one rotor -- then plummets into the trees. There is a satisfying FIREBALL.

SCORPIONS fall out of formation to pursue individual banshee riders, FIRING cannons and rockets.

JAKE BANKS as the cliff face next to him explodes with cannon rounds. SCREAMING down on him is another Scorpion.

JAKE tucks and dives along the cliff, feeling the rounds splitting the air around him and --

The Scorpions bank after the furiously jinking banshees as they head for cover among the floating mountains, or dive down into the trees.

DOOR GUNNERS in a SAMSON are shooting down banshees like Messerschmidts from a B-17 as --

WE FOLLOW TSU'TEY'S BANSHEE in a full delta dive. He swoops in from its blind spot and --

THE GUNNERS SWIVEL too late as Tsu'tey flashes past them, SHOOTING ARROWS with deadly accuracy.

A SCORPION gunship dives after a banshee. It fires an air-to-air missile and the banshee vanishes in an EXPLOSION.

WIDE SHOT as thirty ships and hundreds of banshees wheel and dive, like the Battle of Britain. Banshees are hit by guns and missiles, falling out of the sky. The occasional trail of smoke and fire marks the demise of a tilt-rotor.

IN THE CENTER the Dragon is pouring out hellacious fire -- tracer rounds from multiple turrets and missiles from the stub-wing pods.

NEYTIRI BANKS hard as TRACERS flash past her. A Scorpion is right on her ass as --

SHE ROLLS inverted and dives under the edge of Mons Veritatis, then rolls out, zig-zagging through the dangling vines but --

THE GUNSHIP stays on her. It rips through the vines, and tracers FLASH toward us as --

SHE JINKS the banshee around a thundering waterfall but --

HER PURSUER explodes right through the curtain of water. It launches an air-to-air missile. NEYTIRI jinks hard, diving. The missile hits a rock outcropping, pummeling her with the shock wave.

THE GUNSHIP follows her through a narrow slit between Mons Veritatis and a smaller floating island. They run this slot rolled up on their sides and --

THE SCORPION GUNNER locks up Neytiri for a missile shot but --

A SHADOW crosses his canopy. Out of the sun comes a crimson demon, shrieking over the roar of the turbines, and --

K-WHAMMM!! The leonopteryx SLAMS the gunship, driving it downward in a dive. The leonopteryx lashes at it with claws and teeth as they fall together out of control.

Jake kicks the gunship loose and it falls like a brick, breaking its back on a rocky promontory and EXPLODING.

FLYING WITH A SAMSON as a SECOND SAMSON falls in beside it. This one has its pilot door off, and the PILOT is wearing a breathing mask. The door gunners wave at -- TRUDY, her expression grim behind her mask. She holds the cyclic stick between her knees while she RAKES the other ship with BURSTS from an AR in her lap.

The pilot slumps over and the craft tumbles out of control.

TRUDY

You're not the only ones with guns, you pricks.

NEYTIRI JINKS her banshee hard, an enemy Samson right behind her. The pilot is a hotdog, following her down into the trees, under the canopy.

They slalom among the trunks at high speed. The gunners hang half out the doors, firing. Bark and leaves explode around Neytiri as she zig-zags through the jungle.

THE BANSHEE dives under a huge tree limb, and the pilot follows. He looks up at the last second, catching a glimpse of blue-skinned figures.

THE HUNTERS drop a net of woven vines behind Neytiri and --

The SAMSON hits it hard. The net fouls the ship, FLIPPING IT backwards. It crashes upside down to the forest floor.
KABOOM!!

NEYTIRI'S BANSHEE is hit by GROUND-FIRE. It folds up like a broken kite, crashing down through branches and --

SHE SLAMS into the ground, stunned.

IN THE DRAGON Quaritch looks ahead, seeing the WELL OF SOULS. He taps the pilot and points --

QUARITCH

There it is.

(into his headset)

Valkyrie One, this is Dragon. Target is in sight.

IN THE CARGO BAY of Valkyrie One, the troopers ready their deadly loads.

TROOPER

Target in sight.

CIRCLING ABOVE, Tsu'tey falls in beside Jake, who talks to him by AIRCOM HEADSET.

JAKE

We have to stop the shuttles, no matter what it takes.

TSU'TEY nods. He signals, gathering other hunters, who fall in with him as he dives. Jake rolls in after them but --

A GUNSHIP drops in behind him and he is forced to evade as --

TSU'TEY LEADS the attack on the first shuttle. Hunters jink and weave through WITHERING FIRE from the escort ships.

GUNNERS with jerry-rigged gun mounts ride the broad backs of the shuttles, picking off banshees who get past the escort.

TSU'TEY is RAKED by a burst from the dorsal gunners. His mount crumples, plummeting with a dying scream and --

WE SPIRAL DOWN with him, the forest rushing up and --

A BLINDING BLIZZARD of green as he tears downward, catching at leaves and vines. He SLAMS to the ground, badly injured.

NEARBY, amsuits and troopers advance across the forest floor, firing their cannons and flamethrowers. The GAU-90s rip the forest to shreds.

Norm, firing as he retreats, is HIT. He collapses, his avatar body mortally wounded as --

HYDRAULIC FEET approach, passing the bodies of direhorses and Na'vi hunters. Norm painfully tries to load another magazine, panting in fear and pain as --

AN AMPSUIT stomps up. Aims its cannon point blank. B-BLAM!

INT. SHACK

The top of Norm's LINK bangs open. He reels out, collapsing onto the floor, clutching himself as if he can still feel the pain of death.

He sits, huddled, shivering -- crazed.

EXT. RAINFOREST

TSU'TEY lies gasping, mortally injured. He looks up, grimacing, as an ampsuit looms over him.

LYLE WAINFLEET reaches down and grabs Tsu'tey by his queue, lifting him painfully.

WAINFLEET

I hear this is worse than death for you,
chief.

WAINFLEET cuts Tsu'tey's queue off near the base. TSU'TEY SCREAMS in agony, his nervous system exploding on overload. Grinning, Lyle holds up the queue -- Tsu'tey's only connection to the world-consciousness which is his life.

NEYTIRI -- bleeding, bruised -- staggers amid burning wreckage. AMPSUIT footsteps approach and she crouches behind a tree. Troopers are seconds from seeing her as --

NEYTIRI knocks an arrow to HER FATHER'S BOW, and readies herself for a last kamikaze shot when --

THE TROOPER on the far right of the firing line sees something on his screens.

TROOPER

Right flank -- something's coming! It's all lit up out there.

The troopers become aware of the GROUND SHAKING. A slow building thunderous ROAR and --

AN AMPSUIT comes FLYING out of the trees, cartwheeling past them, and the SHAKING BUILDS --

EXT. WELL OF SOULS

Mo'at opens her eyes in sudden realization as --

EXT. FOREST

The troopers pivot to face --

A WALL OF CHARGING HAMMERHEADS CRASHING out of the foliage in a shower of broken branches as --

THE TROOPERS open fire but -- the stampede drives over them like a wave. Tree-trunk feet shatter the amsuit cockpits. Troopers are crushed or asphyxiated.

NEARBY the foot-soldiers see LIVING SHADOWS flow out of the gloom as -- VIPERWOLVES race among them with flashing jaws. The troopers FIRE wildly as they go down, hitting each other as much as their attackers.

The survivors break and run as more viperwolves bound out of the shadows.

JAKE BANKS, watching as HUNDREDS of rider-less WILD BANSHEES converge on Quaritch's ships. They literally darken the sky.

JAKE

What the hell -- ?

The wild banshees wheel among the ships, ripping into them.

ON JAKE -- slowly getting it. EYWA is in the fight.

JAKE

WHOO-HOOOO!

A GUNNER fires from the door of a Samson. There is a CRASH and the head of a BANSHEE lunges in the open door, jerking him out. Other banshees tear at the pilot's windshield.

NEYTIRI watches in awe as the ground troops scatter in disarray. The viperwolves flash past her, ignoring her.

She senses something and turns slowly to see --

A THANATOR emerging from the smoke behind her. A glistening black demon. She stands paralyzed before its stygian gaze--

-- and the thanator lowers itself, until its head is just above the ground. It holds that position -- waiting.

Trembling, she approaches the waiting demon.

EXT. FOREST

A smoky hell. Fires burn all around. The troopers are disorganized, falling back. Shooting at shadows. Panicked yelling fills the comm freq.

WAINFLEET and another AMPSUIT are charging together through the smoky gloom.

WAINFLEET

A and C squads -- rally at my pos. I want --

(screaming on the comm)

Who's screaming God damn it?!

TROOPER (ON RADIO)

We gotta get outta here! Whoever's in charge, call for extraction!

WAINFLEET

Shutup you crybabies!

SOMETHING slams into the other 'suit, tackling it OUT OF FRAME. Wainfleet whirls to see his squad-mate missing. He moves through a screen of foliage to reveal --

The AMPSUIT -- ripped open. Driver gone. Blood inside the cockpit. He WHIRLS at a sound in time to see --

A THANATOR LEAPING straight at him -- WAINFLEET raises his cannon but--

WHAM!! It's on him, slamming him to the ground. The cannon goes flying. He's face to face with its nightmare jaws, right outside his canopy--

On its back is NEYTIRI, and it's a toss up which one looks more pissed off. The thanator rears back, muscles rippling as it poises to strike and --

K-KRAAACKK! Slams its teeth right through his canopy. Wainfleet's SCREAM is brief.

Neytiri's demon mount rears up and its triumphant ROAR echoes through the forest.

INT. CORRIDOR

Max runs down the hall, leading the other scientists. He's yelling into an AIRCOM HANDSET --

MAX

Rogue One, Rogue One, this is Max. Tell
Jake we are in motion.
(to the scientists)
Get in there. Barricade the door!

INT. LINK ROOM

The door is hurled open and the SCIENTISTS charge in.

Science geeks barricade the door as AVATAR-DRIVERS scramble into their link units, pulling the clamshells down.

INT. CORRIDOR

Max checks the door is secure from his side then runs down a connecting corridor.

CUT TO:

EXT. SHACK

HUMAN NORM emerges from the airlock, wearing breathing gear and carrying an AR. He stumbles, dazed, toward the battle.

EXT. MOUNTAINS/ AERIAL

JAKE SIGNALS and a formation of hunters rolls in, diving at the lead shuttle, which is already besieged by winged creatures.

THE CARGO RAMP is the scene of a pitched battle. Na'vi hunters hurl themselves off their mounts in waves, overwhelming the troopers.

HUNTERS are shot, falling out of the ship, as others fly in. They shoot arrows and spears from the end of the ramp, and troopers fall back deeper into the fuselage.

The panicked CREW CHIEF slams a switch and the ramp begins to close, a second before he is cut down by a spear.

JAKE'S LEONOPTERYX plummets at the shuttle from behind. He swoops down, flairs to reduce speed, rolls off his mount and lands, tumbling on the shuttle's broad back as --

GUNNERS try to swing their guns toward him but he RAKES them with his AR, still running forward and --

JAKE PULLS two grenades from his battle harness, yanking the pins out with his teeth. He hurls them down the intakes of the VTOL turbofans as --

HIS LEONOPTERYX BANKS in a tight arc back toward him and --

HE SPRINTS ON as the grenades EXPLODE, shattering the turbines, which riddle the fuselage with shrapnel and --

JAKE LEAPS INTO SPACE, landing on the back of his mount and reconnecting. They flap away, gaining altitude as fire BLASTS out of the bottom of the shuttle.

ON THE FLIGHT DECK, the pilot feels the ship dropping.

PILOT

Mains to a hundred percent! Get me airspeed!

The pilot and copilot slam the throttle levers forward and --

The FUSION ENGINES BLAZE, thrusting the shuttle forward. It still falls, its remaining lift fans screaming, until --

IT'S CLIPPING the tree tops when it gets enough translational lift to fly and --

THE PILOT PULLS back on the stick, lifting the nose.

PILOT

We're good!

BEHIND HIM, a surviving Na'vi hunter runs forward and -- THOONK! ARROWHEADS sprout from the pilots' necks and chests.

THE SHUTTLE CLIMBS out of control, at full acceleration. It SLAMS into the underside of MONS Veritatis. It EXPLODES, and hundreds of tons of flaming debris drop back into the forest.

ON THE FLIGHT DECK of the other SHUTTLE, the pilots watch the wreckage falling.

PILOT

Valkyrie Two is breaking off. And if any of ya'll want to get off this piece of shit planet, you better cover our ass,
'cause we're the only way back to orbit.

GUNSHIP PILOT

Roger that.

FROM THE DRAGON COCKPIT Quaritch watches the shuttle bank away, with most of the remaining gunships following.

QUARITCH

Get back here you worthless pukes!

PILOT
Are we breaking off?

Quaritch draws his pistol.

QUARITCH
What do you think?

He is over the edge-- no logic in his brain now. Only death.

INT. OPS CENTER/CORRIDOR

Techs and troopers crowd around consoles, listening to all the yelling and confusion as they try to plot the disintegrating battle.

SELFRIDGE
(in growing alarm)
What the hell is going on out there?

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST

Regular troopers and volunteers FLEE through the jungle, scrambling to board SAMSONS as they touch down.

INT. DRAGON COCKPIT

The pilot listens to comms from Hell's Gate.

PILOT
Sir, all ground units are falling back to the LZ.

Quaritch's jaw clenches.

QUARITCH
Stay on target.

EXT. WELL OF SOULS

Mo'at LOOKS UP as the DRAGON appears over the trees like the shadow of Death. Around her, the Na'vi mothers clutch their children to them. We see AKWEY'S BOY among them.

INT. DRAGON COCKPIT

Quaritch sets the target cursor on the MOTHER TREE and what we recognize is the ghostly figure of Mo'at.

QUARITCH
Switch missiles. Arm all pods.

PILOT

Arming.

QUARITCH

Let's see what these blue bastards do when I bitch-slap their goddess.

EXT. MOUNTAINS/ AERIAL

JAKE'S LEONOPTERYX drops toward the Dragon like a Mig 29. He pulls out, skimming over the ship. Uncoupling, he rolls backward off his mount and --

JAKE HITS, skidding, on the hull of the Dragon. He rolls to his feet, already running as --

QUARITCH sees the leonopteryx WHOOSH overhead and flap away with no rider. He snap-looks aft to see --

JAKE SPRINTING along the spine of the ship, yanking two grenades from his battle-harness, pulling the pins with his teeth, then --

QUARITCH's hand shoots out and SLAMS the pilot's CYCLIC STICK hard over. THE DRAGON lurches sideways, rolling sharply with a ROAR of protesting rotors and --

JAKE IS FLUNG off his feet. The grenades miss the TURBINE INTAKES. One bounces off the ship. The other lodges against a cowling and --

JAKE SLIDES OFF the ship, falling as -- K-BLAM! The grenade blows a two meter hole in the hull --

WHOOOSHH! Pandoran air swirls inside.

QUARITCH

(to the pilot)

Put your mask on.

Quaritch leaps out of his seat, heading aft as --

JAKE GRABS the edge of a weapons pod, his feet dangling over open space.

HOLDING HIS BREATH, Quaritch blows a RESCUE HATCH and leans outside. Jake sees him aim his massive PISTOL.

K-WHAM! K-WHAM! Rounds clang next to Jake's head. He LETS GO, plummeting into the trees --

Jake plunges through jungle canopy. He catches a HUGE LEAF, as Neytiri taught him -- it bends down, breaking his fall --

HE LETS GO, dropping again only to catch ANOTHER LEAF, and then another, and --

WE RUSH DOWN with him through this green blur. Jake drops to the ground in a feral crouch. Unhurt.

JAKE
(into his headset)
Quaritch is gonna take out the Well of Souls! He's got a clear shot. Hit him, anybody that can! Do it now!

IN HER SAMSON Trudy Chacon is all business.

TRUDY
On it.

SHE BANKS hard, pulling g's, coming around on the Dragon. She pours on the coal and the Samson leaps forward, straight at the WARSHIP.

QUARITCH, DRILLS a stream of tracers at her, tearing through her canopy, ripping chunks off her fuselage.

IN THE JUNGLE BELOW, Norm watches her kamikaze run --

NORM
No!

TRUDY
(clipped, pilot-like)
Norm, I love you.

TRUDY DIVES, raking through treetops and then, at the last instant, YANKS BACK on the stick and --

THE SAMSON leaps straight up and -- K-KRASH!! SHEARS OFF THE COCKPIT of the Dragon as --

QUARITCH THROWS HIMSELF aft along the aisle and --

TRUDY'S SAMSON disintegrates, the wreckage burning as it tumbles into the jungle.

MILES QUARITCH grips the bulkhead as he stares out the open front of the fuselage. Wind howls through wreckage where the pilot used to be. The forest rushes up to meet him and --

THE DRAGON CRASHES through splintering trees, IMPACTING in a lake with a WHITE BLAST of water.

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

Norm takes a few steps and drops to his knees. Imploded by grief.

INT. OPS CENTER/ HELL'S GATE

ON THE PLOTTING DISPLAY as Quaritch's TRANSPONDER ICON disappears.

TROOPER

Dragon is down. It's off the board.

SELFRIDGE

What do you mean, off the board?!

Selfridge is stunned. Suddenly the ROAR of an ENGINE makes them all look up.

OUTSIDE THE WINDOW, MAX sits in the cab of an enormous SLASH-CUTTER. Max flips Selfridge the bird and pushes a lever forward --

SELFRIDGE

Oh shit.

Selfridge DIVES as --

K-RASHHHHH! The SPINNING TEETH of the SLASH-CUTTER tear through the window in a blast of glass and lethal air. Alarms go off. The technicians dive for cover in a blizzard of glass and shredded debris.

The slash-cutter head pulls back, and AVATARS SCRAMBLE through the gaping hole into the Ops Center --

The TROOPERS look up to see blue giants aiming weapons down at them. The battle is over in seconds. The avatars are holding the Ops Center.

Selfridge lies there gasping, in his emergency mask. In shock. How could this be happening?

CUT TO:

EXT. LAKE

THE DRAGON lies half submerged. Out of the water FG, a shape rises -- a AMPSUIT. Inside -- MILES QUARITCH, his face bloody, his eyes burning.

He slogs out of the water, covered with mud, then strides into the forest.

QUARITCH'S AMPSUIT THUDS relentlessly through the jungle. He sees something through the foliage ahead -- the SHACK.

INSIDE THE SHACK Jake is oblivious under the link. Through a window we see Quaritch's AMPSUIT step into the clearing.

QUARITCH levels his GAU-90 at the shack. His finger goes to the firing button--

WHAM!! A six-legged BLACK DEMON tackles him.

Quaritch pivots as he falls, FIRING the cannon. It misses Neytiri by inches. He grapples with the THANATOR as its razor claws SCREECH over his metal armor.

THE TITANS twist and struggle. QUARITCH UNLEASHES a long burst from the cannon. Rounds tear into the creature, which SHRIEKS but --

NEYTIRI wills it to SMASH the cannon hard against a rock, tearing it loose from the 'suit's hand but --

Quaritch SLAMS the thanator back against a tree-trunk, almost crushing Neytiri.

CLOSE ON one hydraulic hand, as it draws the 'suit's KNIFE and -- QUARITCH TWISTS violently, ramming the knife up under the thanator's chest armor. The creature ROARS and Quaritch flips on top of it, stabbing.

QUARITCH STABS DOWN AGAIN. The thanator slumps, pinning Neytiri's legs under its great bulk. She is trapped.

Quaritch looks down at Neytiri. She glares back at him, panting, scared but defiant.

JAKE (O.S.)
It's all over Quaritch --

Quaritch turns, seeing Jake DROPPING from a tree limb. The 'suit rises slowly, knife glinting in the morning sun.

QUARITCH
Nothing's over while I'm breathing.

JAKE
Kinda hoped you'd say that.

QUARITCH SURGES forward. JAKE closes fast, snatching up the broken CANNON as --

Quaritch SLASHES DOWN with the knife and Jake parries, blocking it with the cannon. He CLOSES faster than the suit can move and --

K-CRACK! -- SLAMS the end of the cannon into the canopy, crazing it with a web of cracks as QUARITCH SLICES air with the huge knife. Jake ducks, coming up to meet the next slash and -- SMASHES the knife hand with the cannon once -- twice -- again -- in a furious attack -- knocking the knife flying.

QUARITCH catches him with the other arm, hurling him away. Jake rolls just before --

THUDD! -- the massive foot stomps down where he just was. He scrambles up as Quaritch CHARGES and --

JAKE DUCKS another round-house, LEAPING forward to smash the canopy again -- then again -- until it is WHITE with cracks. Quaritch manages to GRAB the cannon barrel but --

INSIDE THE COCKPIT, he sees nothing but the sun on the shattered glass. HE HURLS the cannon blindly, but Jake ducks. The massive cylinder cartwheels toward the shack and --

FROM INSIDE we see it CRASH against pressure window, crazing it but not penetrating. Jake's link sits just inside.

INSIDE THE COCKPIT, Quaritch yanks a yellow handle and --

P-FOOM! -- the canopy BLOWS OFF, flying through the air. Quaritch can see again. He dons his breathing mask. Bends to pick up his KNIFE.

NEARBY NEYTIRI struggles furiously, trying to get her legs free from underneath three tons of thanator.

QUARITCH, panting, glowers at Jake.

QUARITCH

How does it feel to betray your own race?

Then, inexplicably, he TURNS. Walks away.

FROM INSIDE the shack, we see him charge straight toward us and --

CRASH! -- he puts his hydraulic fist right through the window. He is reaching inside for the Link when --

JAKE HITS in a flying tackle with every ounce of force he has, knocking the ampsuit sideways and --

JAKE REACHES around the suit, grabbing Quaritch's shoulder and, yanks him forward HARD, SMASHING his face into the edge of the cockpit but --

QUARITCH flings him off with a sweep of his arm, and Jake slams to the ground.

INSIDE THE LINK Jake is holding his breath as the toxic Pandoran air swirls in. GAS ALARMS SHRIEK.

NEYTIRI shoves with one free leg, desperately trying to pull her other leg out.

THE AMPSUIT charges, the knife flashing down and -- JAKE just manages to catch it in both hands, but the force of the attack drives him to his knees as --

QUARITCH pushes the knife down inexorably, until Jake is pinned against a rock, the blade now inches from his throat.

INSIDE THE LINK Jake is straining to stay conscious, to stay connected as --

THE KNIFE reaches his throat as --

THWAP! AN ARROW APPEARS in Quaritch's chest. He looks up.

NEYTIRI STANDS -- a FURY released. A classic archer figure, she NOCKS another arrow. Then draws and releases smoothly.

TH-WHAP! The machine TOPPLES off Jake and lies still.

QUARITCH STARES at the two arrows in his chest. He touches the feathers of the ancient weapon, then -- with an ironic laugh -- he dies.

NEYTIRI runs up, another arrow nocked, bow drawn. Seeing Quaritch, she lowers her father's bow.

JAKE sees her, then goes limp, his eyes rolling back, and --

INT. SHACK

HUMAN JAKE EXPLODES out of the Link, slamming to the floor where he gags for breath. With his last strength, he claws toward an emergency breathing mask -- across the room.

He scrambles toward it, on the edge of unconsciousness.

NEYTIRI VAULTS through the shattered window, landing in the debris like a cat. She GRABS the mask and flashes to Jake's side -- puts the mask over his face and -- JAKE drags in breath after breath. He looks up at Neytiri, studying him as she holds him -- seeing his human body for the first time.

Jake touches her face, his pale human hand against the blue of her skin. Their eyes meet across the glass of the mask -- together, separate. Worldless.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

MO'AT tends to the mortally wounded TSU'TEY as AVATAR JAKE arrives with Neytiri. Mo'at has bound his wounds, but by her expression, it is clear he cannot be saved.

Jake kneels and Tsu'tey opens his eyes. Through a haze of pain, he recognizes Jake.

TSU'TEY
(Na'vi)
I See you, Jakesully.

JAKE
I See you, Tsu'tey te Rongloa Ateyitan.

TSU'TEY
Are the people safe?

JAKE
They're safe.

Tsu'tey weakly clutches his severed queue.

TSU'TEY
I can never ride again, or bond with my woman -- or hear the voice of Eywa. I can not lead the People. You will lead them, Jakesully.

JAKE
No. I'm not officer material.

TSU'TEY
It is decided. Now do the duty of Olo'eyctan. Set my spirit free.

JAKE
I'm not killing you.

TSU'TEY
I am already dead.

JAKE

No.

TSU'TEY

It is the way. And it is good. I will be remembered --

Tsu'tey's voice is weak, but thick with emotion.

TSU'TEY

-- I fought with Toruk Macto, we were brothers -- and he was my last shadow.

TSU'TEY'S HAND clasps with Jake's in a fierce grip. Jake draws his knife.

TSU'TEY'S POV -- Jake leans forward, blocking the sun. HIS SHADOW falls across Tsu'tey.

JAKE

(Na'vi)

Forgive me, my Brother. Go now to the Mother Spirit.

By his movement, we know that he has ended Tsu'tey's pain. Jake's eyes well with tears as he continues reciting the prayer for the dead, and his Na'vi words carry over as we --

DISSOLVE TO:

EXT. HELL'S GATE -DAY

Na'vi ride direhorses among the abandoned machines of Hell's Gate.

Banshees roost on the roofs of the modules, and stingbats flutter about, unimpeded. The SENTRY GUNS are silent, and the GATES are open to the forest.

JAKE (V.O.)

A few chose to stay. Fewer were chosen.

Max, Norm, and a few of the avatars hold AR's as the personnel of Hell's Gate file up the cargo ramp of the remaining shuttle. The evicted humans are sullen and angry, like POW's.

JAKE and NEYTIRI stand together, watching the departure of the Sky People.

PARKER SELFRIDGE shuffles up the ramp. His eyes -- the eyes of a lost soul -- meet JAKE'S. He disappears into the ship.

CUT TO:

EXT. SPACE

ISV VENTURE STAR hangs suspended against the dark side of PANDORA. The ISV's antimatter engines BLAZE to life and it accelerates out of orbit.

What remains IN FRAME is a virgin, primeval world. Spanning the black continents is a vast reticulated lace-work of BIOLUMINESCENCE -- a ghostly WEB connecting all of Pandora.

CUT TO:

EXT. RAINFOREST - DAY

The sun's rays shaft down through the layers of canopy.

JAKE (V.O.)

The forest will heal, and so will the hearts of the People. New life keeps the energy flowing, like the breath of the world.

NEYTIRI, obviously pregnant, is bow-fishing in the shallows. Children jump and squeal with laughter in the river.

JAKE (V.O.)

This is my last videolog.

INT. LINK ROOM

VIDEO IMAGE -- Jake sits in a chair, talking straight TO CAMERA. He is thin, pale. He looks around the high tech room.

JAKE

The science guys will keep the lights on, here. But I won't miss this place.

EXT. WELL OF SOULS - NIGHT

THE WILLOWS glow softly. The entire Omaticaya clan is gathered, seated in a prayer circle around the Mother Tree.

JAKE (V.O.)

I better wrap this up. There's a funeral tonight, and I don't want to be late. It was someone very close to me.

WIDE SHOT, moving in across the concentric rings of people, all plugged-in and softly chanting. MOVING toward the center, over the figure of Mo'at, to hover above --

NEYTIRI, kneeling beside two FIGURES on the dais --

JAKE and his AVATAR lie head to head. Human Jake is wearing an exomask. Both figures are still, hands folded, covered in translucent silken shrouds of ROOT-CILIA.

CAMERA CLOSES IN as Neytiri removes the mask from Jake's human face. She gently closes his dead eyes with her fingertips. Then bends and kisses him.

MOVE INTO CU on AVATAR JAKE as Neytiri's hand comes into frame, stroking his cheek. TIGHTENING slowly to--

ECU JAKE'S EYES. Hold a beat, then --

They open.

CUT TO BLACK

THE MATRIX

by

Larry and Andy Wachowski

NUMBERED SHOOTING SCRIPT

March 29, 1998

FADE IN:

1

ON COMPUTER SCREEN

1

so close it has no boundaries.

A blinding cursor pulses in the electric darkness like a heart coursing with phosphorous light, burning beneath the derma of black-neon glass.

A PHONE begins to RING, we hear it as though we were making the call. The cursor continues to throb, relentlessly patient, until --

MAN (V.O.)

Yeah?

Data now slashes across the screen, information flashing faster than we can read: "Call trans opt: received. 2-19-98 13:24:18 REC:Log>."

WOMAN (V.O.)

Is everything in place?

On screen: "Trace program: running."

We listen to the phone conversation as though we were on a third line. The man's name is Cypher. The woman, Trinity.

TRINITY (WOMANV.O.)

I said, is everything in place?

The entire screen with racing columns of numbers. Shimmering like green-electric rivers, they rush at a 10-digit phone number in the top corner.

CYPHER (MANV.O.)

You weren't supposed to relieve me.

TRINITY (V.O.)

I know but I felt like taking a shift.

The area code is identified. The first three numbers suddenly fixed, leaving only seven flowing columns.

CYPHER (V.O.)

You like him, don't you? You like watching him?

We begin MOVING TOWARD the screen, CLOSING IN as each digit is matched, one by one, snapping into place like the wheels of a slot machine.

(CONTINUED)

1 CONTINUED:

1

TRINITY (V.O.)
Don't be ridiculous.

CYPHER (V.O.)
We're going to kill him. Do you understand that? He's going to die just like the others.

TRINITY (V.O.)
Morpheus believes he is the One.

Only two thin digits left.

CYPHER (V.O.)
Do you?

TRINITY (V.O.)
I... it doesn't matter what I believe.

CYPHER (V.O.)
You don't, do you?

TRINITY (V.O.)
If you have something to say, I suggest you say it to Morpheus.

CYPHER (V.O.)
I intend to, believe me. Someone has to.

The final NUMBER POPS into place --

TRINITY (V.O.)
Did you hear that?

CYPHER (V.O.)
Hear what?

On screen: "Trace complete. Call origin: #312-555-0690.

TRINITY (V.O.)
Are you sure this line is clean?

CYPHER (V.O.)
Yeah, 'course I'm sure.

We MOVE STILL CLOSER, the ELECTRIC HUM of the green NUMBERS GROWING into an ominous ROAR.

TRINITY (V.O.)
I better go.

(CONTINUED)

1 CONTINUED: (2) 1

She hangs up as we PASS THROUGH the numbers, entering the nether world of the computer screen. Suddenly, a flash-light cuts open the darkness and we find ourselves in --

2 INT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL - NIGHT 2

The hotel was abandoned after a fire licked its way across the polyester carpeting, destroying several rooms as it spooled soot up the walls and ceiling, leaving patterns of permanent shadow.

We FOLLOW four armed POLICE OFFICERS using flashlights as they creep down the blackened hall and ready themselves on either side of Room 303.

The biggest of them violently kicks in the door. The other cops pour in behind him, guns thrust before them.

BIG COP
Police! Freeze!

The room is almost devoid of furniture. There is a fold-up table and chair with a phone, a modem, and a powerbook computer. The only light in the room is the glow of the computer.

Sitting there, her hands still on the keyboard, is TRINITY; a woman in black leather.

BIG COP
Hands behind your head! Now! Do it!

She slowly puts her hands behind her head.

3 EXT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL - NIGHT 3

A black sedan with tinted windows glides in through the police cruisers. AGENT SMITH, AGENT BROWN, and AGENT JONES get out of the car.

They wear dark suits and sunglasses even at night. They are also always hardwired; small Secret Service earphones in one ear, the cord coiling back into their shirt collars.

AGENT SMITH
Lieutenant?

LIEUTENANT
Oh shit.

(CONTINUED)

3

CONTINUED:

3

AGENT SMITH
Lieutenant, you were given specific orders --

LIEUTENANT
I'm just doing my job. You gimme that Juris-my dick-tion and you can cram it up your ass.

AGENT SMITH
The orders were for your protection.

The Lieutenant laughs.

LIEUTENANT
I think we can handle one little girl.

Agent Smith nods to Agent Brown as they start toward the hotel.

LIEUTENANT
I sent two units. They're bringing her down now.

AGENT SMITH
No, Lieutenant, your men are already dead.

4

INT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL

4

The Big Cop flicks out his cuffs, the other cops holding a bead. They've done this a hundred times, they know they've got her, until the Big Cop reaches with the cuffs and Trinity moves --

It almost doesn't register, so smooth and fast, inhumanly fast.

The eye blinks and Trinity's palm snaps up and the nose explodes, blood erupting. Her leg kicks with the force of a wrecking ball and he flies back, a two-hundred-fifty pound sack of limp meat and bone that slams into the cop farthest from her.

Trinity moves again, BULLETS RAKING the walls, flashlights sweeping with panic as the remaining cops try to stop a leather-clad ghost.

A GUN still in the cop's hand is snatched, twisted, and FIRED. There is a final violent exchange of GUNFIRE and when it's over, Trinity is the only one standing.

(CONTINUED)

4

CONTINUED:

4

A flashlight rocks slowly to a stop.

TRINITY

Shit.

5

EXT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL

5

Agent Brown enters the hotel while Agent Smith heads for the alley.

6

INT. HEART O' THE CITY HOTEL

6

Trinity is on the phone, pacing. The other end is answered.

MAN (V.O.)

Operator.

TRINITY

Morpheus! The line was traced! I don't know how.

MORPHEUS (MANV.O.)

I know. They cut the hardline. This line is not a viable exit.

TRINITY

Are there any Agents?

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Yes.

TRINITY

Goddamnit!

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

You have to focus. There is a phone. Wells and Lake. You can make it.

She takes a deep breath, centering herself.

TRINITY

All right --

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Go.

She drops the phone.

7 INT. HALL 7

She bursts out of the room as Agent Brown enters the hall, leading another unit of police. Trinity races to the opposite end, exiting through a broken window onto the fire escape.

8 EXT. FIRE ESCAPE 8

In the alley below, Trinity sees Agent Smith staring at her. She can only go up.

9 EXT. ROOF 9

On the roof, Trinity is running as Agent Brown rises over the parapet, leading the cops in pursuit.

Trinity begins to jump from one roof to the next, her movements so clean, gliding in and out of each jump, contrasted to the wild jumps of the cops.

Agent Brown, however, has the same unnatural grace.

The roof falls away into a wide back alley. The next building is over 40 feet away, but Trinity's face is perfectly calm, staring at some point beyond the other roof.

COP

That's it, we got her now.

The cops slow, realizing they are about to see something ugly as Trinity drives at the edge, launching herself into the air.

From above, the ground seems to flow beneath her as she hangs in flight, then hits, somersaulting up, still running hard.

COP

Jesus Christ -- that's impossible!

They stare, slack-jawed, as Agent Brown duplicates the move exactly, landing, rolling over a shoulder up onto one knee.

It is a dizzying chase up and over the dark plateaued landscape of rooftops and sheer cliffs of brick. Ahead, she sees her only chance, 50 feet beyond the point where her path drops away into a paved chasm, there is□--

10 EXT. WINDOW 10

A yellow glow in the midst of a dark brick building.

Trinity zeros in on it, running as hard as she can and --
(CONTINUED)

10 CONTINUED:

10

Hurtles herself into the empty night space, her body leveling into a dive. She falls, arms covering her head as the whole world seems to spin on its axis --

A10 INT. BACK STAIRWELL

A10

And she crashes with an EXPLOSION of GLASS and WOOD, then falls onto a back stairwell, tumbling, bouncing down stairs bleeding, broken --

But still alive.

She wheels on the smashed opening above, her gun instantly in her hand, trained, waiting for Agent Brown but is met by only a slight WIND that HISSES against the fanged maw of broken glass.

Trinity tries to move. Everything hurts.

TRINITY

Get up, Trinity. You're fine.
Get up -- just get up!

She stands and limps down the rest of the stairs.

11 EXT. STREET

11

Trinity emerges from the shadows of an alley and, at the end of the block, in a pool of white street light, she sees it--

The telephone booth.

Obviously hurt, she starts down the concrete walk, focusing in completely, her pace quickening, as the PHONE begins to RING.

Across the street, a garbage truck suddenly u-turns, it's TIRES SCREAMING as it accelerates. Trinity sees the headlights of the truck arcing at the telephone booth as if taking aim.

Gritting through the pain, she races the truck, slamming into the booth, the headlights blindingly bright, bearing down on the box of Plexiglas just as --

She answers the phone.

There is a frozen instant of silence before the hulking mass of dark metal lurches up onto the sidewalk --

(CONTINUED)

11

CONTINUED:

11

Barreling through the booth, bulldozing it into a brick wall, SMASHING it to PLEXIGLAS PULP.

After a moment, a black loafer steps down from the cab of the garbage truck. Agent Smith inspects the wreckage. There is no body. Trinity is gone.

His jaw sets as he grinds his molars in frustration. Agent Jones and Brown walk up behind him.

AGENT JONES

She got out.

AGENT SMITH

It doesn't matter.

AGENT BROWN

The informant is real.

Agent Smith almost smiles.

AGENT SMITH

Yes.

AGENT JONES

We have the name of their next target.

AGENT BROWN

The name is Neo.

The handset of the pay phone lays on the ground, separated in the crash like a severed limb.

AGENT SMITH

We'll need a search running.

AGENT JONES

It's already begun.

We are SUCKED TOWARDS the mouthpiece of the phone, CLOSER and CLOSER, until the smooth gray plastic spreads out like a horizon and the small holes widen until we FALL THROUGH one --

Swallowed by DARKNESS.

The DARKNESS CRACKLES with phosphorescent energy, the word "searching" blazing in around us as we EMERGE FROM a computer screen.

The screen flickers with windowing data as a search engine runs with a steady relentless rhythm.

We DRIFT BACK FROM the screen and INTO --

It is a studio apartment that seems overgrown with technology.

Weed-like cables coil everywhere, duct-taped into thickets that wind up and around the legs of several desks. Tabletops are filled with cannibalized equipment that lay open like an autopsied corpse.

At the center of this technological rat-nest is NEO, a man who knows more about living inside a computer than outside one.

He is asleep in front of his PC. Behind him, the computer screen suddenly goes blank. A prompt appears: "Wake up, Neo."

Neo's eye pries open. He sits up, one eye still closed, looking around, unsure of where he is. He notices the screen.

He types "CTRL X" but the letter "T" appears.

NEO

What...?

He hits another and an "H" appears. He keeps typing, pushing random functions and keys while the computer types out a message as though it had a mind of its own.

He stops and stares at the four words on the screen: "The Matrix has you."

NEO

What the hell?

He hits the "ESC" button. Another message appears: "Follow the white rabbit."

He hits it again and the message repeats. He rubs his eyes but when he opens them, there is another message: "Knock, knock, Neo."

Someone KNOCKS on his door and he almost jumps out of his chair. He looks back at the computer, but the screen is now blank.

Someone KNOCKS again. Neo rises, still unnerved.

NEO

Who is it?

CHOI (O.S)

It's Choi.

(CONTINUED)

Neo flips a series of locks and opens the door, leaving the chain on. A young Chinese MAN stands there with several of his friends.

NEO
You're two hours late.

CHOI (MAN)
I know. It's her fault.

NEO
You got the money?

CHOI
Two grand.

He takes out an envelope and gives it to Neo through the cracked door.

NEO
Hold on.

He closes the door. On the floor near his bed is a book, Baudrillard's Simulacra and Simulations. The book has been hollowed out and inside are several computer disks. He takes one, sticks the money in the book and drops it on the floor.

Opening the door, he hands the disk to Choi.

CHOI
Hallelujah! You are my Savior, man! My own personal Jesus Christ!

NEO
If you get caught using that --

CHOI
I know, I know. This never happened. You don't exist.

NEO
Right...

Neo nods as the strange feeling of unrealness suddenly returns.

CHOI
Something wrong, man? You look a little whiter than usual.

NEO
I don't know... My computer...

(CONTINUED)

12 CONTINUED: (2)

12

He looks back at Choi, unable to explain what just happened.

NEO

You ever have the feeling that you're not sure if you're awake or still dreaming?

CHOI

All the time. It's called mescaline and it is the only way to fly.

He smiles and slaps the hand of his nearest droog.

CHOI

It sounds to me like you need to unplug, man. A little R&R. What do you think, Dujour, should we take him with us?

DUJOUR

Definitely.

NEO

I can't. I have to work tomorrow.

DUJOUR

Come on. It'll be fun. I promise.

He looks up at her and suddenly notices on her black leather motorcycle jacket dozens of pins: bands, symbols, slogans, military medals and --

A small white rabbit. The ROOM TILTS.

NEO

Yeah, yeah. Sure, I'll go.

13 INT. APARTMENT

13

An older apartment; a series of halls connects a chain of small high-ceilinged rooms lined with heavy casements.

Smoke hangs like a veil, blurring the few lights there are.

Dressed predominately in black, people are everywhere, gathered in cliques around pieces of furniture like jungle cats around a tree.

(CONTINUED)

Neo stands against a wall, alone, sipping from a bottle of beer, feeling completely out of place. He is about to leave when he notices a woman staring at him.

The woman is Trinity. She walks straight up to him.

In the nearest room, shadow-like figures grind against each other to the pneumatic beat of INDUSTRIAL MUSIC.

TRINITY

Hello, Neo.

NEO

How do you know that name?

TRINITY

I know a lot about you. I've been wanting to meet you for some time.

NEO

Who are you?

TRINITY

My name is Trinity.

NEO

Trinity? The Trinity? The Trinity that cracked the I.R.S. D-Base?

TRINITY

That was a long time ago.

NEO

Gee-zus.

TRINITY

What?

NEO

I just thought... you were a guy.

TRINITY

Most guys do.

Neo is a little embarrassed.

NEO

Do you want to go somewhere and talk?

TRINITY

No. It's safe here and I don't have much time.

(CONTINUED)

13 CONTINUED: (2)

13

The MUSIC is so LOUD they must stand very close, talking directly into each other's ear.

NEO

That was you on my computer?

She nods.

NEO

How did you do that?

TRINITY

Right now, all I can tell you, is that you are in danger. I brought you here to warn you.

NEO

Of what?

TRINITY

They're watching you, Neo.

NEO

Who is?

TRINITY

Please. Just listen. I know why you're here, Neo. I know what you've been doing. I know why you hardly sleep, why you live alone and why, night after night, you sit at your computer. You're looking for him.

Her body is against his; her lips very close to his ear.

TRINITY

I know because I was once looking for the same thing, but when he found me he told me I wasn't really looking for him. I was looking for an answer.

There is a hypnotic quality to her voice and Neo feels the words, like a drug, seeping into him.

TRINITY

It's the question that drives us, the question that brought you here. You know the question just as I did.

NEO

What is the Matrix?

(CONTINUED)

13

CONTINUED: (3)

13

TRINITY

When I asked him, he said that no one could ever be told the answer to that question. They have to see it to believe it.

She leans close, her lips almost touching his ear.

TRINITY

The answer is out there, Neo. It's looking for you and it will find you, if you want it to.

She turns and he watches her melt into the shifting wall of bodies.

A SOUND RISES steadily, growing out of the MUSIC, pressing in on Neo until it is all he can hear as we --

CUT TO:

14

INT. NEO'S APARTMENT

14

The sound is an ALARM CLOCK, slowly dragging Neo to consciousness. He strains to read the clock-face: 9:15 A.M.

NEO

Shitshitshit.

15

EXT. SKYSCRAPER

15

The downtown office of Meta CorTechs, a software development company.

16

INT. META CORTECHS OFFICE

16

The main offices are along each wall, the windows overlooking downtown. RHINEHEART, the ultimate company man, lectures Neo without looking at him, typing at his computer continuously.

Neo stares at two window cleaners on a scaffolding outside, dragging their rubber squeegees down the surface of the glass.

RHINEHEART

You have a problem with authority, Mr. Anderson. You believe that you are special, that somehow the rules do not apply to you. Obviously, you are mistaken.

(CONTINUED)

16 CONTINUED:

16

His long, bony fingers resume clicking the keyboard.

RHINEHEART

This company is one of the top software companies in the world because every single employee understands that they are a part of a whole. Thus, if an employee has a problem, the company has a problem.

He turns again.

RHINEHEART

The time has come to make a choice, Mr. Anderson. Either you choose to be at your desk on time from this day forth, or you choose to find yourself another job. Do I make myself clear?

NEO

Yes, Mr. Rhineheart. Perfectly clear.

17 INT. NEO'S CUBICLE

17

The entire floor looks like a human honeycomb, with a labyrinth of cubicles structured around a core of elevators.

VOICE (O.S.)

Thomas Anderson?

Neo turns and finds a FEDERAL EXPRESS GUY at his cubicle door.

NEO

Yeah. That's me.

Neo signs the electronic pad and the Fedex Guy hands him the softpak.

FEDEX GUY

Have a nice day.

He opens the bag. Inside is a cellular PHONE. It seems the instant it is in his hand, it RINGS. Unnerved, he flips it open.

NEO

Hello?

(CONTINUED)

17

CONTINUED:

17

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Hello, Neo. Do you know who this is?

Neo's knees give and he sinks into his chair.

NEO

Morpheus...

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

I've been looking for you, Neo. I don't know if you're ready to see what I want to show you, but unfortunately, we have run out of time. They're coming for you, Neo. And I'm not sure what they're going to do.

NEO

Who's coming for me?

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Stand up and see for yourself.

NEO

Right now?

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Yes. Now.

Neo starts to stand.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Do it slowly. The elevator.

His head peeks up over the partition. At the elevator, he sees Agent Smith, Agent Brown and Agent Jones leading a group of cops. A female employee turns and points out Neo's cubicle.

Neo ducks.

NEO

Holy shit!

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Yes.

One cop stays at the elevator, the others follow the Agents.

NEO

What the hell do they want with me?!

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
I'm not sure, but if you don't want to find out, you better get out of there.

NEO How?!

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
I can guide you out, but you have to do exactly what I say.

The agents are moving quickly towards the cubicle.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
The cubicle across from you is empty.

NEO
But what if...?

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
Go! Now!

Neo lunges across the hall, diving into the other cubicle just as the Agents turn into his row.

Neo crams himself into a dark corner, clutching the phone tightly to him.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
Stay here for a moment.

The Agents enter Neo's empty cubicle. A cop is sent to search the bathroom.

Morpheus' voice is a whisper in Neo's ear.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
A little longer...

Brown is talking to another employee.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
When I tell you, go to the end of the row to the first office on the left, stay as low as you can.

Sweat trickles down his forehead.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)
Now.

(CONTINUED)

17

CONTINUED: (3)

17

Neo rolls out of the cubicle, his eyes popping as he freezes right behind a cop who has just turned around.

Staying crouched, he sneaks away down the row, shooting across the opening to the first office on the left.

18

INT. EMPTY OFFICE

18

The room is empty.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Good. Outside there is a scaffold.

NEO

How do you know all this?

Morpheus laughs quietly.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

The answer is coming, Neo. There is a window in front of you. Open it.

He opens the window. The WIND HOWLS into the room.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

You can use the scaffold to get to the roof.

NEO

No! It's too far away.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

There's a ledge. It's a short short climb. You can make it.

Neo looks down; the building's glass wall vertigos into a concrete chasm.

NEO

No way, no way, this is crazy.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

There are only two ways out of this building. One is that scaffold. The other is in their custody. You take a chance either way. I leave it to you.

CLICK. He hangs up. Neo looks at the door, then back at the scaffold.

(CONTINUED)

18 CONTINUED:

18

NEO

This is insane! Why is this happening to me? What did I do?
I'm nobody. I didn't do anything.

He climbs up onto the window ledge. Hanging onto the frame, he steps onto the small ledge. The scaffold seems even farther away.

NEO

I'm going to die.

The WIND suddenly BLASTS up the face of the building, knocking Neo off balance. Recoiling, he clings harder to the frame, and the phone falls out of his hand.

He watches as it is swallowed by the distance beneath him.

NEO

This is insane! I can't do this!
Forget it!

He climbs back into the office just as a cop opens the door.

NEO

Shit!

19 EXT. SKYSCRAPER

19

The Agents lead a handcuffed Neo out of the revolving doors, forcing his head down as they push him into the dark sedan.

Trinity watches in the rearview mirror of her motorcycle.

TRINITY

Shit.

20 INT. INTERROGATION ROOM

20

CLOSE ON a camera monitor; a wide angle view of a white room where Neo is sitting at a table alone. We MOVE INTO the monitor, entering the room as if the monitor was a window.

At the same moment, the door opens and the Agents enter.
Agent Smith sits down across from Neo. A thick manila envelope slaps down on the table. The name on the file:
"Anderson, Thomas[A]."

(CONTINUED)

20

CONTINUED:

20

AGENT SMITH

As you can see, we've had our eye on you for some time now, Mr. Anderson.

He opens the file. Paper rattle marks the silence as he flips several pages. Neo cannot tell if he is looking at the file or at him.

AGENT SMITH

It seems that you have been living two lives. In one life, you are Thomas A. Anderson, program writer for a respectable software company. You have a social security number, you pay your taxes and you help your landlady carry out her garbage.

The pages continue to turn.

AGENT SMITH

The other life is lived in computers where you go by the hacker alias Neo, and are guilty of virtually every computer crime we have a law for.

Neo feels himself sinking into a pit of shit.

AGENT SMITH

One of these lives has a future. One of them does not.

He closes the file.

AGENT SMITH

I'm going to be as forthcoming as I can be, Mr. Anderson. You are here because we need your help.

He removes his sunglasses, his eyes are an unnatural ice-blue.

AGENT SMITH

We know that you have been contacted by a certain individual. A man who calls himself Morpheus. Whatever you think you know about this man is irrelevant. The fact is that he is wanted for acts of terrorism in more countries than any other man in the world.

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

AGENT SMITH (CONT'D)

He is considered by many authorities to be the most dangerous man alive.

He leans closer.

AGENT SMITH

My colleagues believe that I am wasting my time with you but I believe you want to do the right thing. It is obvious that you are an intelligent man, Mr. Anderson, and that you are interested in the future. That is why I believe you are ready to put your past mistakes behind you and get on with your life.

Neo tries to match his stare.

AGENT SMITH

We are willing to wipe the slate clean, to give you a fresh start and all we are asking in return is your cooperation in bringing a known terrorist to justice.

Neo nods to himself.

NEO

Yeah. Wow. That sounds like a real good deal. But I think I have a better one. How about I just give you the finger --

He does.

NEO

And you give me my phone call!

Agent Smith puts his glasses back on.

AGENT SMITH

You disappoint me, Mr. Anderson.

NEO

You can't scare me with this Gestapo crap. I know my rights.
I want my phone call!

Agent Smith smiles.

(CONTINUED)

AGENT SMITH

And tell me, Mr. Anderson, what good is a phone call if you are unable to speak?

The question unnerves Neo and strangely he begins to feel the muscles in his jaw tighten. The standing Agents snicker, watching Neo's confusion grow into panic.

Neo feels his lips grow soft and sticky as they slowly seal shut, melding into each other until all traces of his mouth are gone.

Wild with fear, he lunges for the door but the Agents restrain him, holding him in the chair.

AGENT SMITH

You are going to help us, Mr. Anderson, whether you want to or not.

Smith nods and the other two rip open his shirt. From a case taken out of his suit coat, Smith removes a long, fiber-optic wire tap.

Neo struggles helplessly as Smith dangles the wire over his exposed abdomen. Horrified, he watches as the electronic device animates, becoming an organic creature that resembles a hybrid of an insect and a fluke worm.

Thin, whisker-like tendrils reach out and probe into Neo's navel. He bucks wildly as Smith drops the creature which looks for a moment like an uncut umbilical cord --

-- before it begins to burrow, its tail thrashing as it worms its way inside.

Screaming, Neo bolts upright in bed.

He realizes that he is home. Was it a dream? His mouth is normal. His stomach looks fine. He starts to take a deep, everything-is-okay breath when --

The PHONE RINGS.

It almost stops his heart. It continues RINGING, building pressure in the room, forcing him up out of bed, sucking him in with an almost gravitational force. He answers it, saying nothing.

(CONTINUED)

21

CONTINUED:

21

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

This line is tapped so I must be brief.

NEO

The Agents --

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

They got to you first, but they've underestimated how important you are. If they knew what I know, you would probably be dead.

NEO

What are you talking about? What the hell is happening to me?

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

You're the One, Neo. You see, you may have spent the last few years looking for me, but I've spent most of my life looking for you.

Neo feels sick.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Do you still want to meet?

NEO

... Yes.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Go to the Adams Street bridge.

CLICK. He closes his eyes, unsure of what he has done.

22

EXT. CITY STREET - NIGHT

22

It is just beyond the middle of the night; that time when it seems there are no rules and everything feels unsafe. Neo's boots scrape against the concrete. Every pair of eyes he passes seems to follow him. Rain pours from a black sky.

As he reaches the bridge, headlights creep in behind him. He turns just as the car slides quickly to a stop beside him. The back door opens.

TRINITY

Get in.

23

INT. CAR

23

A large man named APOC is driving. Beside him is a beautiful androgynous called SWITCH, aiming a large gun at Neo. WINDOW WIPERS BEAT HEAVILY against the windshield.

NEO

What the hell is this?!

TRINITY

It's necessary, Neo. For our protection.

NEO

From what?

TRINITY

From you.

She lifts a strange steel and glass device that looks like a cross between a rib separator, speculum and air compressor.

SWITCH

Take off your shirt.

He looks at the strange device and the gun still trained on him.

NEO

What? Why?

SWITCH

Stop the car.

Apoc does.

SWITCH

Listen to me, coppertop! We don't have time for 'twenty questions.' Right now there is only one rule. Our way or the highway.

NEO

Fine.

Neo opens the door.

TRINITY

Neo, please, you have to trust me.

NEO

Why?

(CONTINUED)

23

CONTINUED:

23

TRINITY

Because you've been down there,
Neo. You already know that road.
You know exactly where it ends.

Neo stares out into the sheets of rain railing against the dark street beyond the open door.

TRINITY

And I know that's not where you want to be.

He closes the door.

A23

EXT. DARK STREET

A23

A moment later the green street lights curve over the car's tinted windshield as it rushes through the wet underworld.

24

INT. CAR

24

Neo grudgingly strips off his T-shirt.

TRINITY

Lie back.

Trinity aims the device at Neo, its glass snout forming a seal over his navel. Switch snaps a cable into the front seat cigarette lighter.

NEO

What is this thing?

TRINITY

We think you're bugged. Try to relax.

She turns a dial and the machine bears down on Neo's midsection, the cylinder sucking hard at his stomach.

Neo screams, squinting in pain as Trinity watches the needle on a pressure gauge climb steadily.

TRINITY

Come on, come on...

On a small monitor that projects an ultrasound-like image, we see Neo's insides begin to slither and churn.
He gasps as something wiggles beneath his skin inside his stomach.

(CONTINUED)

24

CONTINUED:

24

SWITCH

It's on the move.

TRINITY

Shit.

SWITCH

You're gonna lose it.

TRINITY

No I'm not. Clear.

The foreboding word hangs in Neo's ear for a moment when Trinity squeezes a trigger. Electric current hammers into Neo and rigid convulsions take hold of him beneath the flickering car lamp until --

Something finally rockets wetly out of Neo's stomach through the extractor's coils.

NEO

Jesus Christ! It's real?!
That thing is real?!

Trinity lifts a glass cage at the end of the tubing. Inside, the small fluke-like bug flips and squirms, its tendrils flapping against the clear walls.

She unrolls the window and dumps it out.

25

EXT. CAR

25

It hits the pavement with a metallic tink, reverted back into a common wire tap, as the car disappears into the rainy night.

26

EXT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE

26

The car stops in a deserted alley behind a forgotten hotel.

27

INT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE

27

It is a place of putrefying elegance, a rotting host of urban maggotry.

Trinity leads Neo from the stairwell down the hall of the thirteenth floor. They stop outside room 1313.

TRINITY

This is it.

(CONTINUED)

27

CONTINUED:

27

Neo can hear his own heart pounding.

TRINITY

Let me give one piece of advice.
Be honest. He knows more than you can possibly imagine.

28

INT. ROOM 1313

28

Across the room, a DARK FIGURE stares out the tall windows veiled with decaying lace. He turns and his smile lights up the room. A dull ROAR of THUNDER shakes the old building.

MORPHEUS

At last.

He wears a long black coat and his eyes are invisible behind circular mirrored glasses. He strides to Neo and they shake hands.

MORPHEUS

Welcome, Neo. As you no doubt have guessed, I am Morpheus.

NEO

It's an honor.

MORPHEUS

No, the honor is mine. Please.
Come. Sit.

He nods to Trinity and she exits through a door to an adjacent room. They sit across from one another in cracked, burgundy-leather chairs.

MORPHEUS

I imagine, right now, you must be feeling a bit like Alice, tumbling down the rabbit hole?

NEO

You could say that.

MORPHEUS

I can see it in your eyes. You have the look of a man who accepts what he sees because he is expecting to wake up.

A smile, razor-thin, curls the corner of his lips.

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

Ironically, this is not far from the truth. But I'm getting ahead of myself. Can you tell me, Neo, why are you here?

NEO

You're Morpheus. You're a legend. Most hackers would die to meet you.

MORPHEUS

Yes. Thank you. But I think we both know there's more to it than that. Do you believe in fate, Neo?

NEO

No.

MORPHEUS

Why not?

NEO

Because I don't like the idea that I'm not in control of my life.

MORPHEUS

I know exactly what you mean.

Again, that smile that could cut glass.

MORPHEUS

Let me tell you why you are here. You have come because you know something. What you know you can't explain but you feel it. You've felt it your whole life, felt that something is wrong with the world. You don't know what, but it's there like a splinter in your mind, driving you mad. It is this feeling that brought you to me. Do you know what I'm talking about?

NEO

The Matrix?

MORPHEUS

Do you want to know what it is?

Neo swallows hard and nods.

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

The Matrix is everywhere, it's all around us, here even in this room. You can see it out your window or on your television. You feel it when you go to work, or go to church or pay your taxes. It is the world that has been pulled over your eyes to blind you from the truth.

NEO

What truth?

MORPHEUS

That you are a slave, Neo. Like everyone else, you were born into bondage, kept inside a prison that you cannot smell, taste, or touch. A prison for your mind.

The LEATHER CREAKS as he leans back.

MORPHEUS

Unfortunately, no one can be told what the Matrix is. You have to see it for yourself.

Morpheus opens his hands. In the right is a red pill. In the left, a blue pill.

MORPHEUS

This is your last chance. After this, there is no going back. You take the blue pill and the story ends. You wake in your bed and you believe whatever you want to believe.

The pills in his open hands are reflected in the glasses.

MORPHEUS

You take the red pill and you stay in Wonderland and I show you how deep the rabbit-hole goes.

Neo feels the smooth skin of the capsules, the moisture growing in his palms.

MORPHEUS

Remember that all I am offering is the truth. Nothing more.

(CONTINUED)

28

CONTINUED: (3)

28

Neo opens his mouth and swallows the red pill. The Cheshire smile returns.

MORPHEUS

Follow me.

29

INT. OTHER ROOM

29

He leads Neo into the other room, which is cramped with high-tech equipment, glowing ash-blue and electric green from the racks of monitors. Trinity, Apoc, Switch and Cypher look up as they enter.

MORPHEUS

Apoc, are we on-line?

APOC

Almost.

He and Trinity are working quickly, hardwiring a complex system of monitors, modules and drives.

MORPHEUS

Neo, time is always against us.
Will you take a seat there?

Neo sits in a chair in the center of the room and Trinity begins gently fixing white electrode disks to him. Near the chair is an old oval dressing mirror that is cracked. He whispers to Trinity:

NEO

You did all this?

She nods, placing a set of headphones over his ears. They are wired to an old hotel phone.

MORPHEUS

The pill you took is part of a trace program. It's designed to disrupt your input/output carrier signal so we can pinpoint your location.

NEO

What does that mean?

CYPHER

It means buckle up, Dorothy,
'cause Kansas is going bye-bye.

(CONTINUED)

29

CONTINUED:

29

Distantly, through the ear phones, he hears Apoc POUNDING on a KEYBOARD. Sweat beads his face. His eyes blink and twitch when he notices the mirror.

Wide-eyed, he stares as it begins to heal itself, a webwork of cracks that slowly run together as though the mirror were becoming liquid.

NEO

Did you...?

Cypher works with Apoc, checking reams of phosphorescent data. Trinity monitors Neo's electric vital signs. Neo reaches out to touch the mirror and his fingers disappear beneath the rippling surface.

Quickly, he tries to pull his fingers out but the mirror stretches in long rubbery strands like mirrored taffy stuck to his fingertips.

MORPHEUS

Have you ever had a dream, Neo, that you were so sure was real?

A flash of lightning flickers white hot against Neo.

NEO

This can't be...

MORPHEUS

Be what? Be real?

The strands thin like rubber cement as he pulls away, until the fragile wisps of mirror thread break.

MORPHEUS

What if you were unable to wake from that dream, Neo? How would you know the difference between the dreamworld and the real world?

Neo looks at his hand; fingers distended into mirrored icicles that begin to melt rapidly, dripping, running like wax down his fingers, spreading across his palm where he sees his face reflected.

NEO

Uh-oh...

TRINITY

It's going into replication.

MORPHEUS

Apoc?

(CONTINUED)

29

CONTINUED: (2)

29

APOC

Still nothing.

Morpheus takes out a cellular phone and dials a number.

MORPHEUS

Tank, we're going to need the signal soon.

The mirror gel seems to come to life, racing, crawling up his arms like hundreds of insects.

The mirror creeps up his neck as Neo begins to panic, tipping his head as though he were sinking into the mirror, trying to keep his mouth up.

NEO

It's cold.

TRINITY

I got fibrillation!

MORPHEUS

Shit! Apoc?

Streams of mercury run from Neo's nose.

APOC

Targeting... almost there.

An ALARM on Trinity's monitor ERUPTS.

TRINITY

He's going into arrest!

APOC

Lock! I got him!

MORPHEUS

Now, Tank, now!

His eyes tear with mirror, rolling up and closing as a HIGH-PITCHED ELECTRIC SCREAM erupts in the HEADPHONES.
It is a piercing shriek like a computer calling to another computer --

Neo's body arches in agony and we are PULLED like we were pulled INTO the holes of the phone, sucked into his scream and swallowed by darkness.

30

INT. POWER PLANT - CLOSE ON MAN'S BODY

30 floating in a magenta amnion.

(CONTINUED)

30

CONTINUED:

30

His body spasms, fighting against the thick gelatin.

Metal tubes, surreal versions of hospital tubes, obscure his face. Other lines like IVs are connected to limbs and cover his genitals.

He is struggling desperately now. Air bubbles into the Jell-O but does not break the surface. Pressing up, the surface distends, stretching like a red rubber cocoon.

Unable to breathe, he fights wildly to stand, clawing at the thinning elastic shroud, until it ruptures, a hole widening around his mouth as he sucks for air. Tearing himself free, he emerges from the cell.

It is Neo.

He is bald and naked, his body slick with gelatin. Dizzy, nauseous, he waits for his vision to focus.

He is standing in an oval capsule of clear alloy filled with magenta gelatin, the surface of which has solidified like curdled milk. The IVs in his arms are plugged into outlets that appear to be grafted to his flesh.

He feels the weight of another cable and reaches to the back of his head where he finds an enormous coaxial plugged and locked into the base of his skull. He tries to pull it out but it would be easier to pull off a finger.

To either side he sees other tube-shaped pods filled with magenta gelatin; beneath the wax-like surface, pale and motionless, he sees other human beings.

Fanning out in a circle, there are more. All connected to a center core, each capsule like a red, dimly-glowing petal attached to a black metal stem.

Above him, level after level, the stem rises seemingly forever. He moves to the foot of the capsule and looks out. The image assaults his mind.

Towers of glowing petals spiral up to incomprehensible heights, disappearing down into a dim murk like an underwater abyss.

His sight is blurred and warped, exaggerating the intensity of the vision. The sound of the plant is like the sound of the ocean heard from inside the belly of Leviathan.

(CONTINUED)

30 CONTINUED: (2)

30

From above, a machine drops directly in front of Neo. He swallows his scream as it seems to stare at him. It is almost insect-like in its design; beautiful housings of alloyed metal covering organic-like systems of hard and soft polymers.

The machine seizes hold of Neo, paralyzing him as the cable lock at the back of his neck spins and opens.

The cable disengages itself. A long, clear plastic needle and cerebrum-chip slides from the anterior of Neo's skull with an ooze of blood and spinal fluid. The other connective hoses snap free and snake away as the machine lets Neo go.

Suddenly, the back of the unit opens and a tremendous vacuum, like an airplane door opening, sucks the gelatin and then Neo into a black hole.

31 INT. WASTE LINE

31

The pipe is a waste disposal system and Neo falls, sliding with the clot of gelatin.

Banking through pipe spirals and elbows, flushing up through grease traps clogged with oily clumps of cellulite.

32 INT. SEWER MAIN

32

Neo begins to drown when he is suddenly snatched from the flow of waste.

The metallic cable then lifts, pulling him up into the belly of the futuristic flying machine hovering inside the sewer main.

33 INT. HOVERCRAFT

33

The metal harness opens and drops the half-conscious Neo onto the floor. Human hands and arms help him up as he finds himself looking straight at Morpheus.

He smiles.

MORPHEUS

Welcome to the real world, Neo.

Neo passes out.

FADE TO BLACK.

FADE IN:

34

INT. HOVERCRAFT

34

We have no sense of time. We hear voices whispering.

MORPHEUS (O.S.)
We've done it, Trinity. We found him.

TRINITY (O.S.)
I hope you're right.

MORPHEUS (O.S.)
I don't have to hope it. I know
it.

Neo's eyes flutter open. We see Morpheus' face above us, angelic in the fluorescent glow of a light stick.

NEO (O.S.)
... am I dead?

MORPHEUS
Far from it.

FADE TO BLACK.

35

INT. HOVERCRAFT - INFIRMARY

35

He opens his eyes again, something tingling through him.
He focuses and sees his body pierced with dozens of acupuncture-like needles wired to a strange device.

DOZER
He still needs a lot of work.

DOZER and Morpheus are operating on Neo.

NEO
What are you doing?

MORPHEUS
Your muscles have atrophied.
We're rebuilding them.

Fluorescent light sticks burn unnaturally bright.

NEO
Why do my eyes hurt?

MORPHEUS
You've never used them before.

Morpheus closes Neo's eyes and Neo lays back.

(CONTINUED)

35 CONTINUED:

35

MORPHEUS

Rest, Neo. The answers are coming.

36 INT. NEO'S ROOM

36

Neo wakes up from a deep sleep, feeling better. He begins to examine himself. There is a futuristic IV plugged into the jack in his forearm. He pulls it out, staring at the grafted outlet.

He runs his hand over the short hair now covering his head. His fingers find and explore the large outlet in the base of his skull.

Just as he starts to come unglued, Morpheus opens the door.

NEO

Morpheus, what's happened to me?
What is this place?

MORPHEUS

More important than what is when?

NEO

When?

MORPHEUS

You believe the year is 1997 when in fact it is much closer to 2197.
I can't say for certain what year it is because we honestly do not know.

The wind is knocked from Neo's chest.

MORPHEUS

There is no reason for me to try to explain it when I can simply show it. Come with me.

37 INT. HOVERCRAFT

37

Like a sleepwalker, Neo follows Morpheus through the ship.

MORPHEUS

This is my ship, the Nebuchadnezzar. It's a hovercraft.

(MORE)

(CONTINUED)

37

CONTINUED:

37

MORPHEUS (CONT'D)

Small like a submarine. It's cramped and cold. But it's home.

They climb a ladder up to the main deck.

38

INT. MAIN DECK

38

Everyone is there.

MORPHEUS

This is the main deck. You know most of my crew.

Trinity smiles and nods.

MORPHEUS

The ones you don't know. That's Mouse, Cypher, and Switch. Those two guys are Tank and Dozer.

The names and faces wash meaninglessly over Neo.

MORPHEUS

And this, this is the Core. This is where we broadcast our pirate signal and hack into the Matrix.

It is a swamp of bizarre electronic equipment. Vines of coaxial hang and snake to and from huge monolithic battery slabs, a black portable satellite dish and banks of life systems and computer monitors.

At the center of the web, there are six ecto-skeleton chairs made of a poly-alloy frame and suspension harness.
Near the circle of chairs is the control console and operator's station where the network is monitored.

MORPHEUS

You want to know what the Matrix is, Neo? The answer is right
here.

He touches the back of Neo's head.

MORPHEUS

Help him, Trinity.

Neo allows himself to be helped into one of the chairs.
He feels Morpheus guiding a coaxial line into the jack at the back of his neck. The cable has the same kind of cerebrum chip we saw inside the plant.

(CONTINUED)

38 CONTINUED:

38

MORPHEUS

This will feel a little weird.

There are several disturbing noises as he works the needle in.

We MOVE IN as Neo's shoulders bunch and his face tightens into a grimace until a loud CLICK fires and his ears pop like when you equalize them underwater.

He relaxes, opening his eyes as we PULL BACK to a feeling of weightlessness inside another place --

39 INT. CONSTRUCT

39

Neo is standing in an empty, blank-white space.

MORPHEUS

This is the Construct.

Startled, Neo whips around and finds Morpheus now in the room with him.

MORPHEUS

It is our loading program. We can load anything from clothes, to weapons, to training simulations. Anything we need.

Morpheus walks past Neo and when Neo turns he sees the two leather chairs from the Hotel Lafayette set up in front of a large screen television.

MORPHEUS

Sit down.

Neo stands at the back of the chair as Morpheus sits.

NEO

Right now, we're inside a computer program?

Morpheus smiles.

MORPHEUS

Is it so hard to believe? Your clothes are different, the plugs in your arms and head are gone. Look at your hair, you were bald a moment ago.

Neo touches his head.

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

It's what we call residual self image. The mental projection of your electronic self. Wild, isn't it?

Neo's hands run over the cracked leather.

NEO

This -- This isn't real?

MORPHEUS

What is real? How do you define real? If you're talking about what you feel, taste, smell, or see, then real is simply electrical signals interpreted by your brain.

He picks up a remote control and clicks on the television. On the television, we see images of the Twentieth Century city where Neo lived.

MORPHEUS

This is the world you know. The world as it was at the end of the Twentieth Century. It exists now only as part of a neural-interactive simulation that we call the Matrix.

He changes the channel and we see a very different city as we enter the television.

MORPHEUS

You have been living inside a dreamworld, Neo. As in Baudrillard's vision, your whole life has been spent inside the map, not the territory. This is the world as it exists today.

In the distance, we see the ruins of a future city protruding from the wasteland like the blackened ribs of a long-dead corpse.

MORPHEUS

'The desert of the real.'

Beneath us, the water is gone.

(CONTINUED)

We TURN AND DESCEND, SPIRALING DOWN TOWARD the lake bed which is scorched and split like burnt flesh, where we FIND Morpheus and Neo. Neo clings to the chair, trying to get his bearings.

MORPHEUS

We have only bits and pieces of information. What we know for certain is that, at some point in the early Twenty-first Century, all of mankind was united in celebration. Through the blinding inebriation of hubris, we marveled at our magnificence as we gave birth to A.I.

NEO

A.I.? You mean artificial intelligence?

MORPHEUS

Yes. A singular consciousness that spawned an entire race of machines. I must say I find it almost funny to imagine the world slapping itself on the back, toasting the new age. I say almost funny.

He looks up and his sunglasses reflect the obsidian clouds roiling overhead.

MORPHEUS

We don't know who struck first. Us or them. But we do know it was us that scorched the sky. At the time, they were dependent on solar power. It was believed they would be unable to survive without an energy source as abundant as the sun.

As we DESCEND INTO the circular window of his glasses, there is a flash of lightning.

MORPHEUS

Throughout human history, we have been dependent on machines to survive. Fate, it seems, is not without a sense of irony.

40

EXT. FETUS FIELDS

40

On the flash, we PULL BACK from the darkness which reveals itself to be the black eye of a fetus.

MORPHEUS

The Machines discovered a new form of fusion. All they needed was a small electrical charge to initiate the reaction.

The fetus is suspended in a placenta-like husk, where its malleable skull is already growing around the brain-jack.

MORPHEUS

The human body generates more bioelectricity than a 120-volt battery and over 25,000 B.T.U.'s of body heat.

The husk hanging from a stalk is plucked by a thresher-like farm machine.

MORPHEUS

There are fields, endless fields where human beings are no longer born; we are grown.

We RISE UP, the field stretching in every direction to the horizon, lightning tearing open the sky as a harvester sweeps past us.

A40

INT. POWER PLANT

A40

From the yawning black of the waste port, we begin to PULL BACK as it snaps shut.

Red amniotic gel flows into the pod below us, pooling around a tiny newborn that suckles its feed tube.

MORPHEUS

For the longest time, I wouldn't believe it. But then I saw the fields with my own eyes, watched them liquefy the dead so they could be fed intravenously to the living and standing there, facing the efficiency, the pure, horrifying precision, I came to realize the obviousness of the truth.

Still PULLING BACK, we see the image of the power plant now on the television as we return to the white space of the construct.

41 INT. CONSTRUCT

41

Morpheus steps INTO VIEW as he clicks off the television.

MORPHEUS

What is the Matrix? Control.

He opens the back of the television remote control.

MORPHEUS

The Matrix is a computer-generated dreamworld built to keep us under control in order to change a human being into this.

He holds up a coppertop battery.

NEO

No! I don't believe it! It's not possible!

MORPHEUS

I didn't say that it would be easy, Neo. I just said that it would be the truth.

NEO

Stop! Let me out! I want out!

42 INT. MAIN DECK

42

His eyes snap open and he thrashes against the chair, trying to rip the cable from the back of his neck.

NEO

Get this thing out of me!

TRINITY

Easy, Neo. Easy.

Dozer holds him while Trinity unlocks it. Once it's out, he tears away from them, falling as he trips free of the harness.

NEO

Don't touch me! Get away from me!

On his hands and knees, he reels as the world spins. Sweat pours off him as a pressure builds inside his skull as if his brain had been put into a centrifuge.

NEO

I don't believe it! I don't believe it!

(CONTINUED)

42 CONTINUED:

42

CYPHER

He's going to pop!

Vomiting violently, Neo pitches forward and blacks out.

43 INT. NEO'S ROOM

43

He blinks, regaining consciousness. The room is dark. Neo is stretched out on his bed.

NEO

I can't go back, can I?

Morpheus is sitting like a shadow on a chair in the far corner.

MORPHEUS

No. But if you could, would you really want to?

Deep down, Neo knows that answer.

MORPHEUS

I feel that I owe you an apology. There is a rule that we do not free a mind once it reaches a certain age. It is dangerous. They have trouble letting go. Their mind turns against them. I've seen it happen. I'm sorry. I broke the rule because I had to.

He stares into the darkness, confessing as much to himself as to Neo.

MORPHEUS

When the Matrix was first built there was a man born inside that had the ability to change what he wanted, to remake the Matrix as he saw fit. It was this man that freed the first of us and taught us the truth; as long as the Matrix exists, the human race will never be free.

He pauses.

(CONTINUED)

43 CONTINUED:

43

MORPHEUS

When he died, the Oracle prophesied his return and envisioned that his coming would hail the destruction of the Matrix, an end to the war and freedom for our people. That is why there are those of us that have spent our entire lives searching the Matrix, looking for him.

Neo can feel his eyes on him.

MORPHEUS

I did what I did because I believe the search is over.

He stands up.

MORPHEUS

Get some rest. You're going to need it.

NEO

For what?

MORPHEUS

Your training.

44 INT. HOVERCRAFT

44

There is no morning; there is only darkness and then the fluorescent light sticks flicker on.

45 INT. NEO'S ROOM

45

Neo is awake in his bed, staring up at the lights. The door opens and TANK steps inside.

TANK

Morning. Did you sleep?

NEO

No.

TANK

You will tonight. I guarantee it.
I'm Tank. I'll be your operator.

He offers his hand and Neo shakes it. He notices that Tank doesn't have any jacks.

(CONTINUED)

NEO

You don't have...

TANK

Any holes? Nope. Me and my brother Dozer, we are one hundred percent pure, old-fashioned, home-grown human. Born free. Right here in the real world. Genuine child of Zion.

NEO

Zion?

TANK

If this war ended tomorrow, Zion is where the party would be.

NEO

It's a city?

TANK

The last human city. The only place we got left.

NEO

Where is it?

TANK

Deep underground. Near the earth's core, where it's still warm. You live long enough, you might even see it.

(he smiles)

Goddamn, I got to tell you, I'm fairly excited to see what you are capable of. I mean if Morpheus is right and all. We're not supposed to talk about any of that but if you are, well then this is an exciting time. We got a lot to do so let's get to it.

Neo is plugged in, hanging in one of the suspension chairs.

(CONTINUED)

TANK

We're supposed to load all these operations programs first, but this is some major boring shit. Why don't we start with something a little fun?

Tank smiles as he plops into his operator's chair. He begins flipping through a tall carousel loaded with micro discs.

TANK

How about some combat training?

Neo reads the label on the disk.

NEO

Jujitsu? I'm going to learn jujitsu?

Tank slides the disk into Neo's supplement drive.

NEO

No way.

Smiling, Tank punches the "load" code. His body jumps against the harness as his eyes clamp shut. The monitors kick wildly as his heart pounds, adrenaline surges, and his brain sizzles. An instant later his eyes snap open.

NEO

Holy shit!

TANK

Hey, Mikey, he likes it! Ready for more?

NEO

Hell yes!

CLOSE ON a computer monitor as grey pixels slowly fill a small, half-empty box. It is a meter displaying how much download time is left.

The title bar reads: "Combat Series 10 of 12," file categories flashing beneath it: "Savate, Jujitsu, Ken Po, Drunken Boxing..."

Morpheus walks in.

(CONTINUED)

47

CONTINUED:

47

MORPHEUS

How is he?

TANK

Ten hours straight. He's a machine.

Neo's body spasms and relaxes as his eyes open, breath hissing from his lips. He looks like he just orgasmed.

NEO

This is incredible. I know kung fu.

MORPHEUS

Show me.

48

INT. DOJO

48

They are standing in a very sparse Japanese-style dojo.

MORPHEUS

This is a sparring program, similar to the programmed reality of the Matrix. It has the same basic rules. Rules like gravity. What you must learn is that these rules are no different than the rules of a computer system. Some of them can be bent. Others can be broken. Understand?

Neo nods as Morpheus assumes a fighting stance.

MORPHEUS

Then hit me, if you can.

Neo assumes a similar stance, cautiously circling until he gives a short cry and launches a furious attack.

It is like a Jackie Chan movie at high speed, fists and feet striking from every angle as Neo presses his attack, but each and every blow is blocked by effortless speed.

49

INT. MAIN DECK

49

While their minds battle in the programmed reality, the two bodies appear quite serene, suspended in the drive chairs.

Tank monitors their Life Systems, noticing that Neo is wildly and chaotically lit up as opposed to the slow and steady rhythm of Morpheus.

50 INT. MESS HALL

50

MOUSE bursts into the room, interrupting dinner.

MOUSE
Morpheus is fighting Neo!

All at once, everyone bolts for the door.

51 INT. DOJO

51

Neo's face is knotted, teeth clenched, as he hurls himself at Morpheus.

MORPHEUS
Good. Adaptation. Improvisation.
But your weakness isn't your technique.

Morpheus attacks him and it is like nothing we have seen. His feet and fists are everywhere, taking Neo apart. For every blow Neo blocks, five more hit their marks until --

Neo falls.

Panting, on his hands and knees, blood spits from his mouth, speckling the white floor of the dojo.

MORPHEUS
How did I beat you?

NEO
You -- You're too fast.

MORPHEUS
Do you think my being faster, stronger has anything to do with my muscles in this place?

Neo is frustrated, still unable to catch his breath.

MORPHEUS
Do you believe that's air you are breathing now?

Neo stands, nodding slowly.

MORPHEUS
Again.

Their fists fly with pneumatic speed.

52 INT. MAIN DECK 52

Everyone is gathered behind Tank, watching the fight, like watching a game of Mortal Kombat.

MOUSE

Jeezus Keeerist! He's fast! Look at his neural-kinetics! They're way above normal!

53 INT. DOJO 53

Morpheus begins to press Neo, countering blows while slipping in several stinging slaps.

MORPHEUS

Come on, Neo. What are you waiting for? You're faster than this. Don't think you are. Know you are.

Whack, Morpheus cracks Neo again. Neo's face twists with rage as the speed of the blows rises like a drum solo.

MORPHEUS

Come on! Stop trying to hit me and just hit me.

Wham. A single blow catches Morpheus on the side of the head, knocking off his glasses.

54 INT. MAIN DECK 54

There are several gasps.

MOUSE

I don't believe it!

55 INT. DOJO 55

Morpheus rubs his face, then smiles.

NEO

I know what you're trying to do --

MORPHEUS

I'm trying to free your mind, Neo, but all I can do is show you the door. You're the one that has to step through. Tank, load the jump program.

56 INT. HOVERCRAFT 56

Apoc and Switch exchange looks as Tank grabs for the disk.

57 INT. CONSTRUCT - ROOFTOP - DAY 57

Morpheus and Neo are again in the white space of the Construct. Beneath their feet, we see the jump program rush up at them until they are standing on a rooftop in a city skyline.

MORPHEUS
Let it all go, Neo. Fear. Doubt.
Disbelief. Free your mind.

Morpheus spins, running hard at the edge of the rooftop. And jumps. He sails through the air, his coat billowing out behind him like a cape as he lands on the rooftop across the street.

NEO
Shit.

Neo looks down at the street twenty floor below, then at Morpheus an impossible fifty feet away.

NEO
Okie dokie. Free my mind. Right.
No problem.

He takes a deep breath. And starts to run.

58 INT. MAIN DECK 58

They are transfixed.

MOUSE
What if he makes it?

APOC
No way. Not possible.

TANK
No one's ever made their first jump.

MOUSE
I know, but what if he does?

APOC
He won't.

(CONTINUED)

58 CONTINUED:

58

Trinity stares at the screen, her fists clenching as she whispers.

TRINITY

Come on.

59 EXT. ROOFTOP

59

Summoning every ounce of strength in his legs, Neo launches himself into the air in a single maniacal shriek--

-- but comes up drastically short.

His eyes widen as he plummets. Stories fly by, the ground rushing up at him, but as he hits, the ground gives way, stretching like a trapeze net. He bounces and flips, slowly coming to a rest, flat on his back.

He laughs, a bit unsure, wiping the windblown tears from his face. Morpheus exits the building and helps him to his feet.

MORPHEUS

Do you know why you didn't make it?

NEO

Because... I didn't think I would?

Morpheus smiles and nods.

60 INT. MAIN DECK

60

They break up.

MOUSE

What does it mean?

SWITCH

It doesn't mean anything.

CYPHER

Everyone falls the first time, right, Trinity?

But Trinity has already left.

Neo's eyes open as Tank eases the plug out. He tries to move and groans, cradling his ribs. While Tank helps Morpheus, Neo spits blood into his hand.

(CONTINUED)

60 CONTINUED:

60

NEO
I thought it wasn't real.

MORPHEUS
Your mind makes it real.

Neo stares at the blood.

NEO
If you are killed in the Matrix,
do you die here?

MORPHEUS
The body cannot live without the mind.

61 INT. NEO'S ROOM

61

Trinity enters from the hall, carrying a tray of food.

TRINITY
Neo, I saved you some dinner --

She sees him passed out on the bed. She sets the tray down and pulls the blanket over him.

She pauses, her face close to his, then inhales lightly, breathing in the scent of him before slowly pulling away.

62 INT. HALL

62

Trinity steps out of Neo's room to find Cypher watching her.

CYPHER
I don't remember you ever bringing me dinner.

Trinity says nothing.

CYPHER
There's something about him, isn't there?

TRINITY
Don't tell me you're a believer
now?

(CONTINUED)

62 CONTINUED:

62

CYPHER

I just keep wondering if Morpheus is so sure, why doesn't he take him to the Oracle? She would know.

TRINITY

Morpheus will take him when he's ready.

She turns and he watches her walk away.

63 EXT. CITY STREET - TRAINING PROGRAM - DAY

63

Morpheus moves effortlessly through a crowded downtown street while Neo struggles to keep up, constantly bumped and shouldered off the path.

MORPHEUS

The Matrix is a system, Neo, and that system is our enemy. But when you are inside and you look around, what do you see; businessmen, lawyers, teachers, carpenters. The minds of the very people we are trying to save. But until we do, these people are still a part of the system and that makes them our enemy.

A cop writing a parking ticket stares at Neo from behind his sunglasses.

MORPHEUS

You have to understand that most of these people are not ready to be unplugged and many of them are so inured, so hopelessly dependent on the system that they will fight to protect it.

A beautiful woman in a red dress smiles at Neo as she passes by.

MORPHEUS

Were you listening to me, Neo? Or were you looking at the woman in the red dress?

NEO

I was...

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

Look again.

Neo turns just as Agent Smith levels a gun at his face.
Neo screams.

MORPHEUS

Freeze it.

Everything except Morpheus and Neo freezes.

NEO

This -- this isn't the Matrix?

MORPHEUS

No, it's another training program designed to teach you one thing;
if you are not one of us, you're
one of them.

NEO

What are they?

MORPHEUS

Sentient programs. They can move in and out of any software still hardwired to their system. That means that anyone that we haven't unplugged is potentially an Agent.
Inside the Matrix, they are everyone and they are no one.

Neo stares at the Agent.

MORPHEUS

We've survived by hiding from them, running from them, but they are the gatekeepers, they're guarding all the doors, holding all the keys, which means that sooner or later someone is going to have to fight them.

NEO

Someone?

MORPHEUS

I won't lie to you, Neo. Every single man or woman who has stood their ground, who has fought an Agent, has died. But where they failed, you will succeed.

(CONTINUED)

63

CONTINUED: (2)

63

NEO

Why?

MORPHEUS

I've seen an Agent punch through a concrete wall. Men have emptied entire clips at them and hit nothing but air. Yet their strength and their speed are still based on a world that is built by rules. Because of that they will never be as strong or as fast as you can be.

Neo scratches his head.

NEO

What? Are you trying to tell me that I can dodge bullets?

MORPHEUS

No, Neo. I'm trying to tell you that when you're ready, you won't have to.

Morpheus' cell PHONE RINGS and he flips it open.

TANK (V.O.)

We got trouble.

64

EXT. SEWER MAIN

64

The Nebuchadnezzar blisters by, trailing a swirling, supercharged, electromagnetic wake.

65

INT. COCKPIT

65

Morpheus slides into the copilot's chair next to Dozer.

MORPHEUS

Did Zion send the warning?

DOZER

No. Another ship. Big Brother I think, they're running a parallel pipeline.

Morpheus scans the decayed landscape of the sewer main that rolls by as Neo and Trinity squeeze into the cockpit behind him. An ALARM BEGINS TO SOUND.

(CONTINUED)

65

CONTINUED:

65

DOZER

Shit, Squiddy's sweeping in quick.

MORPHEUS

Set it down in there.

NEO

Squiddy?

TRINITY

A Sentinel. It's a killing machine designed for one thing.

DOZER

Search and destroy.

Neo feels the ship rock to the side as it squeezes into a tiny supply line.

66

EXT. HOVERCRAFT

66

The Nebuchadnezzar sets down, almost wedged into a pipe that barely accommodates its size.

67

INT. COCKPIT

67

Morpheus clicks the intercom.

MORPHEUS

How we doing, Tank?

68

INT. MAIN DECK

68

Tank works furiously at the operator's station as the ceaseless WHIR of the ship's TURBINES GRIND TO a HALT. The main deck is plunged into dark silence. The rest of the screw stands behind him as he whispers.

TANK

Power off-line. E.M.P. armed and ready.

Tank's fingers curl around a small key that glows a dim red.

69

INT. COCKPIT

69

Neo leans into Trinity's ear.

(CONTINUED)

NEO

E.M.P.?

TRINITY

An electromagnetic pulse. It disables any electrical system in the blast radius. It's the only weapon we have against the machines.

Dozer looks up.

DOZER

Now we wait.

THROUGH the cockpit's windshield, the vast cavern of the sewer main yawns before them. Strands of green haze curl round mossy icicles that dangle into a pool of churning frozen waste. Neo begins to angle around Dozer but Morpheus grabs him.

MORPHEUS

Don't move. It'll hear you.

Neo freezes and they wait. Without the Nebuchadnezzar's heating systems, the temperature in the cockpit begins to rapidly drop. The crew members huddle together, their breath freezing into a uniform cloud as it gets colder and colder.

Dozer quietly reaches to brush away the frost on the windshield and as his hand clears a swath --

They see it.

In the darkness, a shifting shadow of mechanized death. It is beautiful and terrifying. Black alloy skin flickers like sequins beneath sinewy coils and skeletal appendages.

Neo can feel the hairs on the back of his neck rise as it silently glides over them with shark-like malevolence until it disappears into the darkness.

In the frozen little room, everyone breathes a little easier.

The ship is quiet and dark. Everyone is asleep.

The core glows with monitor light. Cypher is in the operator's chair as Neo comes up behind him.

CYPHER

Whoa! Shit, Neo, you scared the bejeezus out of me.

NEO

Sorry.

CYPHER

No, it's all right.

Neo's eyes light up as he steps closer to the screens that seem alive with a constant flow of data.

NEO

Is that...?

CYPHER

The Matrix? Yeah.

Neo stares at the endlessly shifting river of information, bizarre codes and equations flowing across the face of the monitor.

NEO

Do you always look at it encoded?

CYPHER

Have to. The image translators sort of work for the construct programs but there's way too much information to decode the Matrix. You get used to it, though. Your brain does the translating. I don't even see the code. All I see is blonde, brunette, and redhead. You want a drink?

Neo nods and he pours a clear alcohol from a plastic jug.

CYPHER

You know, I know what you're thinking 'cause right now I'm thinking the same thing. Actually, to tell you the truth, I've been thinking the same thing ever since I got here.

He raises the glass.

(CONTINUED)

71

CONTINUED:

71

CYPHER

Why, oh why, didn't I take that blue pill?

He throws the shot down his throat. Neo does the same and it almost kills him. Smiling, Cypher slaps him on the back.

CYPHER

Good shit, eh? Dozer makes it.
It's good for two things:
degreasing engines and killing brain cells.

Red-faced, Neo finally stops coughing. Cypher pours him another.

CYPHER

Can I ask you something? Did he happen to tell you why he did it?

Neo looks up, unsure.

CYPHER

Why you're here?

NEO

... Yeah.

CYPHER

Gee-zus! What a mindjob. You're here to save the world. You gotta be shitting me. What do you say to something like that?

Neo looks down at his drink.

CYPHER

I'm going to let you in on a little secret here. Now don't tell him I told you this, but this ain't the first time Morpheus thought he found the One.

NEO

Really?

CYPHER

You bet your ass. It keeps him going. Maybe it keeps all of us going.

NEO

How many were there?

(CONTINUED)

71 CONTINUED: (2)

71

CYPHER

Five. Since I've been here.

NEO

What happened to them?

CYPHER

Dead. All dead.

NEO

How?

CYPHER

Honestly. Morpheus. He got them all amped up believing in bullshit. I watched each of them take on an Agent and I watched each of them die. Little piece of advice: you see an Agent, you do what we do; run. Run your ass off.

Neo gulps down another shot.

NEO

Thanks... for the drink.

CYPHER

Anytime.

Cypher nods as Neo heads for the ladder.

CYPHER

Sweet dreams.

A71 INT. RESTAURANT - NIGHT

A71

CHAMBER MUSIC and the ambiance of wealth soak the restaurant around us as we watch a serrated knife saw through a thick, gorgeous steak. The meat is so perfect, charred on the outside, oozing red juice from the inside, that it could be a dream.

We hear a voice that we recognize immediately.

AGENT SMITH

Do we have a deal, Mr. Reagan?

A fork stabs the cube of meat and we FOLLOW it UP TO the face of Cypher.

(CONTINUED)

A71 CONTINUED:

A71

CYPHER

You know, I know that this steak doesn't exist. I know when I put it in my mouth, the Matrix is telling my brain that it is juicy and delicious. After nine years, do you know what I've realized?

He shoves it in, eyes rolling up, savoring the tender beef melting in his mouth.

CYPHER

Ignorance is bliss.

Agent Smith watches him chew the steak loudly, smacking it between his teeth.

CYPHER

Mmm so, so goddamn good.

AGENT SMITH

Then we have a deal?

CYPHER

I don't want to remember nothing. Nothing! You understand? And I want to be rich. Someone important. Like an actor. You can do that, right?

AGENT SMITH

Whatever you want, Mr. Reagan.

Cypher takes a deep drink of wine.

CYPHER

All right. You get my body back in a power plant, reinsert me into the Matrix and I'll get you what you want.

AGENT SMITH

Access codes to the Zion mainframe.

CYPHER

I told you I don't know them. But I can give you the man who does.

AGENT SMITH

Morpheus.

72

INT. MESS HALL

72

CLOSE ON breakfast, a substance with a consistency somewhere between yogurt and cellulite.

TANK

Here you go, buddy. Breakfast of champions.

Tank slides it in front of Neo and takes a seat with the other crew members enjoying breakfast.

APOC

You mean the breakfast, lunch, and dinner of champions.

MOUSE

If you close your eyes, it almost feels like you're eating runny eggs.

APOC

Or a bowl of snot.

MOUSE

But you know what it really reminds me of? Cream of Wheat. Did you ever eat Cream of Wheat?

SWITCH

No, but technically neither did you.

MOUSE

Exactly my point, because you have to wonder, how do the machines know what Cream of Wheat really tasted like? Maybe they got it wrong, maybe what I think Cream of Wheat tasted like actually tasted like oatmeal, or tuna fish. It makes you wonder about a lot of things. Take chicken for example. Maybe they couldn't figure out what to make chicken taste like which is why chicken tastes like everything. And maybe --

APOC

Shut up, Mouse.

Neo scoops up a spoonful.

(CONTINUED)

72

CONTINUED:

72

DOZER

It's a single-celled protein combined with synthetic aminos, vitamins, and minerals.
Everything your body needs. We grow it in a vat.

MOUSE

Oh no, it doesn't have everything the body needs.

He sidles up to Neo.

MOUSE

So I understand you've run through the Agent training program? You know, I wrote that program.

APOC

Here it comes.

MOUSE

So what did you think of her?

NEO

Of who?

MOUSE

The woman in the red dress. I designed her. She doesn't talk much but if you'd like to, you know, meet her, I could arrange a more personalized milieu.

SWITCH

The digital pimp hard at work.

MOUSE

Pay no attention to these hypocrites, Neo. To deny our impulses is to deny the very thing that makes us human.

Morpheus enters.

MORPHEUS

I want everyone on twelve-hour standby. We're going in. I'm taking Neo to see her.

With that he turns and leaves.

(CONTINUED)

72

CONTINUED:

72

NEO

See who?

TANK

The Oracle.

A72

INT. MAIN DECK

A72

Everyone is strapped into their chairs. Tank is at the operator's station.

TANK

All right, everyone please observe that the no smoking and fasten seat belt signs have been turned on. Sit back and enjoy your flight.

He strikes the enter key and we RUSH CLOCKWISE OVER the chairs, each body reacting as we...

CUT TO:

B72

INT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE - ROOM 1313

B72

SPINNING COUNTER-CLOCKWISE AROUND an old PHONE that RINGS inside the empty room until we SPIN FULL CIRCLE and FIND everyone now standing there.

Morpheus answers the phone.

MORPHEUS

We're in.

73

EXT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE - DAY

73

The door opens and for the first time since his release, Neo steps back into the Matrix. He squints at the sun which seems unnaturally bright. He is the only one without sunglasses.

Apoc and Switch remain at the door as the others enter the alley.

MORPHEUS

We should be back in an hour.

Cypher opens the driver's door of an old car as Trinity, Morpheus and Neo cross to the car, Cypher glances about quickly, then drops something inside a garbage can.

(CONTINUED)

73

CONTINUED:

73

It is a cellular phone and we see its blue display as the line connects.

74

INT. CAR

74

Neo sits beside Trinity in the back. He cannot stop staring as the simple images of the urban street blur past his window like an endless stream of data rushing down a computer screen.

MORPHEUS

Almost unbelievable, isn't it?

Neo nods as the car continues to wind through the crowded city.

(CONTINUED)

NEO

God...

TRINITY

What?

NEO

I used to eat there... Really good noodles...

He is speaking in a whisper, almost as if talking to himself.

NEO

I have these memories, from my entire life but... none of them really happened.

He turns to her.

NEO

What does that mean?

TRINITY

That the Matrix cannot tell you who you are.

NEO

But an Oracle can.

TRINITY

That's different.

NEO

Obviously.

He turns to the window for a moment and then turns back.

NEO

Did you go to her?

TRINITY

Yes.

NEO

What did she tell you?

TRINITY

She told me...

She looks at him and suddenly she is unable to speak or even breathe.

(CONTINUED)

74 CONTINUED: (2)

74

NEO

What?

The car suddenly jerks to a stop.

MORPHEUS

We're here. Neo, come with me.

Neo and Morpheus get out of the car. Cypher looks into the rearview mirror at Trinity.

CYPHER

Here we go again, eh, Trin?

He smiles as she turns to the window.

75 EXT. BUILDING

75

Tenement-like and vast, it is the kind of place where people can disappear.

76 INT. BUILDING

76

Morpheus nods to a blind man who nods back. An elevator opens and Neo follows Morpheus inside.

77 INT. ELEVATOR

77

The idea of learning one's fate begins to weigh upon Neo with a steadily growing unease.

NEO

So is this the same oracle that made the, uh, prophecy?

MORPHEUS

Yes. She's very old. She's been with us since the beginning.

NEO

The beginning?

MORPHEUS

Of the Resistance.

NEO

And she knows what? Everything?

MORPHEUS

She would say she knows enough.

(CONTINUED)

77 CONTINUED:

77

NEO

And she's never wrong.

MORPHEUS

Don't think of it in terms of right and wrong. She is a guide, Neo. She can help you find the path.

NEO

She helped you?

MORPHEUS

Yes.

NEO

What did she tell you?

MORPHEUS

That I would find the One.

DING. The ELEVATOR opens.

78 INT. HALL

78

The long dark hall beckons. Neo follows Morpheus out of the elevator and the DOORS RATTLE shut behind him. With every step, a disturbing sense of inevitability closes in around him.

At the end of the hall, Morpheus steps to the side of a door.

MORPHEUS

I told you that I can only show you the door. You have to step through it.

Neo blows out a breath. His hand reaches but stops, hovering over the spherical handle. He backs away.

NEO

Morpheus, I don't think this is a good idea.

MORPHEUS

Why?

NEO

I told you I don't believe in this stuff. No matter what she says I'm not going to believe it, so what's the point?

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

What do you believe in?

NEO

What do I believe in? Are you kidding me? What do you think? The world I grew up in isn't real. My entire life was a lie. I don't believe in anything anymore.

MORPHEUS

That's why we're here.

NEO

Why? So I can hear some old lady tell me, what? That I'm this guy that everybody's been waiting for? That I'm supposed to save the world? It sounds insane. Unbelievable. And I don't care who says it, it's still going to sound insane and unbelievable.

MORPHEUS

Faith is not a matter of reasonability. I do not believe things with my mind. I believe them with my heart. In my gut.

NEO

And you believe I'm the One?

MORPHEUS

Yes I do.

NEO

Yeah? What about the other five guys? The five before me? What about them?

Morpheus tries to hide his heart being wrenched from his chest.

NEO

Did you believe in them too?

MORPHEUS

I believed what the Oracle told me... no, I misunderstood what she told me. I believed that it was all about me.

This is difficult for Morpheus to admit.

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

I believed that all I had to do was point my finger and anoint whoever I chose. I was wrong, Neo. Terribly wrong. Not a day or night passes that I do not think of them. After the fifth, I lost my way. I doubted everything the Oracle had said. I doubted myself.

He looks up at Neo.

MORPHEUS

And then I saw you, Neo, and my world changed. You can call it an epiphany, you can call it whatever the hell you want. It doesn't matter. It's not about a word. It's about this. So I can't explain it to you. All I can do is believe, Neo, believe that one day you will feel what I felt and know what I know; you are the sixth and the last. You are the One.

His eyes blaze.

MORPHEUS

Until that time all I am asking from you is for you to hold on to whatever respect you may have for me and trust me.

Neo feels a rush from Morpheus's intensity, the unadulterated confidence of a zealot.

NEO

All right.

He reaches for the handle which turns without him even touching it. A WOMAN wearing white opens the door.

PRIESTESS (WOMAN)

Hello, Neo. You're right on time.

It seems particularly normal.

PRIESTESS

Make yourself at home, Morpheus.

(CONTINUED)

MORPHEUS

Thank you.

PRIESTESS

Neo, come with me.

She leads Neo down another hall and into what appears to be a family room.

There is another woman in white sitting on a couch watching a soap opera. Scattered about the room are a half dozen children. Some of them are playing, others are deep in meditation. All of them exude a kind of Zen calm.

PRIESTESS

These are the other Potentials.
You can wait here.

Neo watches a little girl levitate wooden alphabet blocks. Closer to him, a SKINNY BOY with a shaved head holds a spoon which sways like a blade of grass.

In front of him is a pile of spoons bent and twisted into knots. Neo crosses to him and sits. The boy smiles and hands Neo the spoon which is now perfectly straight.

SPOON BOY (SKINNY BOY)

Do not try to bend the spoon.
That is impossible. Instead, only try to realize the truth.

NEO

What truth?

SPOON BOY

That there is no spoon.

Neo nods, staring at the spoon.

NEO

There is no spoon.

SPOON BOY

Then you will see that it is not the spoon that bends. It is only yourself.

The entire room is reflected inside the spoon and as Neo stares into it, it slowly begins to bend until --

A hand touches his shoulder.

PRIESTESS

The Oracle will see you now.

Spoon Boy smiles.

An OLD WOMAN is huddled beside the oven, peering inside through a cracked door.

NEO

Hello?

ORACLE (OLD WOMAN)

I know. You're Neo. Be right with you.

NEO

You're the Oracle?

ORACLE

Bingo. Not quite what you were expecting, right? I got to say I love seeing you non-believers. Always a pip. Almost done. Smell good, don't they?

NEO

Yeah.

ORACLE

I'd ask you to sit down, but you're not going to anyway. And don't worry about the vase.

NEO

What vase?

He turns to look around and his elbow knocks a VASE from the table. It BREAKS against the linoleum floor.

ORACLE

That vase.

NEO

Shit, I'm sorry.

She pulls out a tray of chocolate chip cookies and turns. She is an older woman, wearing big oven mitts, comfortable slacks and a print blouse. She looks like someone's grandma.

ORACLE

I said don't worry about it. I'll get one of my kids to fix it.

NEO

How did you know...?

She sets the cookie tray on a wooden hot pad.

(CONTINUED)

ORACLE

What's really going to bake your noodle later on is, would you still have broken it if I hadn't said anything.

Smiling, she lights a cigarette.

ORACLE

You're cuter than I thought. I see why she likes you.

NEO

Who?

ORACLE

Not too bright though.

She winks.

ORACLE

You know why Morpheus brought you to see me?

He nods.

ORACLE

So? What do you think? You think you're the One?

NEO

Honestly? I don't know.

She gestures to a wooden plaque, the kind every kitchen has, except that the words are in Latin.

ORACLE

You know what that means? It's Latin. Means, 'Know Thyself.' I'm gonna let you in on a little secret. Being the One is just like being in love. Nobody can tell you you're in love. You just know it. Through and through. Balls to bones.

She puts her cigarette down.

ORACLE

Well, I better have a look at you. Open your mouth. Say, 'ahh.'

She widens his eyes, checks his ears, then feels the glands in his neck. She nods, then looks at his palms.

(CONTINUED)

ORACLE

Okay, now I'm supposed to say,
'Hmmm, that's interesting but...'
Then you say --

NEO

But what?

ORACLE

But you already know what I'm going to tell you.

NEO

I'm not the One.

ORACLE

Sorry, kid. You got the gift but looks like you're waiting for something.

NEO

What?

ORACLE

Your next life, maybe. Who knows?
That's how these things go.

Neo almost has to laugh.

ORACLE

What's funny?

NEO

Morpheus. He almost had me convinced.

ORACLE

I know. Poor Morpheus. Without him we are lost.

NEO

What do you mean, without him?

The Oracle takes a long drag, regarding Neo with the eyes of a Sphinx.

ORACLE

Are you sure you want to hear this?

Neo nods.

(CONTINUED)

ORACLE

Morpheus believes in you, Neo, and no one, not you or even me can convince him otherwise. He believes it so blindly that he's going to sacrifice his life to save yours.

NEO

What?

ORACLE

You're going to have to make a choice. In one hand, you will have Morpheus's life. In the other hand, you will have your own. One of you is going to die. Which one, will be up to you.

Neo can't breathe.

ORACLE

I'm sorry, kiddo. I really am. You have a good soul and I hate giving good people bad news. But don't worry, as soon as you walk outside that door, you'll start feeling better. You'll remember that you don't believe any of this fate crap. You're in control of your own life, remember?

He tries to nod as she reaches for the tray of cookies.

ORACLE

Here, take a cookie. I promise by the time you're done eating it, you'll feel right as rain.

Neo takes a cookie, the tightness in his chest slowly beginning to fade.

Morpheus rises from a couch as the priestess escorts Neo out. When they are alone, Morpheus puts his hand on Neo's shoulder.

MORPHEUS

You don't have to tell anyone what she told you. What was said was said for you and you alone.

Neo nods and takes a bite of his cookie.

82

INT. CAR

82

Neo and Morpheus get in the car.

MORPHEUS

Let's go.

Cypher looks into the rearview mirror at Neo.

CYPHER

Well, good news or bad news?

MORPHEUS

Not now, Cypher.

Cypher slaps the car in gear and pulls into traffic. Trinity looks at Neo who is staring at the final bit of cookie. He puts it in his mouth and chews.

TRINITY

Are you all right?

NEO

... Right as rain.

83

OMITTED

83

84

INT. ROOM 1313 - DAY

84

Mouse's CELLULAR RINGS.

MOUSE

Welcome to Movie-Phone.

TANK (V.O.)

They're on their way.

85

EXT. CITY STREET - DAY

85

As they get out of the car, Cypher smiles at Neo.

CYPHER

Like the man says, welcome to the real world.

Cypher, following the others into the hotel, nervously glances around, wiping the sweat from his forehead.

86

INT. MAIN DECK

86

Sweat rolls down Cypher's face and neck. At the operator's station, Tank is typing rapidly.

(CONTINUED)

86

CONTINUED:

86

TANK
What is that...?

87

INT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE - DAY

87

Light filters down the throat of the building through a caged skylight at the top of the open elevator shaft. Six figures glide up the dark stairs that wind around the antique elevator.

(CONTINUED)

87 CONTINUED:

87

Neo notices a black cat, a yellow-green eyed shadow that slinks past them and pads quickly down the stairs.

A moment later, Neo sees another black cat that looks and moves identically to the first one.

NEO

Whoa. Deja vu.

Those words stop the others dead in their tracks.

88 INT. MAIN DECK

88

The monitors suddenly glitch as though the Matrix had an electronic seizure.

TANK

Oh shit! Oh shit!

89 INT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE - DAY

89

Trinity turns around, her face tight.

TRINITY

What did you just say?

NEO

Nothing. Just had a little deja vu.

TRINITY

What happened? What did you see?

NEO

A black cat went past us and then I saw another that looked just like it.

TRINITY

How much like it? Was it the same cat?

NEO

It might have been. I'm not sure.

Trinity looks at Morpheus who listens quietly to the RASPING breath of the old BUILDING.

NEO

What is it?

(CONTINUED)

89

CONTINUED:

89

TRINITY

A deja vu is usually a glitch in the Matrix. It happens when they change something.

She also listens as the staccato BEAT of HELICOPTER BLADES GROWS ominously LOUD.

90

INT. MAIN DECK

90

Tank sees what was changed.

TANK

It's a trap!

91

INT. STAIRCASE - DAY

91

Morpheus looks up the stairs as he hears a HELICOPTER.

MORPHEUS

Come on!

Apoc slaps a gun into Neo's hand.

APOC

Something to ward off evil spirits.

Neo nods, stuffing it into his belt.

92

INT. BASEMENT - DAY

92

Heavy bolt cutters snap through the main phone cable.

93

INT. ROOM 1313 - DAY

93

Hearing the HELICOPTER, Mouse goes to the draped windows as his CELLULAR RINGS. He answers it.

TANK (V.O.)

They cut the hardline! It's a trap! Get out!

Mouse yanks open the curtain.

MOUSE

Oh no.

The windows are bricked up. Mouse spins as the RUMBLE of combat BOOTS BUILDS, then explodes into the room.

94 INT. MAIN DECK 94

Tank watches helplessly.

TANK

No, no, no.

95 INT. STAIRS - DAY 95

Morpheus stops as Mouse's SCREAM is drowned out by the report of MACHINE GUN FIRE.

96 INT. ROOM 1313 - DAY 96

Mouse sails backwards as BULLETS POUND him against the blood-spattered brick window.

97 INT. MAIN DECK 97

Mouse's body thrashes against its harness, blood coughing from his mouth in one final spasm, then lying perfectly still. The flatline ALARM softly cries out from the life MONITOR.

98 OMITTED 98

99 INT. STAIRWELL - DAY 99

Flying downstairs, Morpheus stops, hearing POLICE SWARMING below.

A99 INT. HALL - DAY A99

He turns and rushes down the hall of the eighth floor. At the end of it, he finds the bricked-up windows.

CYPHER

That's what they changed. We're trapped. There's no way out.

The sound of heavy BOOT-STEPS close around them with the mechanical sureness of a vice.

MORPHEUS

Give me your phone.

TRINITY

They'll be able to track it.

(CONTINUED)

A99

CONTINUED:

A99

MORPHEUS

We have no choice.

Morpheus rips off his jacket.

100

INT. MAIN DECK

100

Tank answers the call.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

Tank, find a structural drawing of this building and find it fast.

101

INT. HOTEL LAFAYETTE - DAY

101

Flashlights probe the rotting darkness as the police search every floor.

102

INT. MAIN DECK

102

The diagram windows onto the screen.

TANK

Got it.

MORPHEUS (V.O.)

I need the main wet-wall.

103

INT. ROOM 1313 - DAY

103

Agent Smith stands over Mouse's dead body, his hand going to his earpiece.

104

INT. ROOM 808 - DAY

104

Morpheus is guided by Tank.

TANK (V.O.)

Now left, and that's it in front of you.

MORPHEUS

Good.

105

INT. ROOM 1313 - DAY

105

Agent Smith hears the LINE CLICK dead.

(CONTINUED)

105 CONTINUED: 105

AGENT SMITH
Eighth floor. They're on the eighth floor.

A105 INT. STAIRWELL - DAY A105

Agent Brown listens to his earpiece.

106 INT. STAIRWELL - DAY 106

Boots clatter up the marble staircase.

A106 INT. HALL - DAY A106

Cops flood the eight floor, rushing everywhere.

107 INT. ROOM 808 - DAY 107

Several cops sweep through the room. It is empty. As they pass the bathroom, we see a man-sized hole smashed through the plaster and lath.

108 INT. WALL - DAY 108

They are inside the main plumbing wall, slowly worming their way down the grease-black stack pipes. Above them, light fills the hole they made to get inside.

109 INT. HALL - DAY 109

Agent Brown and Agent Smith stand over Morpheus's jacket.

AGENT BROWN
Where are they?

110 INT. ROOM 608 - DAY 110

The cops search in silence, straining for a clue, when one hears SOMETHING STRANGE near the bathroom.

111 INT. WALL - DAY 111

Cypher has slipped and is wedged between the wall and several thick supply pipes.

112 INT. ROOM 608 - DAY

112

The COP leans in, his ear almost against the thin membrane of plaster separating them. He can hear WHISPERS, HISSES and a GRUNT when --

The wall suddenly bulges, shatter-cracking as the Cop realizes --

COP
They're in the walls!

113 INT. WALL - DAY

113

Trinity pulls Cypher free just as the Cop OPENS FIRE, BULLETS PUNCHING shafts of light like swords into the box of soot-black space.

Neo finds his GUN first and begins BLASTING wildly through the plaster and lath.

114 INT. ROOM 608 - DAY

114

The Cop spins out of the bathroom for cover, Neo's BULLETS SPLINTERING the door jamb.

(CONTINUED)

114 CONTINUED:

114

About to whirl back in, he freezes as something seems to seize hold of him. The Cop's body starts to spasm and his M-16 falls to the ground, long shadows springing up from the mounted flashlight.

115 INT. WALL - DAY

115

Neo listens for a moment, the gunfire quiet, when he hears FOOTSTEPS RISING FAST.

Two arms suddenly smash through the wall, punching Neo back against the iron stack pipe, fingers gouging into his neck.

CYPHER

It's an Agent!

Just as Neo's throat is about to collapse, Morpheus explodes through the tattered plaster and lath, diving on top of Agent Smith.

The two men crash to the wet terrazzo floor.

Before Agent Smith can find his weapon, Morpheus is on him, pinning him in an iron grip.

In the crawlspace, Trinity tries to scramble up past Cypher.

TRINITY

Morpheus!

Morpheus squeezes Agent Smith's throat.

MORPHEUS

Trinity, you must get Neo out. Do you understand? He is all that matters.

Neo suddenly glimpses what is happening but is powerless to stop it.

NEO

No. No! Morpheus! Don't!

MORPHEUS

Trinity! Go!

Trinity's fists ball in frustration. She yells down to Apoc.

TRINITY

Go!

(CONTINUED)

115 CONTINUED:

115

NEO

We can't leave him!

TRINITY

We have to!

She grabs his ankle and they begin almost falling, using the lath as a brake, skidding down the inside of the wall.

116 INT. BASEMENT - DAY

116

This part of the basement, a dark concrete cavern, was the main mechanical room. There are four enormous boilers, dinosaur-like technology that once pumped hot water like arteries.

Soldier's blinding lights cut open the darkness as Trinity, Neo and the others crash through the ceiling. Around them they hear a chorus of short, sharp coughs of grenade launchers from gas-masked figures.

Smoke blossoms from the green metal canisters. Trinity never stops moving. Searching the floor, she finds what she needs; the cover of the catch basin.

Cypher watches her pry open the grate, when a gas can bounces near him.

TRINITY

Come on!

Cypher seems to trip as the cloud envelops him.

Trinity watches Cypher disappear into the smoke, then follow the others down the wet-black hole.

117 INT. ROOM 608 - DAY

117

Morpheus and Agent Smith remain on the ground, locked in each other's death grip.

AGENT SMITH

The great Morpheus. We meet at last.

MORPHEUS

And you are?

AGENT SMITH

Smith. I am Agent Smith.

(CONTINUED)

117 CONTINUED:

117

MORPHEUS

You all look the same to me.

Agent Smith counters Morpheus and slowly begins to pry his hands from his throat. Striking like a viper, Morpheus, drives a vicious head butt into Agent Smith's face. His nose and glasses shatter.

Agent Smith, unfazed, smiles, blood oozing from the shattered bridge of his nose, and returns Morpheus's head butt with three of his own in pneumatic succession.

Morpheus staggers back, his body going slack when another kick buries him deep into crunching plaster and lathe.

Morpheus turns in time to see a wall of men in the doorway.

AGENT SMITH

Take him.

The wall of cops rushes Morpheus, filling the tiny bathroom until he disappears under the tide.

118 INT. MAIN DECK

118

Tank reaches out to the screen as if reaching for Morpheus.

TANK

No!

119 OMITTED

119

120 EXT. STREET - DAY

120

A manhole cover cracks open. Two eyes peek out just as a TRUCK RATTLES over it. The THUNDER DOPPLERS away and the cover opens. Trinity climbs out.

121 INT. MAIN DECK

121

Tank is again at the monitors, searching the Matrix when the PHONE RINGS.

TANK

Operator.

CYPHER (V.O.)

I need an exit! Fast!

(CONTINUED)

121 CONTINUED: 121

TANK
Cypher?

122 EXT. STREET - DAY 122

Cypher is standing at a public phone. Across the street is the burning paddy wagon that appears to have collided with an oncoming car.

CYPHER
There was an accident. A goddamn car accident. All of a sudden.
Boom. Jesus, someone up there still likes me.

TANK (V.O.)
I got you.

CYPHER
Just get me outta here.

TANK (V.O.)
Nearest exit is Franklin and Erie.
An old TV repair shop.

Cypher hangs up and smiles as we hear FIRE TRUCKS in the distance.

CYPHER
An actor. Definitely.

123 INT. MAIN DECK 123

The PHONE RINGS. Tank answers.

TRINITY (V.O.)
Tank, it's me.

124 EXT. STREET - DAY 124

All four are moving quickly down a back street.

NEO
Is Morpheus alive?

TRINITY
Is Morpheus still alive, Tank?

TANK (V.O.)
Yes. They're moving him. I don't know where yet.

(CONTINUED)

124 CONTINUED:

124

TRINITY

He's alive.

Again, inevitability seems to cinch around Neo.

TRINITY

We need an exit!

TANK (V.O.)

You're not far from Cypher.

TRINITY

Cypher, I thought --

TANK (V.O.)

So did we. I sent him to Franklin and Erie.

TRINITY

Got it.

A124 EXT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY

A124

In a deserted alley, Cypher steps onto a dumpster in front of a small boarded-up window.

125 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY

125

Dead machines, eviscerated and shrouded with dust, lay on metal shelves like bodies in a morgue. Plywood covering a small window is ripped off and Cypher crawls inside.Deep in the back room, a PHONE that has not rung in years begins to RING.

126 EXT. STREET - DAY

126

Trinity sees the TV repair shop.

127 INT. MAIN DECK

127

Tank punches the exit command.

TANK

Got him.

Cypher's body twitches in its harness, jerking itself awake.

128 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY 128
Neo crawls through the window that Cypher opened.

129 INT. MAIN DECK 129
Tank finishes loading the exit program as Cypher pulls back a heavy blanket, exposing a high-tech rifle.

130 INT. TV REPAIR SHOP - DAY 130
The PHONE begins to RING as the others crawl in.

SWITCH
God, I love that sound.

131 INT. MAIN DECK 131
